case of economic supply and demand.

"The sudden decrease in the supply caused a short-term price increase; prices are already falling again," Huenneke said. "In fact, prices have been steadily decreasing over the past few years."

If oil companies chose not to raise prices after the spill, the problem may have been compounded by suppliers buying all the oil they could, Priebe said.

"The (oil buyers) realized the spill could have depleted the supplies for an indefinite time, and keeping prices the same would have created 'panic buying,' where the possibility of a shortage increases demand," she said.

Crude oil prices influence gasoline prices. Since October 1988, Priebe said, the price for a 42-gallon barrel of crude oil from Kansas has risen from $12.25 to $19.50.

"You can usually figure the price of gas to rise about two cents a gallon when oil prices rise a dollar a barrel," she said.

"There is a lag-time before the prices rise, and we're starting to experience the higher prices. But when the jump in prices is this quick, it's more than the gradual rise that is responsible."

ing, but very little substance," he said.

Other matters before the committee were more clear cut. The panel voted unanimously that there was reason to believe Wright failed to report as gifts the use of a car and Fort Worth condominium he and his wife received from Mallick. Committee members voted 10-2 that Wright's wife's $18,000-a-year salary from a Mallick-Wright company should also be characterized as a gift, saying she did little or nothing to earn the money.

The panel also voted 10-2 that certain bulk sales of Wright's book, "Reflections of a Public Man," appeared to have been used to evade House ceilings on outside earned income.

"In the committee's view, seven bulk sales of Rep. Wright's book ... demonstrated an overall scheme to evade the House outside earned income limit because (speaking) honorarium payments were recharacterized as royalties," Dixon said.

The committee voted unanimously to issue its statement of alleged violation formally charging the speaker with breaking the rules.

Forty-seven possible violations raised by Phelan were dismissed.

Cold sores can appear as a result of trauma, fear or stress. Johnson said researchers speculate that stress leads to the reoccurrence of cold sores.

"How do we prove this? We must provide a scientific model to test ideas," he said.

As part of the research, the division works with NASA in the research of viruses.

Living in confined quarters in space for six months causes stress, Johnson said.

"Our studies might make a difference to determine if a cold on earth or a cold in space is more serious, so ways of counteracting stress can become available," he said. "This is critical to the space environment. It's going beyond what we can imagine."

communal farm after children told him they saw something suspicious there.

"They said, 'Look over there. There's a hand sticking out of the ground,'" Castillo said.

But Castillo said he avoided digging it up until after the 13 bodies were discovered last week at Rancho Santa Elena, about a mile south of the border and 20 miles west of Matamoros. Castillo said he feared he might be arrested if he told anyone about the body.

Castillo said he did not know what his son was doing at the farm where his body was found with the hands bound with wire. In Houston, he said, Moises worked as a mechanic and at other various jobs. He disputed authorities' description of his son as a drug trafficker.

Monica de Leon, de la Fuente's wife, said she learned of her husband's death on television Sunday night. He was a farm worker and not involved with drugs, she said.

Martin Elias Salazar, a federal judicial police group chief who supervised Sunday's exhumations, said the two men had been suspected of drug trafficking.

Across the Rio Grande in Brownsville, Cameron County Sheriff Alex Perez described the two newly discovered deaths as drug-related, "revenge-type killings."

Revenue report prompts additional ticket increase

By Alan Wilds
Staff Writer

Ticket prices for men's basketball and football games will be raised an additional 50 cents per game due to lower income projections from the Big Eight Conference, tuition increases and the higher cost of athletic housing, Athletic Director Steve Miller said Monday.

Two weeks ago the athletic department announced its original ticket price increase for next year. [illegible] tickets will be $70 for 14 games, compared with the $38.50 price for 11 games this year.

"When you look at the increase in dollars it looks like an astronomical amount, but you have to remember there are three more games," Miller said.

Student season tickets for football will cost $42 next year as compared with $36 this year.

The additional increases are [illegible]

"They are just playing it safe," Krause said.

Information was not available to the department until after a ticket price decision had been made, Miller said.

"Coupled with the cost of living, it becomes a significant problem," he said.

The increased cost of out-of-state tuition was also released after the original price increase decision.

University, Fort Riley create major attraction for department stores

By Mindy Robert
Collegian Reporter

K-State and Fort Riley are two of Manhattan's assets that make the community appealing to department stores, said Robert Lund, manager of J.C. Penney Co. Inc. in Manhattan.

"The number of people, the payroll and the consistency" make the University and Fort Riley two strong reasons to locate a department store in Manhattan, Lund said.

"K-State is not something that is going to pull out next year, five years from now, or 50 years from now," he said. "It is always going to be there."

The military base and University provide the community with a stable economy and reliable income, said Harold Randa, manager of Dillard's.

"If a business is doing poor, they cut back on payroll," Randa said. "You don't see that as much with Fort Riley and the University."

Advantages exist for department stores located in communities such as Manhattan, Lund said.

"Any business in this size community is much closer to the things that go on in the community," he said. "You have a closeness in the smaller community that you don't get in a metropolitan area."

The business can get involved in community activities besides being "just a retailer," Lund said.

Both Randa and Lund said there are no disadvantages to being in a community like Manhattan.

Stores in a larger city can do more things monetarily than what a single store can do within a community, Lund said. If metropolitan area stores pool their resources, they can monetarily help a community more than a smaller community store.

On a per capita basis, Lund said metropolitan stores may not contribute as much as the Manhattan store, so it is not a disadvantage.

"There are no things they can do with marketing in a metropolitan area that I can't do right here in Manhattan," Lund said. "I can run anything that (metropolitan stores) run."

Department stores in smaller communities are different from metropolitan stores.

One difference is that the variety of merchandise offered by stores in smaller areas is not as large as metropolitan stores, Lund said. For example, some metropolitan J.C. Penney stores carry furniture, but the local store does not.

Competition is different in metropolitan areas, Randa said. There are more businesses of comparable size and merchandise in larger cities.

It is necessary to build a strong customer clientele in smaller communities, Randa said. Unlike larger stores, the Dillard's in Manhattan has a specific number of customers to draw from and therefore must rely on repeat customers.

As a result, the local store must have better customer service, he said.

"We get to know people on a first-name basis," Randa said. "This makes (customers) feel more comfortable."

Customers believe their business is appreciated if a sales clerk recognizes them and calls them by name, he said.

To determine the size of store to bring to a community, Dillard's conducts studies to find the number of dollars and number of people in the area, Randa said. The company then decides how many of the dollars available within the community Dillard's could receive.

"It is important to gear the size of the store to the size of the population," he said.

Trendiness is traditional in the fashion world, but this spring the only trend to follow is individuality

Spring Style

Fashion designers are finally realizing that consumers not only want stylish clothing, but want to look good in what they wear.

Although trends will always affect the fashion world, consumers are beginning to set the trends themselves rather than follow them. And this spring is a prime example.

"We haven't had a fashion trend in a long time. People are getting away from what the trend is and are going for what they look best in," said Becki Johnson, manager of Harper's Fashions.

There is not one dominant style that will define the "look" for this season. Many different fabrics and patterns are available for almost any look you want to achieve.

Bright primary colors are available almost everywhere.

"Clothes are going to be much easier to match this summer because primary colors are dominating," said Cathy Metille, assistant manager at Seiferts. "A person can buy a shirt in our store and easily match it with a pair of pants in another."

Reds and royals are coming in strong for this summer, she said, although black and white are also popular.

Harper's Fashions is more proof that wearing black after Easter is not a fashion faux pas this season. Johnson said bright colors such as yellows, orange-reds, lime greens and lots of black and red are in for the summer.

Alan Parker, owner and manager of Borck Brothers, said dark colors with burgundy, teal or fuchsia highlights are still very popular.

Black and white are also popular, Parker said. "In men's fabric, I would say the wool tropical (tightly woven, lightweight wool) and the wool blend are in," he said.

Casual and comfortable are also a common motif for springwear.

Jim Schottler, owner of Casual Encounter, also said clothing for men this season is casual and comfortable.

"The cotton pants are fuller in the top of the leg and pleated in front," Schottler said. Looser and fuller-fitting shirts, made from a natural fabric such as cotton, are in some beautiful brighter colors to match up with the soft color pants, he said.

"I think plaids are definitely in for shirts and shorts, but not yet in the pants," Schottler said.

Ellie Brent, owner of Woody's Ladies Shop, agreed a much more casual season is here.

"With cotton knit so popular, casual wear is in," Brent said. "The drop-waist dress is very popular," she said. However, at Woody's "the number one motif is the nautical look." The traditional red, white and blue sailor colors in casual wear and also in dress wear are popular. Sailor buttons, sailor collars and accessories are also available.

Twill and other cotton fabrics are very important and linen is very popular for dress, she said.

Brent said bright colors are popular, however navy will also be a good color for summer. Plaids and florals will also be very popular.

Mary Essmiller, owner of Spellbinders, said that after the "hemline catastrophe" with miniskirts last season, hemlines are being dropped.

"Many stores lost a lot of money because not many customers were buying the short miniskirts and other short styles," Essmiller said.

"Polka dots have been a good line for me," she said.

Mettille also said polka dots are in this season.

"In dresses, pants, and shorts, polka dots are everywhere and in lots of colors," Mettille said.

"Madras plaids, Indian lightweight materials, are in for both men and women," Mettile said. A traditional style is coming back in the dressier look, she said. The Chanel look from Coco Chanel — gold buttons on dresses, suits and blouses — is in.

a formal affair

By Deborah Dinges
Collegian Reporter

Women's formal wear in the 1980s has gone from the long, full "southern belle" look in the early '80s to the short and sassy look this season.

"Long is out," for spring and summer formal dresses, said Karen Ferrell, junior department manager at Dillard's. Shorter dresses are saturating the market in formal women's apparel.

Dillard's is not carrying any full-length dresses at this time, she said.

Colors are also changing, said Shelly Holle, manager of Christine's. "Colors are taking on an all-year-round look." There is less seasonal variation. Bright, bold colors, as well as pastels, will be popular this spring.

Romantic style tea-length dresses with full skirts are going to be popular, in pastel colors such as pink and white, Ferrell said. Drop waists and big bows are taking some of these styles back to the '50s.

There are less short minidresses this year, she said, but they are still popular. About one-third of Dillard's dresses are minis.

"The minis have taken on a sexy look, with straight, tight-fitting dresses," Holle said.

Colors are also characteristic of the 1989 formal wear style. Bright and bold colors come in the short, sexy dresses with pastels in the romantic style, Ferrell said.

Shoppers are looking for matching ensembles this year, she said. Gloves, evening bags, jackets, shoes dyed to match the dress and jewlery are becoming a necessity.

The late 1980s look in men's formal wear is also changing.

Diane Helgesen, production manager at Christine's, said tuxedos are changing.

"Men are paying more to get designer styles," she said. Designs on the fabric such as pinstripes, herringbone and textured prints are popular.

"Diagonal pleats in the cummerbunds seem to be taking off pretty well," Helgesen said. Traditional cummerbunds have the pleats going across.

"Black tail coats are the first thing that Christine's is booking out," she said. It is too early in the year to tell if white tuxedos will be in demand.

Revenue report prompts additional ticket increase

By Alan Wilds
Staff Writer

Ticket prices for men's basketball and football games will be raised an additional 50 cents per game due to lower income projections from the Big Eight Conference, tuition increases and the higher cost of athletic housing, Athletic Director Steve Miller said Monday.

Two weeks ago the athletic department announced its original ticket price increase for next year — $1 per tickets will be $70 for 14 games, compared with the $38.50 price for 11 games this year.

"When you look at the increase in dollars it looks like an astronomical amount, but you have to remember there are three more games," Miller said.

Student season tickets for football will cost $42 next year as compared with $36 this year.

The additional increases are intended to generate about $480,000

"They are just playing it safe," Krause said.

Information was not available to the department until after a ticket price decision had been made, Miller said.

"Coupled with the cost of living, it becomes a significant problem," he said.

The increased cost of out-of-state tuition was also released after the original price increase decision.

Clothing tells all ...

By Ginger Miller
Collegian Reporter

You are what you ... wear.

People dress differently for different occasions, but regardless of where you are, your clothes say something about you, according to an article published in Psychology Today.

Michael R. Solomon, who wrote the article, "Dress for Success," said clothing provides information about a person's social and occupational standing, sex-role identification, political orientation, ethnicity, and esthetic priorities.

"Clothing is a potent — and highly visible — medium of communication that carries a flood of information about who a person is, who a person is not and who a person would like to be," he said.

Clothing is an important source of information during the process of a first impression, Solomon said. Psychologists have shown that first impressions have a tendency to persist, even in the face of evidence to the contrary.

The clothes you wear not only affect how others feel about you, but they express how you feel about yourself.

Lorna Sass said in an article she wrote for Health magazine, "I realize now what I wasn't conscious of then: Since I felt like an outsider, I always dressed the part."

Solomon said clothing may also be used to gain confidence in stressful situations, ranging from first dates to job interviews.

In an article in Glamour magazine, Marc Krystal said women wear men's clothing for the feeling of closeness. Intimacy is the motivation, not fashion, he said.

Psychologists and other social scientists are only beginning to understand the pervasive impact clothing can have on self-definition and behavior in interpersonal relationships, according to Solomon.

Styles mirror economy

By Bryan Ackley
Collegian Reporter

American consumers are generally more attentive to the state of the national economy than they are to geographic trends when deciding what clothing fashions will be in style, said Lucinda Schoenberger, extension assistant in clothing textiles and interior design.

Statistics show that when the stock market goes down, people become more conservative and skirts get longer, she said.

Today clothing costs are increasing because the government is requiring manufacturers to improve the ecological soundness of their plants, and they, in turn, are passing this expense along to their customers, Schoenberger said.

Consumers over the age of 25 have become less interested in fads and are turning to "career and investment dressing," she said.

"People are becoming more conservative. There are more women and men in the professional world who are choosing high quality garments," Schoenberger said.

"When miniskirts were reintroduced a couple of years ago, they didn't go over very well because women refused to wear them," she said.

Alesia Boyd, manager of Vanity, said most of her customers purchase pieces of clothing that will remain popular for long periods of time while also complementing articles they already own.

"Stores in this area usually carry clothes that are a lot more conservative than those on the coasts. Some of the things you see on the coasts are pretty funky," Boyd said.

Schoenberger said consumers often become distressed because new fashions impact coastal cities such as New York or Los Angeles as much as two years before they appear in the Midwest.

This delay in distribution is simply the result of the manufacturers' limited production and distribution resources, she said.

Sean Smith, salesman at Stevenson Clothing Co., said delayed distribution is a reality for those working in the retail clothing industry; however, he doesn't consider it a problem because his customers don't purchase many trendy items.

Delayed distribution can be perplexing to consumers seeking faddish clothing styles, but it doesn't have much of an effect on those seeking classic garments, Schoenberger said.

Timeless fashions bring past, present together

"Sure, I remember Paris. The Germans wore gray and you wore blue."
— Humphrey Bogart to Ingrid Bergman in "Casablanca."

There is a rule in fashion circles that styles run in cycles. Usually, there is one predominant era which influences the current styles. But right now, more than ever, style depends solely on a person's taste.

This lack of original guidance on the part of the big designers is not stifling creativity for the individual, because when you don't know exactly were to look for a needle in a haystack, you simply look everywhere.

"I can't honestly say that I see a strong influence from any specific era," said Ellie Brent, owner of Woody's Ladies Shop.

For instance, one of the more popular styles in dresses is the dropped waist with a wide inset waistband, which is from the 1940s, she said.

Men's casual wear has ripped a page out of the 1950s fashion diary. Up in the morning and off to school with a pair of Jack Purcell tennis shoes — the kind with too many eyelets — a white cotton shirt and either the ever-popular blue jeans or a pair of pleated tan baggies, which, incidentally, are a throw-back to the 1930s.

Charlotte Dart owns Barb's Vintage Rose, a vintage fashion store in Lawrence that sells only original clothes from various eras dating back to the 1850s.

"Guys' pants have started looking more like those in the 1930s, with pleats and cuffs," she said. Many of her customers shop at her store to augment their wardrobes of new clothes, based on old designs, with originals. For example, a customer might choose an old rayon or gabardine shirt to go with new pleated tan baggies.

"A lot of people want vintage clothes to mix with new ones," Dart said. "For instance, you might match a new shirt with an old pair of pants or vice versa."

One reason for the new interest in old fashions may be the rise in popularity of vintage fashion stores.

"The appearance of these vintage clothing stores may be influencing fashion designers or visa versa," Brent said. "Who knows which comes first, the chicken or the egg."

Janice Huck, assistant professor in clothing textiles and interior design, said that in recent years the consumer has dictated what is what in the fashion industry, pointing to the recent push by designers to bring back the miniskirt.

"Consumers didn't buy into it, so designers are returning to more basic styles," she said. "If people won't buy and wear it, the designers will find something that will sell."

Although Dart said it is easier for her to acquire 1950s garments to sell, there is a definite interest in the styles of the early 1930s through the early 1940s. Natural fibers are another appeal of the old clothes and their new imitators.

Even with ironing problems, the feel of cotton, silk or linen compared to polyester makes you wonder why we even flirted with polyester in the 1970s.

Speaking of the 1970s, neckties are getting fat again. But originality — and fashion — is the art of hiding your source. The new wide ties are the latest in fashion evolution. The ties are splashed with vibrant colors.

Everything from electric blue to lavender to beige is being used to give contrast to the simple solids of the new jackets.

Double-breasted jackets have been creeping back out of the closets for a few years now, and this spring they seem to be hipper than ever. The big difference from those of the early 20th century and those of today is the lapels.

Like the overall fashion look, lapels are available any way you want them. Short and fat, or long and slender, there is a jacket out there somewhere which fits in size and attitude.

And it is attitude, along with a few bucks and some borrowed ideas, that defines what we're wearing this spring.

In other words, as Huck put it: "There are only so many things you can do to get clothes on the human body."

College life to professional life

Making the change easier

By Nancy Hill
Of the Collegian Staff

Building a wardrobe for the professional world can often be expensive for college students.

"Start (building a wardrobe) before you're seniors," said Ellie Brent, owner of Woody's Ladies Shop. "Look around for some sale things ... then you won't have to invest a great deal of money within a short period of time."

Brent said students should also consider the quality of the clothing they are purchasing.

"Look for quality — it gives two things, longevity in wearability and versatility," Brent said. "Save low budget items for fun, trendy things.

"Inferior fabric and workmanship show through when compared professionally," she said.

Marlene McComas, coordinator of apparel and textile marketing, said people "find that good quality clothing is going to be expensive — prepare yourself so you don't have to have a huge budget for clothing at one time."

Both McComas and Brent said by purchasing basic, traditional garments, a student can coordinate different outfits with these pieces using accesssories such as jewelry, scarves and shoes.

"The flamboyant and boutique look is great for college but for the office it should be more conservative," Brent said. "Color is great, but pick it up in accessories."

Brent said there has been a basic expansion in "acceptable" garments in most career fields. For women, the traditional dark suit can also be exchanged for a plaid skirt and blazer, or a skirt and cardigan sweater.

However, in a business field such as accounting, the traditional suit is the predominate dress for both men and women, she said.

"So much depends on the area the student is going into," McComas said. "Even if you would like to do something different, when you're young ... appearance is so important."

McComas recommended getting advice from professionals.

"Talk to a professional in your field, see what they're wearing," she said.

Men's clothing costs based on material in garments

By Darren Keller
Collegian Reporter

If men have high fashion on their minds this summer, they had better be prepared to pay for it.

"High fashion designers usually use only the best materials, like wool, cotton, silk and linen. However, these are also the most expensive materials," said Mike Bundy, men's department selling associate at Dillard's department store.

Bundy said this is how companies become name brands. People characteristically pay more for these popular brands because they are part of staying in style.

"There is a certain degree of character shown in the name and price of the item," he said.

M magazine offered an illustration of Bundy's theory in an advertisement for a casual linen sport coat, linen trousers and a cotton shirt combination by high fashion designer, Claud Montana. A high fashion, Chicago men's store listed the Montana outfit for $1600.

Bundy said the fabrics designers use play a big role in the price and value of an item.

Sandy Morrow, group manager of the men's department at Saks Fifth Avenue in Kansas City, Mo., said the cost of fabrics depends partly on the value of the dollar in foreign countries.

Big Time: Modeling in a small town

By Michael Nichols
Of the Collegian Staff

Manhattan may not be the fashion hub of the universe, but some students have discovered that it is possible to gain experience modeling here in town.

The Manhattan Town Center uses students, local residents and their children to work as models for the Manhattan Town Center Team Board, said Carol Mikinski, fashion coordinator for the Town Center.

"There are quite a few men, women and children who model for us," Mikinski said. "I'd say there are about 50."

Models at the Town Center, also known as Trendsetters, do not get paid for most of their work, she said.

"It's really a voluntary type of thing," Mikinski said. "People model for the love of it and for the experience.

Yvonne Revis, freshman in arts and sciences, said she models for the fun and experience.

"Hopefully someday it will become a career," Revis said.

Greg Vick, senior in architecture, said he has had some modeling experience.

"I also modeled in Dallas, so this is for practice ... and future references," Vick said.

Although K-State offers a good pool of potential models, they are not always in Manhattan all year, Mikinski said.

"We need them the 12 months of the year," she said. "We still have performances all year and we need people of all ages and sizes."

Mikinski said potential models go through an audition process at the Town Center. They fill out applications and are interviewed. Experience is not always a main determinant in the hiring process.

"If you have it, you have it; and if you don't, you don't," she said.

Spring Season Accessories

By Nancy Chartrand
Of the Collegian Staff

Beads, scarves, tie chains, earrings, brooches, belts, hats, bracelets ...

Men and women have so many fashion accessories from which to choose that selecting the "right" ones to wear is often confusing.

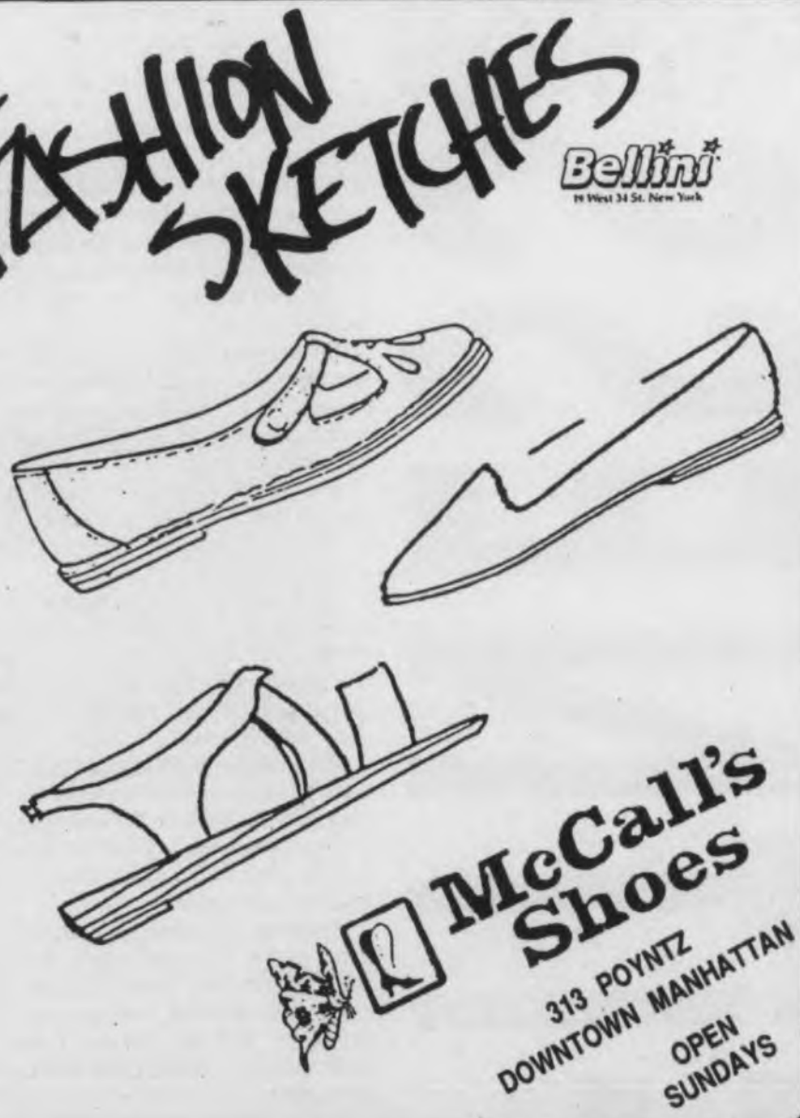
Barbara Stultz, co-owner and manager of Accessories on the Park, said scarves continue to sell well, but most women already have many.

"Large watches may be fading out, but that depends on where you live," she said. "It usually takes about a year for New York fashions to hit Manhattan. We have had coin jewelry (which has been popular in New York) for a while, but people here are now just beginning to buy it."

Mary Hesse, department manager for accessories at Dillard's, said the fashion world is seeing a big Guatemalan accent in accessories, especially handbags and wraps.

"They have bright colors with a South American flair," she said. "There is an emphasis on bright colors as opposed to pastels. Bright colors such as mango are popular."

According to the April issue of Vogue, pearls are one of the hottest fashion accessories for women. Induced by first lady Barbara Bush's famous strands, designers such as Chanel and Christian Lacroix are adding pearls to their latest lines.



Men's accessories may not seem as numerous as women's, but they are out there and men are buying them.

"Men like to be conscious of fashion trends, all the way down to their socks," said Alan Parker, manager and owner of Borck Brothers Men's Wear.

"Suspenders are still very popular — in paisleys, pin dots and leather. We are selling a lot of braided leather suspenders."

French cuffs are making a comeback, so more men are buying cuff links. Tie tacks and narrow ties are out. Nobody wants to spend money on ties, which are now about 3½ inches wide, and put holes in them with tie tacks.

Revenue report prompts additional ticket increase

By Alan Wilds
Staff Writer

Ticket prices for men's basketball and football games will be raised an additional 50 cents per game due to lower income projections from the Big Eight Conference, tuition increases and the higher cost of athletic housing, Athletic Director Steve Miller said Monday.

Two weeks ago the athletic department announced its original ticket price increase for next year — $1 per tickets will be $70 for 14 games, compared with the $38.50 price for 11 games this year.

"When you look at the increase in dollars it looks like an astronomical amount, but you have to remember there are three more games," Miller said.

Student season tickets for football will cost $42 next year as compared with $36 this year.

The additional increases are intended to generate about $480,000.

"They are just playing it safe," Krause said.

Information was not available to the department until after a ticket price decision had been made, Miller said.

"Coupled with the cost of living, it becomes a significant problem," he said.

The increased cost of out-of-state tuition was also released after the original price increase decision.

Whether running, biking, doing aerobics or lifting weights, the clothes people wear are important not only for a comfortable workout, but also to help them feel better about their self-image, said Surah Richman, owner of Schliebe Workout Center.

The basic decision of what to wear while working out depends primarily on the individual, said Richman. A variety of fitness wear is worn.

"Most (people) do wear aerobic wear," she said. The most frequently worn clothing includes leotards, shorts, long, mid-length and short tights, T-shirts, tank tops, and leotard bras.

The leotard bra can be worn alone or under a shirt. It is similar to a tank top, can be made of a variety of materials and covers the rib cage.

Most people have a variety of these items to go with workout clothes they already have, Richman said. A big favorite for women are tights of varying lengths that mix and match with the leotard bras, she said.

Most fitness buffs choose comfortable clothing items in which to work out, Richman said. People who are overweight tend to choose clothing they feel comfortable in, then as they lose weight, most switch to leotards and pants.

Richman said workout wear is used to make people feel good about themselves and feel positive about working out.

Darcy Stephenson, sophomore in speech pathology, said she chooses T-shirts and basic shorts or running tights to wear while exercising.

"I like to wear clothes that are comfortable and allow me to get the best workout possible," Stephenson said. The clothing does not have to be expensive, she said, but vividly colored clothes make the workout fun.

Stephenson said for winter workouts she layers her clothing with tights, sweats, long-sleeve T-shirts or turtlenecks, gloves, jackets and earmuffs.

For spring or summer workouts she chooses shorts and T-shirts or tank tops.

Deena Dipman, manager of the Ladies Club, orders men's and women's fitness wear for Nautilus and the Ladies Club.

"Bike tights are popular for both men and women," said Dipman. Bike tights are usually calf length and come in bright colors.

T-shirts and leotard bras are the tops most frequently worn with the tights.

Dipman said bike tights make people feel better when they work out because of comfort and ease in movement.

"You look better, so subsequently you feel better," Dipman said.

Displays designed to attract viewers, possible consumers

By Karla Redelsheimer
Of the Collegian staff

It's the same scenario every time ...

In an effort to preserve those federally-funded college budgets, the average fashion-conscious student sets out to do some "harmless" window shopping — you know, the kind that doesn't involve dipping into a savings account or exceeding credit limits — and ends up with a Visa bill close to the national debt.

Selling people merchandise by its placement and the particular image it presents is the ultimate goal of visual merchandising, said Dana Spain, graduate student in clothing and textiles.

Although the term "visual merchandising" may not be familiar to many mall veterans, Spain, who teaches visual merchandising, said it involves arranging merchandise with a certain objective.

"That goal can be promoting a theme, an institution or selling merchandise in a creative and attractive way that stimulates the viewer," she said. "A display can be in a store window, on a counter, the way books are displayed in a book store — even hardware stores use it to promote merchandise."

If people can't see the product and how it's used, Spain said, potential customers won't be able to visualize themselves using it or, more importantly, they won't buy it.

"Use of humor is a great way to attract attention," she said. "Humor can be any off-the-wall, creative or innovative use of props that is different than what you'd normally expect to see."

Spain said that during Thanksgiving break she saw a window display in Manhattan Town Center with several sweaters wrapped around turkey forms in aluminum basting pans, complete with "the little chef hats" around the legs of the sweater-wearing turkey forms.

There are two types of props — decorative and functional, she said. Functional props have an actual use in the display. Decorative props support the theme of the display.

Employees at smaller stores usually know what merchandise sells best during particular seasons and put those lines in their displays, Spain said. Larger stores with more than one location are given guidelines from their corporate headquarters in order to keep the store's image consistent in every location.

Wendy Michaels, visual merchandising manager at Dillard's, said the buying office sends out a booklet called "Trends in Action" each month. The book's guidelines for visual displays are set by the store's buyers and emphasize particular items or labels.

Lauren lives dream

By Ginger Miller
Collegian Reporter

Stories of the "American dream" don't get much better than the one Ralph Lauren can tell. Lauren was born in the Bronx in 1949 and today can live anywhere he chooses.

Lauren studied at the City College of New York, worked at Bloomingdale's and Brooks Brothers and peddled ties. In 1967, Lauren got his big break when Beau Brummel, a men's clothing manufacturer, allowed him to design a line of neckties.

Even then, Lauren designed against the norm. The neckties he designed were four inches wide, when the standard was only 2½ .

Lauren went on to design a line of men's wear, then women's wear. Later he ventured into fragrances, linens, leather goods and luggage, shoes and most recently furniture.

In an article published in Forbes magazine, profits from the sales of Polo/Lauren, Inc. and its licensees are estimated at $30 million.

"My clothes sell because I'm the consumer, and I haven't lost touch with that," Lauren said in an interview in Atlantic magazine.

"I think his classical tailored looks are just perfect right now with the way everything in the country is," said Barbara Stultz, manager and co-owner of Accessories on the Park.

"It's a classic look that never goes out of style," she said. "He designs the kind of fashions that not only look good, but are of good quality. I think he takes the best classical designs and updates them to an '80s look."

Unlike many other designers, Lauren does not use television as part of his advertising strategy. Instead, he chooses to run large, multipage campaigns in magazines. The image Lauren sees his clothes as portraying is the same image he wants projected in his advertising.

"We don't sell an item. We sell a way of life," Lauren said in Forbes magazine. "These are expensive products that last, and to reinforce that, you have to present a mood."

Lauren is also unwilling to compromise quality in order to make more money.

"Ralph loves shoes. So we have a $10 million shoe business," said Peter Strom, Lauren's partner. "But if Lauren was willing to make a less expensive line, we'd have a $50 million shoe business. He isn't, so we don't."

the LONG and SHORT of hair styles this season

By Britt Owen
Collegian Reporter

The long and short of hairstyling trends for this spring and summer will be healthy, shiny hair of all different lengths and variations.

"Healthy, shiny hair is what you are seeing the most of," said Lisa Costlow, hairstylist at The Hair Experts.

Jim Ward, co-owner of The Hair Experts, said that hairstyles follow clothing trends, and as clothes become more tailored and close-fitting, so does hair. Soft curls and body will replace the sharp sprayed bangs that have been so popular, he said.

For women who choose to wear their hair long this spring, body and soft waves will be popular at a length slightly past the shoulders. Layered bobs with slight waves are also part of this year's spring and summer hair fashion.

For women who like permanents, a new type of roller is being used to soften curls for a gentler, more feminine look, Ward said.

Mid-length hairstyles for women will be popular with the use of a technique called a graduated cut, which is similar to the wedge cut, said Starr Pugh, admissions director for Crum's Beauty College.

This length of hair can be styled in a variety of different ways to fit the activity of the individual.

Short hair, shaped softly to the curve of the head, will be the most popular trend, said Costlow. Short bobs will still be a popular cut.

For men, hairstyles will promote a professional look for a short length. Hair will be cut short on the sides and in the back, but will include longer bangs that can be arranged in soft waves, combed, dried naturally or styled, Pugh said.

Revenue report prompts additional ticket increase

By Alan Wilds
Staff Writer

Ticket prices for men's basketball and football games will be raised an additional 50 cents per game due to lower income projections from the Big Eight Conference, tuition increases and the higher cost of athletic housing, Athletic Director Steve Miller said Monday.

Two weeks ago the athletic department announced its original ticket price increase for next year — $1 per game for all seats and $2 for chair-back seats — which would have generated about $260,000 for the department.

That amount was adjusted when Miller received new information from various sources indicating the athletic department's expenses would be more than the amount of projected income.

The cost of basketball tickets will now be $5 per game, $1.50 more than the cost this year. Student season tickets will be $70 for 14 games, compared with the $38.50 price for 11 games this year.

"When you look at the increase in dollars it looks like an astronomical amount, but you have to remember there are three more games," Miller said.

Student season tickets for football will cost $42 next year as compared with $36 this year.

The additional increases are intended to generate about $480,000.

The information affecting the price increase came from the Big Eight Conference, which recently released revised income projections for next year that indicate a decrease of $3 million from this year.

Vice President for Institutional Advancement Robert Krause said the conference originally made projections without considering a loss of revenue due to possible probation of more Big Eight teams and a decrease in television contracts.

"They are just playing it safe," Krause said.

Information was not available to the department until after a ticket price decision had been made, Miller said.

"Coupled with the cost of living, it becomes a significant problem," he said.

The increased cost of out-of-state tuition was also released after the original price increase decision.

"This means the cost of granting out-of-state athletes will increase much more than we expected," Miller said.

Krause said the initial athletic budget was based on old tuition rates.

"This is a terribly complex issue," he said. "It must be taken into consideration how many out-of-state students we will have, as well as how many athletes will live in residence halls and off campus."

Miller said the department had

Architecture dean named

Candidate negotiated

By Deborah Dinges
Collegian Reporter

The only difference between Lane Marshall, professor of landscape architecture at Texas A&M, and the dean of the college of architecture position at K-State is a negotiated contract.

"We have reached a verbal agreement," Provost James Coffman said.

Marshall has been offered the position and a written agreement is expected to be finalized Monday, Coffman said.

Marshall said he does not plan to make major changes in the college.

"I want to try to use where we are now as a springboard to becoming the best in the country," he said. "K-State has the dedicated and highly skilled instructors and capable students to accomplish this goal.

"K-State has a wonderful national reputation," Marshall said. "At my first visit to the school, in 1978, these views were confirmed."

In addition to K-State's reputation, Marshall said he likes the University's size. Texas A&M, where he teaches, has an enrollment of about 40,000 — twice the size of K-State.

"K-State has a much more personal size," he said.

As president of the American Society of Landscape Architects, Marshall did a great deal of traveling, during which he saw that K-State graduates are among the best in the country, he said.

"I want to devote a lot of time to development activities," Marshall said. "A dean's job is to make the college look good — not the dean. Most of my energy will be focused on getting outside funding, especially in computing."

Mark Lapping, dean of the college of architecture, said some of the challenges facing the new dean will be to consolidate and expand opportunities opening in the Kansas City area, to achieve better integration of the department into the college mission, to initiate the next phase of strategic planning, and to maintain high visibility and quality of the college's programs.

"It's time to allow someone with different talents to come on," Lapping said. "These jobs ought not be for life."

Lapping planned on only serving one term of five years as dean. His last day as dean will by July 31.

"I see myself as a changing agent," he said. "The goal is that Marshall can take benefit of what we've been doing."

Through mid-July, Lapping will have the opportunity to acquaint Marshall with the department.

"(Marshall) has strong ties with the professional community, which is important for a college like ours," Lapping said. "We nurture students for the profession."

It is an advantage for K-State to have someone who is "well plugged-

NASA studies greenhouse effect

The Greenhouse Effect

Editors note: This is the first part of a three part series on the greenhouse effect, its causes, affects and possible solutions to the problem.

By Bryan Ackley
Collegian Reporter

James Hansen, director of the NASA Goddard Institute for Space Studies, is convinced the earth is getting progressively warmer — and warmer.

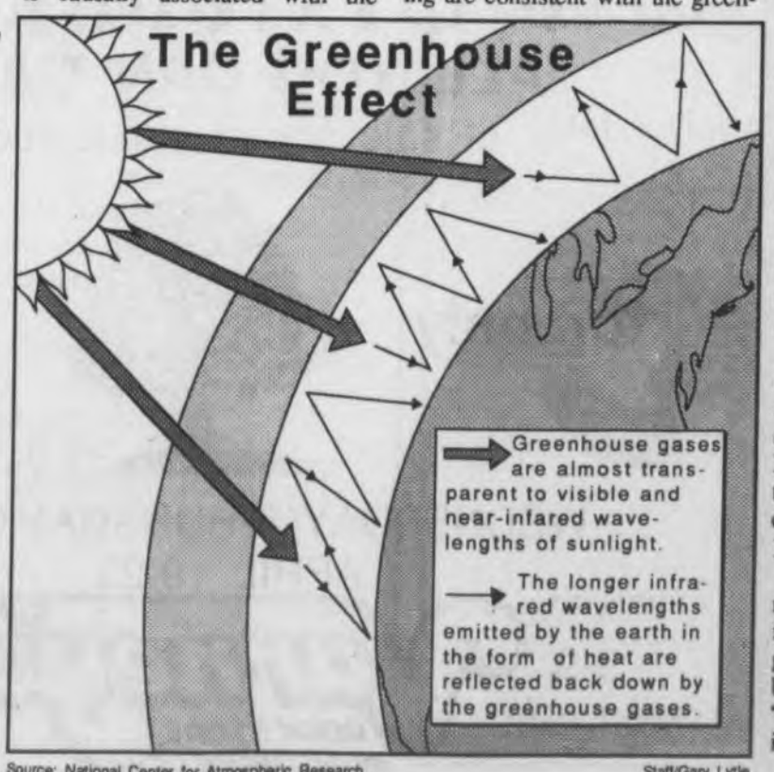
For the past decade, Hansen and his colleagues have been conducting experiments on the earth's atmosphere in an effort to learn more about the greenhouse effect.

The U.S. government has become increasingly interested in what Hansen has learned about the greenhouse effect, and in June, Hansen testified about his findings before the U.S. Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

During his testimony, Hansen said the global warming recorded during the past decade has been of such magnitude that he is 99 percent certain it is the result of an actual warming trend.

In order to show global warming is causally associated with the greenhouse effect, researchers need to determine that warming is larger than the natural climate variability. They also need to show that the magnitude and nature of the warming are consistent with the greenhouse mechanism, he said.

"Since there is only a 1 percent chance of an accidental warming of this magnitude," he said, "the agreement with the expected greenhouse effect is of considerable significance.



"In my opinion, the greenhouse effect has been detected, and it is changing our climate now."

Hansen said scientists are faced with a dilemma. They are unable to conduct some research on the greenhouse effect because they are waiting for the advancement of technology to provide them with the equipment they need for some future experiments.

"The greenhouse effect is caused by trace gases in the earth's atmosphere, such as carbon dioxide, chloroflourocarbons and methane," Hansen wrote in a report presented to the American Governor's Association Committee on Energy and Environment in August.

"(Greenhouse gases) are transparent to sunlight, but they absorb infrared or heat radiation from the ground and radiate a portion of it back to the earth's surface," he said. "If the amount of these gases increases, the earth's temperature

Speaker discusses co-existence in Israel

By Karen Allen
Staff Writer

A peaceful ending to the Palestinian-Israeli conflict looks more promising than ever, a member of the Palestine National Council said Tuesday at a Lou Douglas lecture.

"It's possible for Palestine to have milk and honey for two people instead of one," said Ibrahim Abu-Lughod to a crowd of about 300 at the Union Forum Hall. "We need a solution that encourages not only co-existence, but a mingling between the Palestinians and Israelis."

For 17 months the Palestinian people have been in uprising against the Israelis. They have since created an alternative society, said the 60-year-old professor and former chairman of the political science department at Northwestern University.

The Palestinians are ready to offer peace because they recognize "the only way (the conflict) can be solved is through political means," Abu-Lughod said. "There are no military means by which the conflict can be resolved."

The United States could help settle the conflict, he said, and already the Bush administration has seemed to be more optimistic than Reagan's was, saying that the "occupation must end."

While former President Reagan said outright that he opposed a Palestinian state, President Bush has lessened the statement, saying he "does not support" such a state, Abu-Lughod said.

That kind of statement teamed with a growing movement among American people who support a peaceful ending to the conflict, show the United States is slowly "accepting the Palestinian right to self-determination," he said.

All Palestinians have the common belief of the right to self-determination, which includes the right to retain their national identity, establish a state, represent themselves and return to their national soil, Abu-Lughod said.

Palestinians have said the Palestinian Liberation Organization is their representative, he said, and the issues that have to be negotiated for peace are simple: land, people and sovereignty.

One way the U.S. government can show its support for a peaceful ending is to "hold Israel accountable for human rights violations in the 'Israeli-occupied areas.'"

Stadium inquiry begins

LONDON — Soccer fans kicked, harassed and urinated on police as the officers tried to rescue victims of the Sheffield stadium disaster, a Conservative lawmaker charged Tuesday.

The government officially began its inquiry into the tragedy, Britain's worst sports disaster. During the night, the death of a 14-year-old boy pushed the death toll to 95.

Police have been sharply criticized for their handling of crowd on Saturday at Hillsborough Stadium, where the deaths occurred just minutes into an English Association Cup semifinal match between Liverpool and Nottingham Forest.

Irvine Patnick, a Conservative member of Parliament representing Sheffield, said officers told him Liverpool fans hindered police as they tried to save people. Similar claims, attributed to undientified police officers, appeared in press reports.

"They told me they were hampered, harassed, punched, kicked and urinated on by Liverpool fans," Patnick said. "All of this happened to them ... and now they are being blamed.

"I saw the bruising on their bodies and the state they were in and there is no doubt in my mind that it is true."

Police end demonstration

BEIJING — More than 500 police dislodged hundreds of demonstrating students from in front of the Communist Party headquarters early Wednesday and moved them back toward their universities.

Police used no force and no arrests were reported as the demonstrators left peacefully.

The police action at least temporarily ended more than two days of marches and demonstrations by thousands of students in Beijing and Shanghai demanding more democracy.

About 1,500 demonstrators were milling outside the ornate gate of Zhongnanhai, the headquarters of the Communist Party, when police arrived in jeeps at 4:20 a.m.

The police formed a line across the six lanes of Changan Boulevard, the capital's main thoroughfare, and began walking toward the students.

"To march on the seat of government is illegal and cannot be permitted," said a loudspeaker mounted on a truck.

Hoffman's death a suicide

DOYLESTOWN, Pa. — Yippie founder Abbie Hoffman committed suicide with a "massive overdose" of the drug phenobarbital, the coroner said Tuesday.

"The death was from the combined effects of phenobarbital and alcohol," Coroner Dr. Thomas Rosko said at a news conference.

Hoffman, who held fast to his anti-establishment convictions and made his points with searing humor, was found dead April 12 at his pome in New Hope. He was 52.

"I think it is likely that he literally fell asleep and died in his sleep," Rosko said. "Other than that, what occurred in his last hours is strictly speculation."

The autopsy found the residue of about 150 pills, several times the lethal dose even without the presence of alcohol, the coroner said. Phenobarbital is a long-acting sedative and an anticonvulsant.

Hoffman's blood alcohol level was .20, twice the legal limit in Pennsylvania, Rosko said.

The coroner said laboratory tests showed two other drugs were present in Hoffman's system.

Ball undergoes heart surgery

LOS ANGELES — Comedian Lucille Ball suffered an apparent heart attack Tuesday and was rushed into surgery at CedarsSinai Medical Center, a hospital spokesman said.

Ball, 77, was conscious when she arrived at the hospital about noon with her husband, Gary Morton.

"She is currently undergoing surgery," said Cedars-Sinai spokesman Ron Wise. "Her condition is clearly serious."

The redheaded entertainer and her late former husband, Desi Arnaz, starred in the television show "I Love Lucy," one of the most popular TV shows of all time, from 1951 to 1957. The show is still seen around the world in syndicwted reruns.

Ball went solo in 1962 with "The Lucy Show." The name was changed to "Here's Lucy" in 1968. The show went off the air in 1974.

In 1950, she and Arnaz started their own production company Desilu,on a shesring budget of $5,000. The Arnazes were divorced in 1960.

Students rally for marijuana

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. — College students are planning a campus demonstration in favor of legalizing marijuana — but not, they insist, for the reasons you might think.

In an era of anti-drug sentiment, University of Illinois students planning the 13th annual "Hash Wednesday" say they want to promote the cannabis plant as a source of pulp for paper and fiber.

One of the organizers, Debby Spindel, said smoking pot in the open or yelling obscenities at police will be discouraged.

Steve Hager, an Urbana native and editor of High Times magazine, said that if fast-growing marijuana plants were used as a source of pulp in place of trees "the greenhouse effect and deforestation would never be happening."

"The whole issue has shifted to the environment," Hager said of efforts to legalize the forbidden weed.

Jon Gettman, national director of National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws, said legalizing the growing of marijuana makes economic sense.

"We grow $33.1 billion of it a year just for the flower," Gettman said. "We're talking about giving farmers another legitimate cash crop."

No matter what they claim as the purpose of the legalization drive, police will be on hand Wednesday, said campus spokesman Terry Shephard.

Paper to resume printing

TOPEKA — The first issue of the Haskell Indian Junior College newspaper in Lawrence will be given to students Wednesday — two days after a federal judge approved a plan to allow the paper to resume publication.

The newspaper, called The Indian Leader, became a center of controversy last month when its student editors and the American Civil Liberties Union sued the school in federal court, alleging that its funding was frozen last October because it ran articles critical of the school's president.

"We view the publication of this paper as a good-faith test from the school," said Patrick Nichols of Topeka, an ACLU attorney representing the students.

The agreement between the school and the student editors was approved Monday by U.S. District Judge Richard Rogers in Topeka.

Spokesmen for both sides of the case stress that the publication agreement is only valid for one issue and that they still have to agree to a final compromise on rules and regulations pertaining to the paper.

Campus Bulletin

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Campus organizations are encouraged to use Campus Bulletin. All announcements must be submitted by 11 a.m. one day prior to publication. Announcements for Monday's bulletin must be in by 11 a.m. Friday. However, publication is determined by the amount of space available on a first-come, first-serve basis and is not ensured. Information forms are available on the shelf outside Kedzie 118. Forms should be left in the box on the shelf after being filled out. All submissions must be signed and are subject to verification. Questions should be directed to the Collegian's campus editors in Kedzie 116.

No major changes in sorority system after AGD closing

By Karen Allen
Staff Writer

The closing of Alpha Gamma Delta sorority at the end of the semester will effect no major changes in the sorority system because the house's withdrawal is not a reflection of any problems within the system, said Barb Robel, Greek Affairs adviser.

"We don't know of anything we can do," Robel said when asked about alleviating possible problems that might come about if rush week numbers continue to increase and smaller houses continue to struggle.

Panhellenic Council will be implementing one change next fall in an effort to increase the membership of smaller houses, she said. The 11 remaining houses will not be allowed to take more than quota, which is the number of females going through rush divided by 11.

The change, which will be instituted on a one-year trial basis, means that houses cannot pledge more than their allotted share of rushees before all the houses have pledged quota.

Quota will also be set later in the week for rush 1989 to achieve a more equal distribution of the total number of females who will actually pledge, Robel said.

"We hope it will work, but there is no guarantee," she said. Quota for rush 1988 was set at 47, but some houses pledged more than that amount. The average membership for K-State chapters is 119.

AGD is closing because its membership of four pledges and 23 actives is below the requirement of 75 members requested by the sorority's international officers. The chapter was founded at K-State in 1986.

Robel said AGD's national chapter is to blame for the sorority's closing, not the K-State greek system.

When the sorority colonized in 1985, the University's sorority system began to grow. In 1986, AGD's nationals "specifically said they would provide housing for the (local chapter) within two years," Robel said.

Although it wasn't a legal contract, she said K-State expected the nationals to hold up to their end of the bargain and when they "refused to deal with the housing situation, it put the chapter in a real bind."

K-State is not the only state university losing a sorority this year. The Alpha Phi chapter at the University of Kansas is closing because its "chapter was not able to maintain a competitive size," said Danny Kaiser, coordinator for greek programs at KU.

Kaiser said the decision to close the sorority house was made by the international chapter earlier this semester and KU's greek system was not involved. Alpha Phi's total membership was in the 90s, he said, compared with the average KU chapter size of 157. There are 14 sororities at KU, including Alpha Phi.

Kaiser said no changes will be made in the KU sorority rush system as a result of the house closing. Houses can take above quota only if their total membership is below 140 after adding the new pledges.

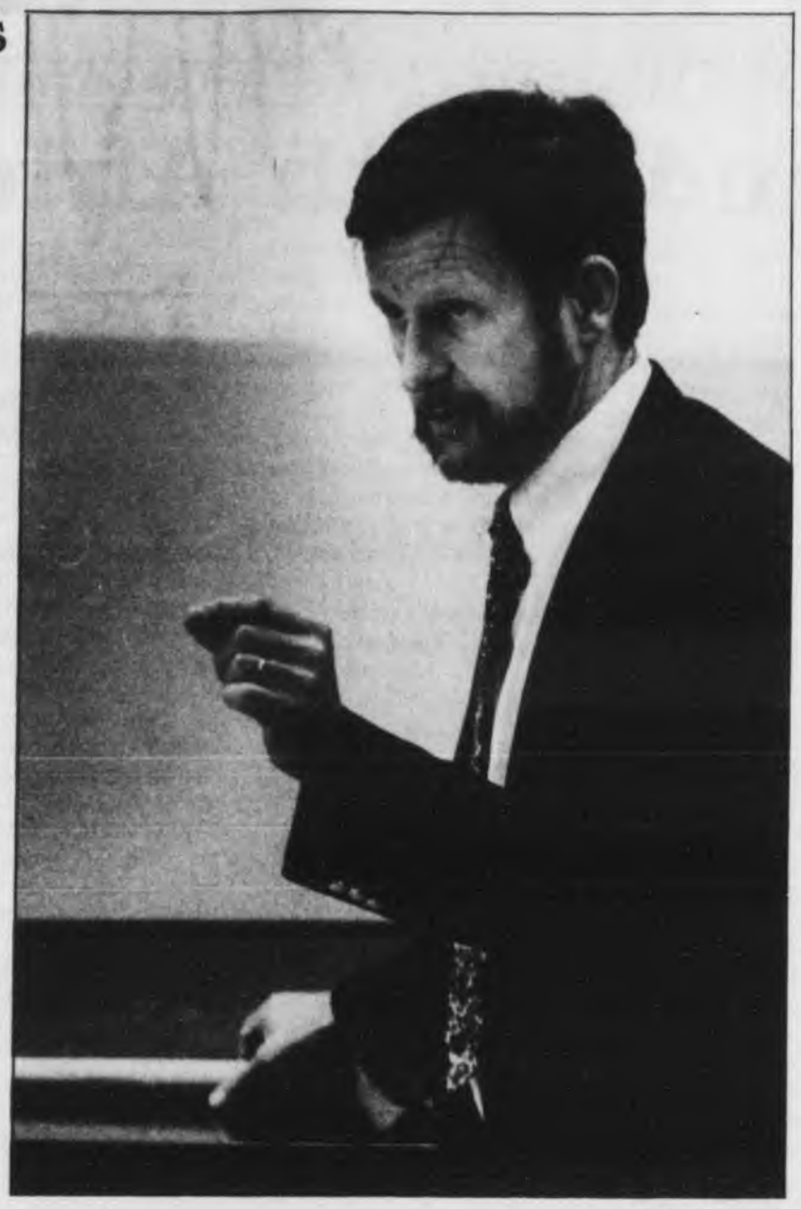
Honor lecture series begins

Center works to combine resources

By Paula Selby
Staff Writer

As universities become more departmentalized, professors may find it more difficult to exchange ideas and follow other disciplines' progress.

Members of the Center for Molecular and Solid State Energetics attempt to combine various departments' resources. In doing so, the group invited David Shirley as their first Honor Lecturer Tuesday.



Shirley is the director of the Lawrence Berkeley Laboratory, a center for the study of basic energy science and modern life sciences in Berkeley, Calif.

"(MASSE) tends to help us reestablish some of the academic and intellectual community that must have existed at universities in the Middle Ages — when scholars huddled together and reached across their disciplines to one another," Shirley said.

MASSE is an interdisciplinary program designed to promote research on dynamical processes in the gaseous and condensed phases of matter.

The purpose of MASSE is to prompt the exchange of ideas and new approaches, to promote joint research projects, and to acquire and maintain the highest quality of research equipment, said Peter Sherwood, director of MASSE and associate professor of chemistry.

At a luncheon Tuesday for administrators and MASSE faculty, Shirley stressed the importance of a program that "sort of breaks down the disciplinary barriers."

Staff/Joe Freeman
Professor David Shirley of Lawrence Berkeley Laboratory delivers the MASSE Honor Lecture in King Hall Tuesday afternoon.

The center, which was formed in 1982, includes faculty members from the departments of chemistry and physics, and nuclear, chemical, electrical and computer engineering.

"(MASSE) is a very good thing and it's doing a great job in stimulating the research networks among several disciplines throughout the University," Shirley said. "It revitalizes the research programs by creating a format in which people can work together."

Interdisciplinary programs ease the financial burdens of modern research by centralizing facilities, he said, which allows people to collaborate results not accessible to an individual.

"Modern research is expensive — we need to think about cost-effectiveness when using taxpayers investments," Sherwood said.

Later Tuesday afternoon, Shirley gave a lecture on "Adsorbate Geometries from Energy Dependent Photoelectron Diffraction," to about 65 graduate students and faculty members. He described a new method of studying surface structures and their exposure to the chemically active atmosphere.

"Shirley has played a key role in the development and understanding of the photoelectric effect during the last 20 years," Sherwood said.

"It is my view that (Shirley) has contributed more than any other person to the proper understanding of photoemission that has led to many important developments of the experiment."

Each semester the MASSE program features speakers from outside the University and weekly lectures by MASSE faculty.

Graduate students are encouraged to participate in MASSE, Sherwood said. Although students must fulfill regular degree requirements in their prospective department, they benefit from the broad range of facilities and expertise represented by the faculty and speakers who participate in the program.

Students involved with the center can receive financial assistance ranging from $600 to $900, through teaching or research assistantships, according to the center's brochure.

Sherwood has been director of the program since February, 1988. He started the Honor Lecture series.

Ta Fantastika Black Light Theatre
Saturday, April 22, 8 p.m.

Take a journey to the amazing world of dreams with Ta Fantastika, the only black light theatre company in the United States. On a totally black stage under ultraviolet light you'll see -- with your eyes open -- wonders you could otherwise only dream of: dancing flowers and butterflies; a cartoon circus starring an ostrich, a camel, and a prancing giraffe in red shoes; or a tiny suitcase that spews shooting stars. Since 1982 Ta Fantastika has been enchanting audiences in the United States, Europe, and the Far East. See them and find out why.

Israel and South Africa similar in actions

"It was drummed into our young hearts that the fatherland must become ours ... clear of Gentiles — Arabs." — Moshe Menuhin, student at an elite Zionist school in Palestine.

"I ask nothing of the Jews except that they should disappear ...."— Hans Frank, governor general of Nazi-occupied Poland.

When former South African Prime Minister B.J. Vorster paid a visit to Israel in 1976, it must have seemed surreal to some people: here was an acknowledged Nazi sympathizer being warmly welcomed by the highest officials of the Jewish state.

From 1942 to 1944 Vorster had been detained by the British for his activities with a South African fascist organization. The organization, known as the Ossewa Brandwag, espoused a "Blood and Soil" ideology and had its own strike force, the Stormjaers.

In fact, Vorster's visit, during which trade and military agreements with Israel were signed, was the consumation of an alliance between two increasingly isolated pariah states. With the writing on the wall for the South African regime, the visit came one year before the United Nations voted for an international embargo of all weapons sales to South Africa.

Despite both Israel's and South Africa's obsession with state security and official secrecy, the military and economic alliance between the two states is well-known. Because of Israel's role as a conduit for arms and other goods to South Africa (in violation of U.N. embargoes), the U.N. General Assembly has passed resolutions every year since 1974 condemning the South African-Israeli relationship.

But to many people, the alliance remains an unlikely one. How is it, one might ask, that a Jewish nation founded in the aftermath of the holocaust could cooperate with a nation very much like the one that carried out the holocaust?

South African Bishop Desmond Tutu once remarked, "Israel cannot continue to collaborate with a government like those from which the Jews have suffered."

What Tutu seemed to overlook was that Israel itself behaves very much like the governments from which the Jews have suffered, and that its relationship with South Africa appears to be as much for ideological as practical considerations.

Both states institutionalize racism, both are the result of European colonial settler movements which sought to displace indigenous populations through deception and force, and both have amassed an impressive body of mythology to justify displacement and to deny the aspirations of the people of color who occupied the land prior to their encroachment.

Commentary

Scott Miller

Collegian Columnist

Both colonial settler movements have their origins in a fusion of "Blood and Soil" justifications and Biblical notions of a chosen people who trek into the wilderness to establish an outpost of civilization.

As a direct result of their encroachment, both have entered into a Laager mentality which attempts to preserve their mythical notions of a "pure" community.

While the South Africans cling to Namibia, the Israelis continue to occupy the West Bank and Gaza — both in defiance of U.N. resolutions. British journalists have even reported Israeli troop operations with the South African Defense Forces in Namibia, while South African forces train Israeli forces for counterinsurgency against the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Because of conflicting interests, both the political Zionists and the Afrikaner Nationalists have traditionally viewed themselves as victims of British imperialism — although in this respect, the Afrikaners seem to have more of a case than do the Zionists who could never have attempted their program if not for British support.

Seen in this light, the anti-Semitism of Afrikaner Nationalists, such as Vorster, is one of the few points on which Zionist and Afrikaner ideology fail to coincide. But even that can apparently be easily reconciled.

The Israeli scholar Benjamin Beit-Hallahmi has written, "Traditional Afrikaner anti-Semitism did not stand in the way of the Afrikaners' positive view of Israel as an ally and a model. One can detest Jews and love Israelis, because Israelis somehow are not Jews.

Israelis are colonial fighters and settlers, just like the Afrikaners. They are tough and resilient. They know how to dominate. Jews are different. They are, among other qualities, gentle, nonphysical, often passive and intellectual. So one can go on disliking Jews while admiring the Israelis."

At the time of Vorster's visit, then Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin remarked that the two countries share the same ideals. Those ideals undoubtedly include apartheid.

Although on several occasions Israeli officials have officially condemned apartheid, such as the Knesset's unanimous vote on June 19, 1986, the Israeli-South African alliance remains intact and Israel continues to practice its own form of apartheid in the occupied territories.

Israel also maintains considerable economic and military ties with the puppet regimes of the homelands, which make up 13 percent of the land in South Africa and in which about 80 percent of the population is supposed to exercise its "separate development."

Beit-Hallahmi writes, "On the public (front), Israel will try to put more distance between itself and South Africa. On the secret front, Israel will mount a campaign to help apartheid survive by every available means, from helping South Africa with everything from public relations to military and counter-insurgency measures."

The matter has been put rather succinctly by Yitzhak Unna, the former Israeli ambassador to South Africa, "We don't want another Mozambique or another Angola. We don't even want another Liberia."

So long as people see the Israeli-South African alliance as one based on wholly opportunist grounds between two desperate but different states, and not as one of two ideologically similar movements, they will fail to realize that a blow to the South African apartheid is a blow to Israeli apartheid, and vice versa.

New Kansas statute creates bad precedent

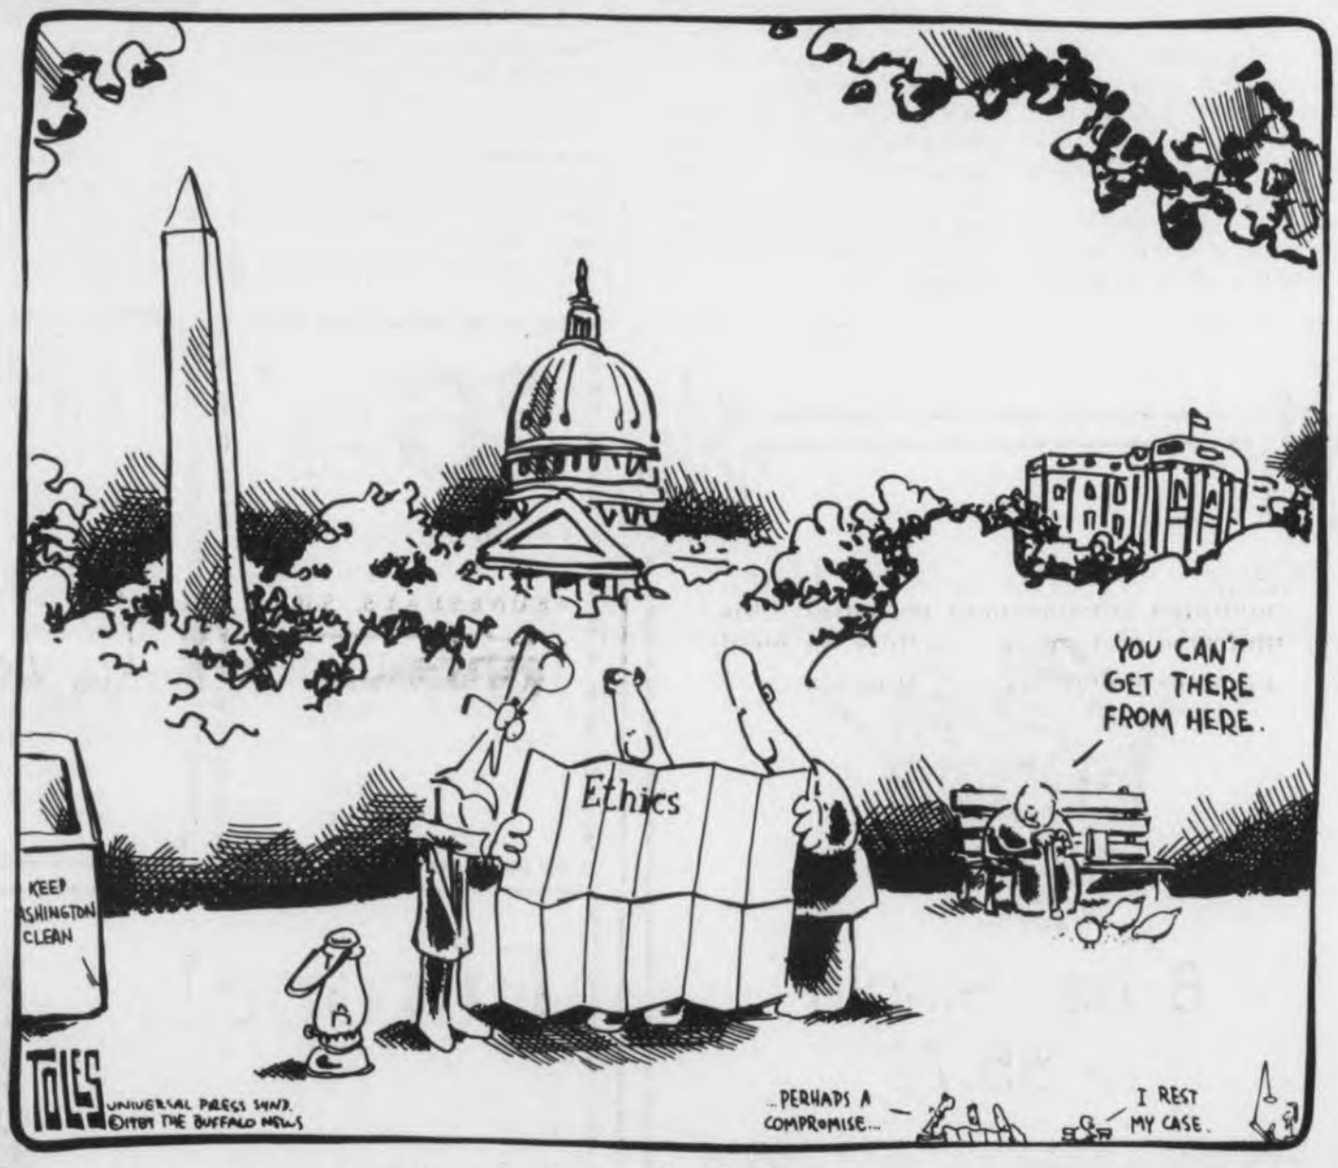
Good intentions are commendable but not always practical when made into laws.

Consider the seven bills Gov. Hayden signed into law on April 12. Of these seven, one was of considerable interest, increasing the penalty for people who accidentally kill others while driving drunk.

This bill made aggravated vehicular homicide under the influence of drugs or alcohol a Class D felony, punishable by a prison sentence of one to 10 years. Previously, it was a Class E felony, punishable by one to five years in prison.

At face value, the bill seems great. Stiffer penalties for drunk driving should deter first-time as well as repeat offenders. Hayden's signature on the bill sends a message to Kansans that there is a strong determination at the capitol to curb drunk driving offenses.

The spirit of the bill may be commendable but it creates a bad precedent.



Regular aggravated vehicular homicide, involving people not under the influence of drugs or alcohol, remains a class E felony. This includes vehicular homicide as a result of reckless driving or while fleeing a law enforcement officer.

According to this recently signed bill, it is more of a crime to kill someone while driving intoxicated than while running away from a police officer. Run over someone when you're drunk and you can get up to 10 years of jail time, but run over someone when you're trying to show off, and it's five years tops.

Recklessness is not a crime, but homicide is. The fact that someone was not drunk while committing a crime should neither detract from the seriousness of the crime nor alter subsequent penalties.

If Hayden and Kansas legislators enact legislation imposing stricter penalties upon people who commit vehicular homicide, they should do so across the board, with no exceptions. Discouraging people from drinking and driving is in the interest of the public, but crimes should be punished in a consistent manner.

The bill does not deal with voluntary or involuntary manslaughter, nor does it address premeditated murder. Aggravated vehicular homicide is a specific crime, and people found guilty should be punished accordingly, regardless of the circumstances.

Collegian Editorial Policies

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR are always encouraged. Those which pertain to matters of campus and/or public interest are especially encouraged, and are given the highest priority.

Letters should be kept as brief as possible, preferably under 300 words. Those who cannot condense their opinions should consider submiting their letter in the form of a guest column. All letters are subject to editing for space, style and taste.

GUEST COLUMNS are also encouraged. The column should be no longer than two double-spaced, typed pages. If the submission is used as a column and not a letter to the editor, it will be accompanied by the author's photograph.

SEND SUBMISSIONS to the Collegian in Kedzie 116.

UNSIGNED EDITORIALS represent the consensus opinion of the Collegian's editorial board. Opinion columns do not necessarily reflect the opinions of the Collegian management, Student Publications, Inc. or the newspaper staff in general.

Group protests '60s nostalgia

Life is full of amazing little coincidences. As one event is occurring, another event occurs that casts the first in a different light.

An article that ran in Tuesday's Wichita Eagle-Beacon described a new organization that has just been formed by three fed-up 20-year-olds. The group is called NAFTAT, or the National Association for the Advancement of Time. The group is dedicated to the task of bringing an end to the '60s "in your lifetime."

The three founders are fed up with hearing '60s tunes on the radio and in television commercials. They don't like the motion pictures "Hair" or "The Big Chill." They despise television's "The Wonder Years," and wish that the 50 million members of the baby boom generation would just grow up.

The three founders of NAFTAT admit that a great deal of good came out of the '60s, namely the civil rights movement, and that this is what deserves to be remembered. However, they feel it is time for the baby boomers to step aside and let time continue forward.

What makes this article a very interesting coincidence is that it was printed the same day that the Union Program Council here at K-State kicked off its first Activism Week. This week, according to the posters, is filled with nothing but '60s nostalgia. It includes a tie-dying workshop, Passive Resistance Day, the movie "Hair" and the movie "Return of the Secaucus Seven." ("The Big Chill" is actually "Secaucus Seven" with a bigger budget.)

If the purpose of this week was to get out to NAFTAT, we might have a serious protest on our hands.

Thursday's activities promise to be fairly interesting, but they are also illustrative of the reasons behind NAFTAT's, and my own, general dislike of '60s nostalgia.

Thursday is called Passive Resistance Day and its activities include lectures on student activism and an actual "protest" between the Union and Seaton Hall. (In the event of rain this "protest" will be moved indoors and become a sit-in.)

Commentary

Dwayne Lively

Collegian Columnist

What the posters do not say is what exactly is being protested. Thursday is evidently a "Generic" or "BYOB" (Bring Your our Beef) protest. It appears to be just a get-together for people looking to have a good time and maybe save the world and the whales. Of course, where I come from that's also called a slumber party.

Activism Week, while pure in its intentions, falls, like other such '60s nostalgia revivals, into a typical trap. It only revels in the superficial glitz of the era; tie-dyed T-shirts, bell bottoms, love beads, The Doors and Jefferson Airplane. It does not revel in the innate fear and confusion such an era of social upheaval must have caused.

Not only was there the threat of a race war that was staved off mainly by the actions of Martin Luther King Jr. and his doctrines of non-violent resistance, but there was also the draft. Any day, any man could receive a letter from his local draft board. In the '60s good grades kept you in school and out of a war. If you flunked out you could be drafted. (Today they look good on a resume.)

A number of professors here at K-State have told about conferences they had with students who were facing perhaps the largest choice they had ever been forced to make, going to Vietnam, going to Canada, or going to jail. Many of them are still living with the results of their choices, including veterans who suffer from post-traumatic stress syndrome, and those who chose to go to Canada who still remain there. There is also the group whose names appear on the Vietnam War Memorial in Washington, D.C.

Student activists in the '60s secured a great many things that had not existed in society before that day: independent student newspapers that could be run without administrative interference and freedom from mandatory service in the Army's Reserve Officers' Training Corps.

Only today have administrators begun to challenge these changes. They want control of college newspapers and they want once again to become our parents away from home by imposing limits on what we can and cannot do as students. Boston University's new dorm visitation policy, which forbids visitors after 11:00 p.m. and visitors of the opposite sex, period, is just one example.

Instead of dealing with these issues we get Student Activism Week, which is actually a '60s Nostalgia Week. It has almost nothing to do with activism. It has mostly to do with clothing and music.

UPC has sponsored some very fun events in the past and we can rest assured that they will sponsor more. Let's hope, however, that they will not fall into the '60s trap again.

As for NAFTAT, while this columnist can sympathize with their feelings (we should remember the past, not relive it), I hope that they, like those baby boomers who are "rediscovering their roots," eventually grow up as well. Most of their arguments against the '60s are as superficial as most '60s parties. Besides, I happen to like the movie "Hair."

Fraternity and sorority housemothers Gretchen King, Dorothy Schmidt and Marie Randall take a morning walk in Manhattan Town Center.

Mall benefits indoor walkers

Club provides exercise, health information

By Paige Gantz
Collegian Reporter

With warm weather approaching, some people may have put aside their favorite swimsuits because of the extra weight accumulating on their bodies.

But if they like to walk, they could join the "I Walked My Heart at Town Center" walking club which may help rid them of unwanted bulges.

The walking club's goal is to encourage people to exercise indoors when the weather is either too hot or too cold for people to be outside.

"The club was born in November 1987 and has grown to about 800 members," said Susan Noblett, nursing education coordinator at The Saint Mary Hospital and a founder of the walking club.

"Walkers range from the age of 18 years to 84 years, but most of the walkers are between 50 to 75 years old," Noblett said.

Being a member of this club entitles the individual to a packet containing a registration form, a card explaining how to take a pulse, a record sheet to tally the exact miles walked, guidelines for nutrition, and a list of books on topics of health and wellness available at the Manhattan Public Library and Information Center.

"We try to educate people on how to start an exercise program and also hold classes at the mall to inform people on proper walking shoes, how to take their pulse and how to eat during the holidays," Noblett said.

Jan Krienitz, a Manhattan resident, was awarded $50 in the fall for "putting 2,042 miles on her tennis shoes."

"I was surprised of winning the award for the female who walked the most miles, since I was unaware of any such award," she said. "I begin every day at 7 a.m. and walk 10 times around the mall, which is five miles. My husband walks with me on three rounds but has to quit after that, on account of his bad knee."

Krienitz said that although she thinks walking is good for her health and helps her to lose weight, she mainly walks for the friendship.

"I meet a lot of nice people," she said.

Dorothy Schmidt, housemother for the Delta Delta Delta sorority, and Marie Randall, housemother for the Theta Xi fraternity, have been walking 1½ miles a day together for three years.

"We walk at 8 a.m., five days a week, and will make up on the weekend if we've missed a day," Schmidt said.

The two became interested in walking when they attended a Christian Women's Club meeting and listened to a speaker who spoke on the positive spiritual, physical and mental effects of walking.

"We were taught that all you needed was a partner, no more than two, and that if you couldn't talk while you were walking, you were walking too fast," Randall said. "If you have too many people walking as a group, you may as well quit and start knitting instead."

Schmidt and Randall have been with the walking club since it began, but they also walked before the mall was built.

"We walked at the Manhattan City Park, and if the weather was bad, we walked in the City Auditorium," Randall said.

Clarence Rieck, a Manhattan resident, walks four miles daily.

"I walk for my heart, naturally," Rieck said. "My wife walks too, but we can't walk together. I guess I walk too fast for her."

Harvest workshop concludes today with presentations

By Todd Jenkins
Collegian Reporter

Today will close a three-day workshop on post-harvest information management sponsored by the Group for Assistance on Systems Relating to Grain After-Harvest, featuring 49 researchers from around the world.

"It was our turn to give a GASGA workshop and we decided to focus on post-harvest information management because of a special problem associated with getting information," said Donna Schenck-Hamlin, coordinator of the post-harvest documentation service at Farrell Library.

According to the organization's newsletter, GASGA is a voluntary association of organizations linked with donor operations.

"There are 49 people from all over the world here," Schenck-Hamlin said. "These include librarians, researchers, people from computer science and administrators of agricultural projects.

"Information access is the big issue," she said. "It is a problem and one of the solutions that has been discussed is the process of developing a network. The microcomputer is becoming one of the most affordable options of information management for people of developing countries."

Tuesday many of the members formed small groups to discuss viable solutions to problems in information management.

One group, monitored by Paulette Foss of the University of the South Pacific, Western Samoa, discussed the need to improve information systems networks. The group emphasized the need to encourage the development of a sustainable regional post-harvest network according to geographical zones. Networks must meet to identify problems, link networks and identify a lead agency for each group.

The group was represented by people from the Philippines, Malaysia and other Asian and South Pacific countries.

"Information access is the big issue."
—Donna Schenck-Hamlin documentation service coordinator

"Post-Harvest Documentation service is unique; there is only one other collection in the United States that would be parallel to it," Schenck-Hamlin said. "That is the Postharvest Institute for Perishables Information Center. We are a well-known international center for this kind of documentation.

"It is in the library, located on the fourth floor," she said. "It contains collection and data base material that is used by an international clientele of approximately 1,000 individuals."

Today's workshop will begin at 8 a.m. in the Union Big Eight Room. The workshop will be highlighted by several presentations from members of the group from around the world.

SURVIVAL

As the other team takes the offensive, Lynn Trifonoff, senior in psychology, takes aim and hits at an attacker while defending his team's flag during their first game of Survival Saturday.

Game that goes splat

Some players go all the way when applying camouflage. Tor Hessman, sophomore in architecture, goes a little further.

Jeff Bessette, sophomore in business administration, and Jeff Stockman, senior in architecture, head toward the other team's camp at the start of their first game.

It was barely daybreak when the troops converged at Hunter's Island to confront the enemy. Well-prepared, tactically sound and physically able, this was, for 81 men and women, the day.

Well, not really.

It was about noon when the group gathered to learn the finer art of survival.

It was a matter of survival against the odds — survival against paint pellets.

The weapons were .68-caliber Sheridan pumps powered by carbon-dioxide canisters. The bullets were water-soluble, symbolic red paint pellets.

The players in this game of war were out for fun — not blood.

"I'm not out here just to win, I'm out here to have fun too," said Matt Keller, sophomore in history.

The battlefield was set with two teams, each attempting to retrieve the other's flag during a 20-minute period. If neither team captures the other's flag, 10 points are awarded for each member "killed" during the attack.

Each of the eight teams had eight to 10 players — most of whom were first-timers. As two teams played, the other players investigated the area.

"It seems like most of the dog fighting happens on that (north) end," said Alan Griswold, outdoor recreation committee member for Union Program Council. "I don't know why — I guess just because it has more shrubbery and things."

Members of the Phi Kappa Theta squad said they went through a sacred ritual of preparation the evening before the contest.

"We rented 'Platoon' and 'Heartbreak Ridge' last night just to put us in the right frame of mind for this," said Jake Kisel, sophomore in secondary education.

The team's motto — "Run fast, shoot straight and find Aggieville tonight" — seemed to typify the group.

"We even said our final good-byes to our wives and girlfriends last night," said Vance Bulla, sophomore in industrial engineering.

The tools of survival: a gun, two CO2 cartridges and 20 paint balls are supplied to players with the option to buy more paint balls or cartridges.

As the first rounds of play began, teams benefited from others' misfortune. Scrambling around on their knees and lying on their stomachs, the players suffered theatrical deaths.

While watching the antics, Steve Travis, owner of Travis Defense Training Inc. Paint Pistol Games, said many of the players would be worse for wear in the morning.

"They're going to be real tired and real sore tomorrow. They're not used to putting out this kind of energy on a regular basis," he said.

In addition to providing the guns, Travis also gave words of wisdom.

"It takes a plan to win — and a basic ability — and knowing your team members helps also," he said. "A good shot isn't bad to have either. But your chances of survival are doubled if you've got a buddy, and you know where he is."

Team strategies varied from "Classified — if I tell you then I have to kill you" to "Shoot — shoot a lot and survive until the beer bash tonight."

Kevin Walter, sophomore in finance, said his group, representing ninth floor Haymaker Hall, had intended to shoot at anything that moved and wasn't in camouflage clothing. That plan failed, however, when one of the team's members arrived wearing jeans.

"We said we were going to shoot an anything not in camies, but he didn't agree," Walter said. "But, if we need to, we're going to call in an air strike."

Walter's team wasn't the only one with a backup plan.

"We're going to bring paint in tanks and paint launchers next time. (We'll) bring in all of Sherman Williams if we have to," said Todd McMullen, freshman in physical therapy and exercise science.

After succeeding in making "three or four" kills in his first game, Jeff Johnson, Manhattan, had five simple words for his teammates.

"Just hide behind big trees," he said.

Scott Robinson, freshman in accounting, tried a similar plan while guarding his team's flag. However, after he was surrounded by five enemies, he was forced to surrender.

"I was pinned down for at least 10 minutes," he said. "I didn't have a prayer."

Speaker discusses Paraguay

Latin America aided by human ecology

By The Collegian Staff

Human ecology is breaking ground in Paraguay and several countries in South America, said Pedro Gonzalez, dean of the College of Agronomy at the National University of Asuncion, Paraguay.

"It is bringing a new and useful concept of a holistic program to the people of Latin America," Gonzalez said.

He is visiting campus this week as part of the exchange of educational information between the two universities established through a grant from the W.K. Kellogg Foundation.

"Dean Gonzalez has a major role in the Kellogg Grant," said Barbara Stowe, dean of the College of Human Ecology. "He was eager to come to K-State so he could better understand the nature of the project."

His visit, Gonzalez said, will allow a comparison to be drawn between the two universities.

"The purpose of this visit is to see the resources at the College of Human Ecology and to see what we may need to help establish a human ecology curriculum at our university," Gonzalez said.

K-State and the National University of Asuncion are working together on a cooperative three-year project funded by the $987,000 grant. The project's goal is to develop academic and training programs for Paraguayan rural development professionals.

It is designed to provide short-term training for science and agricultural professors from the College of Agronomy at the National University, and to establish human ecology as a major area of study.

"This trip was a major step in helping Gonzalez develop a perspective in planning a new curriculum in human ecology at the National University," Stowe said. "Besides learning more about the concept of human ecology, Gonzalez is very interested in the administrative process at K-State, from the Regents to interaction with department heads."

Gonzalez also brought an invitation from the National University's rector, Louis Berganza, for President Jon Wefald to visit Paraguay next year.

"I am thinking about the trip," Wefald said. "But there are no definite plans set at the moment."

The National University is enthusiastic about what K-State is doing for the university and Paraguay, he said.

"The K-State faculty's input of time and energy to program development, teaching and equipment has had an impact in making the project a success," said Nelson de Barros Barreto, co-director of the KSU-Paraguay Cooperative. "The university does not have the resources to provide the needed changes for growth.

"But the assistance of faculty and administration from K-State has enabled the university to make changes and improvements in curriculum."

The university is more open since the political changes in Paraguay, Gonzalez said. Before the change in government in January, the university was limited in what it could do. The policy was to keep the university as it was and limit the number of well-educated people to avoid political problems.

Meredith Smith, associate professor in foods and nutrition, said the impact has already been evident.

"The professors who were at K-State in January have proven the value of the experience and training they received," Smith said. "They were able to improve the quality of their teaching by the use of simple experiments that did not require a lot of expense in equipments and supplies."

Inmates appeal order in U.S District Court

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Two Kansas State Penitentiary inmates plan to appeal a federal judge's recent order requiring the state to eliminate all prison overcrowding by July 1, 1991.

Inmates Arthur R. Lohrengel and Marvin L. Dickerson filed a formal notice of appeal Tuesday in U.S. District Court in Topeka. The action simply notifies the court and the parties involved that the two inmates plan to file an appeal with the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Denver.

The appeal comes in a federal lawsuit originally filed by another penitentiary inmate in 1977. U.S. District Judge Richard Rogers of Topeka reopened the case last year, and it is now a class-action lawsuit involving inmates at the penitentiary and the Kansas Correctional Institution at Lansing and the Kansas State Industrial Reformatory in Hutchinson.

Israel

"American aid to Israel must be tied to the observance of human rights," Abu-Lughod said, adding that accepting the Palestinians does not mean one has to reject the Israelis.

"American people who accept a Palestinian state are in no way against Israel," he said. "They are not for one or another but for the co-existence of both."

Michael Suleiman, professor of political science, said he was "particularly pleased about (Abu-Lughod's) optimism about a peaceful settlement."

"There's been movement within the U.S., the Palestinians, the PLO and the Israeli public, as well as the rest of the world," he said. "Now there is a world consensus. The holdout was the U.S."

Suleiman said he is pleased the United States is moving away from the "rigid" stance it formerly held concerning the conflict.

Abu-Lughod said it is important to note that the uprising has gone on for so long because it shows that "no matter how agressive (the Israelis are), the uprising continues."

By continuing the uprising, the 2.5 million Palestinians living in occupied area are telling the Israelis "'you can't make me obey you'" just as non-smokers say "'you can't make me smoke if I don't,'" he said.

Tea honors retiring faculty, staff

By The Collegian Staff

For Bettie Dale, academic adviser, retirement will change her lifestyle.

Dale was one of 40 retiring faculty and staff members honored at a Faculty Tea Tuesday afternoon in the Union Ballroom.

One thing Dale said she would miss about working for K-State would be not having to set the alarm clock every night.

Dale, who has served for the University for about 24 years, has worked as a research associate in biology and is retiring as an academic adviser in the College of Arts and Sciences.

She said her free time will be spent doing things around the house and traveling.

"I've got a lot of dirty closets," Dale said.

Her fondest memories revolved around associations with students and co-workers, she said.

David Vruwink, chairman of Faculty Affairs and Faculty Senate, said the tea was planned to recognize the retiring employees at K-State.

"It's a last chance to say goodbye to people," Vruwink said.

Retirees were presented with an engraved Cross pen and a citation indicating their years of service, he said.

About 250 people attended the tea.

"When I came here ... there wasn't that much done. There was a hand shake and that was about it," Vruwink said. "Were trying to do a little bit more to recognize retirees."

Bush gains support from labor workers

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Bush scored points with organized labor Tuesday in his first post-election speech to a union audience but avoided any talk of his positions on the Eastern Airlines strike and minimum wage, which have soured labor's relations with the new administration.

"I want this door at the White House to stay open," Bush told about 3,000 delegates representing building trades unions from across the country. "I want to work with you."

The closest Bush came to discussing his recent differences with labor was when he told the delegates: "There's a lot more to the relationship between the White House and the labor organizations than one issue or another. ... We have had honest differences but we agree on goals and what matters is that we make progress on issues of shared concern."

Labor had several visible confrontations with former President Reagan on issues like the firing of striking air traffic controllers and White House opposition to legislation requiring employers to give workers advance notice of plant closings.

Bush took pains to avoid citing the labor animosity that flourished during the Reagan years. He praised the already cordial crowd and improved his standing with labor leaders by promising to make NLRB appointments "whose neutrality and integrity are above reproach."

"My appointments will not be anti-labor or, as I say, anti-business. They will be based on fair trade." Bush said, as a shout of "Amen" was heard from one Texas delegate in the applauding audience.

Bush also praised the group's patriotism role in the nation's economic growth and efforts on behalf of Poland's Solidarity movement, saying "wherever the free trade movement is threatened, so too is democracy."

But noticeably missing from the speech were any direct references to Bush's promise to veto minimum wage bills that have cleared the House and Senate or his refusal to intervene to block a strike that has grounded Eastern for nearly two months.

Union leaders expressed no disappointment over the omissions.

planned to house the athletes in a cluster on campus, but the idea met with such protest by current residents that the athletic department decided to give athletes their choice of residence.

Although housing would have been cheaper and more economical in the residence halls, it is the projected travel expenses such as transportation, hotels and meals that must be accommodated, Miller said.

"We just could not absorb all of that and we had to make adjustments," he said.

Using some of these funds to benefit non-revenue programs will hinder scholarships and recruiting because that money would normally be used in those areas, Miller said.

The increase should not cause a decline in ticket sales, he said.

Carol Adolph, ticket office director, said it would be unlikely that student football ticket sales get any lower than this year.

She said the number of football season tickets sold this year were 3,922 public, 595 faculty and 2,658 students.

In basketball, 4,293 were sold to the public, 4,028 to faculty and 5,812 to students.

in" with the professional world because the college works closely with professionals, Lapping said.

An active member of the American Society of Landscape Architects, Marshall was awarded the title of fellow, through his distinguished service, Lapping said.

This title is awarded to about 10 percent of the membership, Marshall said.

After receiving his masters from the University of Illinois, Marshall said the door was opened to teaching. Previously, he owned his own practice in Florida. "I have a full-time commitment to academia," he said.

Some of the accomplishments Lapping has made in his five-year term were establishing a cooperative center on urban design in Kansas City, as well as working toward a cap on enrollmen' and an increase in scholarship funds.

When Lapping became dean of the college they were awarding $17,000 in scholarships. That number has increased to $150,000, he said.

Lapping will continue to teach at K-State. He hopes to spend more time with students while managing research grants and book-writing. He also expects to be more engaged in consulting matters.

Wildcats sweep twinbill from Western

By Scott Paske
Collegian Reporter

K-State tallied runs in every inning of the first game and used a seven-run second inning in the nightcap to complete a doubleheader sweep of NAIA opponent Missouri Western, 12-1 and 10-4, Tuesday at Frank Myers Field.

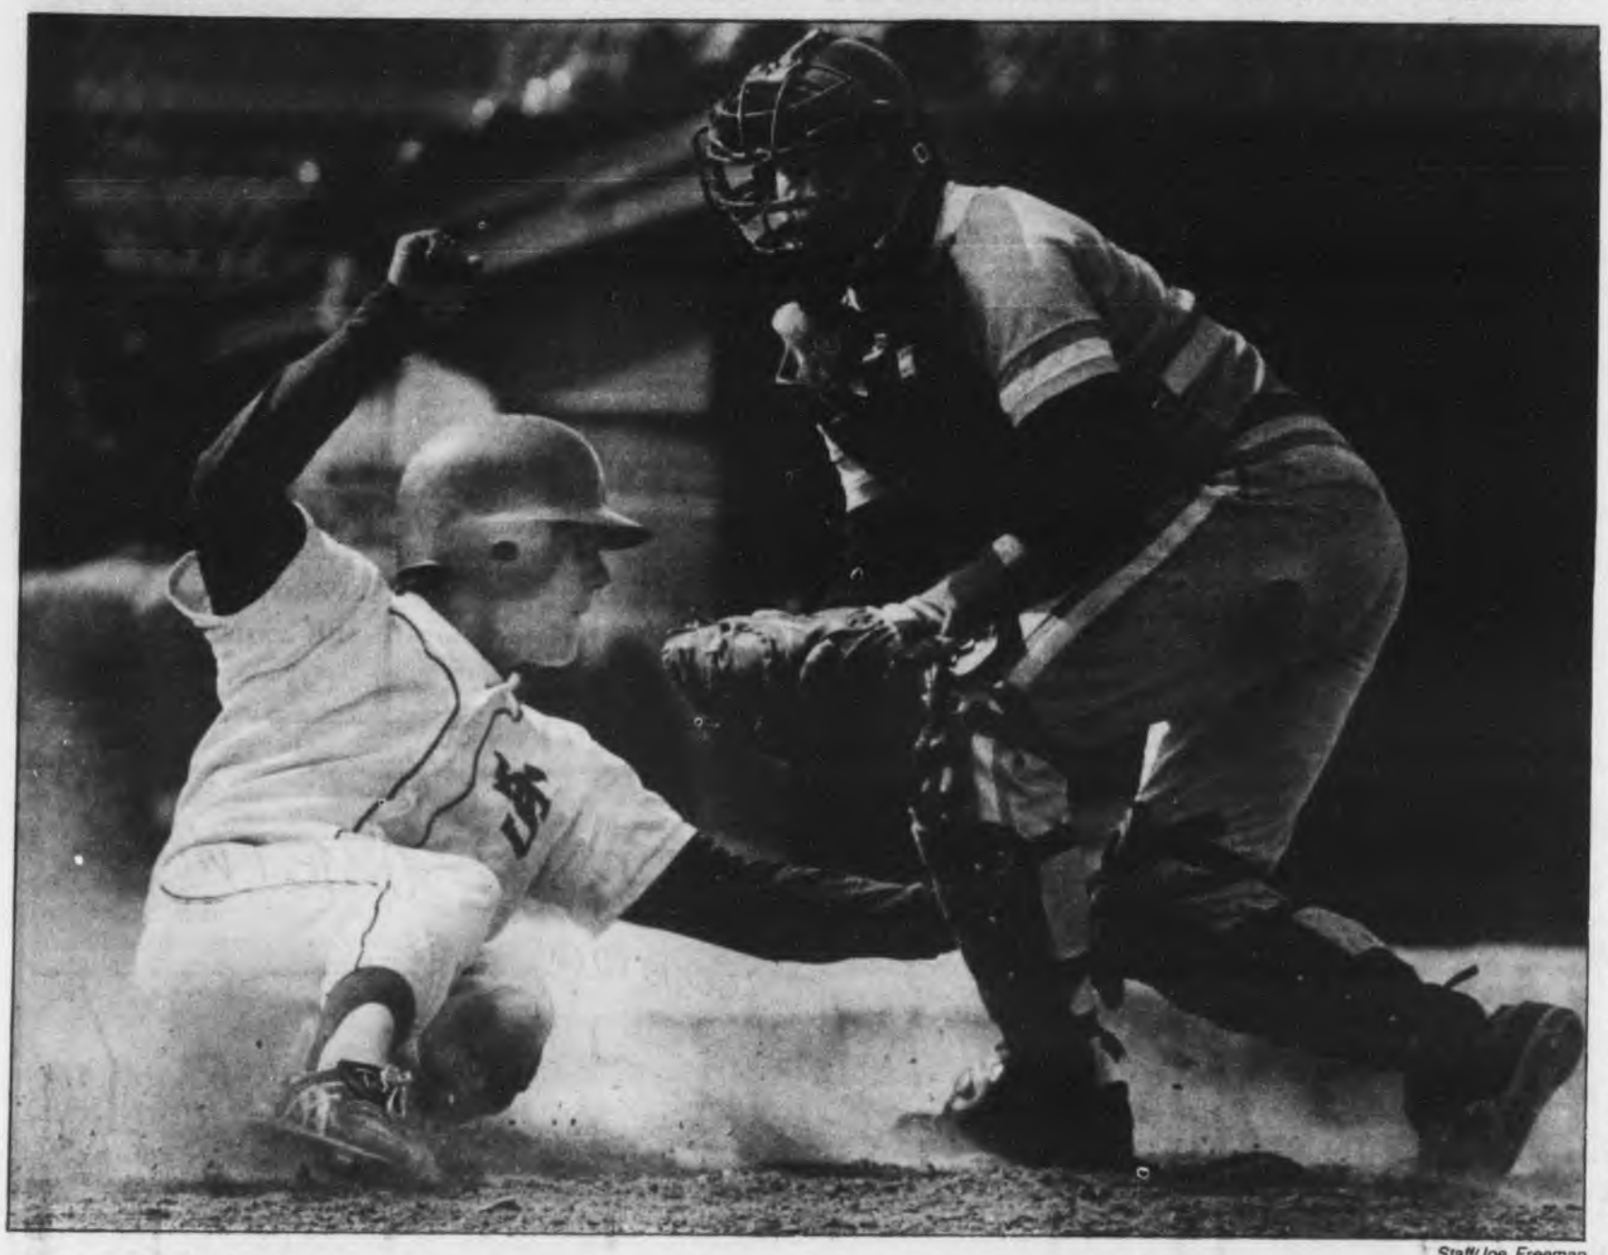
The 'Cats rapped out 13 hits and got a strong pitching performance from Bill Schafer in the opener. Second baseman Jeff Troll went 2-for-4 and drove in three runs as eight of 13 Wildcat batters notched at least one hit.

Schafer went six innings in recording his fourth win of the year. The senior scattered five hits, walked two and struck out eight. Schafer's performance raised his strikeout total to 22 over his last 15 innings on the mound.

"Bill threw very well," Wildcat coach Mike Clark said. "He's having trouble getting anything but his fastball over, but he really didn't need much more than that."

The Griffons scored their only run in the sixth when Schafer issued a bases-loaded walk to Maurice Dariso, scoring Chris Bemont. The walk came after Missouri Western started the inning with three singles.

K-State took advantage of 11 walks issued by three Griffon pitchers to extend its lead each inning. The 'Cats sent nine batters to the plate in a three-run fourth, scoring on an RBI triple by Troll and a single by Kevin Kaufman. Kaufman scored later in the inning on a balk by Griffon starter Eric Mason, who took the loss.



In the nightcap, K-State jumped out to an early lead as center fielder Russ Ringgenberg drove DeWayne Hickey's first pitch of the game into a strong north wind and over the left field fence. Ringgenberg went 3-for-5 in the doubleheader to raise his season batting average back over the .400 mark. The junior also stole four bases to give him 28 for the year, two short of the K-State season record set by Scott Graves in 1985.

The Griffons tied the game in the second when designated hitter Chris Bemont scored on a throwing error by Ringgenberg. The run was set up by a pair of walks to Bemont and Dariso, with Bemont advancing on Todd Warren's fly out to center.

K-State regained the lead and put the game out of reach in the bottom of the second, shelling Hickey for seven runs on six hits. The 'Cats scored four of the runs with two-outs, using four straight hits from the middle part of the order to fuel the rally.

Peterson pitched all seven innings in raising his record to 5-2, tying him with staff ace Dave Hierholzer for most victories. The right hander allowed six hits and struck out three.

"We played good, but kind of let down when we got the big lead," Clark said. "We had some different combinations out there, but there didn't seem to be any real big dropoff."

K-State's Mike Rosenboom slides into home past Missouri Western catcher Stoney Hays during the third inning of the first game of a doubleheader Tuesday at Frank Myers Field. Rosenboom was out on the play, but the 'Cats won 12-1 and 10-4.

Hierholzer honored

By Scott Paske
Collegian Reporter

Wildcat pitching ace Dave Hierholzer made just one trip to the mound this past week, but his performance was impressive enough to earn Big Eight Pitcher of the Week honors.

The award was the first weekly recognition given to a Wildcat this season.

Hierholzer, a junior from Overland Park, upped his mark to 5-1 with a save in K-State's 13-1 rout of Missouri on Saturday. The right hander allowed just three hits while tossing his third complete Big Eight game in as many starts. For the second time this season, the only run Hierholzer allowed came off a solo home run. The effort lowered his Big Eight earned run average to 3.18 on the year.

"When Coach (Mike Clark) told me, I was a little surprised," Hierholzer said. "I just thought somebody might have thrown in a closer, tighter game. Being ahead 4-0 (after the top of the first inning) when I took the field was a big advantage."

Hierholzer said avoiding control problems was a key factor in Saturday's victory, considering the junior did not walk a batter until the final inning and threw less than 100 pitches for the game. Those numbers parallel Hierholzer's effort all year, with his strikeout-to-walk ratio at 3-to-1.

"I was able to throw a lot of strikes on Saturday," Hierholzér said. "I mainly just tried to get ahead in the count on everybody."

Clark said the performance was noteworthy.

"I didn't pay that much attention to the other outings around the league, but it would have taken a whale of a performance to beat his," he added. "Dave just did a heckuva job."

Hierholzer's win against the Tigers was the lone bright spot for the pitching staff in the weekend series. In the other three games, Mizzou scored 35 runs. Clark said he is still hunting for consistency from his other staff members.

"We've got to get the other pitchers to step up," he said. "When I first looked at the staff I didn't think we had an ace, but a bunch of pitchers who would give us seven innings for our relievers. Dave has been the one to step up and give us great outings every time."

Henson tabbed by teammates

From Staff and Wire Reports

The K-State basketball team had its annual postseason banquet Tuesday night at the Holiday Inn & Holidome. Highlighting the evening was Steve Henson's acceptance of the Porky Morgan Most Inspirational Player Award. Henson is only the fourth Wildcat to receive the award a second time.

The award was established in 1950 in honor of long-time K-State athletic trainer Porky Morgan. Last year, Henson shared the honor with current Golden State Warrior standout Mitch Richmond. The recipient is determined by a team vote.

Each of the K-State players received a picture plaque with a photograph of the 1988-89 Wildcat squad on it.

"The Voice of the Wildcats," Mitch Holthus, emceed the occasion, which had the theme "Transferring the Tradition," in honor of the first season in Bramlage Coliseum.

Thornton signs letter of intent

'Cats could possibly get 2 more recruits

By Chris Hays
Staff Writer

K-State received its fourth basketball commitment of the spring signing period Tuesday, when Allen County Community College forward Ryan Thornton signed a national letter of intent.

K-State coach Lon Kruger also said Monday that November signee J.R. Rider, from Alameda, Calif., will attend Allen County next year due to academic troubles at Encinal High School. Rider was ineligible during his senior year. Kruger is still hoping Rider can end his academic problems so he can eventually transfer to K-State.

"Oh, sure," Kruger said of the possibility of Rider coming to K-State. "We really like him. He just didn't take care of his academic responsibilities and we think he will be able to do that."

It was also learned that guard Steve Fritz will probably not play basketball for the 'Cats next season in order to concentrate on track. Without Fritz and Rider on the K-State roster, the Wildcats could still sign two more recruits. The NCAA scholarship limit for basketball is 15.

"We're still looking at a couple of kids right now," Kruger said. "We would still take another if we can get the right guy."

Should K-State not sign any more recruits by the May 15 deadline, the remaining scholarships would go to walk-ons next season.

"We've been here (since 1986), and we haven't been full (going into the next season)," Kruger said. "So it isn't unusual for us to have an extra (scholarship) available."

The 'Cats latest signee, Thornton, a 6-foot-6 forward, averaged 20.6 points and 8.3 rebounds for the Red Devils last season. He was named all-Region VI (Kansas) and also honorable mention juco all-America. Thornton was named the MVP for the Eastern Division in the Jayhawk Junior College Conference all-star game earlier this spring.

"We are real excited about Ryan," Kruger said. "He is a good athlete and a real good scorer on the inside."

"He can do even more things than he showed this year because we had to play him on the block," Allen County coach Neil Crane said. "But he's also capable of shooting the 15-footer."

Fritz can finally concentrate on track

By Mike Goens
Sports Writer

Steve Fritz has made the successful transfer from basketball player to track athlete within a month.

About a month ago, Fritz was still in uniform as a reserve guard on the K-State basketball team. He is now a decathlete for Coach John Capriotti's track team.

One could say Fritz is somewhat of a gifted athlete. He transferred to K-State from Hutchinson Junior College, where the basketball team captured the national junior college championship in 1988. Fritz even hit the game-winning shot in the championship game from his starting guard position.

He also won the 1988 national junior college championship in the decathalon while at Hutchinson with 7,015 points.

Fritz broke the K-State decathlon record April 7 at the Texas Relays with 6,994 points to finish third at the meet. All-Big Eight guard Steve Henson was the former record holder with 6,519 points. Fritz set personal records in the 100 meters, long jump and high jump. He just missed his personal record in the shot put.

Fritz will be competing in the KU Relays this week in Lawrence. The highest mark entered in the competition is 7,227 points and the lowest is 6,600 points, so Fritz will have plenty of competition.

"It's gonna be pretty tough," Fritz said. "Last year I scored 7,015 points; I just hope I can get close to that.

"I hope I can score over 7,400 for the national qualifying standard (which is 7,425). It depends on the weather."

"His training is going well, he's progressed well," Assistant Coach Cliff Rovelto said. "He could score 200 to 300 points higher than Texas, possibly higher if everything clicked. He's capable of scoring a national qualifying mark.

"He's certainly capable of winning it. If he goes in and competes well he'll have a chance."

Fritz's best events are the high jump, with a personal best of 6-9½, and the 110 meter hurdles, with a time of 15.09 seconds.

He benefits from practicing with Henson, although Fritz said, "it is not that much, he's busy with basketball still."

"It helps that he's good at the pole vault, where I'm weak," he said. "He's good at the javelin, too. Our good events are different and it's good that you have somebody to help you out."

Henson will not compete at the KU Relays because he is preparing for the Drake Relays next Tuesday. Fritz, however, will be going after the victory at KU.

"I have a chance, if I can score the qualifying standard or close to it," he said. "I have a good shot to win if I have a solid performance."

Fritz said it is difficult being a two-sport athlete at the NCAA Division I level.

"I always wanted to play (basketball) on the Division I level," he said. "I didn't want to pass up the opportunity to play. I had to take one chance to see if I was able to play."

Fritz played in 12 games for the Wildcats, including six straight games at the start of the conference season.

"I had a chance to play the middle of the season in some conference games. But I'm not good enough to be real competitive at this level. Track is what I do well," he said.

Fritz admits that the transition from basketball to track is not an easy one.

"During the last part of the season, the last three weeks, I worked out with weights," he said. "During most of the season I didn't have a chance."

Fritz is not sure if he will return to the K-State basketball team next season.

"I haven't really decided, it depends on how track goes," he said. "I'll have to talk to Coach (Lon) Kruger. If I had to say now, it would be no."

Fritz was a starting guard at Hutchinson, averaging eight points and about two assists a game.

Other than K-State, Fritz had an offer from Oklahoma State to compete in track and basketball.

"I didn't hear a lot until late in the year, I got a lot of offers," he said. "The last few I looked at were Mississippi, Kansas State, Kansas and Iowa State."

Fritz said there really wasn't one thing that brought him to K-State, but several things.

"It was close to home; I knew a lot of people; the track program had a pretty good tradition; and I liked the coaches. It was a combination of those things," he said.

NOTES — Also competing in the decathlon for K-State at the KU Relays will be Terry VanLaningham, while Karen McGaughey will be representing the Wildcats in the women's heptathlon.

Sports Briefly

Women golfers finish 4th

The K-State women's golf team finished in fourth place Tuesday in the 54-hole Nebraska Invitational. The Wildcat women scored 1,021 in the six-team tourney, placing them behind host Nebraska (918), Kansas (955) and Wyoming (971).

Adena Hagedorn led K-State with a two-day total of 250, putting her in 13th place individually. She was followed by Chris Adams at 255, Jill Zientara 259, Lonna Dale 259 and Theresa Coyle 282.

Anne Guiberson of Nebraska took medalist honors with a score of 226. The K-State women are back in action Friday and Saturday at the Iowa Hawkeye Invitational in Iowa City.

Mets Elster sets record

NEW YORK — Kevin Elster of the New York Mets played his 72nd consecutive game without an error at shortstop Tuesday night, tying the major league record.

Elster matched the mark set by Detroit's Eddie Brinkman in 1972. Elster handled eight chances without a mistake in the Mets' 7-1 loss to Philadelphia.

His streak started last year, his rookie season. He can set the record Wednesday night against the Phillies.

Sundvold suspension lifted

COLUMBIA, Mo. — The suspension of a Missouri assistant basketball coach accused of buying plane tickets for a recruit will be lifted, the school announced Tuesday.

Bob Sundvold will be reinstated May 1, Athletic Director Dick Tamburo said.

WEDNESDAY NOON LIVE

Long, long ago in a committee far, far away . . . "NOONERS" were the entertainment program for the Coffeehouse Committee . . . they were great. But as time passed, NOONER'S lost their flavor and the members of the Coffeehouse disbanded . . .

Now, just as amateur performers had lost their hope of ever performing in the Union again, a bold new committee was born from the ashes of the Coffeehouse committee . . . we call ourselves ECLECTIC ENTERTAINMENT!

Bringing KSU the best in quality performances, Eclectic Entertainment revived the "nooner-style" program and brought it to life as WEDNESDAY NOON LIVE!!!

If you happen to be an amateur dancer, singer, comedian, or just an all-around performer, Wednesday Noon Live applications are available for next semester at the K-State Union Program Council office.

k-state union upc eclectic entertainment

A weekend reunion brings together a group of friends whose relationship dates back to the politically active '60's in this classic of independent cinema which served as a model for "The Big Chill." It is about a group of survivors whose humor and compassion for each other are able to transcend the damage that time and experience can work on people who were once young together. Unrated.

Wednesday, April 19 and Thursday, April 20, 7:30 p.m., Forum Hall and Thursday, 3:30 p.m., Little Theatre. All shows $1.75; KSU ID required.

Commission elects mayor; Glasscock sets year's goals

By Robert Short
Staff Writer

During their Tuesday night meeting, Manhattan City Commissioners unanimously elected Kent Glasscock to be the city's next mayor, while Dick Hayter will take over as mayor pro tem.

Glasscock said he wanted to provide better services to the needy and improve Manhattan's social service network. The federal government's increased attention on the homeless and poor should be an example to local governments, he said.

"The new federalism has given us a new localism," Glasscock said.

Improving housing and expanding the role of social services is a wise use of tax dollars, he said. The commission needs to work with Manhattan's Social Services Advisory Board and specifically outline the parameters of their job.

The new commission should also attempt to update the city's land-use plan, growth plan, water and sewage master plan and the annexation strategy, Glasscock said. By working with the city manager, the new mayor said he expects the updating process to be completed by April 1, 1990.

Glasscock said he would also like to develop a plan for improving the Manhattan Municipal Airport in the next one to three years, work with the city manager in improving street maintenance and produce an economic development strategy with the help of Riley County Commissioners and the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce.

During the meeting, incumbent Eugene Klingler and first-time commissioners Roger Maughmer and Richard Seidler were sworn into office. Presentations to former commissioners Nancy Denning and Dave Fiser were also made.

In addition, members of the commission unanimously approved a charter ordinance increasing Manhattan's transient guest tax from 3 percent to 5 percent. The ordinance must endure a 61-day protest period before becoming law.

If the ordinance is not protested within 61 days, motel operators in Manhattan will begin collecting the increased tax in late 1989, said City Manager Mike Conduff. The city will receive remittance from this tax by late 1989 or early 1990.

The ordinance does not designate a specific use for the additional funds that will be generated by the increase in the tax, Commissioner Dick Hayter said. The commission will discuss options for spending the additional funds.

tends to get hotter.

"It is somewhat analogous to the windows in a car which let sunlight in but prevent heat from getting out."

The presence of these gases is increasing, Hansen said.

According to his report, carbon dioxide is increasing about 0.5 percent per year due to the burning of fossil fuels — oil, coal and gas. Chloroflourocarbons, or CFCs, which are manmade chemicals used as propellants and in refrigeration, are increasing 5 percent per year. Methane is increasing about 1 percent per year and is present in a variety of sources including feces of cattle.

The Earth, which has warmed about 1 degree Farenheit in the past 100 years, has been warmer during the 1980s than at any other time in the history of instrumental weather measurements, which originated in 1950. Prior to 1950, universal standards for weather measurements were rare. Consequently, readings were often inconsistant, Hansen said.

"So far, 1988 is the warmest year of all," he said. "There will be more hot summers than normal, and the hottest ones will be hotter than they used to be."

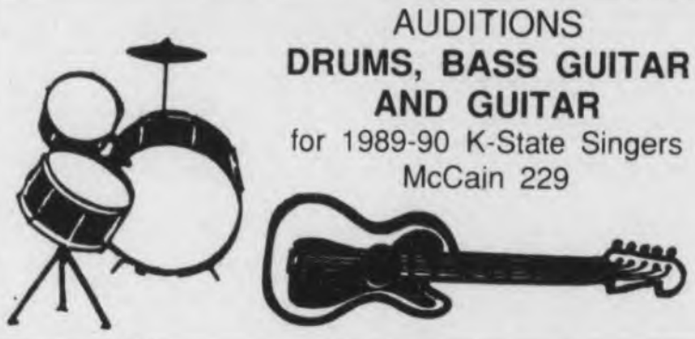
In January, Time magazine reported the destruction of the world's tropical rain forests — home to at least half the earth's plant and animal species — occurred at a rate equal to one football field per second.

Some of this deforestation is unintentional, such as the fire that destroyed much of Yellowstone National Park last summer, said Jeremy Rifkin, author, environmental activist and president of the National Foundation on Economic Trends.

However, many forests are intentionally destroyed to make room for the earth's expanding population and more land available for crop production and grazing, Rifkin said during his April 4 lecture.

The amount of trees and vegetation burned or destroyed also contributes to the concentration of carbon dioxide in the atmosphere, he said.

The build-up of atmospheric carbon dioxide becomes a more life-threatening problem when trees are destroyed because an insufficient number of trees can't absorb the necessary amount of carbon dioxide from the atmosphere, Rifkin said.



Carbon dioxide continues to be the dominant Greenhouse gas in the 1980s, accounting for more than half of the net greenhouse effect, Hansen said in a report presented to the Second North American Conference on Preparing for Global Climate Change.

Resident recalls design career

Meeting with psychic client changes life

By Lance Schwulst
Collegian Reporter

Helen Brockman's life changed the day after she fit a dress for a psychic.

In 1933 Brockman, a Manhattan resident and a former professor of apparel design, worked for a dress manufacturer without pay — in hopes that a paid position would become available.

She had worked for Roland Freres, a manufacturer of sportswear and evening gowns, for about one year when the management asked her to fit a dress for one of their clients.

"This lady was staying at the Plaza Hotel (in New York), and her living room was as long as my whole house," Brockman said. "When she opened the door to let me in, the first thing she said to me was, 'I'm psychic, and I know anything you do for me will be perfect.'

"So I went in and sat down — quickly."

The two drank wine.

Brockman does not remember fitting the woman's dress, but she does remember telling her life story and how she arrived in New York City.

Brockman and her former husband met and married in Iowa City, Iowa, and earned their degrees at the University of Iowa.

"My husband had a degree in engineering and wanted to be a photographer," Brockman said. "I had a degree in Greek and Latin, and I wanted to be a dress designer.

The Brockmans were forced to put aside their true ambitions to seek employment.

"Banks were failing more than they are now," she said. "It was the depths of the Depression, so we were lucky that my husband was offered a job with General Electric for $26 a week."

For seven years the Brockmans lived in Schenectady County, New York, where a GE plant was located. It was 1933, and the two still had not fulfilled their ambitions.

"Well, we got even. We quit our jobs that year and moved to New York City," she said. "Times were tough. People were selling apples on the street corners."

While Brockman attended design school for a year, her husband worked as a commercial photographer. She was working without pay as a seamstress until she met the psychic.

Brockman's fate changed after the incident with the wealthy, English socialite and the bottle of wine.

The day after she fit the dress, the client persuaded Roland Freres to hire Brockman as a designer.

Staff/Brian Kratzer

Helen Brockman designed clothes for Roland Freres, a manufacturer of sportswear and evening gowns, until World War II. Brockman is wearing a sari she designed and made herself eight years ago.

"Always, it is being in the right place at the right time," she said.

"I have never had any objections with standing out from the rest of the crowd," she said. "I just cannot imagine going into the dress business like a shrinking violet."

Brockman said the pressures of the garment industry were intense, requiring a strong person to deal with the pressure.

"Every day you would have to worry about whether or not the buttons would come in on time or if the fabrics would be dyed the right color," she said.

The clothes Brockman designed were made from the best materials, such as silks from the Orient and other fabrics imported from throughout the world.

"We made expensive clothes, and I don't think I could have made them out of cheap stuff," Brockman said. "Also, the clothes I designed did not go out of style quickly. I made classic clothes out of gorgeous goods and kept the lines simple."

The dresses designed by Brockman were sold to large department stores and boutiques at wholesale prices ranging from $60 to $120. Brockman said that by today's standards, the dresses would cost nearly $1,000.

"Every month, I would see some of my dresses worn by people on the streets, in ads and in the newspaper," she said. "My stuff was also in the windows of Bergdorf Goodman (a department store) every month."

Combination fee to be considered by new task force

By Nancy Prosser
Staff Writer

The issue of a student athletic fee is still alive and well at K-State. A task force has been formed to consider the possibility of a combined student fee for fine arts and the Athletic Department.

"A committee has not officially been formed, although some of the members have been secured," said Troy Lubbers, task force member and cabinet representative. "The committee will be composed of cabinet members, legislative members, two at-large students, a representative from the athletic department and a fine arts administrator."

If proposed, a fee of about $16 could be implemented in academic year 1991-92, Student Body President Laurian Cuffy said.

Lubbers said the committee was formed in response to financial need within the fine arts and athletic departments that has not been addressed.

"The first order of business will be to poll the student body in much the same way that the Collegian did its opinion poll on the athletic fee," Cuffy said. "The purpose of the poll will be to determine student sentiment on this issue, and we will take further action from that point."

Further action will include presentation of a bill to Student Senate.

Although no bill has been introduced into Senate concerning the combined fee, Carlos Charles, task force member and cabinet representative, said the committee will "produce a more objective bill than the earlier proposed athletic fee bill."

Charles said the the idea is "to do this within Senate and avoid a referendum" because the athletic fee failed to pass, even though about 60 percent of the voting student body voted in favor. A two-thirds majority was required for passage because less than one-third of the entire student body voted.

Cuffy said the athletic fee may

Explosion kills 47 on U.S. battleship

By The Associated Press

NORFOLK, Va. — A huge gun turret packed with gunpowder exploded in flames on the battleship USS Iowa near Puerto Rico on Wednesday, killing at least 47 sailors in one of the worst naval disasters since the Vietnam War.

The death toll from the accident, which happened during a gunnery exercise, "could go higher, but we don't know at this point," said Lt. Cmdr. Steve Burnett, a spokesman for the Atlantic Fleet based in Norfolk.

Iowa crewmen put out a fire inside the forward turret, which supports three of the ship's nine 16-inch guns, flooded several compartments holding explosives as a precaution and declared the ship no longer in any danger, said Lt. Cmdr. Chris Baumann, another spokesman for the fleet.

The Iowa rendezvoused at midafternoon with the nearby aircraft carrier USS Coral Sea, which carries three doctors and has full medical facilities, Baumann said. Helicopters from the Coral Sea brought medical equipment to the Iowa and transferred some of the injured to the carrier.

The Iowa will proceed today to Roosevelt Roads, a Navy base in Puerto Rico, said Cmdr. Robert Franzmann of the Atlantic Fleet. The 48-year-old ship, one of the four largest in the fleet, is based at Norfolk.

Navy officials were notifying family members personally of the deaths, Baumann said.

The explosion occurred while the ship was taking part in a gunnery exercise about 330 miles northeast of Puerto Rico, said Burnett.

The ship's guns were being test fired and the turret was "full of gunpowder," Baumann said. The 16-inch guns can fire 2,700-pound shells a distance of 23 miles.

A gun turret is normally occupied by 27 people, but can hold up to 60 or 70, Baumann said.

"We don't know how many people were in there at the time," he said.

The training exercise to improve fleet readiness began April 13 and involved 19,000 people aboard 29 U.S. ships, three allied ships and shore-based aircraft, Baumann said.

There were 1,600 people aboard the ship, including Vice Adm. Jeremiah Johnson, commander of the U.S. 2nd Fleet.

Scientist: Gases cause warming

The Greenhouse Effect

Editor's note: This is the second part of a three-part series on the greenhouse effect, its causes, effects and possible solutions to the problem.

By Bryan Ackley
Collegian Reporter

Fifty years from now, environmental devastation produced by the greenhouse effect could be as extensive as the effects of a nuclear war.

"By early in the next century, the world could be warmer than at any time in the human experience," said Michael Oppenheimer, senior scientist for the Environmental Defense Fund.

"As long as greenhouse gases continue to grow in the atmosphere, there is no limit to the warming short of catastrophic change."

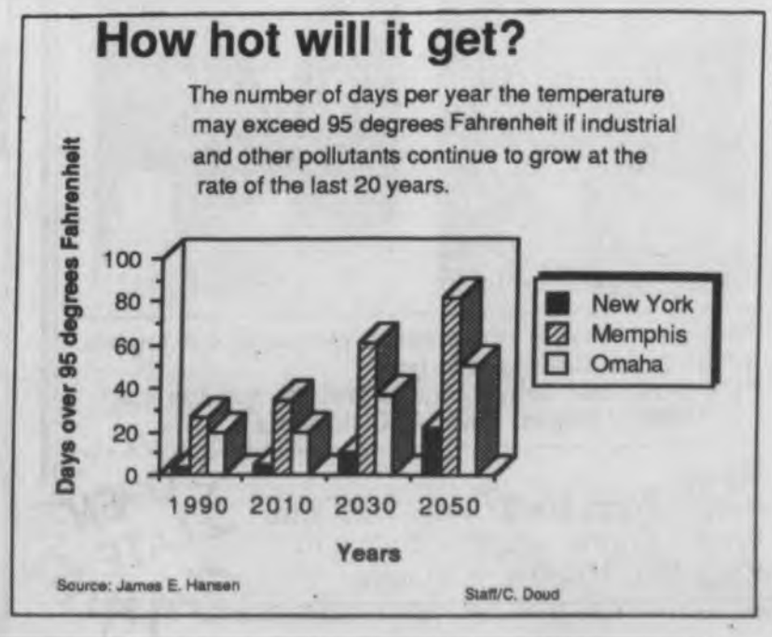
Greenhouse gases are long-lived, so the changes taking place are "effectively irreversible," Oppenheimer said in testimony before the U.S. Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources in June.

The warming trend indicates that in the future, people could be forced to move from some coastal areas, he said.

James Hansen, director of the NASA Goddard Institute for Space Studies, said such temperature increases could cause the expansion of the oceans and melting of ice on land. The borders of some land masses would be submerged.

Some agriculturists might benefit somewhat from temperature increases, at least temporarily, because crop growing seasons would be extended in some geographic regions, he said.

According to a report by Cynthia Rosenweig published in The Environmental Protection Agency Journal, future agricultural activity might decline in the southern United States and increase in the North because of temperature increases caused by the greenhouse effect.



This change could be accompanied by the migration of crop pests as well, she said.

In the future, individuals who depend on agriculture for their livelihood might find geographic relocation necessary from time to time, Rosenweig said.

Hansen said, however, there is "no evidence of regional climate 'winners' with an increasing greenhouse effect."

The predicted rates of increasing temperatures are much greater than

Toddler injures 6 with van

AMSTERDAM, Netherlands — A 3-year-old climbed into a parked delivery van, started the engine and plowed down five market stalls, injuring six people, police said Tuesday.

The accident on a crowded street market occurred when the boy's parents had briefly let him out of their sight, according to police spokesman Klaas Wilting.

"The kid had climbed into the van (and) fiddled around with the ignition keys," Wilting said. The van, which belonged to one of the owners of a stall, knocked down five market stalls before it came to a stop, he said.

One woman was hospitalized with a broken wrist, Wilting said. Five others were also treated for minor injuries.

He said it's unlikely anyone will be prosecuted, the police spokesman said. The child, who wasn't injured, was not identified.

Protesters suffering poisoning

MOSCOW — The Soviet government newspaper Izvestia said Wednesday that some victims of a clash between soldiers and protesters in Soviet Georgia are suffering from a poison resembling a nerve toxin.

Izvestia's interview with Georgia's health minister, Irakliy Menagarishvili, appeared to bolster charges by activists in the southern republic that soldiers used a toxic substance to break up a nationalist demonstration April 9 on Tbilisi's main street.

The clash killed 20 people.

Izvestia did not say how many of the 140 people still hospitalized after the confrontation were suffering from symptoms of poisoning.

The new Georgian Communist Party chief, Givi G. Gumbaridze, said in an interview on Soviet television Wednesday that the situation remained tense in Georgia.

Ball recovering from surgery

LOS ANGELES — Lucille Ball's fans from around the world flooded the hospital with cards, flowers and phone calls Wednesday after the queen of comedy emerged from emergency heart surgery in serious condition.

"Her Irish eyes are smiling," husband Gary Morton said after Ball awakened at 9:45 a.m. Wednesday, 14 hours after surgeons finished the operation. She was alert and looked well, he said.

Surgeons said she should recover from the seven-hour operation, during which they replaced her aorta and aortic valve with the donated organ tissue of a 27-year-old man.

Ball, 77, who reigned for decades as the zany, rubber-mouthed queen of comedy, had her heart stopped for two hours during Tuesday's procedure, which was described as surgery with a "substantial mortality rate."

Woman's body exhumed

INDEPENDENCE, Kan. — The body of an Independence, Kan., woman who died of cyanide poisoning was exhumed Wednesday so investigators could take a set of her fingerprints.

Alice Collins, 47, died Feb. 16 after becoming ill at her home. Tests showed she had ingested cyanide.

The fingerprints taken Wednesday will be compared with prints found on several items where cyanide was found in the woman's home, said Montgomery County Sheriff Jack Daniels.

"It's just something we could foresee needing," he said.

No charges have been filed in the case.

Daniels said officers exhumed Collins' body, took the fingerprints and then reburied the woman. The prints were sent to a Kansas Bureau of Investigation lab for processing.

Bomb causes power outage

LIBERAL, Kan. — A pipe bomb exploded east of Liberal during the night, damaging an electric line and leaving part of the city without power for about 40 minutes Wednesday morning, a sheriff's investigator said.

Jim Peak of the Seward County sheriff's department and Bill Helm, district superintendent for Centel Electric, said the bomb was set off on the ground and shot into the air, striking an electric transmission line and severing all its aluminum strands.

Helm said that the central steel strand which provides strength for the wire remained intact. But after people rose Wednesday morning and started using electricity, the steel wire began to heat up and burned through, he said.

Power went off at 6:45 a.m., and Helm dispatched crews to look for the trouble. He said they found the downed wire and after seeing that it appeared to have been hit by something, searched further and discovered a piece of pipe, two or three inches long.

Helm said the pipe had exploded, with slivers of metal extending out at right angles. He said it appeared that as it blew into the air, it caught one of about 12 transmission lines, spun around it and severed the six aluminum strands.

Former sheriff files lawsuit

TOPEKA — Former Hamilton County Sheriff Thomas Lambeth has filed a federal lawsuit against 10 ministers, the present sheriff and a former county attorney alleging they slandered him as part of a conspiracy that cost him his office.

Lambeth and his wife, Sharee, filed their 16-page civil lawsuit in U.S. District Court here on April 10. The nine-count lawsuit asks for actual and punitive damages in excess of $10,000 for each of the counts.

Lambeth lost his bid for re-election to Terry Hazen in November 1988. The ministers he is suing are members of the Syracuse Ministerial Alliance. Syracuse is a town of about 1,600 residents about 15 miles from the Colorado border in southwest Kansas.

Police investigate alleged rape

An investigation of the alleged rape of a K-State student has been turned over to the Pottawatomie County Attorney.

Pottawatomie County Sheriff Steve Harkness said two suspects are being investigated for the alleged rape of a female student Sunday morning.

According to a K-State Police report, the victim was taken from the Aggieville area by the suspects to Tuttle Creek at about 2 a.m. The report stated the suspects made forcible sexual advances, resulting in injury to the victim.

Although the case was first reported to the campus police, it was referred to the Riley County Police Department. Riley County investigators then referred it to the Pottawatomie County sheriff's department after the location of the alleged rape was determined.

A staff member in the Pottawatomie County Attorney's office said no charges have been filed yet in the case.

LESSON No. 3
How not to get a date:
Don't care how you look when going out with the guys.
The man who dresses with care shows how he feels about himself.
They say clothes make the man. A coordinated outfit for a pulled-together look will make a man feel a little better, walk a little taller.
Many women are attracted to that.

Senate to hear appeals

Allocations nearing end

By Nancy Prosser
Staff Writer

Two student groups will make appeals to Senate tonight as this semester's round of tentative allocations draws to a close. Fone Crisis Center and the Consumer Relations Board will both attempt to have Senate reconsider its original, tentative allocations for next year.

Fone Crisis Center is requesting additional monies for office supplies. If approved, the Fone Crisis Center would receive an increase of $10, from $35 to $45.

CRB will request an allocation for printing to produce its promotional pamphlet. No estimates for printing were available.

"It takes a two-thirds vote (in the affirmative) of Senate to reconsider an allocation," Senate Chairman Todd Johnson said. "Final allocations are made next fall when Senate returns from summer vacation."

Senate will vote on the appointment of Mike Stenstrom, agriculture senator, as the personnel selections coordinator.

"The personnel selections coordinator is responsible for helping SGA-funded groups hire personnel," Johnson said.

In other business, Senate will vote on a bill to establish an ad hoc committee to evaluate Senate's constitution and by-laws.

Senate will hear first readings of a bill to establish a separate committee to look into the issue of fair representation in Senate.

"The representation committee will be looking into such issues as living group representation and minority representation in Senate," Johnson said.

First readings of two special allocations bills for for the Student Governing Association and the Rodeo Club will be made.

The allocation to SGA would be to purchase a computer and printer.

"A computer would be helpful for secretarial revisions of bills," Johnson said. "At the present time, our secretary is re-typing bills up to five times."

The Rodeo Club has requested an allocation of $980 to pay for ambulance service at the rodeos.

"The club has always had an ambulance service, but up to now it has been voluntary," Johnson said.

Auction raises funds for travel

By Janette Poole
Collegian Reporter

Raising money the old-fashioned way, K-State's Rodeo Club had a benefit auction at the Ranch Saloon Wednesday night to make money for the rodeo team's travel fund.

By the end of the evening, bidders had paid $1,377 for merchandise to help the rodeo team defray travel expenses.

The travel fund is for "anyone who is traveling down the road and competing for K-State," said Sam Kiefer, junior in sociology and Rodeo Club president.

For the past eight years, the club has had an auction of various items from area merchants from Manhattan, Wamego and Silver Lake, Kiefer said. About 20 merchants donated items or services for the auction.

Rodeo Club members helped display the merchandise including haircut certificates, lighted beer signs, eating establishment gift certificates, clothing certificates, sweatshirts, lightweight jackets, caps and cowboy hats, car sun shades, framed pictures, posters, bagged animal feed, horse care equipment and supplies, and a color television set.

The 125 people who attended the auction were asked to pass and fill "the boot" for Miss K-State Rodeo, Bobbie Ward, sophomore in home economics education. The $100 raised will be used to cover expenses for her trip to the Miss College Rodeo contest in conjunction with the College National Finals Rodeo in the second week of June in Bozeman, Mont.

Two rodeo team members were also auctioned off to a local retail store for labor.

The club members organized the auction, which has been at the Ranch Saloon on Highway 24 for the past four years. Auctioneers for the evening were Manhattan residents Max Stowell, Elburn Parker and Bill Wilson.

Prior to the auction, a free pork barbecue was sponsored by Bob Dieball, owner of the Ranch Saloon. The barbecue was open to the public.

Residence Hall food service to mark movie's anniversary

By Kevin Kramer
Staff Writer

Ruby slippers and blue socks have proliferated at K-State's Residence Hall Food Service in celebration of the 50th anniversary of the movie "The Wizard of Oz."

The food service is celebrating the anniversary in the theme — "There's No Place Like Home" — for this year's annual Spring Dinner.

"One of the overall strengths of our food service at K-State is our special dinners," said John Pence, associate director of housing. "The special dinners create a change of pace and add excitement to the meals offered at our residence halls' food service."

The dinner highlights the "lost recipes" brought back to Kansas by Dorothy and Toto following their trip to the "Magical Land of Oz."

The dinner begins with Ruby Slipper punch and features prime rib and whole pig carved along the Yellow Brick Road. The salads are served "munchkin style" and offer a variety of dishes such as Lollipop Guild platter and Wicked Witch veggies, which are believed to have contributed to the lovely green hue of the witch's cheeks.

The desserts following the dinner are recipes from Auntie Em's kitchen and include "Over the Rainbow" cake, Kansas Lemon Twister cheesecake, Haunted Forest cake and Emerald City ice cream.

Denise Wiseman, administrative dietitian, said the reason the food service is focusing on "The Wizard of Oz" theme, besides the anniversary, is that students can easily identify with the theme and characters.

"One of our goals is participation by the residents," Wiseman said.

Participation in special meals has decreased since the change in the drinking age, she said. This is because there is no place for a large number of residents who are under 21 to go after getting dressed in semi-formal or costume attire.

"More effort and planning are put into the Spring Dinner because it has no holiday connection like the other two dinners we do at Thanksgiving and Christmas," Wiseman said. "We would like to close the semester with a memorable event that students can always identify with every time they see the movie."

"We would like to close the semester with a memorable event that students can always identify with every time they see the movie."
—Denise Wiseman administrative dietitian

The decorations for this year's dinner have been in the works for several months, she said. Nine murals of scenes from the movie and a three-dimentional house have been painted by students from the residence halls. The murals were designed by Terry Gleue, illustrator and art supervisor for food services, and Jay Phelps, a part-time graphic designer.

"The food service staff has been very involved with the dinner as well," Wiseman said. "They helped collect and put together red glitter shoes to use as table centerpieces. One of our maintenance men has created a tornado that will be spinning by the house in a pre-Oz display."

Some of the staff members have been getting into the mood of the Oz theme by wearing blue socks and red-glittered shoes, she said.

"We want to have students leave at the end of the year with a good impression of our food service, because we want them back," Wiseman said.

The marketing of the residence hall food service is important in the recruitment and retention of students in the residence halls, Pence said.

"We often find ourselves in a bind in what we offer as nutritious meals as opposed to what is popular to eat," Wiseman said. "Our food services try to educate students about nutritious food items that offer variety and entertainment."

An estimated budget of $2,000 to $4,000 was set aside for the dinner, Pence said, which is about 50 to 75 cents per student.

The cost for the special dinner is carefully budgeted in the the food service's overall cost for the year, Wiseman said.

"A lot of people may think that what we are doing is extravagant and take it out of perspective in terms of its cost," she said. "But we are planning to use the theme and decorations for the dinner more than once."

The official celebration of "The Wizard of Oz" anniversary will begin in August, Wiseman said. "So we will get the mileage out of this dinner theme due to the release in August."

Remembering a world after Hitler's regime

On April 20, 1889, 100 years ago today, Adolf Hitler was born in a small town in Austria near the German border.

This is, of course, not an event for celebration or even commemoration. It is properly a time of remembrance of the man's circumstances, methods and, most of all, his victims.

And by remembering his victims, we preserve a memory of what we may become.

Hitler showed the world the full extent of the power of the modern nation-state and the utter insignificance of an individual in the face of the determined use of such power.

Hitler was legally elected chancellor of Germany in 1933. By 1934, through legislation passed by the German parliament, he had become the supreme leader of the Third Reich. Literally, his word was law.

The German parliament, which conferred the power of the nation upon Hitler, was not dominated by the Nazi Party. In fact, the Nazis held only 43 percent of the seats in the parliament. Hitler's government was a coalition of right-center parties, a type which can be expected to be unstable.

But German politicians, as well as the German people, scarred by starvation in World War I, tired of economic and political uncertainty and unwilling to compromise with the left wing, preferred the loss of their freedoms to the continued anxiety of democracy.

And thus, by act of the national legislature, evil was unleashed. By 1939, the nations of Europe would be at war and by 1942, the most efficent system for killing noncombatants, the death camps, like Auschwitz, would be producing death more efficiently than ever before.

The millions of Jews, Gypsies, Slavs, homosexuals and other "undesirables" who were gassed and cremated or shot and buried or the filthy thousands who survived in striped pajamas and wooden shoes and looked out with hollow eyes through barbed wire at their liberators in 1944 and 1945 are those we must honor through remembrance on this day and every day.

For they were the products of a policy of a modern nation, one of the most culturally advanced and technologically accomplished nations the world had ever seen.

Like them, we are products of a similar nation. As we remember them, so too do we remember what we may become. And if we are to mourn them, we must also mourn for ourselves in the world after Hitler.

Writers deserve controversy

Commentary

Barbara Baker
Collegian Columnist

"Write if you will, but write about the world as it is and as you think it ought to be and must be if there is to be a world."

This was the advice playwright/social activist Lorraine Hansberry would always give to young, aspiring writers.

When thinking about the power writers have, it is easy to see the value of Hansberry's advice. Writers have the power to instigate anger, provoke thought, spark action, and initiate change.

They also have the power to write what's considered to be traditional and popular thought. Or they have the power to write that which is non-traditional, not comfortable and unpopular in thought.

Usually when writers compose from a non-traditional perspective, they are told they are brave and courageous because not many people want to read or hear the true facts or realities about certain topics.

These subjects range from racism, abortion, interracial relationships, acquired immune deficiency syndrome, homosexuality, family abuse and incest. All are topics that tend to destroy the protective glass values that many of us have in order to keep from seeing true realities.

Writers who tend to write about these subjects get the typical responses. "You writers are always radical," or "You writers are trying to ruin the way things should be."

Although it is an ultimate compliment to be called a brave writer, it's also a very sad statement. It seems to be saying that not many writers are willing to take the jump across the edge and that perhaps many are compromising their talent.

All we have to do is look at the various media — television, newspapers and magazines — to know that brave and courageous writers are few and far between. Usually most television scripts, magazines and newspapers are written from the male, Anglo-Saxon view.

Sometimes it's hard to believe that women and minorities even exist. Then when they are acknowledged it's on special occasions or according to prescribed stereotypes.

If you're a woman writer who composes from a pro-feminist perspective, then you're labeled or criticized as being just one of those emotional, sentimental women who shouldn't write about logical, non-feeling, male subjects.

But I think writer/social activist Alice Walker has the best response to the critics who call women overly emotional and sentimental. Walker's response might also apply to critics of non-traditonal thought on racism.

She said, "We are talking about people who have big holes in themselves that were punched there when they were children. Now when they meet people who don't have the holes, they feel they have to say something. They have to project onto us (the writers)."

It is a risk to write away from the norm, because as a writer or journalist, it can't help but be important to get published or to have one's work performed. But when writers do not choose to write according to popular thought, they take the risk of losing those opportunities.

Aspiring writers have to make the choice. Am I going to write about what's popular and get my work published or performed, or am I going to satisfy myself by not compromising my writing even if it means leaving my writing on a shelf for no one to read or see?

I hope more writers will begin to make the latter choice and believe that someone somewhere will give them the chance to have their writing read or seen.

As a writer who has been called brave and courageous when it comes to writing about unpopular racial perceptions, I can also say it's been a challenge on several occasions.

The biggest one was when I wrote my first column on Martin Luther King Jr. and the reality of his dream, and then found tomato sauce and rice on my car the next day.

It makes writers wonder if they should continue to write about the world as they see it and the way it should be, or to write what's popular.

But I decided I must not be half bad or else I wouldn't have provoked that type of reaction. I am grateful for the compliment.

As a writer, all it really comes down to is knowing that your true friends and readers will support you regardless of what you write. For those who don't, well, no true writer asks to be loved or forgiven.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR pertaining to matters of public interest are encouraged. Letters should be kept as brief as possible. All letters are subject to editing on the basis of space, style and taste.

GUEST COLUMNS are also encouraged. The column should be no longer than two double-spaced typed pages, and the author will be notified if it will run in order to be photographed.

Stop flag waving

Editor,

The flags of Reason and Faith have often been waved in anger and neither is without the stain of human blood. So much for home-team morality; so much for flags.

Whether you be searcher or researcher, consider that there is one vast flowing body of mystery. (The idea of wasting energy in conflict over the appropriateness of capitalizing the "M" would be funny if its consequences were not so sad.)

Many wells tap this flow and there are many vessels with which to draw and hold small portions for short times.

Human structures of thought and action are not truth itself, but merely metaphors, useful in attaining and holding shallow evaporating glimpses of it. They are the vessels, each of different material, form and color, from which we drink. They do not last. The flow does.

Hidden beneath our layers of righteousness, pride and arrogance is fear. Fear which can keep us from traveling to other wells, and for a lifetime bind us so tightly to, or even within, our favorite vessels that we are prevented from ever learning that the taste of each draught is familiar.

Though there may exist a doctrinal conflict between the institutions of Science and Religion, the battle need not be waged within the person who can see that what is sought is an understanding of something that can never be fully contained by either system or by a synthesis of the two.

Then again, I may not be entirely right; this offering is, after all, just another cup.

So, whad'ya say we sit down, clink a few glasses and see what we can do about rinsing some of the stain from these flags?

Your well or mine?

Misses point

Editor,

The column "Group protests '60s nostalgia" started as some interesting information on a group who is tired of hearing of the '60s. But as the article developed, the columnist began to pull in the link to the Union Program Council.

Yes, UPC is having a student activism week full of events, not just tie-dying and the movie "Hair" (which the author enjoyed). But I think this columnist has missed the reason for having a student activism week.

What they are trying to get across is students shouldn't sit back and accept everything the administration runs through. I was very happy to see students come out and question the reasons behind having an athletic fee.

Students have fallen into the complacent feeling that just as long as they can go to classes and graduate, they do not need to be bothered with other events on campus. This also can be seen in the low turnout for voting here on campus. And, as far as students wanting the '60s to be forgotten, they missed out, for the United States spent 15 years trying to forget this era and it just recently re-surfaced.

The reasoning may be that it is time we begin questioning again what is going on around us. Also, maybe we need to grab hold of it, for in the past 20 years very few earth shattering things have happened. Maybe we want to remember times when there was a change.

No matter the reasons, until something better comes along, I feel we will continue to remember what has happened in our past.

By the way, I enjoy the music from the '60s.

Fine arts fee

Editor,

A university should offer a well-rounded education. On the K-State campus, we have one of the finest facilities in the Big Eight Conference to satisfy the necessity of fine arts in education: McCain Auditorium. But we don't have the funding for McCain to fulfill its purpose.

Students cannot afford tickets and are not attending what is being offered. On the average, about 507 students are in the audience at McCain events.

Establishing a McCain fee in student tuition would lower the cost of student tickets — much as the athletic fee would do for that department — and provide funds for a more diversified season at McCain. Therefore, more students could enjoy "Fine Arts" and attain a well-rounded education.

Activism for '80s

Editor,

This week the Union Program Council is sponsoring student activism week. Many of these activities will highlight the student activism and cultural trends of the late 1960s and early 1970s.

While studying past culture is certainly important, there seems to be something fundamentally disturbing about such celebrations.

It appears that instead of creating a distinct and colorful culture ourselves, my generation is looking to earlier ones. This is a great tragedy in a world that screams for real solutions to complex problems.

Let's hope student activism will be a year-round occurrence instead of just this week.

Campus problems

Editor,

There is a problem on the K-State campus which should be brought to the attention of the K-State student body. That problem is that many buildings on our campus are not accessible to the physically handicapped.

K-State is the only regents school which is less than 75 percent accessible to the physically handicapped. Why?

And why is it that the University of Kansas has more physically handicapped students when its campus is not even recommended to them because of the many hills? It is because the administration has made an effort to make their buildings accessible.

Handicapped inaccessibility has gone on far too long on our campus. It is time to take action to make K-State more accessible and give our physically handicapped students the freedom of choice.

Accused murderer captured

U.S. authorities request extradition from Mexico

By The Associated Press

MEXICO CITY — Ramon Salcido Bojorquez, a California winery worker arrested Wednesday in the slayings of seven people, told Mexican police he killed his wife and a co-worker because he thought they were having an affair, officials said.

"He was arrested before dawn this morning in a surprise roadblock set up by agents fighting the illicit drug trade," said Vicente Mendoza, a spokesman for the attorney general's office.

Salcido, also suspected of killing two daughters, his mother-in-law and two sisters-in-law in a rampage in Sonoma County, Calif., was picked up just outside Guasave, the spokesman said. The village is near Los Mochis, Salcido's hometown in Sinaloa state about 850 miles northwest of Mexico City.

Mendoza said he did not know Salcido's nationality, and U.S. Embassy spokesman Bill Graves said the embassy was not certain whether he was an American citizen.

"He has been arrested at the request of U.S. authorities who have asked for his extradition. We are bringing him to Mexico City," Mendoza said, adding that Salcido was in the custody of the Federal Judicial Police, a branch of the attorney general's office.

He said Salcido would be taken to Mexico City for an extradition hearing.

Javier Coello Trejo, deputy attorney general, told reporters Salcido drove into Mexico at the Calexico, Calif., border crossing.

Salcido told Mexican police he went on the rampage in a fit of jealousy after suspecting that his wife of five years was having an affair with one of his co-workers, Tracy Toovey, Coello said.

Salcido, 28, was a forklift operator who worked with Toovey at the winery. About 300 people attended a memorial service Tuesday for Toovey in Sonoma County.

According to Coello, Salcido told police he killed his wife with a 9mm pistol.

Salcido was arrested the same day services were being held in Petaluma, Calif., for some of the six members of Salcido's family who were killed.

Salcido's wife, mother-in-law, two sisters-in-law and Toovey were butchered, shot to death, or both, on April 15. The next day, three of Salcido's daughters were found with their throats cut, two of them dead.

The survivor, 3-year-old Carmina, is recovering in Petaluma Valley Hospital. She told investigators her father cut her and her sisters.

Salcido's friends said the binge began Wednesday night.

Speaker: Feminist ideas based on change

By Steve Logback
Collegian Reporter

Feminist theory is rooted in the recognition of the need for change in all traditions and practices which demonstrate gender differences, said Marilyn Friedman,professor of philosophy at Bowling Green University.

Friedman, who has published works on feminist issues and ethics, spoke to about 50 people in the Union Wednesday.

During her presentation, "Feminism and Modern Friendship: Dis-Locating the Community," Friedman outlined three sections from her latest publication, which challenges communitarian philosophy.

"In the first part of my paper I develop some feminist-inspired criticisms of communitarian philosophy," Friedman said. "Communitarian philosophy can lead in directions which feminists should not wish to follow.

"My paper is an effort to redirect communitarian thought so as to avoid some of the pitfalls which oppose the present forms of feminist theory and feminist practice."

"My second section delves more deeply into the nature of different types of communities and social relationships which communitarians disregard," she said.

Friedman elaborated on the third section of her publication by describing different kinds of communities endorsed by communitarian theorists.

Friedman was the last participant this year in the "University Lecturers in the Humanities" series. The series is sponsored by the K-State departments of English, history, modern languages and philosophy. In addition, the College of Arts and Sciences, the Graduate School and the women's studies program also provide support.

Robin Smith, professor of philosophy, said Friedman was invited to lecture because of her distinguished reputation.

"She has written a large number of papers on social and political philosophy, ethics, and feminist theory," Smith said. "We thought she would be an interesting speaker."

Smith said it is an advantage to have the lecture series sponsored by a variety of sources.

"It allows the departments to bring in lecturers which are interesting to more than just one department," he said. "Obviously, it also provides a larger fund from which to attract quality lecturers."

Senate approves S&L bailout plan

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Senate on Wednesday approved a record $157 billion bailout and reform bill for the savings and loan industry.

The bailout came after toughening provisions that would require S&L owners to put more of their own money at risk to stay in business.

The 564-page bill was approved on a 91-8 vote two months after President Bush called for emergency legislation to stop the hemorrhaging of the federal S&L insurance fund from the failure of 500 thrifts, more than 200 of them in 1988, and another 350 at or near insolvency.

The legislation will be the biggest government financial rescue in history, dwarfing five times over the combined costs of the New York City, Penn Central, Chrysler and Lockheed bailouts of the 1970s and early 1980s.

Similar S&L legislation is moving through the House but at a slower pace. Final congressional action is expected before July.

Bush's proposal would have required S&Ls to double their capital-loan ratio from the currently required 3 percent to 6 percent.

Funding for sports questioned

Adjustment of budget suggested

By Chris Koger
Staff Writer

The method of alloting funds for Manhattan High School's softball and baseball programs was questioned at the USD #383 Manhattan/Ogden School Board of Education meeting Wednesday night.

Bob Merten, a representative from the group that lobbied for the new sports adopted last year, said the group wouldn't have proposed the programs if they knew how they would be funded.

"Other athletic and academic programs lost funding, which was transferred to the ball programs," Merten said. "No one on the committee thought it would be handled this way. We had hoped it would have been funded ... in an equitable manner."

Newly re-elected board member Beverly Eversmeyer questioned the cutting of funds for the debate team and other academic programs in order to finance the establishment of the ball programs. Eversmeyer asked about the possibility of restructuring the budget to allot money for the two sports.

Superintendent Hal Rowe said that funding the different programs within the budget is a "trade-off."

"Our carry-over cash in the budget is less than $3,000. We just don't have any new money," Rowe said.

Even though the Legislature has the power to increase the district's budget by $500,000, Rowe said, all but 12 percent would be alloted to salaries and other programs.

"The approximately $60,000 that we would have left over is for accommodating the growth in student enrollment that is going to happen from year to year," Rowe said.

Manhattan High School Principal James Rezac addressed the problem of high school overcrowding, reporting on class sizes and how to control them.

Rezac said there should be no "marked increase" in the high school's enrollment next fall, but class sizes are approaching or already surpassing the maximum.

Out of the 500 classes taught each day, 20 have 30 or more students, Rezac said. Problems involved in lowering the student limit include the lack of space and limited class periods during which certain classes are taught, he said.

Possible solutions to the overcrowding problem include eliminating the classes with lower enrollments and motivating students to enroll in classes that meet during zero hour, which begins before the first hour. Students have the choice of attending zero-hour classes or sixth-hour classes.

Withee said she had "a problem with going to the voters on a bond issue asking for more space unless we are using what we have in the zero hour."

The board also adopted The Drug-Free Workplace Act, which prohibits the manufacture, distribution or possession of controlled substances in the workplace. The act provides guidelines for disciplinary actions if an employee is convicted of the above actions.

Deliberations to begin in Oliver North's trial

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Oliver North's lawyer, in an emotional final argument Wednesday, portrayed the former White House aide as a sacrificial lamb, a scapegoat and a hostage, and implored jurors in his trial to "set him free."

"Oliver North never wanted to be a hero," said Brendan Sullivan. "He just wants to go home."

But prosecutor John Keker, having the last word, asked the jury to "return a verdict of guilty in each and every one of the 12 charges."

With that, the nine women and three men who will decide North's fate were sent home. They will return today to begin their deliberations after instructions from U.S. District Judge Gerhard A. Gesell. During deliberation, the jury will be sequestered for the first time since the Iran-Contra trial began.

In his hour-long rebuttal, Keker said it had been an "unhappy, unpleasant, miserable criminal trial," and dismissed Sullivan's closing argument with a Shakesperian touch: "It was all sound and fury, signifying nothing."

"You have heard a lot about courage at this trial," Keker said. "There's another kind of courage: courage to admit when you are wrong, courage to admit personal responsibility, courage to admit guilt where appropriate. He (North) has not admitted any of those things; it's time for you to do it for him."

It was the end of two tough days for North, a former Marine lieutenant colonel whose power while he was at the National Security Council was substantial. His face paled and he busied himself with writing while Keker denounced him; he looked at the jury while Sullivan pleaded for him.

"The government has not shown criminal behavior," Sullivan said. "The man who held the lives of others in his hands now puts his life into yours." The reference was to North's protecting names of people he dealt with by shredding or altering documents, which Sullivan saw as "a reasonable thing to do."

Keker had another explanation: "He was destroying documents deliberately so they wouldn't find what he didn't want them to find."

After the arguments, North's mood brightened and he joined his wife, who was speaking with a minister in the front row of spectators.

Sullivan, choked with emotion throughout much of his three-hour closing argument, mentioned President Reagan's telephone call on the day North was fired, a call in which the president called North "a national hero," and also a postcard North got from then-Vice President Bush thanking him for his work.

"All these people who went to Ollie North for help, where are they now?" Sullivan asked.

Summing up North's defense in the trial's 12th week, Sullivan said he had done his job well as a White House aide, following superiors' orders to help the Nicaraguan rebels, then was thrown overboard as Reagan sought to escape political heat over the affair.

Sullivan told the jury that North, who had worked to free American hostages in Lebanon, has been, in a sense, a hostage himself.

"I ask you, on the evidence, to set him free," said Sullivan.

Coach: Bennett to sign

By Chris Hays
Sports Editor

Randolph Simpson, basketball coach at Manual Arts High School in Los Angeles, said in a telephone conversation Wednesday that 6-foot-6 forward Kent Bennett has decided to sign with K-State after a recruiting visit last weekend.

Simpson said Bennett had told him, upon returning from Manhattan, "He was sure he was going to Kansas State and that was the school he wanted to go to."

K-State coach Lon Kruger is apparently awaiting the formalities before announcing the signing of Bennett. Simpson said Bennett had told him that his father needed to sign the letter of intent to play at K-State and then it had to be mailed back to the University before the announcement could be made.

Bennett was named an all-Southern California selection last year after averaging 20 points and 11 rebounds per game. Manual Arts was 26-2 last season and was ranked No. 1 in California and No. 5 in the nation at times last season.

"I think he'll do well at Kansas State," Simpson said. "The style of play there fits him. It is very strict and organized.

"The Big Eight is a very athletic conference and I think he can fit in real well. He should do some positive things for Kansas State in the future."

Simpson also said that Bennett's 6-foot-6 frame should not discourage anyone.

"He is very agile and a good leaper who is deceptively strong and has good range."

Harper ready for move to safety

By Mike Goens
Sports Writer

Erick Harper is ready to settle back in at strong safety this year after bouncing around between the secondary and linebacker positions last season.

After leading the secondary in tackles with 88 and being named honorable mention all-Big Eight as a strong safety his sophomore season, Harper was moved to linebacker last year by Coach Stan Parrish.

His total tackles dropped off to 51, and, as in 1987, K-State failed to win a game. But Harper is ready to change all of that in his last year with the Wildcats. And a new face, first-year coach Bill Snyder, may help.

"It's kind of hard to get enough people to believe we will win. We can win," Harper said. "We've got to learn to stop losing before we can start winning. Everyone I talk to is sick of losing.

"Everyone hates it. We won 29 games in a row when I was in high school, and we haven't won a game here in 27. You can't win 'em all, but you've got to win some."

Harper shared the linebacker duties last season with Maurice Henry, who is moving to defensive end this year.

"He (Snyder) told everyone they would play the position they were best suited for playing," Harper said. "I'm better suited for safety. I don't have a linebacker's mentality. If a person likes where they are playing, they will perform better.

"I'm beginning to feel comfortable back there. I'm beginning to pick up reads again."

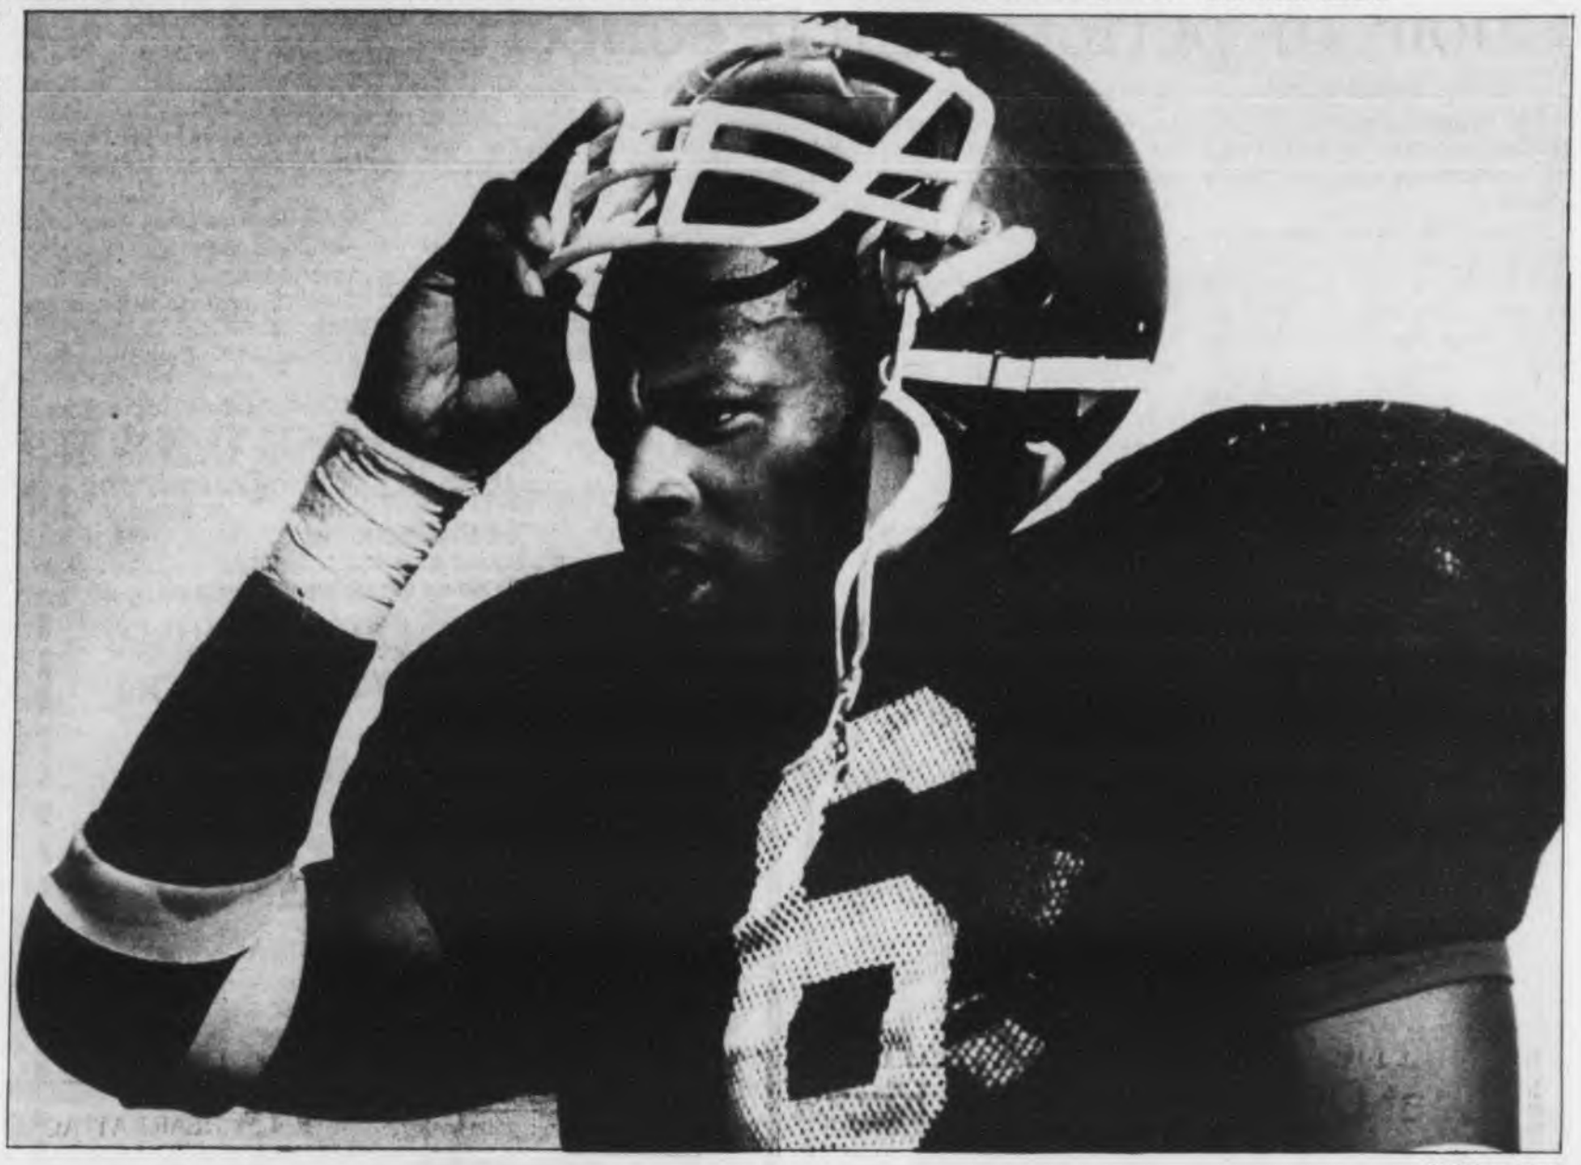
Harper had three interceptions at strong safety in '87, matching his total from his freshman year. In his first two seasons, Harper even returned two interceptions for touchdowns against Kansas.

In his freshman season, Harper picked off a pass against the Jayhawks and brought it back 39 yards in a 29-12 K-State victory. He then duplicated the feat against KU in 1987 with a 64-yard return in a 17-17 tie.

Harper said he is looking forward to moving back to the secondary with free safety Marcus Miller. Miller led the 'Cats in tackles last season and was named honorable mention all-Big Eight for his efforts.

"I like playing with Marcus, he has more experience," Harper said. "You have more confidence in people with experience."

Miller is out of spring drills with a shoulder injury. Danny Needham has moved to free safety from defensive end. Tyreese Herds and William Price are first on the depth charts at the cornerbacks.



"We shape up pretty well in size, quickness and brains," Harper said of the secondary. "You kind of feel a jell when you are playing with someone and you know what they are capable of. When you know what they can do and know what they can't do, you know when they can make the play."

Harper said the secondary is playing some coverages he has never played before under Snyder and defensive coordinator Bob Cope.

"To win games you have to stop people," he said. "We switched a lot with Parrish. We were always making changes.

"Coach Snyder and Coach Cope said 'what we do the first day of spring, we'll do against Colorado in the last game of the season.'

"People want to play and enjoy playing again. It seems like it's fun again," Harper said. "It's my last go-around, my last chance to play at K-State. I hope the young guys see that and work harder."

Staff/Greg Vogel

K-State senior Erick Harper is ready to make the move back to the defensive secondary. Harper spent most of last year at linebacker due to changes by then-coach Stan Parrish. During his first two seasons with the 'Cats, Harper received several honors at strong safety.

Entertainment fee is best solution to athletic, fine arts

Bleeding Purple

BRIAN HUMMELL
Sports Columnist

Give it the old college try.

Win one for the Gipper.

Just do it.

Oh my!

Pick one, all of the above or be a little more creative and come up with your own response. Regardless of your response, the athletic fee is back. Kind of.

A task force is being formed which may create a committee to propose an entertainment fee. The fee would generate money for athletics and the fine arts.

The athletic part of the fee would go to the athletic department. The fine arts part of the fee would go ... somewhere.

The fee is expected to be about $16 per semester per student. This would generate about $300,000. Expect the athletic department's cut to go towards increased funding of scholarships for non-revenue sports athletes. The fine arts share of the money would go ... somewhere.

If the money is divided equally, the athletic department's $150,000 share of the new fee is $20,000 less than the projected cost of fully funding the non-revenue sports. That cost is now even higher with tuition increases and the like, but the athletic department would surely accept the money.

Hey, if the fee proposal vaguely resembles that I'm all for it.

It sort of has a broad range of support built into it.

What with actors, singers, painters and athletes joining ranks — how can it fail?

Dedicated sports types and fine arts fanatics will join hands and set aside their past differences. As a result, the world will be a better place.

However, there are a couple of drawbacks to this new plan.

There probably won't be a whole lot of benefits tacked on to this fee. Maybe free admission to non-revenue sports and a promise that fine arts events' ticket prices won't increase.

The benefits that made the last proposed fee so appealing to those who voted for it are dead and gone. There is no freeze on ticket prices, and prices have already risen almost 50 percent for basketball.

After the fee was defeated, this was pretty much a foregone conclusion. The athletic department needed money and with basketball its most appealing product, basketball fans will have to dig deep to supply extra funds for the athletic department.

The second problem is defining fine arts and then allocating the money. There are so many programs and organizations which could be classified as fine arts programs, the potential for conflict is high. There will probably be a lot of light tables and powder puffs overturned in the mad scurrying dash to fill the depleted coffers of the respective organizations who will vie for the money.

But, it should all work out in the end. $150,000 buys a lot of tutus and greasepaint. So even if there isn't plenty of money to go around there should be enough.

Perhaps the best part of this fee proposal is that it will not go to a student apathy poll. Maybe after this last try at a referendum some of the higher-ups at the student government offices have realized the constitutional requirements placed on a referendum will probably never be reached.

Finally, a compromise.

OU players plead innocent

By The Associated Press

NORMAN, Okla. — Three former Oklahoma football players pleaded innocent Wednesday to charges of first-degree rape filed against them in an alleged sexual assault in the school's athletic dormitory on Jan. 21.

District Judge Preston Trimble set a Sept. 11 trial date for Bernard Hall, Nigel Clay and Glen Bell, who are accused of the rape of a 20-year-old Oklahoma City woman.

The three were suspended from the football team and from the university after they were charged in February in Cleveland County District Court. A judge ordered them bound over for trial after a four-day preliminary hearing last week.

Defense attorneys said following the preliminary hearing that during the trial, they would take aim at the testimony of football player Jimmy Fennell.

Fennell testified he saw the three attack the woman, although he admitted he originally had given authorities two other different stories about what happened that night.

Joel Barr, the attorney for Clay, said the trial delay until September is needed to give lawyers time to prepare their cases.

"We'll need a transcript of the preliminary hearing, which won't be ready" in time for the May docket. Barr said the next Cleveland County trial docket after May is in September.

Barr also said no decision had been made whether to have the three former teammates tried together or to sever the cases.

Fritz in 2nd at KU Relays after first day of decathlon

From Staff and Wire Reports

K-State decathlon record holder Steve Fritz ended the first day of competition at the KU Relays with a score of 3,799 points, placing him third overall and second among collegiate competitors.

Fritz's first-day total is on the mark to once again break the K-State record. Fritz set the record April 7 at the Texas Relays with a score of 6,994. After the first day of competition at the Texas Relays, Fritz had a score of 3,778, which means he could break his mark by 200 to 300 points. That would put Fritz close to the national qualifying standard of 7,425 points.

Also competing in the decathlon for the Wildcats was Terry VanLaningham, who ended day one in fifth place overall with a score of 3,440 points.

In the women's division, K-State had Karen McGaughey competing in the heptathlon and after four events she had a second-place total of 2,769 points going into today's final competition. McGaughey set personal records in all four events.

"Karen obviously had a real good day," assistant coach Cliff Rovelto said. "It was good weather and there was some decent competition in every event, but it was not as overwhelming as that at the Texas Relays."

Authors to be honored

By The Collegian Staff

An informal public reception will be at 7 p.m. today in the art gallery of the Manhattan Town Center to honor eight local authors whose work has been published in the past two years.

Five of the authors are members of K-State faculty: Jonathan Holden, professor of English; Donald Stewart, professor of English; Dolores McGlashon, assistant professor, department of extension communications; Steve Heller, associate professor of English and John Zimmerman, professor of biology.

Other authors being honored include Lee Killough, lab technician in the College of Veterinary Medicine, Leonard Bishop, Herington and Bill Koch, Manhattan.

The reception is expected to create public awareness of the literary arts in Manhattan, Heller said. Many people are not aware of the recognition several of these authors from the Manhattan area have gained through their work.

"There are more writers in this area than people realize."

—Steve Heller, associate professor of English

"There are more writers in this area than people realize," he said.

Although this is the first year for the event, organizer Beverly Miller said she hopes to make it an annual happening. Miller is the project manager for the Kansas safety belt education office in the Department of Extension Home Economics.

All of the authors have had a book published in the last two years, McGlashon said.

The reception will present the opportunity for people to discuss the books with the authors and to obtain a signed copy.

"This is an opportunity for the public to come and informally visit with these eight authors," Miller said. "Our authors have a difficult time displaying their work."

Choir to perform final concert

By The Collegian Staff

The K-State Concert Choir will perform on campus for the last time this semester at 8 p.m. at All Faiths Chapel.

"Most of the concert is new music that we have not performed before," said Ed Davis, choir member and graduate student in music. "There are a few things that we have brought back from the past."

The choir is directed by Rod Walker, professor of music, and will perform "Magnificat," a sacred piece by Renaissance composer Orlando diLasso, a group of English folk songs and "The Terrible Tale of Tom Gilligan," as well as other selections.

"Tom Gilligan is the tale of a scarecrow who learns to speak and ends up running for senator," Davis said. "He has no political affiliation."

The President's Concert will be the last campus performance of the semester for the choir before it leaves for a summer tour of Hawaii and Australia May 15 to May 27.

One performance will be presented April 29th at the Regional Rotary Convention.

The choir has 70 members who are both music and non-music majors.

"The standard format of each concert is that a high school group is invited to perform the first half of the concert," Davis said.

The Manhattan High School Chamber Choir under the direction of Dan Commerford will be this year's guest performers. Robert Edwards, professor of music, will be the Chamber Choir's guest organist.

The President's Concert series was created when James McCain was president of K-State. The choir has performed for all presidents since McCain.

"The President's Concert is always the big finale of the year," said Dawn Fountain, senior in music eduation. "It is something we build for after our Serenade Concert."

Designer

Brockman also designed her own clothes.

"I didn't wear clothes from my own lines," Brockman said. "I designed my own clothes. What I designed for myself I thought of as a higher standard than the clothes I designed to sell.

"I had my shoes dyed to order, and all of my hats made to order. If I walked down Fifth Avenue and people did not turn around and look at me, I thought I was doing something wrong."

The collections of dresses Brockman designed included about 60 pieces. The typical collection of today is about double that size.

"We did exclusive prints and many different colors," she said. "Today you get the Neiman Marcus catalog, and a dress will only come in one color. If we got our fabrics from Europe, we would get them in at least three shades or combinations of colors.

"I think the thing I did the best was the winter collection. The dresses were close-fitting and relied on good architecture rather than the print of a fabric."

While Brockman was designing, two developments revolutionized the garment industry.

"Elsa Schiaperilli (a 1930s Italian designer) was the most incisive influence on fashion," she said. "She took the zipper from the overshoes and took it down the back of a dress."

Prior to the introdution of the zipper for the dress, close-fitting clothes had buttons on the side of a dress and sometimes required two people to fasten them, Brockman said.

Corsets were also revolutionized by Schiaperilli, who replaced the steel supports with elastic.

Brockman designed clothes until World War II, when her husband, then an Army officer stationed in Alexandria, La., was transferred to London, England.

Soon after her husband moved to London, he became romantically involved with his secretary.

The Brockmans divorced.

"Everybody needs a good divorce in their life," she said. "What is life about, anyway, if you can't broaden your own life and learn to accept other people?"

A series of jobs in different fields eventually brought Brockman to Manhattan and the University.

Brockman collected volumes of drawings and technical materials when she worked for Bell Laboratories in New York. After six months with the company, she became art director, documenting and illustrating radar equipment.

"(Bell Labs) is a male chauvinist place," Brockman said. "You would be working for the office boy soon after he started."

She left Bell Labs to work for Utica Mutual Insurance in Utica, N.Y., redesigning its record-keeping system.

After her stint at Utica, she began to design again. She designed jewelry and beads before teaching design at the Fashion Institute of Technology in New York City where she wrote her first book, "Theory of Fashion Design."

A colleague from FIT who moved to Manhattan persuaded Brockman to teach fashion design at K-State in 1968.

"I taught my students that if you are going to make more than one of a design, you had to have good design and a good pattern," she said.

In addition to her design classes, Brockman taught pattern theory. Both the students and Brockman learned from the course.

Since she began teaching in Manhattan, Brockman has been working on a pattern-fitting system. The system will allow a variety of sleeve sizes on a dress to be attached in a way which is in proportion with the rest of the dress.

"The book I'm working on about this system will revolutionize the garment industry," she said.

Brockman taught at K-State until 1974.

Now 85, Brockman still lives in Manhattan.

not have passed because it was too general.

"There are obviously constituents in support of both a fine arts and athletic fee," Cuffy said. "A fee that would appeal to both these groups could generate more support."

Lubbers said both senators and students feel that the specifics of a fine arts fee have not been addressed.

"The athletic department will still be in a financial deficit even with the ticket price increases," he said. "(The combined fee) will be a smaller, more detailed fee than those in the past."

Past fee increases, such as the recently proposed athletic fee, have been voted on in student referendum. If this bill is written in the way the current task force wants, a student referendum would be bypassed and the issue would be dealt with only by Senate, Cuffy said.

The SGA constitution gives Senate the right as a representative body to recommend the implementation of a fee.

The bill will be proposed in a way that will address only the issue of the need for a fee, Lubbers said.

"If you can't educate all voters on every aspect of what the benefits of a fee are, then it becomes the job of the representative body to make a decision," he said.

"There is an obvious problem, and we want to find the best compromise," he said. "We will present Senate with a concise bill that will track what we spend."

The possibility of an extra fine arts fee has never been considered by Senate.

"Dance and theater performers are making their own costumes to put on a show for the University," Charles said. "These people need a hand. McCain is operating on a minimal budget."

Bob Kruh, fine arts representative to the task force, said the fee might be a "practical way to package the notion of participation in athletic and cultural events."

"Both of these services should be part of the campus environment we are trying to provide," he said. "It might be easier to generate support for a combined fee."

The cost of providing cultural events has been rising steadily over the past five years.

"The cost of bringing in a major symphony has gone from $30,000 to $60,000 in the last few years," Kruh said. "We can't double ticket prices; it is the responsibility of the university community to provide cultural activities."

Chris Peterson, assistant athletic director in charge of marketing and sales, said the combined fee was a "great idea," and he wished that it had been proposed six months ago.

"It's a great concept — putting the athletic department and the fine arts department together," Peterson said.

He said he agreed with keeping the fee issue in Senate and avoiding a student referendum becasue the majority of students voting in the last referendum supported the fee.

"There is no reason to go through that whole process again," Peterson said.

Effect

life forms have adapted to in the past, he said.

An increasing greenhouse effect could cause more thunderstorms, intense droughts and flooding throughout the low and middle latitudes, he said. Most of the world's population lives in these regions and would be affected by these changes in weather conditions.

"The (earth's) warmest time in the past 100,000 years was only about one degree centigrade warmer than (the earth is) today, Hansen said in a report presented at the First North American Conference on Preparing for Global Climate Change.

Even conservative projections of carbon dioxide increases indicate the level will double by the middle of the next century if it continues to accumulate at its current rate, he said. An average global temperature increase of 4 to 9 degrees Fahrenheit could be expected.

Global warming of only a few degrees would be a large climate change for the "man on the street," he said.

For example, from 1950 to 1983 temperatures in Omaha, Neb., exceeded 100 degrees Fahrenheit an average of three times per year, Hansen said. If the concentration of carbon dioxide doubled, temperatures in Omaha could exceed 100 degrees Fahrenheit about 21 days per year, he said.

According to his report, carbon dioxide continues to be the dominant contributor to the greenhouse effect; however, chlorofluorocarbons, or CFCs, now account for 25 percent of the current growth of the greenhouse effect.

It is "entirely conceivable" that the greenhouse effect could cause temperatures to increase so much that forests wouldn't be able to adapt to the change, said George Woodwell, director of the Woods Hole Research.

Regents discuss proposed $15 fee

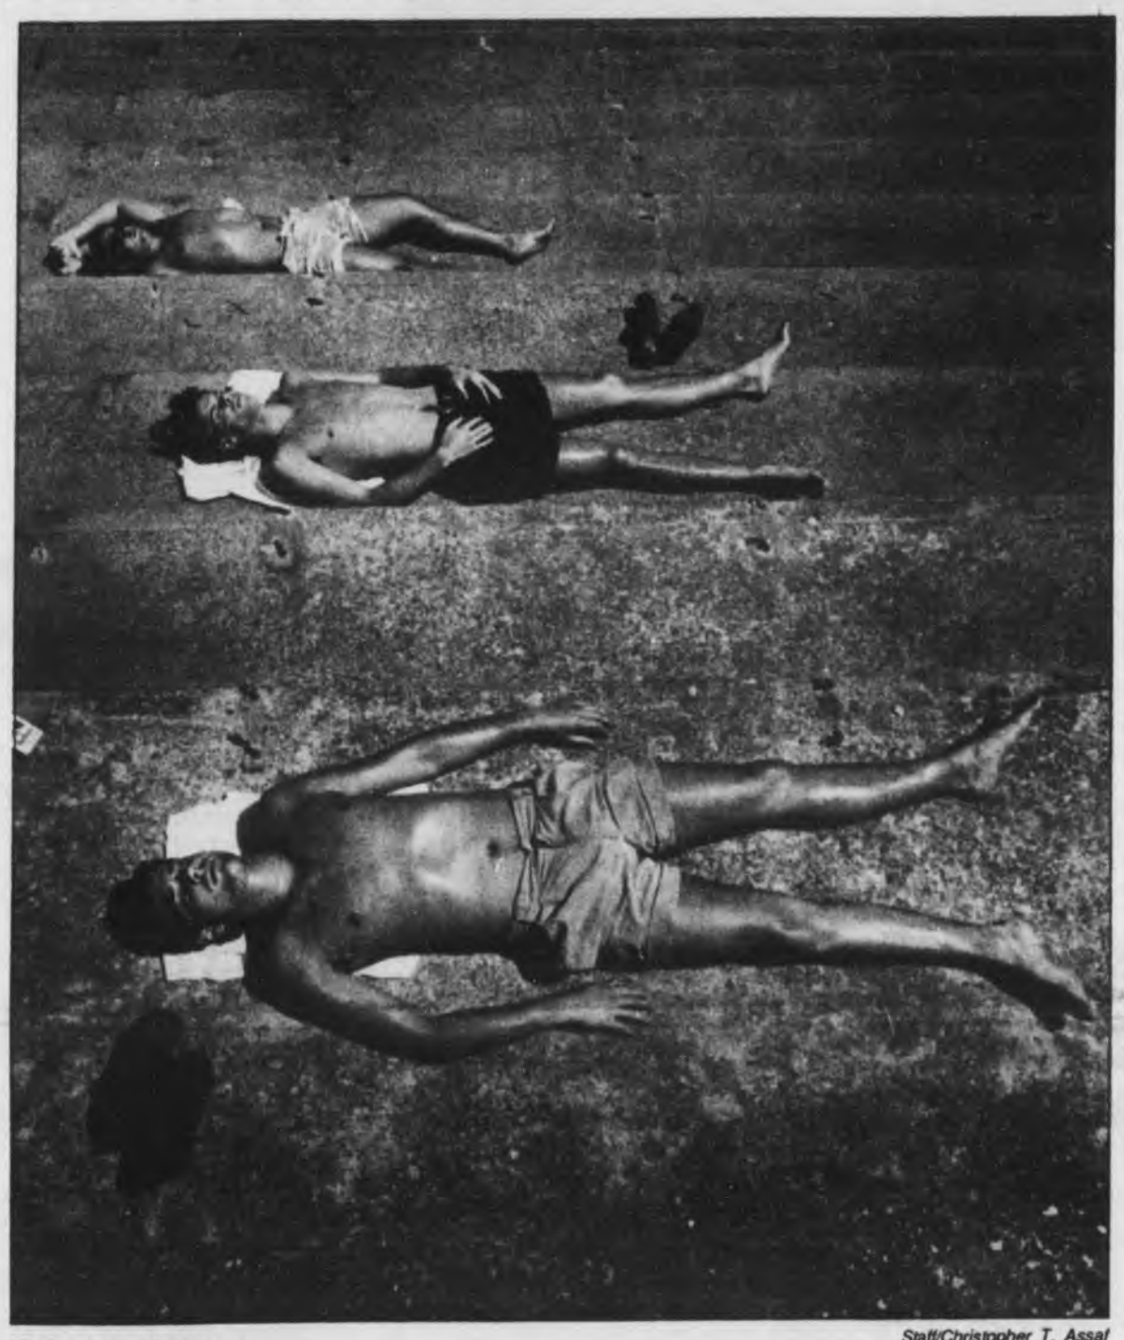
By Karen Allen
Staff Writer

LAWRENCE — Student leaders and academic officials expressed concern over a proposed $15 application fee at the Board of Regents meeting Thursday.

The fee, with a 6 percent tuition increase for in-state residents and 10 percent for non-residents, was recommended by a special regents committee to take effect during the 1990-1991 academic year. All students who applied for admission at any of the seven regents schools would have to pay the fee.

Brook Menees, chairman of the Student Advisory Committee and former student body president of the University of Kansas, said SAC believes the board should spend more time studying the possible ramifications of the fee before it is passed.

"Where is (the money from the fee) going? What will it do? Will it replace or add on to money in the general fund?" These questions, he said, need to be answered.



SAC is concerned the money generated from the fee would simply be "duplicating costs," Menees said.

Menees said SAC believed the fee should not be implemented just because other schools have a processing fee, but should be added only if regents agree it would help the state universities in Kansas.

"We are concerned about nickel-and-diming our students," he said.

General costs are rising in all

Council proposes parking changes

By Gary Lytle
Collegian Reporter

About 500 more parking stalls will be available to students in lots D1E and A1 beginning fall 1989 if recommendations made by the Council on Traffic, Parking and Police operations are implemented.

In a unanimous vote Thursday, the council approved a motion recommending parking lot D1E, west of Memorial Stadium, and lot A1, east of McCain Auditorium, be designated student-only parking. The motion came after discussion on the problem of converting the north Union lot, A29, to metered parking stalls.

However, Student Senate Chairman Todd Johnson said that considering 78 percent of the general lots are used by students because faculty and staff have access to numerous restricted lots, students are getting parking they already have.

The council is "kicking students off to the extremities of campus," he said.

Johnson reported to the council Senate's concerns that one of only three lots specifically restricted for student parking — the one closest to the Union — will be eliminated.

"At the same time, we are asking for a $10 increase in parking permits next fall, we are cutting back on one-third of the stalls (restricted solely for students) close to the main campus," he said.

Last Thursday, Student Senate passed a resolution requesting the council make the south Union lot, A30, a student parking lot to make up for the conversion of the north lot.

At the present time, 4.9 students have parking permits for every stall restricted for students only, and 1.1 faculty and staff have parking permits for every stall restricted to faculty and staff, Johnson said.

"Since there are eight clusters of lots that are faculty and staff, and only three student-only lots right now, Senate feels the need to reduce the number of faculty and staff lots before the number of student lots are reduced," he said.

A motion to change lot A30, the south Union lot, from faculty and staff only to a general lot was unanimously voted down by the council.

Michael Toedman, junior in business management and student representative to the council, said the faculty should not have to walk a half mile to get to work considering the fact that are already underpaid.

"I don't really think it should go to a general lot as far as A30 goes," Toedman said.

KSU Police Chief Charles Beckom said lot D1E should be changed from a general lot to student-only parking.

Toedman moved to change lots D1E and A1 to student-only parking. After some discussion and an amendment to allow faculty parking in the small portion of D1E next to St. Isidore's University Chapel, the motion was voted on and passed.

In other business, the council discussed the idea of letting students purchase reserved parking stalls available now only to faculty and staff.

Beckom said an increase in reserved stalls would put a greater demand on his department to police the stalls.

Any recommendations from the hearing will go directly to President Wefald and Vice President for Admi-

Fair representation bill returned to committee

By Nancy Prosser
Staff Writer

After two hours of debate, Senate voted Thursday night to send back to committee a bill that would establish an ad hoc committee to investigate the issue of fair representation in Senate and validity of the referendum process.

The original bill presented by the Senate Operations Committee called for two committees: one to look at representation, the other to deal with the referendum question.

An amendment sponsored by members of the executive committee and Johnny Gaffney, engineering senator, combined the two committees into one to deal with both issues.

"In the last few weeks, we (executive committee members) have debated this for hours," said Todd Johnson, Senate chairman. "We think that this is the best overall way to have the committee set up."

The bill originally called for two chairmen, but was later amended to include only one chair.

"Having a chair from the legislative branch and one from the executive branch negates the system of checks and balances," said Todd Giefer, architecture senator.

The bill was sent back to the Senate Operations Committee for further consideration because of concerns about whether it had gone through proper legislative channels.

"If we keep setting up ad hoc committees, there is no purpose in having standing committees," said Monica Connet, education senator. "The bill needs to go back to committee to go through proper channels."

When a bill returns to the Senate Operations Committee, it can be rewritten in any way that the committee members and the sponsors of the amended bill choose.

Senate heard appeals and voted to approve two changes to original allocations. The FONE Crisis Center and Consumer Relations Board both received additional funding from Senate.

The crisis center received a $45 increase for office supplies, and CRB received an allocation of $281.80 for printing of promotional brochures.

The final allocation to the crisis center was $11,875.45 and to CRB was $4,144.80.

Senate voted to approve all tenative allocations made during the last two weeks.

Lauren O'Connor, finance committee chairwoman, said $533.51 remained from tenative allocations to be put in the Reserves for Contingencies Account. Senate-funded groups can still make appeals to Senate before final allocations next fall.

Senate heard first readings of a bill that would allocate $2,015 to Student Governing Association to purchase a computer and printer.

Senate also heard first readings

Greenhouse effect preventable

Precautionary measures could reduce gases

The Greenhouse Effect

Editor's note: This is the last part of a three-part series on the greenhouse effect, its causes, effects and possible solutions to the problem.

By Bryan Ackley
Collegian Reporter

The greenhouse effect is changing the earth's environment more each day. By the year 2050, it could cause devastation to a degree which researchers can only now imagine.

Still, many experts believe there is time to save the human race from this potential nightmare which few seem to acknowledge.

If precautionary measures were enacted now, the world's economies could be prevented from being disrupted or destroyed, said William Moomaw, senior associate at the World Resource Institute.

James Hansen, director of the NASA Goddard Institute for Space Studies said, "We believe it is appropriate to encourage those steps which would reduce the rate of growth of the greenhouse gases."

According to Hansen's report, he encouraged phasing out the use of chlorofluorocarbons, which account for 25 percent of the current climatic changes underway.

He said to prevent increases in concentration of carbon dioxide, which is the leading contributor to the greenhouse effect, society must become more energy efficient and decrease its dependency on fossil fuels. Discouraging deforestation would allow additional oxygen to be generated by trees, serving as a preventative measure necessary to sustain life.

In addition, researchers need to learn about the way oceans effect regional climate changes, Hansen said.

During Moomaw's testimony to the U.S. Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, he said researchers must continue to search for safe alternatives to CFCs, particularly for something which would not add to the greenhouse effect.

"There has been virtually no discussion of this particular possibility, and I think it's a matter of some concern," he said.

It has been proven that chlorofluorocarbons, or CFCs, contribute to the greenhouse effect, Moomaw said. In response to the danger of CFCs, the Montreal Protocol has required CFC production to be reduced by 50 percent by 1999. But not everyone appears to be as concerned.

"I am shocked to discover that every spring I get a notice from my automobile dealer urging me to come in and have my air conditioner flushed out and to have my chlorofluorocarbons replaced," Moomaw said.

This is a effective way of marketing additional CFCs, but it is wasteful. CFCs are reuseable, and most air conditioners don't need to be flushed out unless there's been a problem, he said.

If the United States would use its resources to produce more energy-efficient products and services similar to efforts of Japan, China and Europe, the U.S. economy and the environment could benefit, Moomaw said.

Delegating more resources to the development of automobiles which wouldn't burn fossil fuels and reassessing the potential uses of nuclear energy are examples of changes that could be initiated, he said.

Nuclear power is a valid option; however, its potential for use shouldn't be determined simply by examining the record of its past and present experience, Moomaw said. The possibility of technological improvements must also be considered.

It is important to have observational data systems throughout the world by the 1990s because that is when greenhouse effects will begin to significantly impact everyone, Hansen said in his report at the First North American Conference on Preparing for Global Climate Change.

"As greenhouse climate changes begin to appear, people will ask practical questions and will want quantitative answers," Hansen said.

"We are now totally unprepared to provide information of the specificity that will be required."

Protest at Wichita company set for Saturday morning

By Bryan Ackley
Collegian Reporter

Saturday morning about 40 people will leave the Union parking lot to join concerned citizens around the world in an effort to save the Earth.

John Grinter, graduate student in psychology and spokesman for Students Acting to Save a Vulnerable Environment, said he and other members of the campus-based student activist organization are going to Racon Inc., in Wichita, to protest its use and production of chlorofluorocarbons, or CFCs.

Racon Inc., which uses CFCs in the manufacturing of refrigerants, is one of 10 worldwide sites targeted for demonstration, Grinter said.

The demonstration will occur simultaneously throughout the world, and more than 100,000 people are expected to participate, he said.

"We have a local opportunity to make a difference in a global issue," Grinter said.

The organization will concentrate its efforts on the CFC issue, at least until after the demonstration; however, its members will continue to be involved in the search for solutions to other environmental problems, he said.

One of the organization's goals is to establish a campus information network from which students could learn about existing environmental issues, Grinter said.

Landslides, floods kill 5

MOSCOW — Landslides and flooding struck the mountainous area of Adzharia in Soviet Georgia this week, killing five people and leaving another 47 missing and feared dead, state TV said Thursday.

About 13,000 people are threatened by flooding rivers, snowmelt and mudslides aggravated by earth tremors, the news program "Vremya" said. Already, 800 families have been evacuated, it said, and 3,000 others are due to leave in the near future.

The news show said 52 people were caught in a landslide on Mount Salgan Wednesday which buried four houses and a bus. It said five bodies have been recovered and rescuers are searching for the missing 47.

The Tass news agency had a slightly different version. It said a mudslide blocked the River Charukh, flooding four homes and a bus in the village of Tsablana. The news agency said three people died and four were rescued, but more than 45 others may have been trapped.

Asteroid passes by Earth

WASHINGTON — An asteroid big enough to wipe out cities whizzed past the Earth last month before astronomers even knew it was there, showing how hard it is to forecast a natural disaster from space, a NASA scientist said Thursday.

The mountain-sized asteroid flashed by the Earth at a speed of 46,000 miles an hour and was not even detected until days after it had become a receding point of light, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration announced.

Astronomers reported that the object missed the Earth by a half million miles — about twice the distance between the Earth and moon. In cosmic terms, this is considered "a close call."

Had it hit the Earth, said Bevan French, a scientist in NASA's solar system exploration division, the asteroid would have created a crater the size of the District of Columbia and spread destruction for 100 miles in all directions. Other effects would be felt thousands of miles away, he said.

Police investigating death

Riley County police are investigating the Thursday death of a fourth-year architecture and design student as a suicide, according to police officials.

The body of Daniel B. Wilson, 23, was found at 12:50 p.m. in the bedroom of his apartment at 925 Denison in the Wildcat Inn Junior Apartments.

Riley County Lt. Buddy Mays said Wilson's death appeared to have been caused by a head wound from a .25 caliber handgun. However, the case is still under investigation and an autopsy will be performed to determine the cause of death.

Mays said Wilson was last seen alive about 3 a.m., and his body was discovered at 12:50 p.m. by a building maintenance worker. The exact time of death has not been established yet, Mays said.

Gas leak causes evacuation

About 40 FarmHouse fraternity members were evacuated Thursday night after a gas leak was detected in the recreational room where the building's boilers are stored.

Members noticed the strong smell of gas and called the Manhattan City Fire Department about 10:15 p.m. Jack Roets, battalion chief, said the gas meters were shut off and everyone was evacuated until the danger passed.

"We need to isolate the leak first; it could be an in-house pipe or a feed line... we're not going to take any chances, with all of the problems over the country with gas leaks," Roets said.

Kansas Power and Light workers arrived around 11 p.m. to help locate the leak, but none had been found as of midnight. At 11:40 p.m., fraternity members were allowed to wait in the foyer and living room of the building.

There are 56 in-house members of the fraternity, but not all were present when the call was made.

Pridettes tryouts Saturday

To personify your purple pride, perform for the Pridettes.

Tryouts for next year's K-State Pridettes will be at 9 a.m. Saturday in McCain 201.

"The tryouts will probably take all day," said Janelle Rundel, Pridette staff member. "The girls are expected to learn a short routine in the morning and then get a short break at 1 o'clock to practice or eat lunch."

Rundel said no designated number of positions were available, only Pridettes who were qualified will be selected.

The Pridettes traditionally perform during the halftimes of all home football games, Rundel said. But next year, they will add a pre-game routine to selected popular music.

Cece Noland, three-year Pridette member, and Sandi Weimers, Clay Center High School director of dance, will assist K-State Band directors Stan Finck and Ben Rorher with the selection of the squad.

Spring dance set for today

The Kansas State University Dance Program will present "SpringDance '89" tonight at 8 in McCain Auditorium.

Judith Quirk, assistant professor of speech and production coordinator of the event, said original choreography will be presented.

Quirk and Luke Kahlich, associate professor of speech, choreographed three of the dance numbers. Original works will also be presented by Dance Artist-in-Residence Charles Paquette. Three other numbers were choreographed by K-State students, two of whom are graduating seniors.

"We teach ballet, modern and jazz styles," said Quirk. "In the concert you'll see combinations of these three styles of dance."

Tickets for the event are $4 for students and senior citizens and $6 for the general public.

Fort Riley expansion discussed

By Lance Schwulst
Collegian Reporter

Geary County residents got the opportunity Thursday to tell Second District Congressman Jim Slattery what they thought of the possibility of Fort Riley annexing additional land.

Slattery was at the Union for a town meeting attended by more than 100 people.

Janette Poole, senior in journalism and fifth generation resident of Geary County, raised the Fort Riley expansion issue.

The expansion could include 100,000 acres of Geary County and would displace 350 families and another 150 land-owners. The discussed area is between Kansas Highways 177 and 77 and south of Interstate 70.

"I am not going to support the taking of one additional acre of land by the U.S. Army if it is not absolutely necessary," Slattery said.

Next to the area Fort Riley has proposed annexing, the National Audobon Society has been offered the right to purchase the 10,000 acre Z-Bar Ranch in neighboring Chase County. The area would be used as a wildlife preserve.

Poole said she was not opposed to the wildlife preserve, but was "against having a national park that people can visit and see war games going on next door."

The Geary County residents do not oppose the purchase of the Z-Bar Ranch because the owners put the ranch on the market. The Army would acquire the land for the Fort Riley expansion by emminent domain, a process the group opposes.

Slattery said reports that Fort Riley might have to close if they can not acquire additional land are "overstated."

"I want to make sure that Fort Riley stays in Kansas and the Big Red One stays in Kansas," he said.

Slattery also answered questions about Jim Wright, speaker of the U.S. House of Representatives, who has been accused of 69 infractions of ethics.

"The speaker of the House has

Political science student named Truman scholar

By Michael Nichols
Campus Editor

Kristy Parker may not know exactly what career she will pursue after graduation, but receiving a Truman scholarship will certainly open some doors in her future.

Parker, sophomore in political science and pre-law, was the only student in Kansas to become a Truman scholar this year, said Nancy Twiss, Truman faculty representative.

About 100 scholarships were awarded to 262 applicants, she said. There is at least one scholarship per state, and about an equal number of at-large scholarships awarded at the discretion of the Truman Foundation.

"The Truman was created to encourage students to enter public service, and particularly public service in government," Twiss said.

"The whole point of the scholarship is to award people going into public service," Parker said. "I don't want to work for a corporation."

"I plan to go to law school after K-State," she said. "I haven't thought that far ahead ... but I may study to be a public defender or a government attorney of some sort."

Donald Nieman, associate professor of history and member of the K-State Truman Scholarship Selection Committee called the competition "very rigorous."

"We have anywhere from 10 to 15 applicants from Kansas State," he said. "We choose as many as three students from that."

The committee consists of five faculty members who read the materials submitted by the applicants, Nieman said. Committee members compile letters of recommendation and an inventory of the applicants' public service activities in high school and in college.

Nieman said the interview process is very difficult, considering the applicants are all sophomores and that they are "grilled" by the faculty committee and a regional committee.

"The interviews require a very broad and deep knowledge of matters of public policy, requiring these people to think through and articulate a position," he said. "That's a pretty tall order for someone who is usually about 19 (years old)."

Parker said he conducted at least five interviews with five- or six-member panels.

"I'm sure this will help me later on with interviews," she said. "I feel that my interviewing is a lot better than it was seven months ago.

"The first thing we had to do was to apply to be K-State nominees. We filled out applications for national nominees, which included a 600-word essay and three short essays that ended up being not so short."

Parker was one of three students chosen to represent K-State, she said. All three were selected as semifinalists for the State of Kansas, and had interviews at the Truman Library in Kansas City with the regional Truman committee.

The interviews consisted of questions on public policy, Nieman said. The regional committee is composed of political leaders, business leaders, university people and other distinguished individuals appointed by the Truman Foundation in Washington, D.C.

Parker said members of the committee at the University were very helpful, taking time out of their schedules to read her essays time and again.

Nieman said Truman scholarships promote not only the students involved, but also the quality of education offered at the University.

Engineering college receives gift

By Angie Smith
Collegian Reporter

The Kansas State University Foundation received $846,000 to benefit the College of Engineering, said Gordon Dowell, director of publications.

The gift, which will be divided to support three new programs within the college, was provided through a planned gift established by Charles and Nona Frankenhoff of Scarsdale, N.Y.

Charles Frankenhoff, honored in 1979 with the College of Engineering's Distinguished Teaching Award, was a 1918 KSU mechanical engineering graduate and former president of Davis Filtration.

"They were great people," said Don Rathbone, dean of the College of Engineering. "He (Charles) dearly loved K-State. He was very interested in research and wanted to be sure this thrust was ever present in the college. He was a super human being."

The Charles and Nona Frankenhoff Chair in Engineering has been funded with a $500,000 endowment, Dowell said.

The Frankenhoff Scholarship Program in Engineering was endowed with $250,000, he said. The scholarship will provide full tuition and books to outstanding freshmen.

Despite debate, divestment right choice

A problem facing today's society is the blind acceptance of half-truths, opinions and less than objective sources for fact. Unfortunately, this concern became a reality at the debate over the Student Funds and Ethical Investments bill. Although the arguments presented by the bill's detractors were fallacious, ample time to refute was not afforded. Thus, I offer a rebuttal.

Don Rollin's column in last Thursday's Collegian is prefaced with a quote by Marshall Loeb, managing editor of Fortune magazine. The statement is Loeb's impression of the South Africa problem after a 12-day visit.

In the article, he readily admits most of the people he interviewed were "white liberals." It seems unlikely that Loeb can accurately assess what black South Africa needs when he spent most of his time with whites. Furthermore, many of the whites Loeb used as sources were in the more comfortable positions of South African society. (i.e. one was a member of Parliament and another was a CEO of a $1.3 billion a year conglomerate) Again, it seems unlikely these people can speak on behalf of black South Africa.

Rollin's reliance on Fortune as a source for many of his "facts" should also be questioned. Apparently he doesn't realize a magazine such as Fortune has vested interests in many of the multi-nationals still doing business in South Africa. It would be suicide for Fortune to do anything but promote continued investment.

A perfect example is the relationship between Fortune and Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company. Three years ago during the riots that swept through South Africa's townships, Fortune was allowed "to sit in on the committee sessions at the company's headquarters. Goodyear also provided access to documents and key officials to help shed light on how a major corporation grapples with the thorny problem of operating in South Africa amid the rising clamor for sanctions and disinvestment."

The preferential treatment Goodyear showed Fortune resulted in Goodyear's depiction as an "employee-conscious" tire company. It was overlooked that the tires produced by Goodyear were, and continue to be, used on South African military vehicles to disperse funerals, track down apartheid's opponents and forcibly relocate masses of people.

It is obvious that as long as companies such as Goodyear continue their presence in South Africa, sources such as Fortune will be less than objective.

An argument that many senators and guest columnists have against divestment is that it causes black South Africans to suffer the most. The Ad Hoc committee report reveals the small percentage of black South Africans that U.S. companies actually employ — 46,000 or .4 percent of all economically active black South Africans.

Commentary

Kenneth Kincaid

Guest Columnist

Editor's note: Kenneth Kincaid is a senior in math.

Furthermore, according to a study by the Community Agency for Social Enquiry (CAS) and the Institute for Black Research (IBR) whereas at least 25 percent of the black population are unemployed, only 5 percent of the white population are unemployed.

With total U.S. divestment (a more powerful form of divestment where the companies divest themselves from South Africa) the percentage of unemployed black South Africans would increase to 26 percent but the white unemployment rate would jump to 8 percent. This difference clearly shows that total divestment would unemploy a greater percentage of whites as opposed to black South Africans.

The opponents of the bill contend that divestment is not the solution the majority of blacks want in bringing about the end to apartheid. They cite South African government surveys as evidence. They fail to mention, although it was in the report, that a person advocating divestment is guilty of subversion with a penalty of up to 20 years in jail.

It should be noted that many government agencies have been designed to promote public opinion. This has been found to be true in government surveys where the wording of the survey question coupled with strict subversion laws have led many people to believe the majority of black South Africans are in favor of continued investment.

Furthermore, they fail to mention surveys taken by CASE/IBR and The London Times which found that 73 percent and 75 percent of black South Africans polled, favor divestment.

Opponents of the bill claim that South African tribal leaders disfavor divestment. Rollins cites only one of these so-called leaders. (Many black South African journalists prefer the term "paid puppets.") He refers to Chief Mangosuthu Buthelezi as the "head of the six million strong Zulu tribe."

This title is due to his birth. It does not take into consideration the different ideologies of the people. It would be more appropriate to call Buthelezi the head of Inkatha, which is the "Zulu politico-cultural movement" that claims about a million members. This figure contrasts sharply with the six million Buthelezi followers implied by Rollins.

Also, according to Stephen Davis' "Apartheid Rebels," 40 percent of Inkatha itself is in favor of divestment.

The Investor Responsibility Research Center (IRRC) as stated in the report, suggests that "leaders of black organizations (such as Buthelezi) best mirror the feelings of South African blacks." The CASE/IRB study supports this by citing in order of popularity: Nelson Mandela and the African National Congress, Bishop Desmond TuTu, the United Democratic Front, and Chief Buthelezi and Inkatha as the four most popular organizations in South Africa.

An overwhelming majority of the first three groups and two-fifths of the fourth support disinvestment, which shows that black South Africa supports these actions. This too, failed to be brought up in Student Senate.

These were just a few of the attempts to misguide Senate with so-called "facts." That many senators based opposition to the bill because of the influx of these facts is outrageous. The content of the Ad Hoc committee's report refutes almost all of the anti-divestment arguments.

It sat in the SGA office at least one week before the debate. There is no reason that senators could have allowed themselves to be taken in by these fallacious arguments. Fortunately, enough senators were able to see through these "facts" and make the right decision.

New parking solution causes controversy

The problem of parking or, more correctly, the lack of parking on campus is a well-documented and much-discussed issue. But although parking is much discussed, it is not discussed well.

Thursday, the Council on Traffic, Parking and Police Operations made a strangely unanimous recommendation in favor of removing all student parking from near the Union and replacing it with metered parking spaces.

The unanimous recommendation was strange in that the two students on the council voted for the proposal, while Student Senate had previously voted 43 to 1 with one abstention to back a proposal giving students access to the south Union lot.

Parking meters are a good idea. They should help facilitate a steady flow of traffic through the Union area, and provide additional revenue. But sacrificing all student parking in the area is not the way to implement the meters.

The faculty and staff lot south of the Union will go virtually unscathed by the change. It seems as though a compromise is in order.

Students will have to give up prime parking spaces for parking on the outskirts of campus. Perhaps the faculty and staff parking lot could also be revised in order to share part of the burden.

K-State is not generally perceived to be a commuter campus, but enough students from Fort Riley, Wamego and outer Manhattan exist to fill the lots reserved for them to overflowing and more.

Considering that student parking permits are already oversold by almost five times the number of available spaces and the price of the permits will increase by $10 next semester, students are already bearing the brunt of the parking problem.

Compromise or not, the underlying issue is once again an insufficient amount of parking. Shifting the lot assignments will not alleviate the parking problem, it will only create animosity.

There is still time for meaningful discussion to take place on the recommendation and on parking in general. Today at 3:30 p.m. in the Union Big Eight Room a public forum will be held on the topic. Interested parties should take the opportunity to voice their concerns on the topic.

Collegian Editorial Policies

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR are always encouraged. Those which pertain to matters of campus and/or public interest are especially encouraged, and are given the highest priority.

Letters should be kept as brief as possible, preferably under 300 words. Those who cannot condense their opinions should consider submiting their letter in the form of a guest column. All letters are subject to editing for space, style and taste.

GUEST COLUMNS are also encouraged. The column should be no longer than two double-spaced, typed pages. If the submission is used as a column and not a letter to the editor, it will be accompanied by the author's photograph.

Wanted a chance

Editor,

Sig Ep Fite Nite, once again, was a huge success. With a lot of help, we were able to raise nearly $7,000 for the American Heart Association, a very worthy cause. But what could have made it even better, while also increasing the size of this donation? The sale of beer at the event.

Not only would it have added atmosphere to this already exciting tournament, but it would have attracted more of the Manhattan community who are vital to this event's continual growth.

Then, why no beer? Weber Arena, where Fite Nite takes place, is one of the 10 alcoholic liquor-approved, non-classroom areas on campus. Yet, this luxury is only granted to limited alumni functions in which Fite Nite failed to fall under. However, we only wished to administer the sale of 3.2 percent beer, which is also limited.

Beer is confined to approved residence halls at which the average number of people of legal drinking age is around 10 percent. Fite Nite's over-21 crowd was nearly 60 percent, based on a survey distributed during the semi-finals night.

Now, we realize the position the University is in, which is why we planned on taking extensive precautionary measures. Those measures included enlisting the services of a professional caterer who would be responsible for administering the sale of the beer, along with food and other non-alcoholic beverages.

Yet, I feel this was overshadowed by the fact that Fite Nite was student-run, and worse than that, fraternity-run, which quickly casts a certain stereotype over the whole issue. We weren't considered by the rule-makers as responsible enough to simply provide beer at our event, yet those same irresponsible students can raise more than $7,000 for charity two years in a row.

All we wanted was a chance to prove it could be handled professionally and to everyone's benefit, but we were abruptly denied as we were last year.

A solution, some say, is to move the event off-campus. My answer to this is — we like the atmosphere and location where it is, not to mention that the people we worked with at Weber cooperated with us to the greatest degree. We hope to run the event there for many years to come.

My thanks and apologies go to Campbell Distributors, for once again they were not able to utilize the sale of their product at the event, yet they continued their incredible support to us and this worthy cause to no avail.

We will try again next year and hopefully then we will get the chance we deserve.

Student parking

Editor,

After researching the facts and figures on the parking issue, we strongly support Student Senate action calling for Lot 30 (south Union parking lot) to be turned into an all student parking lot.

Dislikes logo

Editor,

At the risk of offending the new coaching staff, I must say that I would agree with several of my friends who say the new football logo closely resembles that of the Iowa University Hawkeyes.

Many don't like it. Some don't because they feel the previous logo carried with it a proud tradition. Others resent the afore mentioned resemblance to the (please pardon the expression) "'hawk."

Being a member of this latter group, I can truthfully say I have yet to decide whether I actually like the new cat. I will say however, that if next year's football team can mimic win-loss records as well as they mimic logos ... well I guess we'll take it.

Name wrong again

Editor,

Re: "Group protests '60s nostalgia," printed April 19.

For the second time this semester an article in the Collegian has mentioned the "Vietnam War Memorial in Washington D.C."

The name of the national memorial in Washington is the "Vietnam Veterans Memorial." It is a memorial to veterans, not war.

Speaker: Faulty images of China should be replaced

By Steve Logback
Collegian Reporter

It is important to teach Americans to replace their stereotypical images of China with more realistic perceptions, said Christopher "Kit" Salter, chairman of the geography department at the University of Missouri.

Salter, who has published works on China and geographic education, spoke to about 30 people in Dickens Hall Thursday.

During his presentation, "Midwestern Images of China," Salter presented an example of a non-scientific test which he administered to three different age groups.

He requested that each person communicate what ideas or images they had about China.

Salter said he was not surprised that the largest number of undergraduate students in a world regional geography course at MU identified China with a large or dense population.

"Crowded cities are only a subset of a dense population," Salter said. "Televisions and photographs don't show you a field of cultivators, they show you crowded festivals and urban centers. Our image of China just goes through our society as a crowded population.

"The idea of a large, dense population is easy to understand — the perception is filtered through almost every level of American understanding," he said.

Salter said another image frequently associated with China is the Great Wall of China.

"The Great Wall stands as a strong geographic image simply because it is often times cited as the one aspect of the cultural landscape that can be seen on the earth by people on the moon and that is not true," he said. "The Great Wall is fixed in people's minds as the single human artifact that broadcasts itself in greater clarity than any other cultural landscape does."

Stephen Stover, associate professor of geography, said Salter was selected to lecture because of his reputation and location.

"He (Salter) is a prominent person and was within physical reach — that made it feasible to ask him."

Black light theater to perform

By Nancy Chartrand
Collegian Reviewer

"The audience is in wonderland. Dazzled. It cannot believe its eyes ... tender, funny and absolutely magic." — "Liberte," Lille, France.

The magic of black light theater will be coming to McCain Auditorium at 8 p.m. Saturday as Ta Fantastika Black Light Theatre takes the stage.

The program is presented in part by the Kansas Arts Commission, a state agency, and the National Endowment for the Arts, a federal agency.

Ta Fantastika was founded by Petr and Milada Kratochvil, graduates of the Academy of Theatre Arts in Czechoslovakia and former soloists for the Black Light Theatre of Prague. The company, composed of 10 performers, seven Americans and three Czechoslovakians, moved to the United States in 1980 and began traveling internationally in 1982.

The performance takes place on a completely black stage under ultraviolet lights. The effect is that of a surrealistic world of dreams and fantasy, where gravity has no bearing.

"The black light theater originated in Asia about 1,000 years ago, for entertaining kings," said Petr Kratochvil, artistic director of the company. "Originally candles were used to manipulate objects with light. We (Ta Fantastika) combine dance and mime. It is a very visual theater and very entertaining."

Because its work is so unusual, the company's method is a guarded secret that is actually patented.

The company has one more performance in the United States, after the one at McCain, and then it will be traveling to Asia, Hong Kong, Taiwan, Japan and Europe.

Student tickets are $10, $8 and $5 and may be purchased at the McCain Box Office.

Orchestra presents season finale

By The Collegian Staff

The Kansas State Orchestra will present its grand finale at 8 p.m. Sunday in McCain Auditorium.

"Rhapsody in Blue," by George Gershwin, will feature piano soloist Aleisha Bailey, junior in music education. Other pieces by Maurice Ravel, Emmanuel Chabrier and Bedrich Smetana will also be performed.

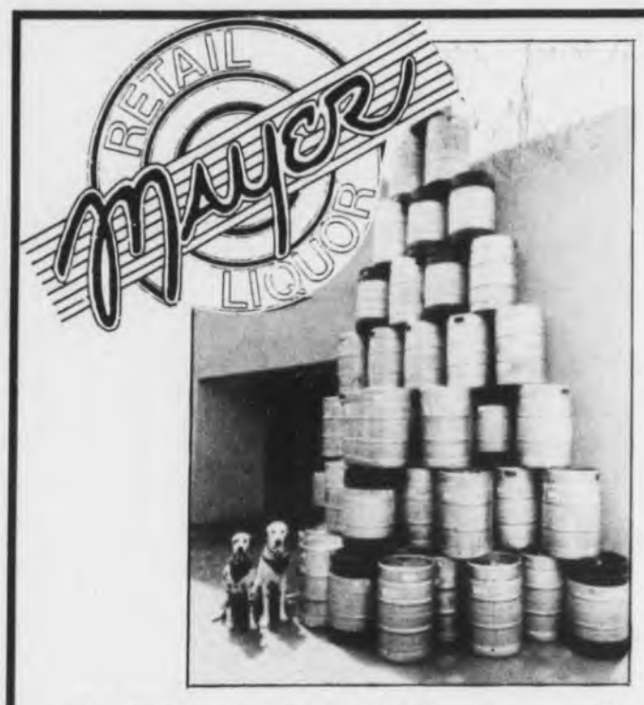
The spring concert will comprise both music and non-music majors.

"'Bolero,' which was written by Ravel, features woodwind and brass solos," said Elizabeth Feyerharm, a senior string major in music education and a violinist in the orchestra.

"All of the selections performed are from the Romantic period," she said. "In fact, most of the music has probably been heard by people before, since they're pretty famous melodies. An Eastern Airlines commercial uses something from 'Rhapsody in Blue' and the movie '10' used a piece from 'Bolero.'"

This concert will be Bailey's first orchestra appearance.

"I've never performed with an orchestra before, so I'm looking forward to it," Bailey said.



Bailey was named a winner in a concerto competition sponsored by the music department which entitled her to be the piano soloist in "Rhapsody in Blue."

Variety of acts scheduled for 'Party on the Plaza'

By The Collegian Staff

Although most people think they can't party on the plaza unless they're in Kansas City, Mo., K-State students will have a chance to party on the plaza tonight in Manhattan.

The Union Program Council is sponsoring its last party of the semester from 5 to 11 tonight on the Union Plaza between the Union and Seaton Hall.

"We always have a spring event about this time," said Brenda Wenthe, senior in English and UPC Special Events Committee member. "Last year we sponsored the Video Fest."

Comedian Todd Rowden will kick off the event at 5 p.m., followed by the music of Homestead Grays.

"The Homstead Grays are a band out of Lawrence that won the Opus Band Competition last fall," Wenthe said. "Their music is a mix of country, rock and alternative."

From 6 to 6:30 p.m., comedian Nick Griffin will perform. Griffin has performed at several comedy clubs, including Sanford and Sons in Kansas City, Mo.

"We needed an emcee between the bands and we wanted comedy," Wenthe said. "So we decided on three comedians."

At 6:30 p.m. reggae musician John Bayley will perform his unique blend of music known as "Racca-lipso" which means "to rock your lips so." Bayley performs again at 7:45 to 8:30 p.m.

Andre Kelly, K-State alumnus and comedian, will perform between Bayley's acts. At 8:30 p.m. the film "Hair" will be shown on the outside wall of the Union.

Late Wednesday evening, the group had a trial run to make sure that showing the film would work, Wenthe said.

If it rains tonight, she said the event will be in the Union Ball Room. Admission is free.

Singers to perform in California

By Paige Gantz
Collegian Reporter

The K-State Men's Glee Club departs today for sunny California to participate in an Intercollegiate Men's Choruses regional festival with Loyola Marymount University as the host.

Besides K-State, participating schools are the University of California-Irvine, University of California-Santa Barbara, California Institute of Technology, Loma Linda University, Point Loma University, Pacific Men's Chorale, University of Nevada-Las Vegas, Bolsa Grande High School and the host university.

"This gives us the unique opportunity to join schools of southern California, especially when these are not hosted in the Midwest," said Gerald Polich, associate professor of music and head of the men's glee club.

National seminars, like the one the University played host to in 1988, take place every other year, Polich said. K-State also participated in a seminar at Harvard in 1986.

Classes present forum

Speeches focus on campus issues

By Dave Young
Collegian Reporter

While K-State students have the opportunity to see many speeches, it is not often that they can hear fellow students deliver lectures on matters of campus concern.

About 50 people attended a public speech forum Thursday, in Nichols Theatre, with five speeches presented by students in Public Speaking II classes.

Speech instructor Phil Anderson's three Public Speaking II classes have been presenting the forum for about nine years. The two most effective speeches from each class as decided by the students are presented in the forum.

Past forums have had an influence on action being taken on the issues, Anderson said. Two issues presented in last semester's forum discussing academic minors and the possibility of placing condom vending machines in the Union are about to be voted on in Student Senate.

Pat Schumaker, freshmen in business, presented, "KSU Needs Better Handicap Accessibility."

"Only $25,000 is spent on handicap accessibility at K-State," Schumaker said. "For every $9,000 K-State spends, only about $1 is for handicap accessibility."

Anna Aley, senior in speech, delivered "We Don't Have To Live In Slums," dealing with the problem of sub-standard housing for off-campus students.

"Hazing hurts the Greek system as a whole, and it also hurts K-State."
—Martha Kropf sophomore in journalism and mass communications

"If we could get the 13,000 people who live off campus to tell the City Commission that they want the proposed ordinance (tougher housing code currently being considered), we could get a lot done," Aley said.

"An Entertainment Fee Would Meet The Needs Of Both Athletics And Fine Arts" was delivered by Eric Alley, junior in marketing, Kim Pearson, junior in education and Susie Unrein, junior in education.

The three spoke in favor of passing an entertainment fee of $15, to help raise funds for Athletics, Fine Arts and McCain Auditorium.

"K-State fine arts only receives about $43,000 a year," Pearson said. "KU fine arts receives about $275,000."

"Hazing: A Scary Problem For KSU And Nationwide" was presented by Martha Kropf, sophomore in journalism and mass communications.

"Hazing hurts the Greek system as a whole, and it also hurts K-State," Kroph said.

An increase in funding of education was part of her solution to help educate people about hazing.

"Is It Fair For Students To Give Up Lot A-29 In Front Of The Student Union?" was given by Rance Prewett, freshmen in business.

"For faculty and staff, it's about 1.1 permits sold for every spot available," Prewett said. "For students, however, it's 4.9 permits sold for every spot available."

Each person speaking also had a petition available to sign after the speech.

Dedicated to dancing

Story by Craig Hamrick

When Luke Kahlich, director of the K-State dance program, told his mother that he had accepted a job in Kansas, he said she almost cried.

"There was a big pause, and she said, 'Why Kansas?' She warned me that it was just like West Texas, where I grew up," Kahlich said. "She said it was very flat and that I'd hate it, but it seems really hilly to me. It's a beautiful part of the state and I really like it."

Growing up in Texas, Kahlich worked on his parents' farm, slopping hogs and driving tractors. He described it as being "in the middle of nowhere," with the nearest city 25 miles away.

He moved to Lubbock to attend college, working on a double major of theater and Latin American studies. Kahlich said he had not considered dance as a career, but had to take a beginning ballet class as part of his theater studies. Inspired by a good teacher, he continued in dance.

Kahlich, who is an associate professor of speech, has been a dance instructor at K-State for nine years. He said one of his strongest memories is of his first day in Manhattan.

He was under contract in Houston as a choreographer and director when he was offered the job at K-State. Kahlich arrived three weeks after classes had started, because his previous contract ran into the semester. He closed the show he was working on at 3 a.m. on a Saturday, packed the following day, and early Monday morning arrived at the Manhattan Municipal Airport.

"A member of the (K-State) faculty met me at the Manhattan airport with a wilted sunflower," Kahlich said. "When I got into the car, she said I had to teach my first class in an hour, so we got to campus, I unpacked enough to find my dance clothes, and I taught.

"It's kind of been going at that pace ever since."

Kahlich was no stranger to a hectic schedule. Before moving to Houston, he had worked as a drama critic in New York City.

As director of the dance program, Kahlich is in charge of program planning, recruiting of students and, he said, "lots of paper work."

Kahlich, another dance teacher and a dance artist in residence make up the dance program. He said the small group sometimes feels overwhelmed.

Dance classes are in two studios on the third floor of Ahearn Field House. The windows are covered with a sign that can be read from outside and states the dance program's theme, "K-State Dances!"

"People kept coming up to me saying, 'Do you have dance at K-State?' and 'Where are you?', so we thought, 'Put it on the windows,'" Kahlich said.

A typical day for Kahlich consists of four to six hours of teaching and three to five hours of rehearsal. He teaches classes in jazz technique, choreography, teaching methods and modern dance.

"Sometimes parents are worried about their kids being able to make a living," Kahlich said. "If all they want to do is perform, the possibilities of making a living are slim. But there's a wide range of possibilities in the field. There's physical and emotional therapy, library work, journalism, dance medicine, and, of course, dance education.

"Some people take dance because they want to lose weight, or to reshape their bodies, or to work on coordination and stamina. Sometimes it's more physical than they might expect. I've had people tell me it's a lot harder than aerobics, and the other day one of my students said he was so tired he didn't know if he was going to make it through football practice later that day."

Athletes sometimes take Kahlich's classes to improve their flexibility, but end up learning much more.

"Dance isn't just physical, it challenges your intellect," he said. "I expect my students to understand why they are moving the way they are."

Rowers at Tuttle for regatta with WU

'Bods have slight advantage

By Chris Hays
Sports Editor

Crew coach Don Rose said his squad will be at a slight disadvantage Saturday at Tuttle Creek Reservoir, when Washburn visits for the annual Founder's Day Regatta.

The disadvantage for K-State will be the format in which the regatta is organized. The Wildcat crew teams are used to rowing in groups of eight, but this weekend's regatta will consist of four-person races only, giving Washburn a bit of an edge.

"In the varsity mixed four I think we should do well," Rose said, "But I would say that the other three races are a toss up and Washburn might even be a little bit favored in the men's varsity four.

"We don't row fours much, so it is real hard for me to predict these races."

The Founder's Day Regatta was named in commemoration of K-State being one of the forerunners for rowing in this part of the United States, over the 2,000-meter course that runs along the Tuttle Creek dam and finishes at the southeast corner of the lake. Rose said the best place for spectators to view the regatta would be from the southeast corner at the finish line.

Should high winds exist Saturday, as was the case nearly all week, Rose said the race's course would be altered with the starting line being moved to just below the outlet tower and finish on the east side.

"It's been windy out there all week and we haven't got in any good practice days this week with the exception of Wednesday," Rose said.

April 29, the crew will be at the Midwest Regionals in Madison, Wis., and Rose said the team will be looking to finish higher than last year when it finished in fourth place.

"We'd sure like to pull off a Cinderella (finish)," he said. "I viewed my crystal ball though, and while it's not grim, it looks like that would be a hard thing to do. Wisconsin has dominated this thing for years.

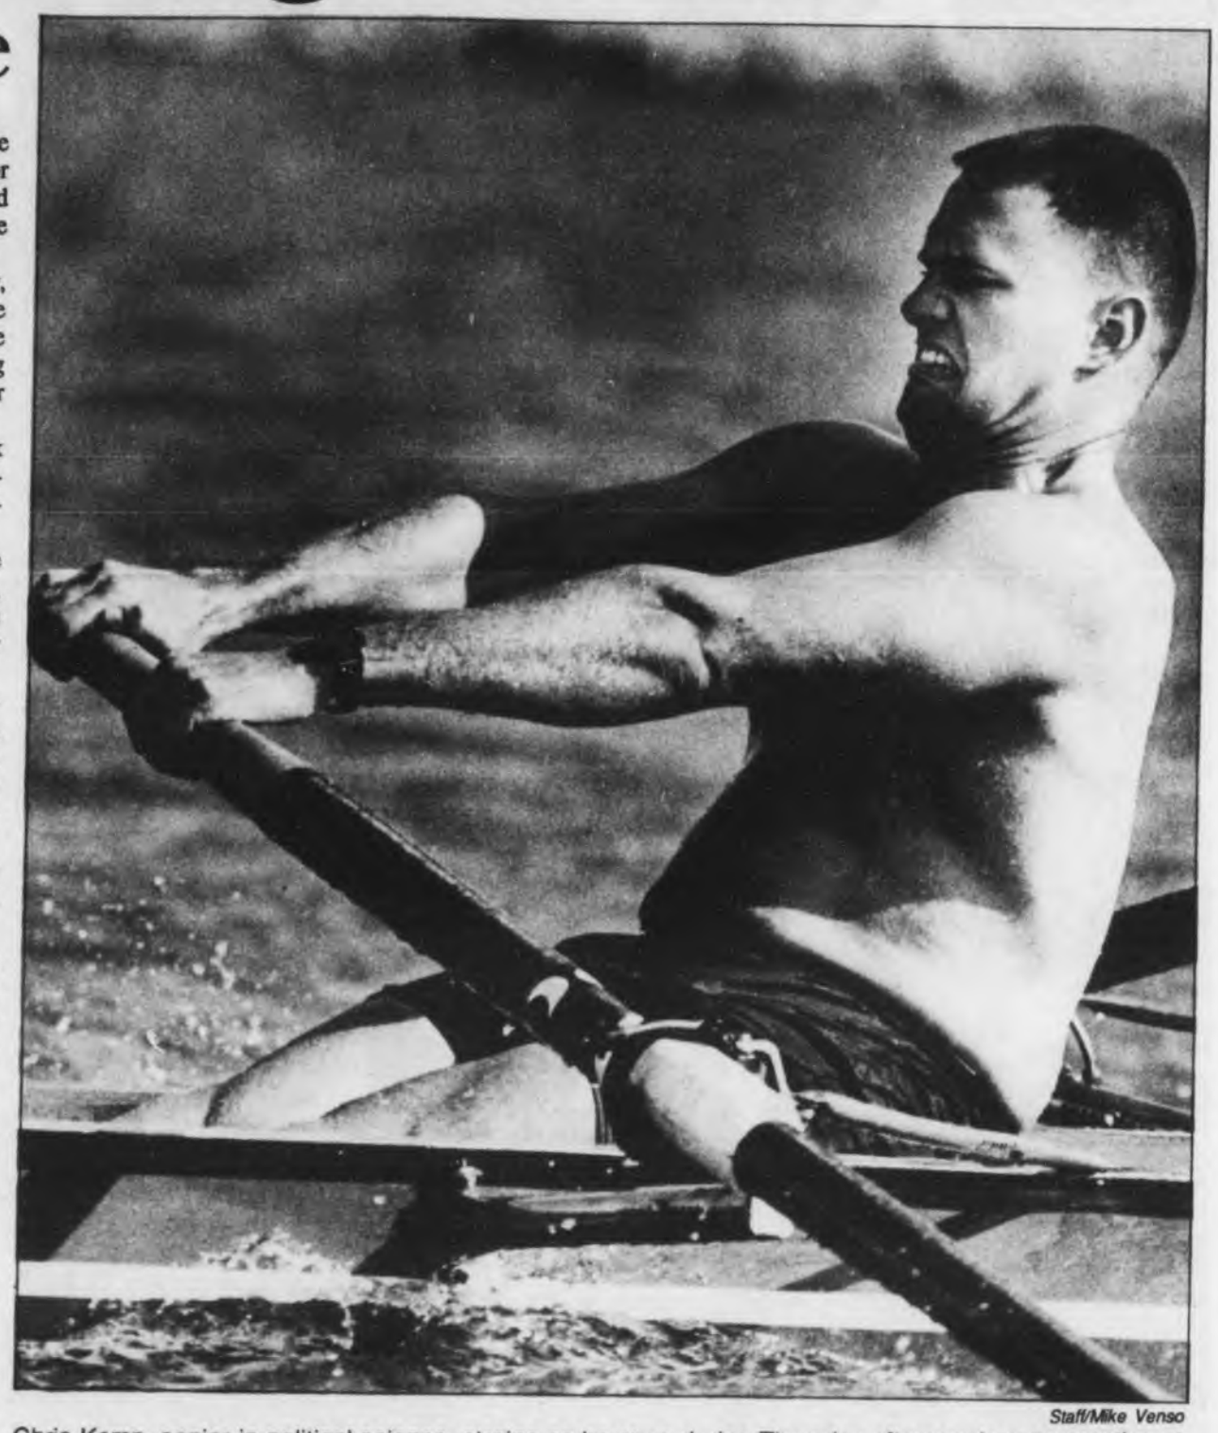
"We're pretty green (young) and it's a tough go when you're this green."

Rose said the team will be aiming at KU, which beat the Wildcats last year to take third at the regional. Purdue placed second and Wisconsin first.

"The first battle will be with KU. We want to cut them down to size and put them back where they belong," Rose said. "Then we'll go after the Boilermakers and hopefully have a shot at Wisconsin."

Saturday's regatta will begin with the men's varsity fours at 1 p.m., followed by the women's varsity fours, the freshmen women fours and then the varsity mixed fours.

Manhattan High will also be competing in the freshmen women's fours.



"In the varsity mixed four I think we should do well. But I would say that the other three races are a toss up and Washburn might even be a little bit favored in the men's varsity four."

Track squad travels to 94th annual KU Relays today

By Chris Hays
Sports Editor

Going into today's events at the KU Relays, K-State track coach John Capriotti has some high expectations for his athletes as the Wildcats enter the "big meet" portion of the track season.

"My expectations are always high at this meet. This is a good meet," Capriotti said. "We have a lot of Kansas kids on the team and they always like to do well. I like to do well."

Capriotti said he will mainly be looking for strong individual performances, as well as solid outings from his relay teams.

"We will run some relays, since it is that type of meet," Capriotti said. "But the kids are always up for this meet and, individually, I'm looking for them to run faster, jump higher and throw farther."

The KU Relays opened Wednesday with the two-day decathlon competition. The remainder of track and field events will be today and Saturday at Memorial Stadium in Lawrence.

In the decathlon, K-State's Steve Fritz was in third place overall after the first day of competition and looked to be on his way to breaking his own K-State record of 6,994 points. Fritz though did not finish all 10 events and finished eight with 5,889 points. Teammate terry VanLaningham also did not finish, and wound up in 11th place with 5,167 points.

The lone bright spot in the multi-events was heptathlon specialist Karen McGaughey, who finished second with a personal best 4,399 points.

This weekend leading the charge for the K-State women will be Kim Kilpatrick, who leads the Big Eight in the 100-meter hurdles with a time of 13.58 seconds. That mark qualified Kilpatrick for the NCAA Outdoor Championships June 1-3.

K-State has two other athletes, both freshmen, who have qualified for nationals — javelin thrower Greta Semsroth and high jumper Connie Teaberry.

Semsroth is second in the Big Eight at 172-11. That distance set a K-State record April 1 at the KSU Invitational. Teammate Debbie Schmidt is third at 149-7.

Teaberry qualified last week at the Nebraska Invitational with a Big Eight-leading leap of 6-0. Teaberry's high jumping counterpart, DeDe Henderson, is fourth in the conference at 5-8.

Angie Miller is second in the conference in the discus with a throw of 163-1 and is third in the shot put at 48-0¼ .

In the short sprints, Joy Jones is second in the 400 meters with a time of 54.93 and Latricia Joyner is third in the 200 at 24.34. Jones, however, will probably not run at KU due to a sore leg.

Also close to the top of the Big Eight women's honor roll for K-State are: triple jumper Carla Shannon at third with a leap of 39-7½ , Angie Barry at fifth in the 3,000 meters with a time of 9:58.51 minutes, and Karen McGaughey at fifth in the heptathlon with 4,399 points.

In the men's division, K-State is led by weight man Dan O'Mara, who leads the conference in both the shot put (56-10¼) and the discus (184-4). O'Mara will probably also start throwing the javelin later this season.

Two other K-State athletes sat atop the Big Eight honor roll in their respective events. Brad Speer has a season best in the high jump at 7-2, while Clifton Etheridge leads the league in the long jump at 25-6.

Other noteworthy marks are: Darrell Wyatt, third in the 100 meters at 10.64; Charles Armstead, fourth in the 110-meter hurdles at 14.44 and the long jump at 23-11; Sean Banks, third in the 400 at 47.25; Tyrone Watkins, fifth in the 400 at 47.44; O.B. Berry, second in the triple jump at 51-1¼ ; and Pat Allen, second in the javelin at 210-2.

Weekend twinbills crucial for 'Cats

By Scott Paske
Collegian Reporter

K-State baseball coach Mike Clark doesn't think it's time to count his last place Wildcats out of a Big Eight post-season playoff spot just yet.

Clark is the first to admit that the road the 'Cats must travel to reach the four-team Big Eight Tournament next month in Oklahoma City will be a bit harder because of a 3-9 start in the conference race.

"We've dug ourselves a hole, there's no question about that," Clark said. "But the Big Eight is just wild this year. It's a situation where anybody could beat anybody at a given time."

Clark is hoping his players will have that theory in their minds as they travel to Iowa State for a four game series this weekend with the Cyclones. The first of two doubleheaders is slated for noon Saturday with a 12:30 p.m. start set for Sunday.

The Cyclones, 18-11 overall and 3-5 in the Big Eight, have been impressive at the plate in Big Eight games with a league leading .305 team batting average.

One of the reasons for Iowa State's hitting success has been the production from first baseman Mike Busch. Busch, who also plays tight end on the Cyclone football team, leads the conference with a .445 average and has hit eight of the 18 Cyclone home runs. He did not play baseball last season after being on the team two years ago.

Teammates Shawn Stolte and Matt Peterson headline a young pitching staff. Stolte leads conference starters with a 3.09 season earned run average, while Peterson has a 2.61 ERA in four Big Eight relief appearances.

"They're a real good defensive ball club," Clark said. "They've always done the little things well and they're scoring more runs this year."

Clark added that playing in Ames presents different conditions for other Big Eight teams.

"Their field sits the opposite of everybody else's," Clark said. "When there's a south wind it blows in the faces of the hitters. It isn't conducive to the long ball."

The 'Cats are still coping with the loss of centerfielder Sean Collins. Collins, who broke his hand during an attempted steal against Kansas two weeks ago, has been replaced in the leadoff spot by junior Russ Ringgenberg. Ringgenberg, who batted third in the lineup prior to Collins' injury, raised his season batting average to .403 in a doubleheader sweep of Missouri Western Tuesday. His four stolen bases against the Griffons brought him within two of the season stolen base record of 30 held by former Wildcat Scott Graves.

"He was the only one we had to fill the leadoff spot," Clark said.

Bennett officially signs

From Staff and Wire Reports

K-State coach Lon Kruger officially announced Thursday that Kent Bennett of Los Angeles has signed a national letter of intent to play basketball for the Wildcats next season.

Bennett, a 6-foot-6, 205-pound forward, averaged 20 points and 11 rebounds for Manual Arts High School, a team which went 26-2 and was at one time ranked No. 5 in the nation last year.

Bennett was the fifth player signed in the spring period by K-State.

The Wildcats had previosuly signed: 6-foot-5 Jean Derouillere of Miami-Dade North Community College, where he averaged 22 points a game; 6-foot-4 Keith Amerson of Santa Monica (Calif.) College, where he averaged 13.2 points and 7.8 rebounds; 6-foot-6 Ryan Thornton of Allen County Community College, where he average 20.6 points and 8.3 rebounds; and 6-foot-0 Jeff Wires of Moberly (Mo.) Junior College, where he averaged 16 points and 4 assists.

Netters on road to Iowa State

By Carolyn Holcroft
Sports Writer

The Wildcat tennis team is fast approaching the end of the regular season as it competes against Iowa State Sunday in Ames. The team will be looking to improve its Big Eight record to 4-2 before moving on to its last dual match against Nebraska in Lincoln Monday.

The Cyclones, currently sporting an 0-4 record for the conference, finished seventh in the Big Eight last season and are 9-13 overall.

According to Coach Steve Bietau, however, the point totals are misleading. The Cyclones played well against both Oklahoma and Oklahoma State last weekend, and have to be a highly respected team. But Bietau also said Iowa State may not be as tough as the other Big Eight schools the Wildcats have played.

Bietau said Iowa's strengths may lie in its doubles line-up.

"They have solid doubles teams," he said. "That will be a good matchup for us because I feel pretty good about our doubles, having won two out of three doubles matches against Colorado, KU, and Oklahoma."

Also adding to the Cyclone line-up is the top player from last year, Kris Stotler. The doubles tandem of Stotler and senior Suna Bayrakal have moved up to the No. 1 doubles spot after finishing last season with a 12-2 record at No. 2.

Bietau is taking into consideration the end-of-the-year pressures and is trying to fit in as much rest for the team as possible.

He said it is important, considering the long tennis season, that momentum is gained rather than lost toward the end. But he is very pleased with the team's position at this point, and realizes the 'Cats still need to continue to improve during the weekend.

"I think we're in the best position we can be in right now," Bietau said. "If we can improve on that and get the ball rolling a little faster and gain a little more momentum, we'll be fine."

Altman accepts Marshall job

By Scott Paske
Collegian Reporter

When K-State assistant coach Dana Altman was named the new head coach at Marshall University Wednesday, the impact of the announcement provided mixed emotions for Wildcat head coach Lon Kruger.

"We're very excited for him," Kruger said. "It's always a bittersweet feeling when someone on your staff moves on, but he's going to do an outstanding job."

The 30-year-old Altman became the youngest head coach in Marshall history when athletic director Lee Moon introduced him to faculty and fans at the school's Memorial Student Center. Altman, whose base salary will be about $55,000 a year, was one of four candidates who was interviewed for the position by Moon, a former assistant athletic director at K-State.

Wildcat fans may remember Altman most for bringing all-American Mitch Richmond with him from Moberly (Mo.) Junior College.

Altman came to K-State in 1986 and shared in both coaching and recruiting duties during his tenure. Kruger said Altman's impact on the program went a little deeper.

"Not only is he a good coach, but a real good friend," Kruger said. "He had a real knack for relating to and getting along with our players."

Altman inherits a program under investigation by school officials for possible NCAA violations. The allegations were brought forth during the tenure of former coach Rick Huckabay, who resigned under pressure after posting an 129-59 record.

"That's a concern for Dana," Kruger said. "That's one reason he was hired there. He definitely brings credibility to the program."

"He's moving to a highly respected program that competes in a good basketball conference. It seems like they've always been a competitor for their league championship."

Kruger said due to the timing of Altman's announcement, he doesn't feel rushed to find a replacement.

Football team to scrimmage at stadium Saturday

By Mike Goens
Sports Writer

The K-State football team has completed 14 of 20 spring practices and will be in action at 9 a.m. Saturday with a brief intrasquad scrimmage at KSU Stadium.

All of this leads up to the last practice of the spring, which will be the Varsity vs. Alumni game, scheduled for 2 p.m. April 29 at KSU Stadium.

"We're going to make it a very positive experience," Coach Bill Snyder said of the alumni game, which had previously been scheduled as an intrasquad scrimmage. "We don't have the luxury of scout squads and preparatory teams just because of numbers.

"It's a nice way to end it. We wanted it to be a practice day, but because of numbers (an intra-squad scrimmage) is not as realistic as I had thought. It gives us a chance to come into a positive atmosphere and a competitive atmosphere. (Alumni) came here to help this football team."

Snyder is continuing to emphasize consistency and intensity from his players.

"It's always a concern with consistency, day to day. Consistency has gotten better and the intensity has improved probably in the last two days," he said. "The last practice was probably our best. Positive things are starting to fall in line."

Snyder said they are making progress in all areas. He said a lot of players have "taken some shots in their pride," but have come back from that to improve on mistakes.

"It gets to the point where you have to step back, put the brakes on, and say, 'I'm not going to do this again,'" he said. "A lot of kids are not giving up. You have to re-direct your commitment and practice harder."

Snyder has the Wildcats practicing four days a week: Tuesday, Wednesday, Friday and Saturday. In Tuesday's practice, Snyder said the Wildcats had taken a step back.

"We sat down after practice and made a commitment to come back strong the next day," he said. "It's not what the coaches do with this group of players, it's what the players do.

"There is some talent there. There are a couple of positions that I feel real comfortable with. I'm not as concerned about physical talent," he said. "What we've got is what we've got. It's other aspects that can be changed. Physical talent is rather standard."

Snyder would rather stress "attitude, work ethic, confidence, and the pride factor."

"We have asked them to draw together," he said. "It has to happen. We have to bring those units together so we can come together as one.

"The defensive secondary is progressing well. The entire defense is playing with more consistency each and every day."

Snyder said the offense is beginning to show some consistency as well.

"One of the major aspects is to learn to not beat yourself by turning the ball over," he said. "Our offensive backs have yet to fumble the ball in scoring situations (in scrimmage).

"It's different, it takes time. I have to display some patience. It's a slower process. It'll get done. It just takes time. We will only do what our players can comprehend."

Women's golf team announces signings

From Staff and Wire Reports

K-State golf coach Russ Bunker announced the signing of two high school recruits Wednesday. Valerie Hahn, of Las Vegas, Nev., and Amy Guffey, of Hays, signed letters of intent and will join the K-State women's golf squad next season.

Hahn was captain of the Western High School golf team where she received fourth medalist honors at the 1988 Nevada State Championships.

"Valerie comes highly recommended by Jim Colbert," Bunker said. "She is a very hard worker and very dedicated to the game. She will be an immediate contributor."

Colbert is a former K-State golfer who is currently on the PGA tour and residing in Las Vegas. Colbert is the namesake and chief sponsor for the Jim Colbert Celebrity Golf Tournament, played annually in Manhattan for a charitable cause.

Guffey attended Hays High School where she qualified for state in each of her four years. She won the 5A golf title as a junior and was third her senior year. Guffey was also a two-year letterwinner in basketball. Her final decsion came between K-State and Wichita State.

"Amy is another dedicated golfer who really works hard at the game," Bunker said. "We look for her to jump in and play for us right away."

The K-State women took just two days rest after finishing fourth at the Nebraska Invitational Tuesday. Today the Wildcats open play at the two-day Iowa Hawkeye Invitational in Iowa City. K-State had a surprise leader arise from the pack in Adena Hagedorn, who finished 13th at the Husker invite. Following Hagedorn were Chris Adams, Jill Zientara, Lonna Dale and Theresa Coyle.

Cowboys sign Aikman

By The Associated Press

IRVING, Texas — The Dallas Cowboys ended weeks of NFL draft speculation Thursday by signing quarterback Troy Aikman to a rookie-record six-year, $11.2 million contract.

Aikman, who played at UCLA and who will be the No. 1 choice in Sunday's NFL draft, said he hoped that within five years "the fans will be comparing me with Roger Staubach."

He said he wanted to sign with the Cowboys because every Sunday he used to watch Staubach on television from his home in Henryetta, Okla.

"I remember all those comeback victories and I'd like to be part of that someday," Aikman said. "I can't step into Roger's shoes but maybe I can do some of the things he did."

Cowboys coach Jimmy Johnson said the third time was the charm in his trying to attract Aikman.

"He turned me down out of high school and went to Oklahoma," said Johnson, who was then coaching at Oklahoma State. "Then, when I was at Miami, I tried to get him when he left Oklahoma, but he went to UCLA. I was afraid he would turn me down a third time."

some serious political problems right now," he said. "I'm looking forward to seeing the (ethics committee's) recommendations, and I will be inclined to follow them — unless I am convinced the committee has made a gross error in judgment."

Slattery said most of the questions about Wright's problems have been asked by the press and not the constituents he has been meeting.

"Kansans are more interested in whether or not it will rain or if Fort Riley will acquire the additional land," he said. "A lot of the public has already decided what they think of the speaker one way or another."

The democratic leadership must be stronger in the future, Slattery said.

"If the Democrats want to win the White House again in my lifetime, they had better be able to nominate someone who can win (the southern states)," he said.

Although Slattery stopped short of saying he would not try to be the next governor of Kansas, he criticized Gov. Mike Hayden's administration.

"I don't know (if Hayden will run for governor)," he said. "I am pleased and happy with what I am doing now. But any candidate is vulnerable with the right opponent.

"It is amazing that (the Kansas Legislature) has had such a difficult time in Topeka getting its act together. There are urgent issues that the state needs to focus on right now."

Slattery said prison, highway and reappraisal issues have not been handled adequately by the Legislature.

nistration and Finance George Miller, and will not be reconsidered by the council.

The next item the council discussed was whether the proposed changes to the traffic and parking regulations could be altered after the public hearing on the changes at 3 p.m. today.

In other business, the Council also discussed the backlog of parking ticket appeals.

About 300 to 400 appeals are pending, said Beckom, who suggested that an appeals board be set up within the residence hall governing board system to handle tickets in residence hall lots.

Regents

aspects of attending college, Menees said, and it doesn't help students to "add a fee here and add a fee there."

Robert Krause, vice-president for institutional advancement, spoke on behalf of representatives from the state universities' chief student affairs offices. He said the representatives were interested in "studying the fee to see how it would further effect" the universities.

He suggested passing the proposal on to the regents' long-term task force on tuition policies for study. If the board decides to do so, implementation of the fee would be postponed for another year.

The Council of Presidents has not decided whether it favors the fee and will give its input at next month's meeting, said Jon Wefald, president of the council.

Stanley Koplik, executive director of the board, said one of the reasons why the fee has been proposed was because of the "significant outcry" coming from understaffed financial aid offices. The $15 processing fee would generate about $546,000 for admissions office work and financial aid offices that are understaffed.

Regent Donald Slawson said he believed adding a processing fee might "make the (application) process more serious in the students' minds.

"It might cause prospective students to be more serious about their study and (in) deciding where they would be more comfortable," he said.

Menees said SAC believes the reason students apply to three of four schools is to get a look at that universities' Student Financial Aid packets. A fee would be detrimental to students who are in need of financial aid.

A vote will be taken at the regents' May meeting on both the tuition increase and the application fee. Menees said SAC supported the tuition increase.

Earlier, members of the student committee said the fee would only support a 6 percent increase if the universities could be assured that 1 percent of the funding would be returned through the Educational Opportunity Fund.

Student Body President Laurian Cuffy said SAC changed its stance because it was "hard to negotiate a straight 5 percent (allocation for EOF) because the Margin of Excellence Plan included a 6 percent increase for (the first two years)."

In other business, the board adopted a resolution to authorize the Kansas Development Finance Authority to proceed with the issuance of $3 million in bonds to develop the construction of parking lots at K-State.

of a bill that would allocate $980 to the Rodeo Club to pay for the ambulance service at its last rodeo.

"The rodeo has already happened, and the club did not know at the time that they would be charged for the ambulance service, since they have never been charged in the past," O'Connor said.

Senate also heard first readings of a bill that would establish a committee to look into a proposed athletic and fine arts fee.

The bills in first readings will come up for debate and vote at the last Senate meeting of the year, April 27.

Public hearing used to discuss parking lot issue

By Gary Lytle
Collegian Reporter

A two-hour public hearing Friday focused on issues surrounding the conversion of parking lot A29, south of the Union, to a metered parking lot.

The hearing gave the public a chance to comment on changes to the K-State traffic and parking regulations proposed by the Council on Traffic, Parking and Police Operations. About 30 people attended the meeting.

The changes in regulations proposed by the Council along with comments from the hearing will be sent to President Jon Wefald and Vice President for Administration and Finance George Miller, said John Lambert, director of public safety.

After consideration by Wefald and Miller, the changes will be given to the Kansas Board of Regents for review. The new regulations should be in effect by July, Lambert said.

One of the major changes includes the installation of parking meters in lots A29 and A4, next to Farrell Library, he said.

The meters will be in effect from 7 a.m. to 5 p.m. in lot A29 and 7 a.m. to 10 p.m. in lot A4, Lambert said. The rate for metered parking will be 25 cents per hour with up to four hours at a time on each meter.

A $10 increase in all parking permits is included in the changes, he said. The increase in the cost of permits is due to a current program to pave most of the unpaved parking lots on campus.

Under the proposed changes, campus departments will no longer be able to pay for employees' parking permits, Lambert said. The change will be in compliance with Kansas state laws and does not cover the cost of reserved stalls.

Student Body President Laurian Cuffy said his concern was the loss of A29 as a student-only parking lot.

"How do you justify students not being able to get any parking spaces in front of the Union, when it is, in fact, a student union?" Cuffy asked.

Lambert said there is plenty of student parking available in lots D1W and D1E, west of Memorial Stadium, and the installation of parking meters helps ease the problem of parking for campus visitors.

"The Union parking lot was designed for temporary parking to use the Union," said Michael Toedman, junior in business management and student representative to the council.

"Is it a better service for a small group of students to park there from 8 in the morning to 5 that evening, or is it a greater student service to have the turnover so that many students can use services available at the Union all day?" Toedman asked.

Cuffy then asked why lot A30, the lower Union lot, was not changed to a general lot to allow students access to non-metered parking close to the Union.

Lot A30 was retained as a faculty/staff lot in consideration to the faculty who are already underpaid and should not be made to walk a long distance to get to their jobs, Toedman

Scot Graham, sophomore in theater, marches Saturday afternoon in front of Racon Inc. in Wichita to protest the chemical manufacturer's use of chloroflourocarbons. This event was planned in conjunction with similar events across the world to protest CFC production.

Protestors gather in Wichita

Rally calls for ending chemical's production

By Bryan Ackley
Collegian Reporter

WICHITA — In a public demonstration Saturday outside the gates of Racon Inc. in Wichita, more than 1,200 people, including about 30 K-State students, demanded the chemical manufacturer to discontinue its use of chloroflourocarbons, or CFCs.

The demonstrators gathered in front of a stage located about a mile north of the chemical plant. The event, which was scheduled to begin at 11 a.m., was delayed due to problems with the public-address system.

The protesters carried signs stating the various dangers of CFCs, and within 30 minutes they began chanting: "Hey, hey, ho, ho, Racon has got to go."

At 12:30 p.m., Dick Russell, freelance environmental journalist and organizer of Kansas' Save the Earth Campaign, stepped onto the stage and said, "We're sending the message to Racon that they have one year to cease producing CFCs, and if they don't, we'll be back next year with more people than this."

Staff/Brian Kratzer

Actor, singer and songwriter Gary Morris expresses his opinion to the crowd of about 1,200 gathered in front of Racon Inc.

He said the Wichita demonstration was one of 10 simultaneous, worldwide public demonstrations against the use of CFCs. It was also the largest public protest in Kansas and the first international public protest involving an environmental issue.

Participants in the protest traveled to Wichita from as far as Akron, Ohio, Russell said.

Protesters listened to 16 speeches on the CFC issue, their impact on society, and the possibility that workers could be displaced if their use is terminated.

All speakers demanded that Racon Inc. cease using and producing CFCs within one year, but no one presented a formal plan to be implemented to ensure Racon Inc.'s compliance with their demands.

Gary Morris, an actor, singer and songwriter from Nashville, Tenn., was among those who addressed the protesters. In a speech presented at the demonstration, he said, "Yesterday was the first time I was ever called an activist.

"The president of Racon said, 'We're in bed with a $20 million corporation. We don't have to take any crap off of anybody' — that was in (the Wichita Eagle-Beacon).

"Chemical plants represent — if they continue in the fashion they are — death to us all," he said.

When the speeches concluded, the protesters marched from the stage area to Racon Inc.'s front gate and returned to the stage area.

When the protest was finished, some of the K-Staters said they were uncertain whether the demonstration would have significant impact on the attitudes of CFC producers.

"I thought (the protest) was pretty mellow," said Obray Lyman, senior in general business and president of Students Acting to Save a Vulnerable Environment.

"I wish we could have done more to make our point," he said. "I would have liked to have stayed closer to the front gate for a longer time and made them feel our presence, but this was supposed to be peaceful."

John Grinter, graduate student in psychology and member of Students Acting to Save a Vulnerable Environment, said violent acts such as "storming" the gate would not have been appropriate.

However, he said he was disappointed that members of the campus-based student activist organization didn't march together as a group.

"We didn't demonstrate very much solidarity today," he said.

USS Iowa welcomed upon return home

By The Associated Press

NORFOLK, Va. — The scarred battleship USS Iowa returned Sunday to its home port, where about 1,000 family members and friends of the ship's crew gathered to welcome loved ones and remember the 47 sailors killed in an explosion.

Sailors in whites with black arm bands lined the rails as the huge vessel docked at the Norfolk Naval Base's Pier 5 at 5:41 p.m.

The explosion Wednesday flashed through the Iowa's No. 2 gun turret, which extends six decks down into the ship. There were 11 survivors inside the turret, all on the lowest deck loading powder from the ship's magazines, the Navy said.

The Navy kept the news media about 300 yards from the families, and reporters were not allowed to talk with the families or the crewmen. Adm. Powell Carter, commander and chief of the Atlantic Fleet, was on the dock to greet the vessel.

The fire-blackened No. 2 turret was in the same position as when the explosion occurred, facing right with the left and right guns elevated. The center gun, where the blast occurred, was depressed.

When the vessel first appeared there were scattered cheers by those on the dock, but all remained silent as the ship pulled into the pier.

A Navy docking crew quietly wrestled with the massive lines that secure the ship to the pier.

Wright investigation expands to Texas deal

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The House ethics committee investigation of Speaker Jim Wright moves to San Antonio this week, where panel members will interview the Texas businessmen involved in an oil well investment that netted large profits for the blind trust held for the embattled Democratic lawmaker.

Two committee members and panel investigators reportedly will spend three days in Texas, beginning today, to interview San Antonio financier Morris Jaffe; his business associate and son, M.D. (Doug) Jaffee Jr., and two others involved in the oil well deal.

At the same time, Wright's lawyer in Washington, William C. Oldaker, is expected to continue negotiations with the ethics committee's special outside counsel, Richard J. Phelan, over a timetable for the speaker's personal appearance before the panel.

The ethics panel — officially the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct — charged Wright with 69 instances of violating House rules in his dealings with Fort Worth developer George Mallick, and evading limits on outside income through bulk sales of a book authored by the speaker.

Wright denies any wrongdoing and says he will fight the allegations.

The first phase of its investigation finished, the panel now turns to considering whether there is clear and convincing proof of violations and, if so, deciding whether to recommend disciplinary action to the House.

A spokesman for Wright, Mark Johnson, said no resolution of the Washington negotiations is expected until later in the week.

The Wright case continues to dominate interest on Capitol Hill, particularly on a week with little else on the agenda.

The Senate remains out of session all week on an extended Passover break and the House does not return until Wednesday when action is scheduled on a supplemental appropriation bill for the current fiscal year and the House banking panel continues work on its version of a measure to shore up the S&L industry.

The ethics committee said Monday, in its report on Wright, that it was still investigating how a Wright-Mallick company bought a 4 percent interest in an oil and gas well for $99,000 — putting up only $9,120 in cash — and sold it the same day for $440,000.

Phelan said the committee needed to determine whether Wright had knowledge of the deal, which involved the Jaffes, a West German-owned firm, and the blind trust established for Wright in 1987.

The Wright spokesman, Johnson, has repeatedly said the speaker was unaware of the transaction.

A key issue in the overall Wright case is whether he accepted gifts from people with a direct interest in legislation before Congress. House rules prevent members from accepting gifts totaling more than $100 in a calendar year in such situations.

One of the many companies controlled by Jaffe has sought to share in an Air Force program, under study by Congress, for developing the nation's next jet pilot training aircraft.

Student students boycott

BEIJING — Students marched on campuses Monday to proclaim the start of a class boycott, one of a series of protests to press demands for democratic reform. Leaders claimed total participation in the boycott.

At Beijing Normal University, students waved flags and paraded around campus chanting "boycott class." Students said they were trying to contact schools nationwide to persuade them to join.

"There are no students in my classroom. I wonder if I will get a rest today," a forlorn-looking professor in the Chinese language department said.

Protest leaders claimed all students participated. The students said the boycott would be a peaceful, legal attempt to force communist authorities to meet with them and discuss demands for a free press, an end to official corruption and other reforms.

On Sunday, the students took their appeal for democracy to the streets, making speeches to passers-by and plastering walls and sidewalks with posters.

Many passers-by contributed to a student fund set up to cover strike organization costs and set up a student-run newspaper.

School authorities made no attempt to interfere Sunday. No police or soldiers were seen.

The protests in Beijing were organized and generally peaceful, in contrast to marches Saturday in Xian and Changsa, where rampaging mobs looted stores, burned cars and seized a government building. Scores were reported hurt.

Soccer players ask for asylum

CAIRO, Egypt — Six players on the Ethiopian national soccer team have defected and asked the United States for political asylum, officials said Sunday.

A senior official of the Egyptian Soccer Federation said the six defected early Saturday. An Ethiopian source said the players were at the U.S. Embassy in Cairo, where they had requested political asylum.

At the embassy, a spokesman refused to discuss the matter, saying "visa applications ... are a matter of privacy."

The sources all spoke on condition of anonymity.

Recruits suffer poisoning

KUWAIT — Seventy-three National Guard recruits were hospitalized briefly in the second mass food poisoning involving security forces in two weeks, the official Kuwait News Agency reported Sunday.

Recruits at the National Guard Training College were apparently poisoned Saturday by the iftar, the meal with which Moslems break a daylight fast during the holy month of Ramadan, the agency said.

They were admitted to hospitals and released a few hours later, the agency said.

In a similar incident two weeks ago, 400 police cadets fell ill after an iftar meal at the Police Academy.

Quayle to travel overseas

WASHINGTON — Vice President Dan Quayle leaves today for a 12-day visit to Australia and Southeast Asia — his second overseas trip since taking office.

Before leaving the United States, Quayle will stop in Chicago to address the annual meeting of The Associated Press, and then fly to Los Angeles to pay a courtesy call on former President Reagan and attend a Republican fund-raising dinner.

Quayle's trip comes as Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev is preparing to visit China next month for the first Sino-Soviet summit in 20 years.

Chimney bricks bury boy

JONESBORO, Ga. — A 10-year-old boy was buried waist-high in more than 2,000 pounds of bricks when a chimney collapsed, but police say the child was not seriously injured and was in stable condition Sunday.

Joseph Stanley Williams was playing in an empty lot near his home when the chimney, all that was left of a house formerly on the lot, collapsed Saturday, said Clayton County police Lt. George Pinson.

Pinson said Joseph and another boy apparently were beating on the chimney with sticks when it collapsed.

It took rescue workers about 20 minutes to free the boy. He was taken by helicopter to Scottish Rite Hospital, where he was listed in stable condition with a fractured thighbone.

Two earthquakes hit Alaska

PALMER, Alaska — Two moderate earthquakes far apart shook Alaska on Sunday, but there were no immediate reports of damage or injuries, the Alaska Tsunami Warning Center said.

The first quake was centered 40 miles east of Kobuk, which is 260 miles northwest of Fairbanks, said geophysicist Bill Zitek. The location was "somewhat unusual," he said.

Most of the earthquakes recorded each year in Alaska are much farther south.

Zitek gave the preliminary magnitude of the quake as 5.5 on the Richter scale, a temblor that can cause considerable damage. He said the 11:21 a.m. quake was felt strongly in Kobuk.

About six hours later, a 5.0 quake centered about 40 miles west of Homer rocked the Cook Inlet area and was felt as far away as Anchorage, 150 miles to the north, spokesman Alec Medbury said.

The Richter scale is a measure of ground motion as recorded on seismographs. Every increase of one number means a ten-fold increase in magnitude.

WKRP radio station airs again

NORTH VERNON, Ind. — Johnny Fever doesn't work there and the musical format is country instead of rock 'n roll, but WKRP is on the air again.

WNVI-AM in North Vernon, a town of 6,000 people, has adopted the call letters of the fictional radio station in the 1970s television comedy "WKRP in Cincinnati."

"Everybody's heard of WKRP," said station manager Shawn Lynch. However, only listeners in and around Jennings County will be able to hear the 1,000-watt station.

WNVI management jumped at the chance to capitalize on the name recognition when the last WKRP, in Dallas, Ga., decided to change its name. Federal Communications Commission regulations allow just one station at a time to have the call letters.

Small plane crash injures 2

WELLSVILLE — An Osawatomie couple was injured Sunday when their small plane crashed just short of a private runway in eastern Kansas, authorities said.

Charles Wilson, 48, and his wife, Karen Wilson, 44, were listed in stable condition Sunday with broken bones and head injuries, according to the Kansas Highway Patrol.

The patrol said the couple was returning from Topeka to Osawatomie in their Piper Cherokee plane about 5 p.m. when the aircraft lost power near the airstrip north of Wellsville in Franklin County.

The plane crashed about an eighth of a mile short of the runway, the patrol said.

The exact cause of the crash was being investigated, the patrol said.

Students awarded spring mini-grants for service projects

By Gary Lytle
Collegian Reporter

A total of $1,500 in mini-grant awards has been given to three different projects from the 1989 spring funding cycle by the K-State Community Service Program.

Three $500 awards will be used by four students to fund community service projects of their own design.

Students involved in each of the three projects must also raise a matching cash or in kind amount, said Carol Peak, Community Service Program director.

"In most cases, each of the agencies with which these people are working are donating the use of equipment or the use of supplies to make the matching funds," Peak said.

One of the mini-grants to be awarded will help establish a children's gardening program at the Manhattan Community Garden, she said.

The project, proposed by Rita Stevens, junior in horticultural therapy, is designed to teach children about nutrition, and energy and resource conservation, she said.

The classes started April 15 and will take place every Saturday morning and Wednesday evening until the fall frost, Stevens said. In addition, the project will help "teach the students to be more responsible by taking care of the seeds and garden tools and by working together."

Kathy Menzie, graduate student in journalism and mass communications, was awarded a mini-grant to "work with Manhattan Parks and Recreation to extend recreational programs for older people in the community," Peak said.

Menzie will survey senior citizens in Manhattan to determine their recreational needs and desires, then design programs to fit those projections, Peak said.

The third project, by Helene Higbee, graduate student in regional and community planning, will help computerize the client files of Twin Valley Developmental Services in Greenleaf.

Twin Valley Developmental Services is a work training center for mentally and physically handicapped children and adults.

Although the financial records of the company are stored in a computer, the personnel records for the clients are still kept in paper files which are not easily accessible, Higbee said.

She is formulating a data base for the information and said she hopes to have all the clients' personnel records entered and the system running by June.

The Community Service Program is made up of four components, including mini-grants, community structural assistance volunteer effort, community service teams, and the volunteer clearinghouse.

The process for awarding spring mini-grants started in early February with a workshop for people interested in applying, Peak said. During the workshop, people were taught how to develop their ideas into proposals for grants.

Applicants submitted preproposals in mid-February to a review committee of three faculty members, one community member and a student, she said. The review committee returned the preproposals with comments designed to further develop them.

Applicants' final proposals were due to the review committee March 20, Peak said. The final proposals were again reviewed by the committee and the grants awarded.

Taxi Triathlon raises money for MS

By Dave Young
Collegian Reporter

About 285 people swam, biked and ran Sunday in the fourth annual Taxi Triathlon to raise money for multiple sclerosis research.

Theta Xi fraternity sponsored the triathlon, which consisted of a 700-yard swim, 14.5-mile bike course, and 3.1-mile run.

Michael Church, race director and junior in business, said the Theta Xis will be able to donate about $2,500 to multiple sclerosis.

The triathlon started at 10 a.m. in the Natatorium, with the swimmers completing 28 laps. Church said the competitors were started 20 seconds apart to keep the pool from being congested by the swimmers. Competitors were started fastest to slowest, by estimated times submitted earlier.

After completing the swim, competitors ran to the Memorial Stadium football field and grabbed their bikes for the second part of the triathlon.

"The course was a big loop that took you north of campus," said Brad Wolgast, University of Kansas student. The bikers had to complete four laps of the "loop."

The running course began at the stadium, went around City Park and finished at Nautilus Fitness Center.

Race categories were divided into men and women's individual competition and men's, women's and mixed relay competitions.

Clark Campbell, Lawrence, won the men's individual category in 1:01:26. Danne Larsen, graduate student in education, won the women's individual category in 1:16:20.

Parkville, Missouri, residents Karen Svetlic, Mike Svetlic and Denna Shelton won the combined relay category with a time of 1:11:46. Kansas City residents Daryl Johnson, Andy Ebersol and Ken Agena won the men's relay in 1:02:33.

Heidi Oehme, sophomore in education; Marilyn Avery, Manhattan; and Leeann Heuser, senior in education, were the winners of the women's relay in a time of 1:17:59.

Winners received a trophy, duffel bag and a gift certificate.

Church said the race went smoothly this year.

"We had two former race directors and myself doing it this year, so we kind of already knew what to do," Church said. "This was our fourth year of doing it.

"There were a few minor wrecks, but nothing major."

Truman scholar award example of excellence

K-State faculty are underpaid, admission to the University is not restricted, and budgets in every department may be meager, but when Kristy Parker was awarded a Truman scholarship Wednesday, she gave us an example of the quality of education this University has to offer.

K-State has had the record for the most Truman scholarships awarded to any public institution in the United States. After this year's figures are tabulated, K-State may still top the list.

Although these awards may not reflect all the abilities of all K-State students, they offer an excellent example of what students can achieve with some hard work and dedication.

And while students who receive such scholarships deserve praise, one cannot forget significant others who make these honors possible.

K-State faculty in general, and the professors on the Truman Scholarship Selection Committee specifically, deserve to be commended for making such opportunities available to students. More than intelligence is required to be awarded Truman, Marshall, Rhodes or similar scholarships. A student must be knowledgeable in specific areas and be a competent interviewee.

The faculty who prepare a student for a scholarship nomination are an intrinsic element of that student's success. Faculty members who take time from their busy schedules to answer questions, write letters of recommendation, or proofread an essay for someone applying for a scholarship are showing an exemplary commitment to the University and its students, and deserve our thanks.

Other Perspectives

KU drivers in search of legal parking stalls are almost daily faced with a decision.

Should I park illegally, go to class and drop another $10 paying a parking ticket? Or should I run back home and see if I can still fall asleep?

Such enviable choices make us all penniless delinquents.

Every school day, in lot 90, south of Robinson Center, and lot 91, north of Spencer Museum of Art, metered parking stalls sit idly while circling motorists cruise.

... But the real culprit is bureaucracy. Changing parking policy can be a bigger headache than finding a decent space.

In February, the Senate Executive Committee considered recommendations of the parking board. After receiving SenEx's approval, the recommendations went to the University Council, where some of the proposals were combed out.

But the net recommendations which include the elimination of 400 metered stalls from lot 90 finally will receive a hearing from the Board of Regents in June. If it approves the recommendation, the changes will be made in August, which is little consolation for those who spent $40 for a semester of frustration.

... Some students even have considered bringing a baseball bat to campus to tee off a few meters and circumvent bureaucracy. But then, that probably carries a higher fine.

Columnist's heroes shot down

Commentary

Chad L. Sanborn
Collegian Columnist

I'm so disillusioned, Myrtle. Just when I thought the world was about to become the wonderful place that I know in my heart it can be, two news items came charging out of my television like menacing water buffaloes from a marsh.

Two of my heroes, Speaker of the House Jim Wright and Mickey Mouse, were charged with unethical activities. One stands accused for using his power to make money, the other for mistakes he made early in his life.

Wright, it is alleged, decided to scratch the back of a rich Texas friend while maybe raking in a little capital for himself and his lovely wife, Betty. Pay attention, Myrtle. Here's a quick rundown of the major itches:

The rich Texas friend, one George Mallick, co-signed with his son on a $2.2 million loan from a Texas savings and loan institution at about the same time Wright was lobbying for the ailing S&Ls. Supposedly some paper-trail junkie has uncovered evidence that Wright also had Mallick's interests in mind.

Mallick also took over as bigwig on a project to restore a historical stockyard at the same time — by mere happenstance, I'm sure — that Wright leeched an additional $7.5 million from the U.S. government for the project.

It seems the lovely Betty used one of Mallick's Cadillics, one of his condominiums, and $18,000 of his money, annually. This would have been on the up-and-up except that the Wrights forgot to report Mallick's benevolence as gifts. Go figure.

This one is my favorite, Myrtle. Wright reportedly peddled his book, "Reflections of a Public Man," to at least 76 colleges and groups rather than charge them a speaking fee. This meant Wright got to keep 55 percent of the royalties.

Again, by mere happenstance, I'm sure, the House does not put a limit on the amount of royalties a representative can collect.

So now as Big Jim stands accused, he vows to duke it out with the House ethics committee "to the last ounce of conviction and energy that I possess."

And then there is Mickey.

It seems that as a young rodent, Mickey was a bit of a violent, homicidal racist who didn't mind chasing skirts.

Back in the depressed 1930s, Walt Disney ran a Mickey Mouse comic strip in some newspapers. However, this was not the mouse we know and love, the one who gave us Annette.

This younger Mickey was violent. In what could be a precursor to today's New Humor, one of Mickey's favorite pastimes was sneaking up on unsuspecting animals and blowing them away with an elephant gun.

Also, Mickey used to drink a little and tried to get Minnie in the sack without the benefit of a wedding ring.

But probably best of all, Mickey was a bigot. Once he was being chased by cannibals who were more than racistly drawn.

These strips, much to the chagrin of the Disney people, have been compiled and are on sale at comic book stores all across this great land of ours. In an effort to protect Mickey's image, and with a blatant disregard for the people's right to know, the publicity and legal gurus at Disney are trying to get the book off the market.

So there you have it, the news that rocked my week. Now I was shocked, Myrtle. Not that Wright is a money-grubbing slime, or that Mickey Mouse was once a redneck, but that everyone else is strutting around with their moral tail feathers in the air.

Wright is a politician. 'Nuff said. OK, so he's acting like a stereotypical Republican. Big deal. The guy would never be where he's at today if he had towed the line.

But now a bunch of holier-than-thou Republicans are out to politically castrate him. Taking a page from the "Late 20th Century Witch Hunt Handbook," recently updated by Democratic Sen. Sam "Never-had-a-drink-or-bagged-a-babe" Nunn, the Republicans will try to ditch Wright for playing the game the way it is played.

But you gotta say, "Hey! Jimbo knew the rules when he rolled the dice. I mean, nobody forced him to be a politician."

And poor Mickey is a case study in "The Graduate Student Syndrome." That is to say, he's hung around much too long. The poor little guy should have known better than to reflect the reigning social attitudes of his day. But now the anachronous hacks at Disney want us to forget that Mickey was once human.

These two until recently respected figures are victims, I tell you! How can we let this happen? Damn it, this is America!

My God, Myrtle, it certainly is.

Student volunteers

Editor,

On Saturday, 34 students from K-State participated in the third annual Homework '89. This day is dedicated to home maintenance and repair projects for the elderly in Manhattan. On behalf of the Board of Directors of the Home Program and the clients they served, I thank them.

The students came from residence halls, a fraternity, a sorority, student organizations and off-campus. Faculty assisted as well. Student volunteers from the Associated General Contractors poured concrete and rebuilt the steps on a woman's porch.

The Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity replaced a roof in north Manhattan. Volunteers from West Hall, Haymaker Hall, the Alpha Delta Pi sorority and off-campus students and faculty scraped and painted a person's home in the south part of Manhattan.

Homework '89 would not have been possible without the coordination and assistance of the Community S.A.V.E. program (structural assistance volunteer effort) of the Community Service Program in the College of Arts and Sciences.

The Home Owners Maintenance and Energy Program, Inc. relies on the kind of volunteers that showed up Saturday to perform labor free repairs on homes of the elderly in Manhattan. It is gratifying to know that such responsiveness to community needs receives such wide support.

I salute the accomplishments of the "ambassadors" from K-State. They're the greatest!

Senate insight

Editor,

Recently many of you have had the opportunity to gain insight into the Student Senate at K-State. Senate has been scrutinized in all aspects, including letters to the editor, guest columns, and even editorials by the Collegian staff.

Many senators have been referred to as "Blind zealots in lack of a cause," "underhanded," "unethical," "pushing the rights of students," "sidestepping the constitution," sputtering and whining in desperation, stupid, and railroading opinions through Senate. The entire body has been referred to as "a busybody Student Senate with nothing better to do."

One author went as far as to compare Student Senate to the Morton Downey Jr. show. Perhaps this individual doesn't take Student Senate seriously, but some of us do.

It might be asked what the authors of the aforementioned articles really know about Student Senate. Are they looking at the whole issue, or only at their own interests and secondhand information? Some of the quotes were made by uninformed individuals with partial information.

Many concerns I've heard deal with how much we are paid, how little we actually do, how Senate is nothing more than a resume builder, and how we are only senators for class credit.

Well, in answer to the first, anyone in Senate for the money is not an intelligent individual. With the exception of the Senate chairperson, senators receive no monetary compensation for the hours worked.

As far as time is concerned, I am required to be at all Senate meetings, which normally last at least four hours and have lasted as many as 10. These meetings are normally scheduled once a week, and twice a week during allocations.

Senators are required to serve on one standing committee, adding another hour per week. As a senator, I am also required to be in the SGS office one hour each week to answer the Senate Hotline.

Many colleges also require senators to sit on their respective college councils, entailing another hour every two weeks. Throughout the semester, senators are also required to give two visitations to clubs and organizations to inform them of Senate happenings. Everything mentioned above is required of every senator.

Most senators also spend extra time researching materials to get the facts on pertinent issues.

Spending this much time for a resume builder would not be an intelligent choice. As far as class credit is concerned, yes, senators do receive two hours of speech credit per semester. However, I know of no two-hour credit classes that require as much time and energy as Student Senate.

Many people may ask why I do it. In answer, I would say that I am a part of an ever-so-small group that actually cares about what happens at our University. I don't want to simply complain about everything, I want to make a difference. I also get personal satisfaction from making this difference, and I believe Senate helps me grow as an individual.

The next time you want to put Senate down for the way it handles issues, get all the facts, look at both sides of the issue, and remember, less than 15 percent of the student body voted in the general election.

If you didn't vote, be careful criticizing your elected representatives.

I would like to welcome all constituents to call the Senate Hotline at 532-7777 and voice their concerns. I would also welcome all of my business college constituents to voice any concerns directly to me.

Lastly I would like to encourage all of you to get involved with student government. Get involved indirectly by voicing your concerns to your senators or, better yet, get involved directly.

Run for Senate, become an intern, get on cabinet, or join a committee. Call the Senate Hotline for more details, or feel free to stop by the SGS office anytime.

Freshman wins $500 scholarship

By Janette Poole
Collegian Reporter

By the luck of the draw, a K-State freshman has been awarded $500 by the National Collegiate Athletic Association just for signing her name.

During last fall semester's registration, Michelle Amen, freshman in accounting, signed up to win a $500 scholarship sponsored by the NCAA.

There are no stipulations on how Amen must spend the money and she said at least half of the money will be used on a VCR and the rest would possibly help her decorate her new apartment.

Amen said there have been many pranks occurring in her residence hall and when she was informed of her prize, she thought it was a prank.

"I have the check in my hand and I still don't believe it," Amen said.

Campus Welcome Pack kits containing personal care items for men and women were distributed at registration for the fall semester. Upon receiving the pack, students could sign up to win a scholarship from the NCAA.

Names of 20 freshmen were randomly selected from the list. The names were then sent to Host Communications, the exclusive marketing representative company for the NCAA. One name was then randomly chosen from that list and became the designated winner of the scholarship for K-State. The company selects one name from each of the 125 schools participating in the program.

"Our goal is to distribute 400,000 kits each year nationally and it usually takes 125 participants to make that total," said Jeff Slone, Host Communications representative.

Ralph McBarron, director of collegiate sampling programs for Host Communications, said companies pay a fee for the total distribution, which divides down to a per-pack charge. The fees paid by the companies fund the scholarship program.

The cheerleading squad and the baseball team at K-State use this program as a fund-raiser for travel expenses. There is no overhead cost incurred by either group and they get paid to distribute the packs. Host Communications supplies the personal care packs for each school.

"We don't have to do anything but supply the labor," said Scott Johnson, assistant instructor in animal science and industry and cheerleading adviser.

Host Communications has restructured the program for next year, Johnson said. Groups will be paid 25 cents for each pack distributed. About 7,000 boxes were distributed last year.

Since 1987, when K-State began participating, the program has raised $1,400 each year for the two groups, which divide the money equally.

'WKRP' star returns to campus

Alumni recalls work at local radio stations

By Craig Hamrick
Collegian Reporter

Actor Gordon Jump adjusts the earphones on his head and scribbles some notes on the yellow legal pad between him and the microphone. Putting the pad down, he smooths the paper, clears his throat and ad-libs a commercial.

"Hi, this is Gordon Jump," he says. "You probably remember me from 'WKRP in Cincinatti.' If you're old enough, you may even remember hearing this voice on KSDB-FM many years ago, when I attended school at Kansas State University. You know when I get back into town I listen to ... I love to listen to ..."

Jump shakes his head.

"Let's do that one again," he says.

Beside him stands Laurie Lawson, KSDB production director and junior in journalism and mass communications. Across the booth, Joe Montgomery, operations director and graduate student, runs the tape recorder.

"Now do one as your character from 'WKRP,'" Lawson suggests.

Jump swallows and when he speaks again it is with a slightly deeper voice, interrupted by nervous laughter.

"Hi. This is Arthur Carlson from 'WKRP in Cincinatti' ...."

Jump, a 1957 K-State graduate, returned to campus as the keynote speaker at the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications Scholarship and Awards Dinner. He told the assembled students to enjoy their time at school.

"When I attended Kansas State University, they were interesting years of my life," Jump said. "I wish I could go back and relive them. But we don't get a chance to go back and relive the events in our lives. We have to make the most of them while they're placed in our grip."

In the early 1950s, while Jump was stationed at Fort Riley, he observed K-State's radio and TV classes and made a decision to go into that field.

He said Manhattan had a special atmosphere, borne out of a disaster.

"A few years before I got here, this town had gone through a flood," Jump said. "The attitude of the people was very common-goal oriented. They had all just shoveled mud and slush out of each others' stores, so they were bound together. Coming in from outside, you could feel the togetherness and I thought, 'Boy, this is a place where I'd enjoy going to college.'"

Jump was a member of the Kappa Sigma fraternity. He said that since graduation he has remained in contact with some of his fraternity brothers.

"They were a rowdy group of wonderful guys," he said. "We had everybody from a rodeo rider by the name of Carlson to a man who is a funeral director now in Florida. Some of our paths have crossed as life has gone on."

In Manhattan, Jump worked at KSDB and KMAN radio stations. After graduating, he worked at WIBW in Topeka. He said his experiences at the radio stations helped prepare him for the televison role for which he is best known. From 1978 to 1982, Jump portrayed Arthur Carlson, the radio station manager on the television program "WKRP in Cincinatti."

"I wanted to do acting and be involved with television production, and I thought with the background I had earned I could go to California and do that. I was dead wrong," he said. "I had to completely divorce myself from broadcasting all together. But everything I'd learned through the years, all the writing, directing — everything — all that served me well."

Jump said there is a chance the cast of "WKRP in Cincinatti" could be reunited, but things would be different.

"Something like (a reunion) is highly possible, but I don't think it would go back on CBS. I think it might go on a network like NBC. CBS never knew what they had when they had the show," Jump said. "Network mentality would boggle your mind."

Jump has been in two feature films — "Moving," with Richard Pryor, and "The Fury," with Kirk Douglas. He hosts a home improvement program on PBS and appears as the lonely Maytag washer repairman in commercials.

Anger over spill silenced

By The Associated Press

VALDEZ, Alaska — People all over Alaska, so heavily dependent on oil and fishing, agreed to silence their anger for five minutes Sunday to remember the way things were before a tanker spilled 10.1 million gallons of oil in an area rich in wildlife.

The period of silence was requested by Gov. Steve Cowper to mark the 30-day anniversary of the spill.

"This disaster has almost turned us into people who aren't human. We've been running on adrenalin just to get things accomplished," said Belle Mickelson, who teaches commercial fishing at Cordova High School.

"We need a quiet time to reflect on why we're here doing this and to get set for the long haul. A Band-Aid isn't going to fix this," she said.

Meanwhile, a storm threatening wind up to 30 mph and 9-foot seas pushed oil to unstained shores over the weekend and forced a cleanup crew to take shelter.

Capriotti: Our best KU Relays ever

By Chris Hays
Sports Editor

K-State's performance at the KU Relays during the weekend was so good that Coach John Capriotti went so far as to say it was "our best KU Relays ever."

"It was a fantastic meet for us," he said. "We had a lot of national qualifiers and a lot of really solid performances. I am very pleased with it."

Leading the way for the K-State tracksters was senior hurdler Kim Kilpatrick. She won both the 100-meter hurdles and the 400-meter hurdles and then helped the women's 440-yard relay team to a second-place finish and the 880-yard relay team to a first-place finish.

"Kim was awesome," Capriotti said.

The 440-yard relay squad, which included Latricia Joyner, Markeya Jones and Aretha Frazier, topped the national qualifying standard with a time of 45.43 seconds to stake a claim at the NCAA Outdoor Championships June 1-3. Frazier was replacing an injured Joy Jones on the relay team and turned in a solid race, Capriotti said.

"She did a good job substituting for Joy Jones," he said. "They had really good handoffs. Aretha's not a bad little sprinter and I think that team can go a couple seconds faster, and if they do that, it would put them in the finals at the NCAA meet."

For her performances, Kilpatrick's was named the co-performer of the KU Relays along with Felicia Allen of Missouri. Kilpatrick qualified for nationals in the 110-meter hurdles earlier this season.

Also qualifying was sprinter Ray Hill in the 100 meters. Hill was running in his first open event of the outdoor season after pulling a hamstring muscle at the Big Eight Outdoor Championships in March. Hill won the 100 with a time of 10.11.

"He worked hard all week and we just kind of left it up to him whether he was going to run in the 100 or not," Capriotti said. "He wanted to run so we let him. He had a really good race and beat a very good field."

K-State had four other nationals qualifiers come out of the KU Relays. Clifton Etheridge finally surpassed the qualifying mark in the long jump, sailing 26-1½ feet after missing the mark last week by just four inches.

Angie Miller qualified for the NCAA meet in the discus with a toss of 168-10. Joyner also qualified in the 100 meters with a time of 11.43.

K-State now has seven individuals and one relay team qualifying for the national meet at Brigham Young University in Provo, Utah. The others who qualified earlier this season were Greta Semsroth in the javelin and Connie Teaberry in the high jump.

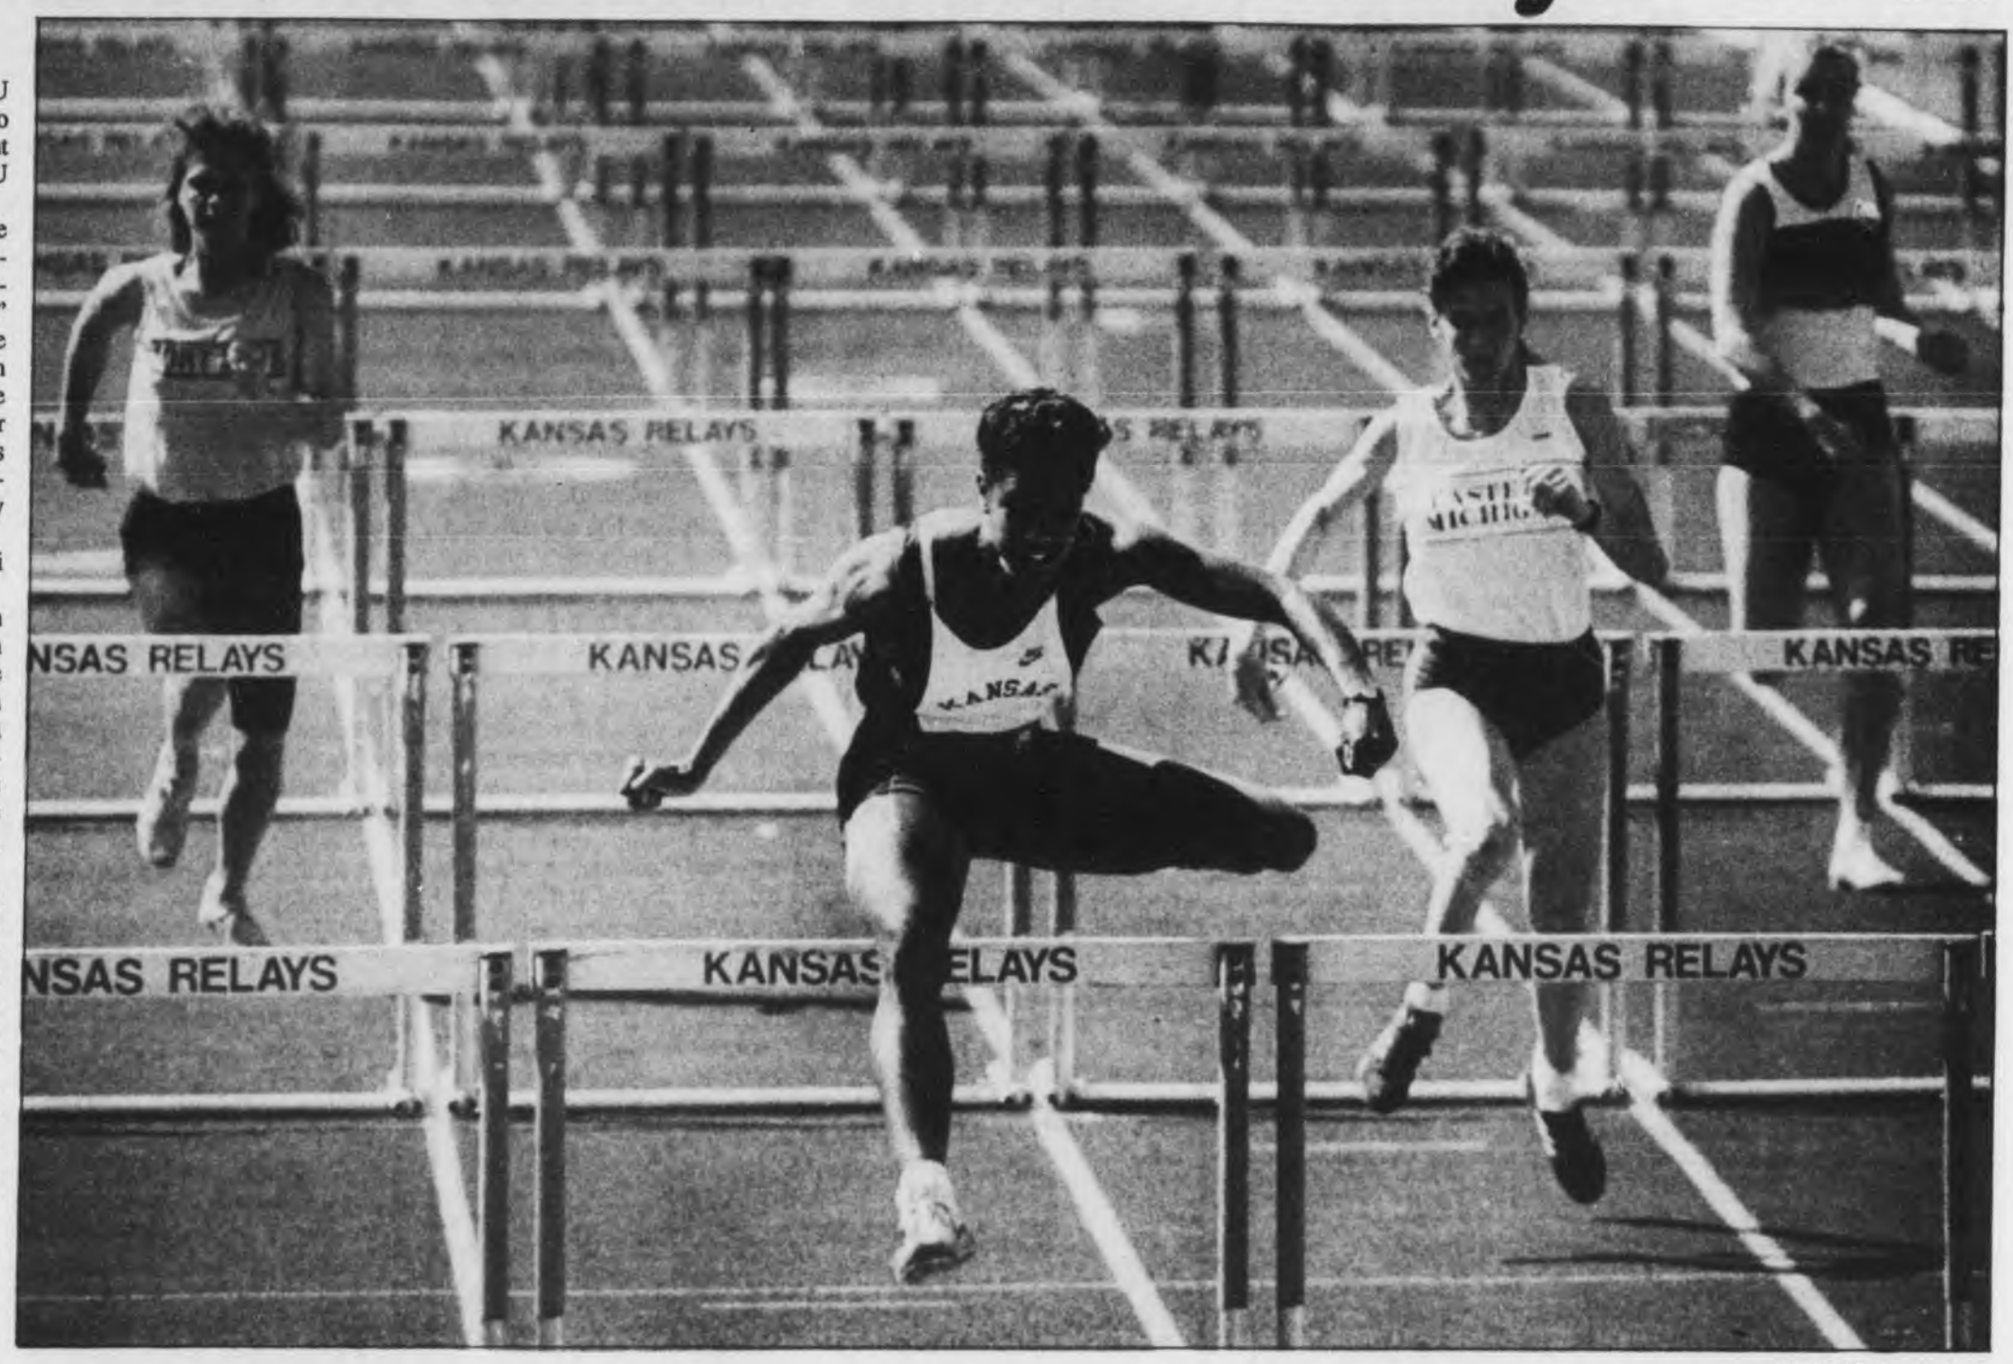
Semsroth and Teaberry, both freshman, won each of their specialties this past weekend. Teaberry went 5-9¾ in her first-place effort, while Semsroth unleashed a toss of 161-2.

The men's 4x400-meter relay team of Sean Banks, Corey King, Hill and Tyrone Watkins missed qualifiying by just .25 seconds, finishing first with a time of 3:07.75 minutes.

"I was really happy with the mile relay team," Capriotti said. "I was a little worried about them after two days in the heat and they were running the last race of the weekend.

"They did an excellent job and beat a really good team out of Eastern Michigan. They will qualify. I think they can even run a 3:05 or 3:04."

Pat Hessini had a good weekend anchoring the four mile relay and the distance medley to first and second place finishes respectively. Hessini turned in an impressive anchor leg in the four-mile relay, passing both runners ahead of him to break the tape in front of Kansas and Eastern Michigan.



The squad, consisting of Hessini, David Warders, Brian Zwahlen and Jan Jonsson, turned in a time of 16:40.31. That time qualified them for the national 1,500-meter relay championships at the Penn Relays in Philadelphia Saturday.

Also turning in a first-place performance for K-State was Angie Barry, who had a time of 35:24.39 in the 10,000 meters.

"She looked really good in her first 10,000," Capriotti said. "She was very relaxed and had a good time under those conditions (hot and windy)."

"We're really headed in the right direction right now," Capriotti said. "The team may have even exceeded my expectations this weekend. They just did a really good job. Everyone we took competed very well.

"We're coming around and it shows what kind of team we have for them to compete this hard."

Track coach pleased as season moves into 'crunch time'

Svoboda on Sports

DAVID SVOBODA
Sports Columnist

Pardon K-State track and field coach John Capriotti if he was just a bit excited following the conclusion of the Kansas Relays Saturday in Lawrence.

Capriotti, who is one of the most infectiously enthusiastic people you'd ever hope to meet, had reason to be even more upbeat than usual following his team's "best ever" performance in the relays.

The Kansas Relays were once regarded as one of track's premier events. Recently, however, as the number and caliber of teams participating has wained, that reputation has become somewhat tainted.

That, Capriotti insists, isn't entirely fair.

"This is perceived as being a down period for the Relays, but when you go to a meet and have as many young people qualify as did this weekend, you have to know the competition is fairly strong," he said. "Sure the meet could use a few more teams, but as our kids would be the first to tell you, it's tough to set a national qualifying mark in a meet where the competition isn't strong."

The strength of the competition spurred several K-State performers on to national qualifying marks, led by Ray Hill and Latricia Joyner in the men's and women's 100-meter dashes.

And Kim Kilpatrick took two individual titles and participated on two winning relay teams to be named as a co-winner of the meet award for the outstanding female performer.

All in all, not a bad weekend.

"We won a lot of open events, and to tell you the truth, the whole weekend went better than I thought it would," Capriotti said. "We really didn't have any disappointments."

One reason for the lack of disappointments, Capriotti said, was the improved depth at most positions on both the men's and women's teams.

"We've got more good people than we've ever had," he said. "That's one reason our men were so good indoors (finishing second at the Big Eight meet). We've got good people in the sprints, the distance events, the relays, the field events — pretty much across the board."

The thing that encouraged Capriotti the most was the way his team appeared to have jump-started itself just when it should have. The KU Relays were the start of the home stretch of the outdoor season, a stretch that culminates in the conference meet and the national competition, both of which come after finals week.

"When you have the chance to perform when the chips are down, it's encouraging," he said. "And just by the way everyone competed this weekend, I think everybody knows it's crunch time now."

As the teams near the biggest payoff at the national meet — possible all-American status for individuals and relay teams — Capriotti is concerned about very few things.

"I wish we were a little deeper in a few of the distance events for our women, but that's about it really," he said. "At the Big Eight meet, I look for both of our teams to be in the top three, and hope that one of them can make a run for the Big Eight title."

Capriotti said the schedule, with both the conference meet and national meet coming after finals, benefits his athletes.

"Finals week really takes the minds of the competitors off competition," he said. "Instead of worrying about Big Eight and nationals, they're allowed to take their minds off of track and put them on something else."

But in the "one-week-at-a-time" department, the significance of what was done in Lawrence won't be lost on Capriotti for a few days, and may not be lost on the program for several years.

With the local media coverage of the event, and with photos of K-State competitors splashed on the front page of the sports section of nearly every paper in the state, the meet and K-State's successes may have also been a valuable recruiting tool.

"You can't even measure it in dollars and cents," Capriotti said. "It helps put Kansas State on the map."

No wonder Capriotti was happy Sunday.

Victory can come in several different ways, and the K-State coach experienced most of them this past weekend.

Women's novice awarded Parrish memorial trophy

By Janet Swanson
Editor

On the basis of its performance Saturday and during the season, the women's novice crew foursome received the Roger Parrish Memorial Trophy. The K-State crew played host to Washburn on Saturday at the annual Founder's Day Regatta.

"This will be the first time that the women have ever been given this award, but they certainly deserve it," said Don Rose, crew coach.

The women's novice crew placed second in Saturday's meet, behind Manhattan High School's crew team.

"Manhattan High should have won that race. They've been rowing in the same lineup since just after spring break," said Amanda Robinson, women's coach.

Because the men and women usually race in eights during the season, most of the sets of four were inexperienced in their pairings against the Ichabods.

"I just think the men's varsity four did an excellent job," Rose said. "They rowed fours for the first time (Friday)."

The men's varsity and women's Manhattan High School novices took first Saturday. K-State also took second in women's novice, women's varsity and the mixed four crews took second and fourth.

"We're always at a disadvantage."
—Amanda Robinson women's crew coach

"Washburn's best boat is their men's varsity, and we beat them and that's what really matters," Rose said.

Two members of the mixed four were junior varsity crewmen.

"I could have sent out a more experienced group, but we used some junior varsity men to give them more experience," he said.

It's probably a good thing the meet was being used mainly for practice, because the wind refused to allow much more.

"It's extremely bad out here," Rose said. "If this wind was out of the north instead of the southwest, there would be no way we'd be racing."

Wind conditions at Tuttle Creek Reservoir often hamper the teams, Robinson said.

"We're always at a disadvantage," she said. "There are some days out here that the wind is so bad that we can't even row for fear of the boats tipping over."

Before the teams travel Thursday to Madison, Wis., for the regional competition on Lake Wingra, lineups will be evaluated, Rose said.

"We need to unscramble the boat and do some seat racing," he said.

Cyclones take 4, sweep Wildcats

From Staff and Wire Reports

AMES, Iowa — Iowa State used solid pitching during its four-game weekend series with K-State to sweep the Wildcats, making K-State's hopes of a Big Eight tournament bid look even worse.

Sunday
Iowa State 4, K-State 1
Iowa State 6, K-State 5

Iowa State's Tom Vantiger scored on Eric Krugolski's ninth-inning single Sunday to give the Cyclones a 6-5 victory and a doubleheader sweep over the Wildcats.

Iowa State won Sunday's first game, 4-1, behind the five-hit pitching of Dan O'Reilly and Dan Turner.

K-State had tied the nightcap 5-5 in the top half of the ninth inning. Ron Bradshaw walked and came home on a sacrifice fly by Bill Barnard.

But Vantiger singled in the bottom half of the inning, stole second base and went to third on a sacrifice bunt by Dave Shinn. That set up Krugolski's one-out hit to deep center field with the K-State outfield playing shallow.

Iowa State held a 2-1 lead in the first game when the Cyclones scored two runs in the third inning to seal the victory. Shinn scored on a two-out double by Reggie Stalzer, who later scored on a throwing error by first baseman Barnard.

K-State's only run in the first game came when Jeff Ryan singled and scored on a two-out single by Sean Collins.

Saturday
Iowa State 2, K-State 1
Iowa State 3, K-State 1

Iowa State's Mike Myers pitched a one-hitter in the first game and the Cyclones limited K-State to five hits overall en route to a 2-1 and 3-1 sweep of the Wildcats Saturday.

First round of draft offers few surprises

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — The first round of Sunday's NFL draft was a simple matter for the league's downtrodden, who grabbed the top eight players and hoped they would work instant miracles.

For some Super Bowl hopefuls, however, it was a chance to trade and hope for a quick fix.

Starting with Troy Aikman, the UCLA quarterback signed last week by Dallas for $11.2 million over six years, the first eight picks were no surprises — players who can provide instant oomph to the downtrodden. It was so predictable, it took just 20 minutes for the first six players to be chosen, a process that has sometimes taken more than an hour.

Green Bay, picking second, took 315-pound offensive tackle Tony Mandarich of Michigan State, rated the top player in the draft regardless of position.

Detroit then took Heisman Trophy-winning running back Barry Sanders of Oklahoma State, the first pure junior ever taken — he was granted eligibility after his school was placed on probation.

Alabama linebacker Derrick Thomas went to Kansas City; Florida State cornerback Deion Sanders to Atlanta and Nebraska linebacker Broderick Thomas to Tampa Bay.

The Pittsburgh Steelers then let the 15-minute clock run down to 35 seconds before they did the expected and took running back Tim Worley of Georgia. San Diego let the clock run down to zero before taking Pitt's talented but somewhat offbeat defensive end, Burt Grossman.

"Right on time," said Broderick Thomas, a 6-foot-1, 250 pounder. "Things went just as expected."

There was less predictability after that as players such as Florida safety Louis Oliver, Michigan State wide receiver Andre Rison and Miami running back Cleveland Gary dropped 10 to 15 players lower than expected.

Meanwhile, Cleveland, which barely missed going to the Super Bowl in 1986 and 1987, was wheeling and dealing in an effort to finally get there. So was Washington, the 1987 champion but 7-9 last year.

The Browns moved up from 20th to 13th on the first round in a trade with Denver to snare Eric Metcalf, the speedy Texas running back they needed. Then they traded away their first-rounder next season to take 6-foot-4, 223-pound wide receiver Lawyer Tillman of Auburn, whom they see as a tight end in the mold of aging Ozzie Newsome.

"Our efforts are devoted to coming out of this draft with a couple of great players," said general manager Ernie Accorsi, obviously believing he got them.

A few minutes after Cleveland's second trade, the Redskins made their move — one characteristic of a team that had just three No. 1 picks in 19 years. They traded away next year's top pick along with this year's second for Gerald Riggs, Atlanta's 28-year-old, eight-year veteran running back.

The Skins, who also were trying for Cleveland's Ernest Byner, hope Riggs, who has a lot of mileage on him, will be able to fill for a year or two the need for a heavy-duty running back in their one-back system.

The team that may have gotten the biggest boost from the draft was Miami, choosing ninth.

The Dolphins got two players considered before the draft to be in the top dozen. Both were local products — running back Sammie Smith of Florida State and Oliver, who was taken with the 25th choice, which the Dolphins got in a trade with Chicago.

Netters win, 6-3

From Staff and Wire Reports

The K-State women's tennis team moved itself one duel closer to its first-ever above .500 finish in the Big Eight Conference standings with a 6-3 victory Sunday against Iowa State. The win put the Wildcats at 16-5 overall and 3-3 in the conference.

Valerie Rive and Marijke Nel continued their impressive play at No. 2 doubles, downing the Cyclones' pair of Lori Hash and Kim Dempsey, 6-3, 6-4. The victory moved Nel and Rive to 20-6 on the season.

K-State had two players lose their opening set 6-1 before coming back to take the points. Rive had a hard time with Dempsey at No. 4 singles before finally finding her form to stake a come-from-behind victory, going 6-1, 6-1 in the final two matches.

Thresa Burcham found herself in the same predicament at No. 5 singles when Kris Stotler jumped out to a one-match lead, 6-1. However, she took the final two matches with scores of 6-1 and 6-3.

Sara Hancock and Annika Emtell also picked victories in the singles division for the 'Cats. Hancock defeated Jennifer Nelson at No. 3 singles, 6-3, 6-4, while Emtell also came back from losing the first match, 7-6, before finally downing Christi Hill in the final two matches, 6-1, 6-1.

At the No. 1 singles spot Iowa State's Lori Hash downed Nel, 6-4, 2-6, 6-3. K-State's other singles player, Helen Schildknecht, was also defeated at the No. 2 spot by Suna Bayrakal, 1-6, 6-3, 6-3.

Burcham and Emtell teamed to defeat Nelson and Hill at No. 3 doubles, 6-4, 6-3. The No. 1 doubles team of Shildknecht and Hancock also lost, 6-2, 6-3, to Bayrakal and Stotler.

K-State is at Nebraska today to finish up the Big Eight portion of its schedule. The Big Eight tourney begins Saturday at Oklahoma City.

Golf team takes 11th

From Staff and Wire Reports

The women's golf team finished 11th at the 14-team Iowa Hawkeye Invitational in Iowa City this weekend.

K-State shot 1,013 and was led by Chris Adams, who had a 54-hole total of 239 after shooting rounds of 79-76-84.

Following Adams were: Adena Hagedorn (252), Lonna Dale (259), Jill Zientara (264), and Theresa Coyle (276).

Indiana took the team title with a score of 1,013.

K-State will open play in the Big Eight Conference tournament today in Ames, Iowa. The squad shot a practice round there Sunday in preparation for the two-day competition. The Wildcats were picked to finish last in a pre-tourney coaches poll.

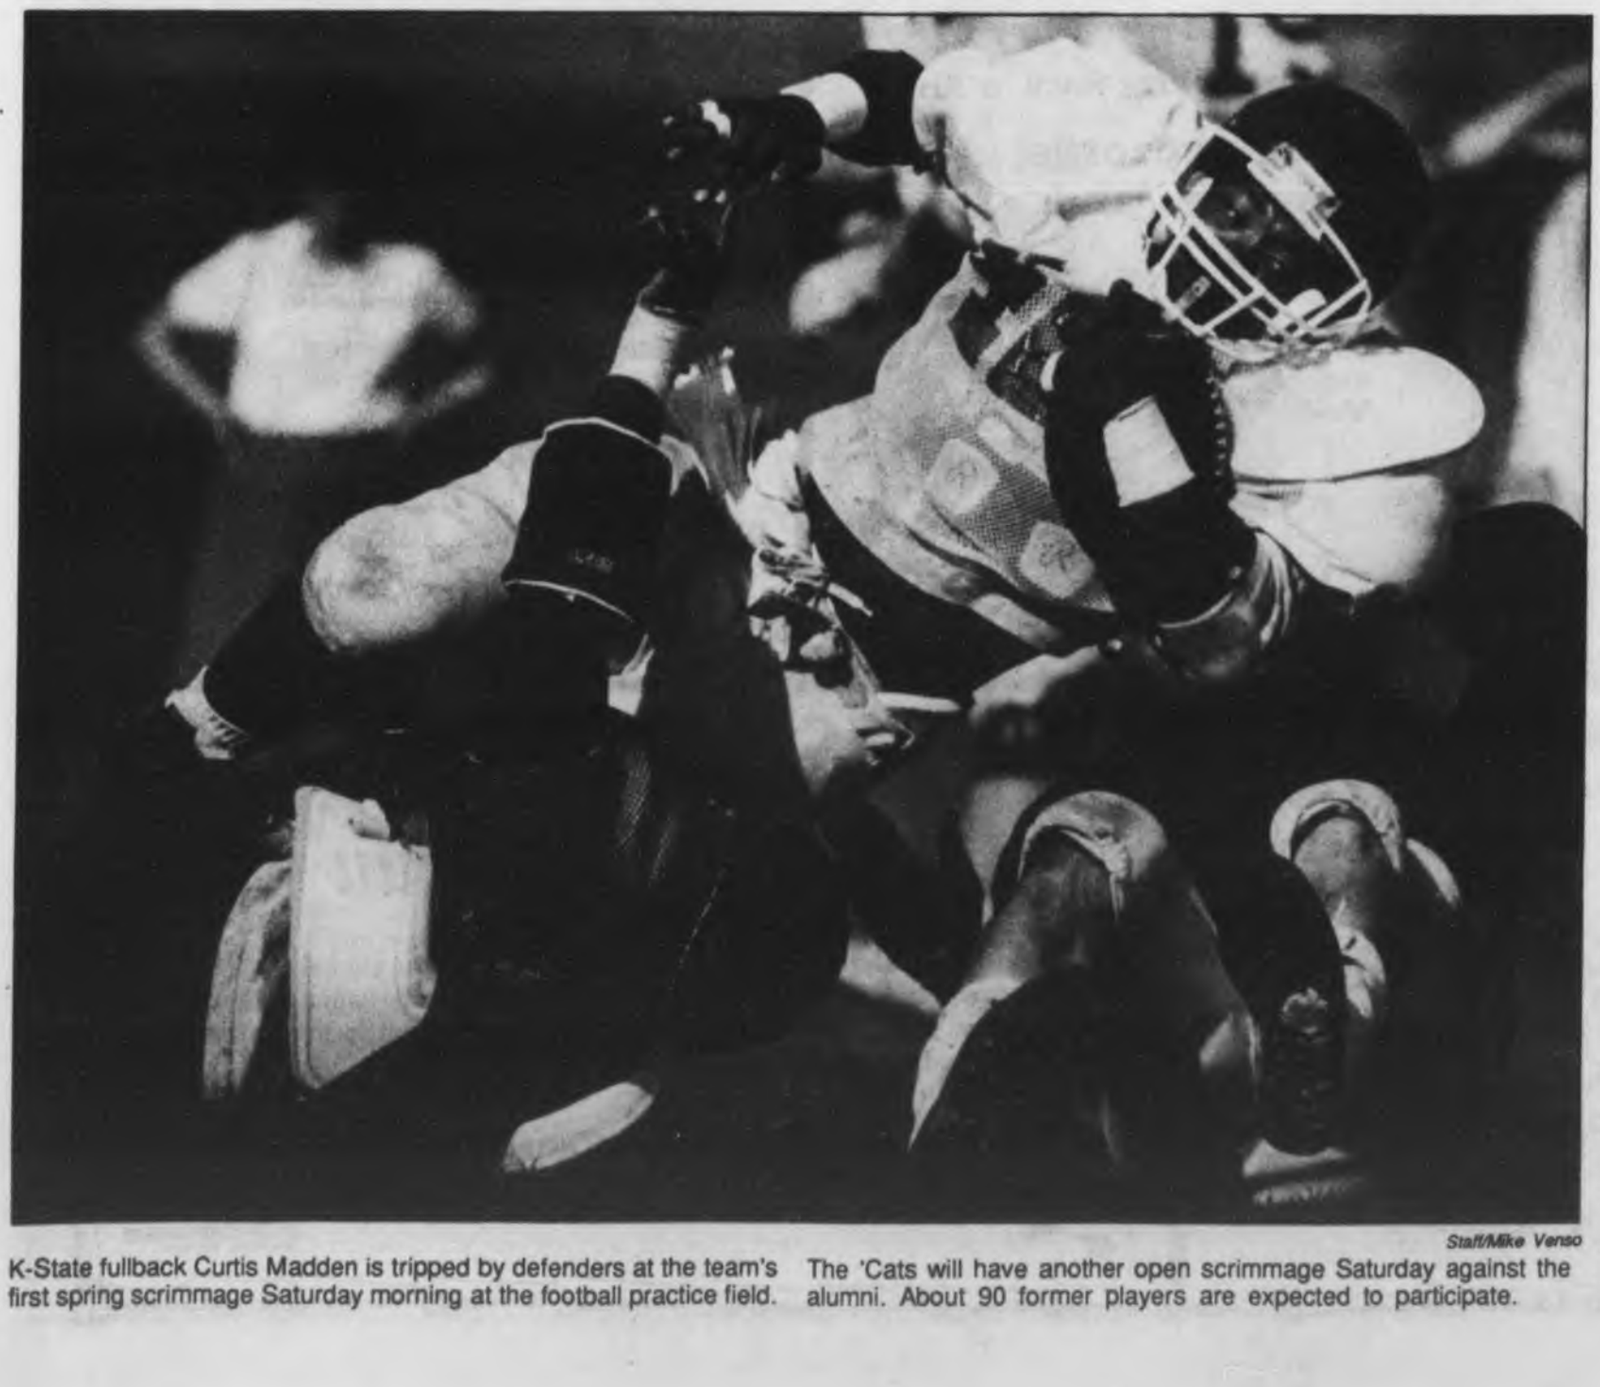
"This (Hawkeye Invitational) was a good tournament to prepare us for the Big Eight tournament," Coach Russ Bunker said. "We're going into the Big Eight on a positive note. We hope to catch Iowa State, but it will be tough on their home court."

The men's golf team opens play Friday at the Northern Illinois Invitational and competition will continue through Saturday.

Chiefs draft Thomas, Wake Forest's Elkins

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Alabama linebacker Derrick Thomas, promising "an awesome pass rush," was taken by the Kansas City Chiefs Sunday with the fourth choice of the NFL draft.



"We think he'll be able to adapt quickly to the things we're trying to do," said head coach Marty Schottenheimer, who along with president and general manager Carl Peterson launched a new era Sunday for professional football in Kansas City. "The only thing we need to do is get him started here in the next few days."

Thomas, 6-4, 230, set an Alabama record with 52 career quarterback sacks and is often compared with Buffalo Bills' star Cornelius Bennett, whom he replaced at Alabama as a junior.

The Chiefs, with only four victories each of the past two years, have been weak at linebacker for more than a decade.

In the second round, they addressed another need by taking Wake Forest quarterback Mike Elkins, described as a long-term project.

Cornerback Price shines in Cats' open scrimmage

Staff/Mike Venso

K-State fullback Curtis Madden is tripped by defenders at the team's first spring scrimmage Saturday morning at the football practice field. The 'Cats will have another open scrimmage Saturday against the alumni. About 90 former players are expected to participate.

By Mike Goens
Sports Writer

William Price highlighted K-State's first open, intrasquad football scrimmage Saturday, intercepting two passes and returning one for a touchdown.

"Price probably practiced better today than he had the entire spring," Coach Bill Snyder said. "He was agressive and attacked the ball. He's been around the football. He just hasn't made the plays. He will be a good player as soon as he learns to do the little things."

No official statistics were kept as the Wildcats went through a 2½ -hour workout.

Carl Straw led the first-team offense on an 11-play drive on the first possession. It was capped by a 30-yard field goal from David Kruger.

Price then struck with an interception of a Chris Cobb pass in the left flat and returned it the distance for a touchdown.

The second scoring drive was also led by Straw, with Robert Boyd finishing it on a four-yard run. Straw was successful on all three passing attempts during the drive.

The Wildcats' defense was also impressive, with Erick Harper, in addition to Price, picking off a pass and deflecting several others.

The offense mixed up the play calling, and Straw and Cobb looked to tight end Alan Friedrich in the middle of the field to complete passes. Boyd was also impressive, running with both the first and second team offenses.

"Robert did a nice job in segments, especially against the first defense," Snyder said. "He's in a learning process. He needs to know exactly what to do. I'm pleased with his progress."

The Wildcats appeared flat toward the middle of the workout, but Straw brought the offense back to life as he unloaded a 42-yard scoring strike to Greg Washington. Straw pump-faked left and found Washington alone down the right sideline for the score.

"I like the fact that we had a slow start and we built back up and played pretty well, but then we let up," Snyder said. "But we came back and had a series of plays where we converted eight out of nine. The kids have to learn to play hard in the fourth quarter."

The Wildcats have four workouts remaining, including the alumni game at 2 p.m. Saturday.

"Price probably practiced better today than he had the entire spring. He was agressive and attacked the ball."
— Bill Snyder football coach

"We're not as healthy as we would like to be," Snyder said. "We're not deep enough to get two groups on the football field during the course of a ballgame.

"Our kids have got to approach it as not just wanting to get it over with. They've got to be wishing there were 15 practices left instead of just four."

Gary Swim, who is in a battle with Carl Straw for the No. 1 position at quarterback, was a no-show at the scrimmage.

"Swim is probably in the rack somewhere, I don't know where he is," Snyder said.

Black Light Theatre presented at McCain

By Mark Schreiner
Collegian Reviewer

About 1,300 people, including many children, turned out Saturday at McCain Auditorium for a little of the old ultraviolet theater.

The Ta Fantastika black light theatre company presented its performance, "A Dream," using dance, mime, puppets, and marionettes.

The show was a collection of nifty effects using the phenomena that fluorescent materials emit visible light when placed under ultraviolet light.

A girl and a pied piper frolicked in the front half of the stage, lit by normal light. The back half of the stage, however, was lit only by ultraviolet light. Eight members of Ta Fantastika, dressed in non-flourescent black, manipulated glowing props in the back half of the stage. Because the props' operators were invisible under black light, the props appeared to be alive and to defy the laws of nature.

This was the show's attraction. There were no spoken lines, no story line. But there were also no lines on the marionettes, or at least no visible lines.

"A Dream" had no plot summary because it had no plot to summarize. Actions in dreams don't make sense, and neither did actions in "A Dream."

All this is fine, because the attraction was the special effects, not the story. But the special effects were few and widely spaced. When a new effect was introduced, the audience laughed with awe and appreciation.

But then the effect was repeated.

Watching the human characters dance abstractly while stars jiggled in little circles behind them was much the same as watching human characters dance abstractly in front of butterflies or bubbles or flowers or other wonderfully good things.

Members of the audience talked to each other in nearly normal tones throughout the show, and waves of sporadic coughing broke across the seats. Without a story and without a steady stream of new effects, Ta Fantastika couldn't hold the audience's interest.

Ta Fantastika's "A Dream" had neat special effects and was technically well-executed. But the special effects were for themselves, without a larger context, and they were repeated too much. When McCain's lights returned after the show, the audience awoke, thankful to find it was all just a dream.

Bands offer alternative music

Crowd at Mannequin's entertained by Glass Eye

By Doug Fall
Collegian Reviewer

After releasing its third album, Glass Eye has established quite a reputation as being an unusual band. And to a crowd of about 75 people Friday night at Mannequin's, it showed some of the reasons why its popularity is gaining.

Based in Austin, Texas, Glass Eye was founded in one of most productive areas of alternative music. Austin is the home of such successful bands as The Reivers and The Dead Milkmen. Despite such influences, Glass Eye has refused to conform to any single style of music.

The songs it played Friday night gave a glimpse of its slightly off-center view of the world. One of its songs, "Living With Reptiles," off its latest album, "Bent By Nature," is about a house infested with snakes and salamanders. The band members' refusal to conform underlies all of their songs as much as this one.

The crowd seemed to enjoy this band more and more as the night progressed. The group opened its show without any fanfare or even an announcement, something quite unusual for the headlining act. It took some time for the audience to realize the band playing was, indeed, Glass Eye.

Throughout the show, which lasted about 90 minutes, the band slowly gave the audience a picture of what the members believe. They begrudgingly gave support to the protest of chlorofluorocarbon production in Wichita, knocked the band Kansas and promoted their T-shirts as much cheaper than Def Leppard's.

Describing Glass Eye's music is a hard task. Combining the neurotic lyrics of The Violent Femmes, the rambling vocals of The Talking Heads, and setting it to screeching guitars and shrill keyboards would perhaps create a similar style.

Some of its best-received songs were a breathtaking cover of The Beatles' "Tomorrow Never Knows," off of "Revolver," and a heavy metal version of "Cecelia," originally by Simon and Garfunkel.

Glass Eye consists of Kathy McCarthy on guitar, Brian Beattie on bass, Dave Cameron on drums, and Sheri Lane on keyboards. Despite several changes, the sound and character of the band has remained intact. Its latest album is no different than "Marlo" and "Hugo," its first two albums.

There are several reasons success has eluded Glass Eye outside of Austin. Its first recording company bungled the publicity and it has only recently switched to Bar/None records in New Jersey.

Another reason is the members' attitude. They refused to play fraternity parties, a very lucrative business, and only take gigs when they want to.

Opening for Glass Eye was a local underground band, Seamstresses of Noise. Beginning its act in complete darkness and a made-for-school movie on circumcision, it gave the audience a show of sometimes eerie, always bizarre music.

Dangling from the necks of two of the band's members were green, glow in the dark chemical candles. This, along with home movies of children and a red pinpoint of light that danced on a screen behind them, gave their entrancing music an appropriate backdrop.

Audience members were given a concert full of off-the-wall music. They also heard a band that is on the verge of success, Glass Eye.

Smoke-filled airplane evacuated

By The Associated Press

FAYETTEVILLE, N.C. — A Piedmont Airlines flight preparing for takeoff was evacuated Sunday when the crew noticed smoke inside the plane, and at least two passengers were injured, officials said.

The two, whose injuries were described as minor, may have been hurt when emergency evacuation chutes did not inflate properly, officials said. Other passengers were treated at the scene for smoke inhalation.

The pilot had backed up from the jetway at Fayetteville Regional Airport, readying for a takeoff on a flight to Pittsburgh, when "I noticed he made a real abrupt stop," said Fayetteville city attorney Robert Cogswell, a passenger.

The pilot then advised the passengers to evacuate "and boy, everybody just jumped off the plane in a hurry," Cogswell said.

The Boeing 727 had 76 people on board.

A crew member informed the pilot of smoke in the passenger compartment, said Dave Shipley, spokesman for USAir Group Inc., which owns Piedmont.

"The smoke intensified enough that he felt it was prudent to stop the airplane and disembark the passengers down the evacuation chute," he said.

Two passengers were taken to Cape Fear Valley Hospital for observation and treatment of minor back injuries, said Bob Hart, a supervisor at the Cumberland County Ambulance Service.

Sorority sponsors Greek games for American Lung Association

By Paige Gantz
Collegian Reporter

Clear skies and temperatures in the 90s contributed to the festive atmosphere Saturday in City Park as the Alpha Xi Delta sorority sponsored its Greek Games competition.

This is the first year for the event, from which the Alpha Xis will send proceeds to the American Lung Association.

"We hope to send $1,000 to Topeka," said Becky Curran, junior in business and interior design and philanthropy chairwoman for Alpha Xis. "We chose the headquarters nearest to Manhattan, which happened to be Topeka."

Curran said the sorority usually does a type of community service but was looking for a new way to get more involved on campus. The games began at noon and ended at 3 p.m., with a post-games party at Bushwacker's.

Scheduled events included piggyback relays, quick dress, obstacle course and tricycle relays.

"Piggy-back relays were really funny to watch," said Lisa Nett, senior in human ecology and journalism and mass communications and coach for the Sigma Nu fraternity.

The relays involved four-man teams which played horse to two women, running short distances and switching loads at intervals.

Quick dress involved fraternity members racing down to dress one of their coaches in bra, underwear, dress and scarf. The team finishing first won.

"We're having a really good turnout with houses showing loads of enthusiasm and great participation," Nett said.

"I think this is a great competition to get guys from other fraternities together," said Perry Palmer, senior in architecture and participant in the tricycle race for Tau Kappa Epsilon.

In addition to the day's activities, the Alpha Xis also had a "Mr. Lungs Contest," in which each fraternity sponsored a member to have a picture of their chest taken.

The TKE team came in first overall in the games, with Sigma Phi Epsilon placing second and Sigma Nu third.

Tournament raises $500

By Britt Owen
Collegian Reporter

Twenty-seven teams played in the 10th annual Kappa Sigma softball tournament Saturday and Sunday at the Twin Oaks Softball Complex to benefit Big Brothers and Big Sisters of Manhattan Inc.

About $500 was raised for the Kappa Sig philanthropy, said Chip Wharff, head of the fraternity's softball tournament. The amount donated will depend on bills incurred and the cost of trophies, which were not sponsored this year, as they have been in the past.

Johnson County and Schurle Signs Inc. battled for the championship in the final game played Sunday afternoon. Schurle Signs pulled away with the victory in the seventh inning for a 10-9 win.

The teams were made up mostly of Kansas residents with the exception of one team from Lincoln, Neb. Teams from the Manhattan city league, fraternities and individual teams participated in the tournament.

An entry fee of $75 was paid by each team in the double-elimination tournament, Wharff said.

The number of teams participating in the tournament increased from last year, and Wharff said he plans to have at least 32 teams participate next year.

Kappa Sigma gave team trophies to the top four teams. Third place went to Briggs Jeep-Eagle Inc. from Manhattan and fourth place to the Spangles from Alma.

Members of the winning team, Schurle Signs, each received individual trophies.

The softball tournament is the Kappa Sigma's main philanthropy event to raise money.

"We do some things in the fall like taking (kids from Big Brothers and Big Sisters) to the lake," Wharff said.

Tornadoes hit Kansas

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — A band of tornadoes hit north-central Kansas on Sunday as temperatures in other parts of the state reached record highs, the National Weather Service said.

About 10 tornoadoes were reported touching down northwest of Phillipsburg between 6 p.m. and 7:30 p.m. Sunday, according to a dispatcher at the Phillips County Sheriff's Department.

The dispatcher said most of the tornadoes were sighted in the open and that no damage or injuries were reported.

Churches throughout the area dedicated prayers Sunday morning to the families of Iowa crewmen.

"We have lost 47 of our number in a tragic way," said Cmdr. John L. Fitzgerald, a chaplain, in a service at the Norfolk Naval Air Station. "Our faith helps us to handle what science cannot answer, the mystery of death."

A red rose, a yellow ribbon with the number 47 on it and a book containing the names of the dead were taken to the altar.

Fitzgerald said the Iowa tragedy and that of a recently lost Soviet submarine "put political differences aside and unite the human family as one."

On Monday morning, President Bush will lead a memorial service in a base hangar that can accommodate 3,000 people.

In consideration for the students losing lot A29, about 500 spaces in lot D1E were changed from general to student-on'y, he said.

"Since the percentage of students using lot D1E is already about 78 percent, you are taking away spots in A29 but you are really not giving the students anything in return," said Chris Kern, fifth-year student in landscape architecture and chairman of Senate Student Affairs and Social Services Committee.

One of the concerns raised about the installation of parking meters is the four-hour time period it would allow a person to park before putting more money in the meter.

"The council will watch this next year and if four hours is bad, I bet we hear about it," said Michael Finnegan, professor of social anthropology and social work and faculty member on the council. "That will dictate if six hours is going to be better or, more probably, if two hours will be better."

The issue of a parking garage was raised as a possible solution to the parking problems south of the Union.

A rough estimate of the cost of a 1,000-stall parking garage by a construction firm specializing in that type of project is about $12 million, said Richard Brenner, council chairman and physical plant supervisor for the Department of Housing.

carried a no-hitter into the seventh before K-State first baseman Mike Rosenboom singled to break the spell. The Wildcats scored an unearned run in the first inning for its only tally.

K-State starter David Hierholzer (5-2) scattered seven hits while allowing only one earned run, but his bases-loaded walk in the fifth — set up by a two-out error — proved to be the deciding run.

In the nightcap, Bill Schafer (4-3) was the tough-luck loser for the Wildcats. Kevin Kaufman and Collins, back from a broken hand, each had two hits for K-State.

The Wildcats, now 25-14 overall and 3-11 in Big Eight play, travel Tuesday to Wichita State.

All the proposals submitted must meet a certain set of criteria established by the Community Service Program, she said.

"We have a long list of guidelines, but the primary one is that it must be a community service project. It is not graduate student research, and it is not intended to supplement programs that are already in existence," Peak said.

The number of awards given is based on how many qualified projects that are proposed and the number of awards that can be funded, Peak said.

"We will take as many proposals as we can get," she said. "We would love to have more and make more awards."

The application process for fall awards will begin in early October.

Ted Varney, retired co-owner of Varney's Book Store, worked for his father at the book store while in high school and developed the idea for Crazy Ted in the 1950s. Varney would wear a straw hat and a yellow apron with dollar signs on it to promote the image.

Ted Varney recalls store's past

Buying at 'crazy' prices part of marketing scheme

By Craig Hamrick
Collegian Reporter

In the 1950s, a self-described crazy man stalked the green-dyed sidewalks in front of Varney's Book Store.

"I developed the idea that I was Crazy Ted, and I paid crazy prices for used books," said Ted Varney, the retired co-owner of the store. "I'd wear a straw hat with a 4-by-6 inch card on it that said 'highest prices' and a yellow apron with red dollar signs all over it. I kept the competition guessing."

As part of his unusual marketing practices, Varney had the sidewalks in front of the store colored.

"Once when I remodeled, I had the sidewalks stained green," he said. "It kind of went along with all the 'Crazy Ted' business. When it rains, you can still see some green there."

At the turn of the century, Varney's father had a bookstore and candy shop on Poyntz Avenue. The Varney family lived in a house one block from the store. Ted was born in the south bedroom of the house in 1906.

"My father was an avid member of the Bull Moose (Progressive) political party, so he named me Theodore Roosevelt Varney," he said.

In 1916, Varney's father had the bookstore built at its present location in Aggieville.

When Varney was in high school, he worked sweeping floors at his father's store. He said he can remember when textbook prices were much lower than they are now.

"In 1916, an economics book cost $1.39," Varney said.

Today, new economics texts range from about $25 to $41.

While he attended K-State, Varney became a clerk at the bookstore. It was the 1920s, and Kansas was a dry state.

"When I was in college, there was no alcohol ... legally," he said. "We paid $25 for a gallon of alcohol in a tin. The bootleggers brought it in from Kansas City, where they probably paid about half that for it."

While he was at K-State, he met Helene Hahn, whom he later married.

Ted was a member of the Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity and Helene was an Alpha Delta Pi sorority member. They met at an SAE open house.

"That was the first time I saw him," Helene said with a fond glance at the man she has been married to for 56 years.

At a second open house, males and females were supposed to be paired by randomly assigned numbers.

"He called and wanted to know what my number was," Helene said. "I said that wouldn't be fair. He kept begging and begging, and finally I said that would be 'bad' luck. He got the picture so he came over, and he said, 'I've got number 13, who's got 13?'

"That's the way we did it then," she said and smiled. "So instead of bad luck, I had good luck."

The Varneys have two children — Bill, a local accountant, and Helen, an instructor at Yale University in New Haven, Conn.

For 2½ years during World War II, Ted worked with the general hospital outfit in Italy and Africa. It is a period he describes as "too damn long."

After the war, Ted returned to the bookstore, and business increased

Drought prompts Hayden to request disaster assistance

From Staff and Wire Reports

A continuing drought in Kansas has prompted Gov. Mike Hayden to request that most of the state be declared a disaster area while agriculture experts attempt to assess the effect of the weekend's high temperatures on the wheat crop.

Hayden said Monday in Topeka that he has asked U.S. Agriculture Secretary Clayton Yeutter to declare most of Kansas a disaster area for wheat, hay and pasture losses because of the drought.

The designation would affect all but nine counties in the southeast corner of the state, if Yeutter approves it. It would make farmers eligible for certain federal disaster assistance.

Record-breaking heat scorched wheat fields over the weekend and could cut the Kansas wheat harvest to the lowest level in 27 years, experts said Monday.

"This is going to do it a world of harm. Now about everything that could hurt the wheat has hit it," Jim Shroyer, an agronomist at the Kansas State University Extension Service, told The Kansas City Star.

Temperatures topped the 100-degree mark at Dodge City and Salina Sunday, and readings in the 90s were common again Monday.

The 1989 crop was estimated at 212 million bushels late last week by the Kansas Farm Bureau. The estimate included damage from the continuing drought and a period of cold weather in February, but it did not account for the weekend of unseasonably hot weather.

"I think we're down below 200 million pretty easily now after the heat," said Tom Roberts, executive vice president of the Wheat Quality Council. That could make it the smallest harvest since 1963, when Kansas wheat growers harvested 185.5 million bushels.

Steven Graham, administrator for the Kansas Wheat Council, said about 12.4 million acres are normally planted in Kansas. He said in 1985, 433 million bushels were harvested for a yield of 38.1 bushels per acre, which is slightly above normal.

"Even if the harvest does not go under the projections we are still talking about one half of what is normal," Graham said.

He said Sumner county and other areas around Wichita should still provide a higher yield than most Kansas counties, but it would not compensate for the bad crop conditions throughout the state.

"The area west of Abilene and north of Wichita is very bad," Graham said.

He said Stafford County has reported losing trees and Bermuda Grass to the dry conditions.

The governor said at a news conference that he also has asked the secretary to make all grazing land in the Chinese students begin class boycott

By The Associated Press

BEIJING — Students at most Beijing colleges exuberantly began a class boycott Monday to press for sweeping democratic reforms, and they tried through speeches and posters to enlist workers in the cause.

Authorities took no open steps to interfere, but sources said more than 10,000 soldiers from outlying counties moved into Beijing over the weekend in preparation for an eventual crackdown.

The sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the troops had been used in the past to quash civil unrest. Some student leaders said they feared imminent arrest.

The exact number of participants in the boycott was not known, but students at a dozen schools with total enrollment of more than 50,000 said virtually all their classmates were striking.

The boycott was the largest in 40 years of communist rule, even though there were no reports of students joining in other cities as the student activists hoped.

"Now is the time for all students in Beijing and nationwide to united to fight for democracy!" a student speaker at Qinghua University yelled.

Bush pleased with progress achieved during first 100 days

By The Associated Press

CHICAGO — President Bush on Monday pronounced himself "pleased with the progress we've made" in 100 days in office and said he will soon make key arms control and foreign policy decisions that will chart a course for the future.

"In three short months we've made a good start coming to grips with issues demanding urgent attention and decisive action," he told newspaper publishers attending The Associated Press annual luncheon.

He ticked off his savings and loan legislation, ethics proposals, the beginning of a war on drugs and agreements with Congress on the federal budget and Contra aid.

At the same time, he said defense and foreign policy reviews, environmental legislation and a program to deal with homelessness "are all on the near horizon."

Bush spoke at the luncheon a short while after Vice President Dan Quayle told The Associated Press annual meeting that the biggest surprise of his first 100 days in office is the enjoyment he receives from foreign travel. The publishers who attended the AP functions were also in town for the annual meetings of the American Newspaper Publishers Association.

Quayle, setting out on a trip to Australia and Asia, also said he had an opportunity to work closely with the president every day "to see how he formulates his policies."

The Bush-Quayle team took office on Jan. 20 and marks 100 days on Saturday.

Before reciting his own report card, Bush pledged to "follow every intelligence lead in the effort to win freedom for Terry Anderson." The AP's chief Middle East correspondent has been held hostage since disappearing in Belrut more than four years ago. The president said he was not able to provide any good news on Anderson's prospects for freedom, but said, "We will go the extra mile and do what we can."

City planners forecast debt decrease by 1995

By Robert Short
Staff Writer

Although Manhattan's outstanding debt is more than 70 percent of the maximum amount allowed by state law, city planners project a substantial decrease in the debt by 1995.

Manhattan's improvement projections, called a capital improvement program, are outlined in a six-year plan describing city spending. The Manhattan City Commission will discuss the 1990-1995 projections at its work session today and will again consider accepting the projections at its regular meeting May 2.

Manhattan is in debt 22.3 percent of its total tax base, with the maximum it can reach being 30 percent. By 1995, Manhattan's debt is projected to drop to 13 percent of its total tax base and it is "a good trend to bring that percentage down," said Curt Wood, director of city finance.

Manhattan has $7.7 million available for general obligation bonds. The city has a tax base of roughly $101 million, Wood said.

Although this is a significant drop in the amount of debt for the city, the current level of indebtedness is not uncommon for Manhattan, said J.R. Pearson, assistant city manager.

"We are near our debt limit, but it is a historical thing," Pearson said. "It is what I would term 'good debt.' We have never defaulted on a bond issue."

State law allows cities to be in debt no more than 30 percent of their total tax base. The tax base is figured from assessed valuations of properties in the city.

General obligation bonds for street improvements and other city projects go toward the city's total debt and usually have a 10- or 20-year term.

Projects involving water or sewer projects are exempt from this debt, Wood said. These projects are paid for with property tax.

"The city has a tax lid of 5 percent property tax increase each year," Wood said.

Incurring debt while maintaining the ability to pay off that debt is a normal process, Pearson said. When the amount of debt threatens to match or surpass the debt limit set by the state, the city will be forced to stop the funding for some capital projects.

The purpose of the six-year projections is to prevent the city from being in a situation where the state has to step in, he said. The state sta-

Japanese leader to resign

TOKYO — Prime Minister Noboru Takeshita announced Tuesday he will resign to take responsibility for a loss of public trust caused by a widening political scandal, Chief Cabinet Secretary Keizo Obuchi said.

After a Cabinet meeting, Takeshita told leaders of his Liberal Democratic Party he will step down, Obuchi said in a live television broadcast.

Polls indicate the scandal and an unpopular sales tax, which went into effect April 1, have made Takeshita the most unpopular prime minister since World War II.

"Prime Minister Takeshita announced that he would resign as soon as the budget is passed in order to clarify his responsibility for the public's distrust in politicians due to the Recruit question," Obuchi said.

Takeshita, 65, who became prime minister in November 1987, has denied wrongdoing but acknowledged receiving more than $1 million in what he called legal political donations from the Recruit Co. News reports over the weekend said he also borrowed $381,700 from the information-publishing giant in 1987, returning the funds a few months later.

Poison antidote requested

TBILISI, U.S.S.R. — Georgians hospitalized with damage to their central nervous systems asked the government Monday for an antidote to whatever chemical soldiers used when dispersing a pro-independence demonstration.

Foreign Ministry spokesmen in Moscow have denied accusations by Georgian activists that troopers used chemical weapons in the confrontation April 9, but the Georgian Communist Party chief confirmed Monday some of the 20 deaths were caused by gas.

Nodar Notadze, a literary scholar and one of 40 members of a commission investigating the attack on the protesters, said Georgian representatives would take the plea to a meeting of the Communist Party Central Committee that begins Tuesday in Moscow.

Nino Djavakhishvili, also on the commission, said at least 700 people were injured. Iza Ordzhonikidze, a third commission member, said 600 were poisoned.

Ordzhonikidze, a poet and museum director, said half of those still hospitalized were children from a contaminated school next to the demonstration site who became ill days after the clash.

No soldiers were hurt by the gas, and doctors believe they had taken an antidote they now refuse to give to the injured, said Gamkrelidze, the pharmacologist.

NASA fire forces evacuation

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — A small equipment room fire forced the evacuation of about 600 workers from a building housing the space shuttle launch control center Monday, but it was quickly extinguished.

NASA said the blaze would have no impact on Friday's scheduled liftoff of Atlantis on a planetary mission.

The fire was on the fourth floor in a room that supplies air conditioning to part of the four-story building. The launch control center is on the third floor.

Space agency spokesman Dick Young said material used to insulate equipment caught fire, but caused only "minimal" damage. The workers were evacuated as a precaution and were back inside the building within an hour. The blaze was under investigation.

Psychiatrists protest law

WASHINGTON — Psychiatrists are up in arms about a new law allowing the military to train its psychologists to prescribe powerful drugs for depression and mental illness.

It's the newest battlefield for a long-running dispute over who is qualified to write prescriptions. Psychiatrists, who have medical degrees, say their qualifications are indispensable. But psychologists, who don't have M.D.'s, suggest money is really at the heart of efforts to keep them out.

Currently, no state permits psychologists to prescribe psychotropic drugs, which range from mild tranquilizers to anti-psychotic medications that can affect the cardiovascular and motor systems.

Bogina back after surgery

TOPEKA — Sen. Gus Bogina, R-Shawnee, returned to the Statehouse Monday for the first time since he underwent heart bypass surgery on April 4.

Bogina spent an hour and a half visiting friends and colleagues at the Capitol, but did not sit in on the Senate Ways and Means Committee meeting, the panel which he heads as chairman.

The committee gave Bogina a standing ovation when he made an appearance, and he told its members he was feeling fine and his recovery from the surgery was going well.

Fifty faculty to receive award

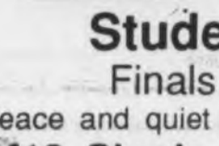
Fifty faculty members from the College of Arts and Sciences have been named recipients of $500 William L. Stamey Teaching Awards. Stamey was the dean of the college from 1970-87.

Fourty-four of the recipients were nominated by their departments and six were selected as at-large recipients by the dean's staff. The recipients will be recognized at spring commencement ceremonies, May 13.

"We want to promote and foster distinguished teaching in every department at Kansas State," said Thomas Isenhour, dean of the college.

Correction

Due to a reporter's error, the classification and spelling of D'anne Larsen, graduate student in grain science, was incorrect in Monday's Collegian.



U-LearN needs energetic, self-motivating, dependable students to fill vacancies in our staff. Work study eligibilities preferred. All backgrounds considered. Flexible work scheduling. Organizers discuss reasons for cancellation of lectures

By Paula Selby
Staff Writer

The cancellation of two recent lectures has caused some speculation from organizers.

John Corigliano, who composed music for the movie "Altered States," cancelled his April 12 speech. The lecture was scheduled in conjunction with the Panorama of American Music, a week-long event sponsored by the music department.

It is still "speculative what his reason was (for cancelling)," said Richard Seaton, University attorney. "The reason he stated had to do with the program ... the selection of pieces going to be played."

Jonathon Kozol, author and social critic, was scheduled as the third Lou Douglas lecturer of the semester on April 6, but cancelled due to illness, said Karen McCulloh, coordinator of the series.

Kozol's secretary called April 4, the Tuesday before his scheduled Thursday speech to cancel his appearance, McCulloh said. Under normal circumstances, the lecture would be rescheduled, but because it was in conjunction with a two-day literary conference, rescheduling was not feasible, she said.

A conference grant was partially paying Kozol's honorarium of $3,500, so those funds would not have been available at a later date, McCulloh said.

Kozol had signed a contract to appear. However, the contract allows for illness so the University has no recourse in recovering the costs of publicity and other incidental fees incurred.

"I don't think we've ever had a cancellation before. You're left with no recourse," she said.

Corigliano's cancellation, though, is a different situation. The University did not have him sign a written contract, but an oral agreement was made.

"Oral agreements are harder to prove," Seaton said, "but we are considering to seek to recover some of our costs ... It's a little early to predict.

"We're looking at the question of whether (Corigliano) violated that oral agreement."

Measles case reported at Lafene

By Karen Allen
Staff Writer

There is a 98 percent chance that one K-State student has contracted measles after being exposed two weeks ago to a Fort Hays State University student with the illness, said Dr. Guy Smith, physician at Lafene Student Health Center.

"Students who haven't been immunized for measles or who were immunized before 15 months of age should be immunized immediately," Smith said.

Students who are unsure of when they were immunized should be innoculated because there are no ill effects to being immunized twice, he said.

The student, a resident of West Hall, has shown symptoms of "real" or 7-day measles, Smith said.

"Seven-day measles can produce a fairly serious illness, but more so in young children than in college students," he said.

Symptoms for the illness begin appearing two weeks after exposure. A fever, sore throat, irritated eyes and a cough appear first. They are followed two to three days later by spots in the mouth, Smith said. One day after the spots appear, a red rash develops on the face and then spreads to the body.

The other form of measles is known as the German or 3-day measles, and is also referred to as rubella. This type is mainly a concern to pregnant women, Smith said, adding that no one can develop German measles after being exposed to 7-day measles.

Because there is no medicine that modifies the illness, prevention is important, Smith said. So far there is only one case and University health officials "want it to stay that way."

Those in need of an innoculation can get one at Lafene between 8 a.m. to noon, and 1 to 4 p.m. Students must show a validated identification card and 1989 spring semester fee card.

Thought police dictate American beliefs

Commentary

Mark Schmeller
Collegian Columnist

Dr. Scott Corder of Ottawa has had his physician's license suspended by the State Board of Healing Arts.

Why, you ask? Did he leave his Timex in some poor joker's large intestine? Get caught with his hand in the barbituate jar? Use a rusty nail for a catheter? Get a bit too handsy during a hernia examination?

Nope. By all accounts, there is nothing wrong with Corder's work as a physician. In 10 years of practice, there hasn't been a single significant complaint about his work. Indeed, the suspension of his physician's license has nothing to do with his work as a physician. As officials will readily admit, their sole problem with Corder is with what he believes, not with what he does as a doctor.

You see, Corder happens to believe in UFOs and extraterrestrials. Unlike those of us who don't rule out the possibility of intelligent life on other planets, or are prone to see flashes of light and green creatures after midnight, Corder really believes.

Although he had been interested in extraterrestrial things for 11 years, his meeting several years ago with Donna Butts really stirred things up.

Butts claims that the apostle Peter, now a space alien, often visits the basement of her home in Russell as a real "physical being or as a holographic projection." During one of these meetings several years ago, Peter told Butts a number of personal things about Corder that only an extraterrestrial could have known.

Soon, the apostle from outer space began to warn Butts and Corder of the coming period of tribulation, which, for the benefit of all you apocalypse freaks, began on May 14, 1988.

The drought in the Midwest and the Armenian earthquake were just the start. Another earthquake is scheduled to hit Kansas City this summer, and we can count on a limited nuclear war sometime within the next two years. Although the role of Dan Quayle in this global conflict is as yet unknown, Butts and Corder do tell us that fellow Kansan Bob Dole "will be the next, greatest and last President of the United States." Hard to believe.

The real trouble began when Corder, acting as a good American citizen, sent these predictions to the FBI, CIA and the Pentagon. They were not amused. Nor was the State Board of Healing Arts, which sent an investigator around to his office and ordered that he get a psychiatric examination before he could practice medicine again.

On the brighter side of things, that great American tabloid, the "Weekly World News," published Corder's story and predictions.

Despite my profound tolerance and open-mindedness concerning the beliefs of others, I have a hard time buying anything that Corder and Butts say. After all, I always thought that an apostle from outer space would have better things to do than reveal privy information about a family practitioner to a woman in a basement. And even though the stuff about tribulations makes sense, "President Bob Dole" stretches things a bit.

But doesn't taking someone's career away for being slightly off center go too far? Since when are the tabloid-inspired fantasies of a few meatheads dangerous enough to justify the Orwellian repression of the Kansas State Board of Healing Arts? And what meaning does the Corder case hold for the rest of us?

First of all, it means that the line between being eccentric and being stark raving mad has been blurred to the point where anything that deviates from the norm can be viewed as evidence of insanity. 'Tis a strange country indeed where you can find the "Weekly World News" at every checkout line, but lose your job for believing the contents.

A few months back, I read the personal account of a gun-freak doctor in "Soldier of Fortune" magazine. As far as I could tell, this man had been doing this kind of neo-fascist militant stuff for years and still maintained his doctor's license. But Corder, with his harmless little beliefs in apostles from outer space, will probably lose his. In other words, MDs who pack M-16s are acceptable, GPs who see UFOs are dangerous. What a country!

The Corder case set me to thinking about what beliefs I have that might cost me my livelihood. Will my belief in the Loch Ness Monster keep me out of graduate school? Will the fact that I hold incontrovertable evidence that Elvis and Jim Morrison are still alive keep me from ever landing a decent job? And will my unwavering belief that Orel Hershiser is the Antichrist cost me this cushy job at the Collegian? The Corder case has got me worried.

The thought police are here, Americans. They sit on licensing and review boards, passing judgment on what "acceptable" beliefs are, forcing people to conform to their bland intellectual and personal standards. You may not find this frightening, but I can tell you that Elvis is quite disturbed.

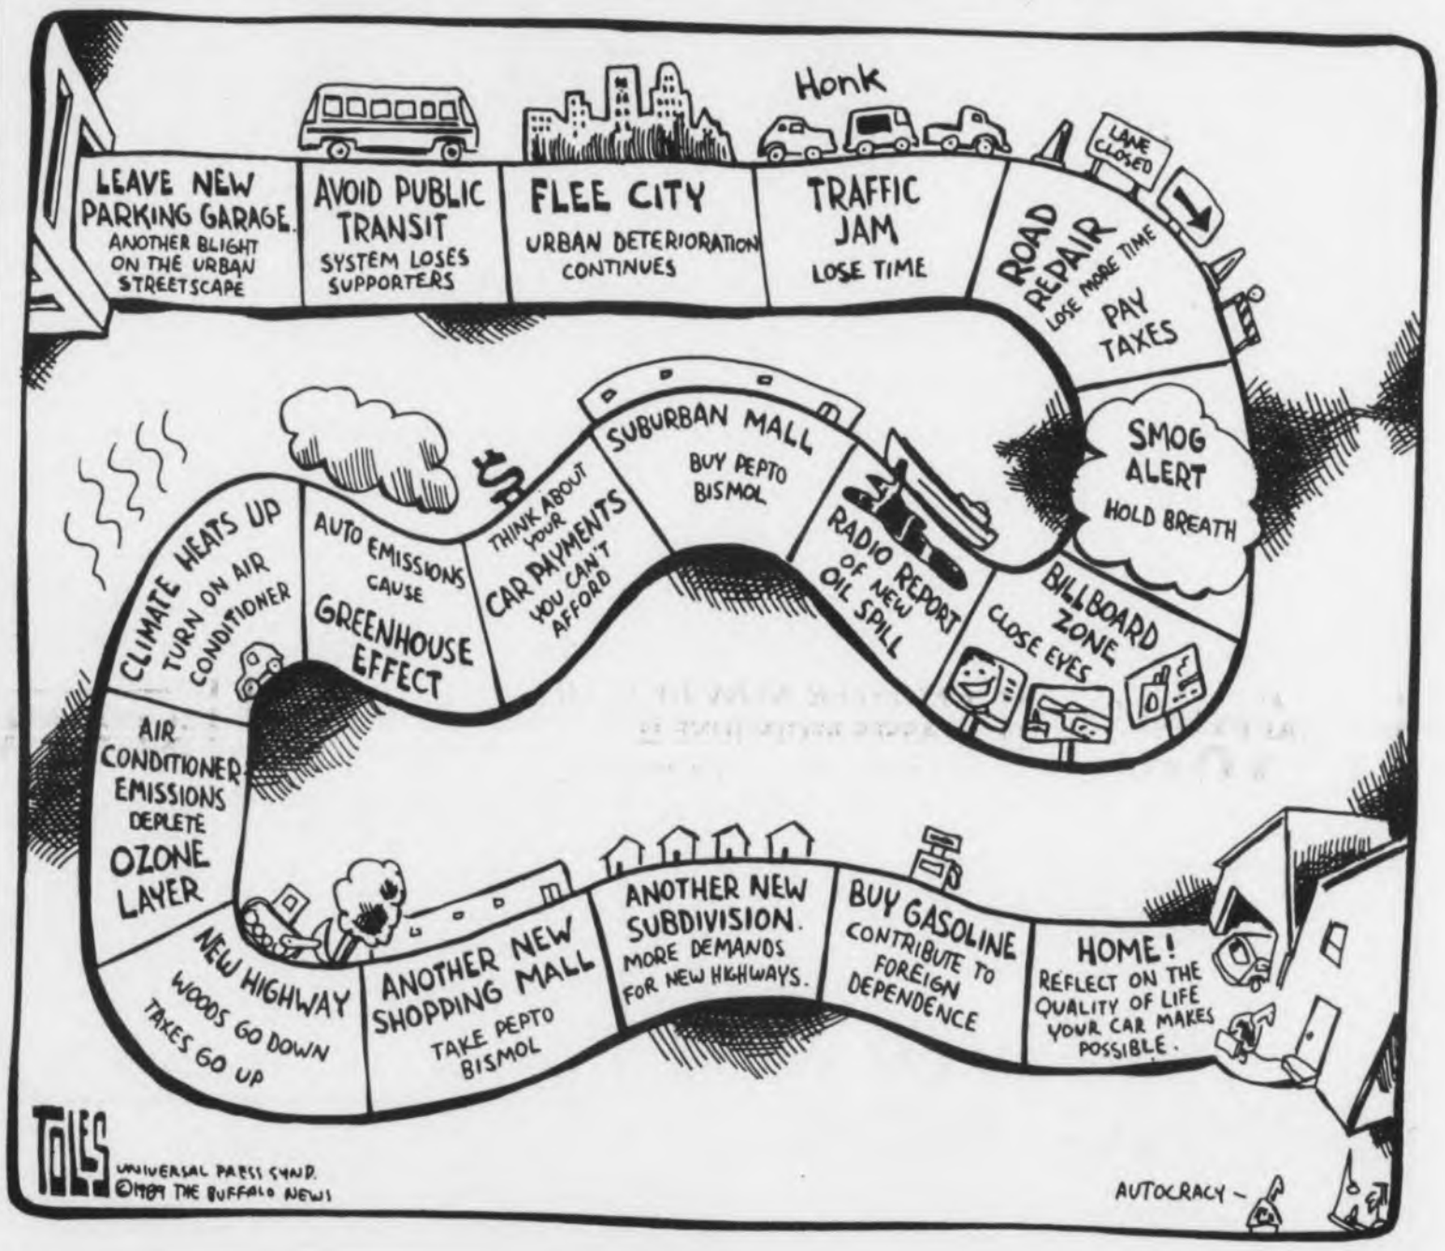
Students demonstrate with activism in China

Ah yes, that student activism spirit has caught on (just like we knew it would).

Those crazy kids in Beijing are demonstrating against their government, of all things. Why, they're demanding press freedom, better pay for intellectuals, more government aid to education (imagine that) and an attack on corruption.

The students are now participating in a national boycott of classes. Although the exact number of students in the demonstration is unknown, a dozen schools with enrollments of more than 50,000 have ditched their classes. For human rights, of all the blasted things.

One of the more impressive aspects of the boycott, which was the largest in the country's 40 years of Communist rule, was meant to be a peaceful and legal protest and was not meant to overthrow the government or party.



The boycott is a tribute to Hu Yaobang, who was dismissed as head of the Communist Party two years ago for failing to silence student protests. Students said he symbolized hopes for political change, and among the students' demands was that the party leadership re-evaluate Hu and acknowledge his contributions.

The government isn't reacting openly to stop the boycotts, but the troops are moving in for an eventual crackdown.

But for now the students are enjoying something we take for granted — their voice.

Imagine fighting for democracy and getting it — at least for a while — in a country with an authoritarian form of government.

Although top officials are refusing to meet with the students, saying that China is not ready for democracy, it's obvious to the students and the rest of the world it is.

Other Perspectives

The University Health Center has recognized the need for a more available and anonymous procedure for condom distribution by installing dispensers in the center's first floor bathrooms and the back entrance.

Other University officials need to do the same.

The Health Center's new machines will make it less intimidating for students to purchase the condoms.

Currently, students can pick up condoms from a fishbowl in the center's pharmacy and wait in line to pay 10 cents for them. At night, students must ring the doorbell and purchase condoms from the on-duty nurse.

James Griesen, vice chancellor for student affairs said Tuesday that he likes offering condoms, "in a health context" rather than at other areas on campus.

... But Griesen and other officials, as well as parents, must realize that the dirty word "sex" is a part of campus life. They must overlook such archaic reservations in order to make it easier for students to protect themselves against AIDS and other diseases.

This means installing condom machines in residence halls.

Leave cars home

Editor,

In response to your editorial on the "new parking solution" Friday, and to everyone else who complains about K-State's parking problem — it's not parking that's the problem, it's driving. Too many people drive to campus when they could easily walk or bicycle.

Yes, there are those who live too far away for walking or biking for that to be practical, and perhaps a public transportation system for Manhattan should be part of the solution, but many people drive to campus simply because they're lazy. At least that's the only explanation I can find.

I see numerous cars being started each morning for their mile, or less, daily drive to campus, whereas I'm on my seven-minute bike ride or 20-minute walk to work.

Come on, people. You all live closer to campus than I do.

So what if walking or biking takes a little more time. How much time do you spend looking for a parking place once you're here? How much time do you spend walking from your car to your classes or office? How often do you leave home early just to get a parking spot?

Walking and cycling are healthy for you and the environment. Let's not pave all of campus treating the "parking symptoms"; let's cure the "driving disease." Spring's here, it's warm and it's a great time to break old habits. Leave the car at home.

Grew up too much

Editor,

Three recent occurrences have finally bestirred me into some sort of action. Externally, the three would not appear to be related, but in a deeper sense they truly are.

The first was the suicide of Abbie Hoffman. No one person can be more readily identified with the activism and uproar of the '60s than Hoffman. He was a man of deeply felt convictions and causes, from his days as a Freedom Rider in the deep South to his role in the demonstrations at the 1968 Democratic Convention.

He saw what he perceived to be wrong and set out to do something about it. No matter if you agreed with him or not, you could not argue the fact that he was at least doing something, if only calling attention to the problem as he saw it.

Even while in hiding after his involvement in a drug deal, he took up a cause, becoming an environmental writer.

After prison, he began taking up his causes again, but his former colleagues said he found it just was not the same. His old buddies had largely gone "establishment" and he just didn't seem to be able to inflame young people anymore.

So, like the tired old soldier he probably felt he was, he decided to just fade away.

It's a shame that Hoffman dies just in time to roll over in his grave at the second occurrence: Student Activism Week at K-State.

Activism and passive resistance for their own sake, without commitment, are a waste of time. The '60s were about more than bell-bottoms, love beads and tie-dyed shirts. It was a time of a real revolution in this country.

Don't believe it? Look at how this country was in the early '60s as opposed to now. We got into Vietnam without so much as a public whimper of protest because the government said we had to, to halt the "spread of communism."

What's happening now, when they try these same tired old excuses again?

However, the Union Program Council wants us to believe that if you call it student activism, and you make it look like the good old days, it will be student activism. This on a campus where the majority of students could not be bothered to vote on an issue that affected us all.

Well, you can call a decoy a duck because it looks like a duck, but that doesn't change the fact that it is still a fake duck!

The third occurrence happened in the Collegian when Dwayne Lively told me and my baby-boomer buddies to grow up.

Maybe someday when you are old enough to have some memories, you'll appreciate a chance to look back every once in a while. Until such time — as you get all nostalgic listening to "Poison" on the golden oldies station — if you don't like our music, don't listen. If you don't like our shows, don't watch them.

Maybe that's our problem nowadays. We grew up too much, too thoroughly, and we no longer believe we can make a difference anymore. Hoffman never did grow up that much. Maybe the rest of us shouldn't have either.

Unfair balance

Editor,

A recent commentary in the letter section of the Collegian suggested that both creationism and evolution be taught in schools. This would give an unfair balance in favor of the creationist.

Christians already are taught creationism at home and at church. If things were really to be fair, both creationism and evolution would be taught in both school and at church. This, as the "Bible Proponents" put it, would allow people to make their own decision.

People feel a great need to have others share their beliefs. This need must go back to the "pack instinct" unevolved man needed in order to survive in primitive times.

Golden Key adviser awarded for work with honor society

By Angie Smith
Collegian Reporter

Willard Nelson's title may be "associate director of the Center for Student and Professional Services in the College of Education," but an award presented to him Thursday certifies that his efforts are above and beyond his listed responsibilities.

Nelson was elected as the 1988-89 University Activities Board Adviser of the Year for his work with Golden Key National Honor Society, said Sally Routson, coordinator of student activities.

Nelson has served as the adviser to Golden Key since its chartering in 1981.

"A person questions why one is nominated for such an award," Nelson said. "The trust and confidence that the students and others have in you makes a person feel very grateful.

"You don't ask for nominations, which makes it a humbling matter. It's a great honor."

In his years as an adviser, the K-State chapter has received the prestigious Key Chapter Award four consecutive years and was named the top chapter in the nation two of those years, Routson said. At the 1988 national convention, Nelson won the highest honor given by Golden Key, the President's award.

"Mr. Nelson is a great man," said Jeff Kimbell, junior in electrical engineering and president of Golden Key. "He consistently challenges chapter members to maintain the high standards that have been set by previous chapter members."

Student organizations receive applications from the University Activities Board stating that nominations for the award are being accepted. The letters submitted are reviewed by a UAB subcommittee which then forwards up to five applications to the UAB, which selects the winner.

Art show to benefit research

Topeka AIDS Project to receive funds

By The Collegian Staff

Artists and art lovers can help fund AIDS research.

Darren Bradley, senior in fine arts, and Lori Klopp, graduate student in art, are co-organizers of the "Art Against AIDS" art show to benefit the Topeka AIDS Project (TAP) research.

"When we first started to talk about the show, we set our goals and parameters," Bradley said. "We wanted a professional looking art show which included the works of students, faculty, community artists, and artists from around the state.

"We also had to put the show together without any operating costs so we could give all of the profit to TAP."

The 28 pieces of art in the show are of various media, including paintings, sculptures, lithographs, and photographs. All of the works were donated by area artists.

The show will be on display and available to be bid upon at Espresso Royale until 6 p.m. Monday, when the pieces will be sold to the highest bidder.

"We (Espresso Royale) have always had art displayed on the walls," said Marc Paul, Espresso Royale manager. "I thought it would be a nice show and it is for a good cause.

"They (TAP staff) were really excited when I called and told them that we were going to donate some money. They also wanted to get the show to Topeka."

The show was first displayed in conjunction with the K-State Players' production "As Is," which dealt with the acquired immune deficiency syndrome crisis. The art show was displayed in the Purple Masque Theatre during the run of the play.

"I think the play brought a lot of people in to the see the art and the art brought a few of the people in to see the play," Bradley said.

"This has been kind of a merging between the art and theater groups," he said. "The art show has broken down a few of the boundaries between the two groups."

After the play closed, the show was set up at the Studio Arts Gallery during the first half of April.

Ann Carter, instructor in continuing education and contributing artist to the show, donated a print of her work, "Irma Does Her Civic Duty."

"I was in New York City about two semesters ago when I saw an Art Against AIDS show and was impressed with the idea," Carter said. "(AIDS resea.ch) is something that needs money right now, and they need the money from wherever they can get it."

Friends of Iowa's crewmen gather

By The Associated Press

NORFOLK, Va. — Thousands of grieving friends and relatives of the fallen 47 crewmen from the battleship USS Iowa gathered quietly Monday and heard President Bush praise their loved ones as "brothers in eternity."

"We join today in mourning for the 47 who perished, and in fact, for the 11 who survived," the president told a packed memorial service at Norfolk Naval Air Station. "They all were, in the words of a poet, 'the men behind the guns.'

"They came from Hidalgo, Texas; Cleveland, Ohio; Tampa, Florida; Costa Mesa, California. They came to the Navy as strangers, served the Navy as shipmates and friends, and left the Navy as brothers in eternity. In the finest Navy tradition, they served proudly on a great battleship, the USS Iowa."

Victims' relatives and hundreds of sailors and officers in dress blues were among the 6,000 people crowded into a hangar for the service. A bouquet of red roses was placed in front of the podium; behind were an American flag and the battleship's banners.

Students demand reform

Classes boycotted in protest

By The Associated Press

BEIJING — Students at most Beijing colleges exuberantly began a class boycott Monday to press for sweeping democratic reforms, and they tried through speeches and posters to enlist workers in the cause.

Authorities took no open steps to interfere, but sources said more than 10,000 soldiers from outlying counties moved into Beijing during the weekend in preparation for an eventual crackdown.

The sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the troops had been used in the past to quash civil unrest. Some student leaders said they feared imminent arrest.

The exact number of participants in the boycott was not known, but students at a dozen schools with total enrollment of more than 50,000 said virtually all their classmates were striking.

The boycott was the largest in 40 years of communist rule, even though there were no reports of students joining in other cities as the student activists hoped.

"Now is the time for all students in Beijing and nationwide to united to fight for democracy!" a student speaker at Qinghua University yelled from a banner-strewn dormitory balcony to about 1,500 wildly cheering listeners. He proclaimed the balcony a "free speech platform" and invited orators with all views.

Students from several schools marched around campus and on nearby steets, gave speeches on street corners and plastered copies of the first edition of their own newspaper on lampposts and trees to publicize their demands for press freedom, an end to official privileges and corruption, and respect for human rights.

The boycott marks a new phase in the campaign after a week in which the students, mourning the death of former reformist party chief Hu Yaobang, tried to confront the leadership directly. They marched repeatedly to central Beijing's Tiananmen Square and tried to storm Communist Party headquarters.

Top officials, who have begun market-style economic reforms but insist China is not ready for democracy, refused to meet with them.

Student leaders stressed Monday they wanted their protest to be peaceful and legal.

Highway bill to be discussed

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Gov. Mike Hayden said Monday he is optimistic the Legislature will approve a highway improvement program during the wrapup session that starts Wednesday.

He acknowledged the final plan might be smaller than one passed by the Senate, but he hopes it will be bigger than one approved by the House.

A joint conference committee will try to put the finishing touches on a compromise this week to present to the two houses. The Senate version would cost $2.9 billion and the House version $1.3 billion.

The House is scheduled to debate Wednesday a proposed sales tax increase critical to financing the Senate version. The bill would raise the sales tax a half-percent, with half the new revenue going to highways and the other half to schools.

"I think a reasonable compromise is possible," Hayden said.

He also said he believes support is growing in the House for a larger highway package than that body passed — including one that would include a sales tax increase.

"Support is growing for the highway package," Hayden said. "Momentum is growing rapidly."

Group combines folk music, heavy metal on third album

By Doug Fall
Collegian Reviewer

Review

Somewhere between Bob Dylan and The Replacements lies Drivin' n' Cryin'. With its third album, "Mystery Road," the members of the band have a work that should definitely speed them on to recognition and success.

Hailing from Atlanta, Ga., the same area as college-radio greats R.E.M. and Guadalcanal Diary, Drivin' n' Cryin' is obviously influenced by its successful predecessors. Peter Buck, guitarist for R.E.M., even makes a guest appearance on one of the tracks.

Despite this looming shadow, Drivin' n' Cryin' has achieved a distinct, identifiable sound. Folk music as well as a version of heavy metal are tossed into this potpourri of musical styles that all seem to center on the style first popularized by R.E.M.

Many bands seem to have a set style from which they rarely deviate. Drivin' n' Cryin', on the other hand, is not afraid to explore venues spanning the musical spectrum. The first song, "Ain't It Strange," is a folksy tune reminiscent of The Waterboy's classic Irish folk songs.

Drivin' n' Cryin' is just as capable with the electric guitar as with the fiddle. "You Don't Know Me" is a Replacements kind of song with the brisk beat and sharp guitars. Many of the songs on "Mystery Road" are similar to this, the best being "Malfunction Junction" or perhaps "Wild Dog Moon."

Kevin Kinney, the lead singer and guitarist, has a voice like Bob Dylan's, with a slightly nasal sound, giving the slower songs on the album an eerie Dylan sound. "Peacemaker" even comes complete with a banjo and rambling lyrics.

If this wasn't enough, Drivin' n' Cryin' also dabbles with the blues guitar in "Honeysuckle Blue," and from the sound of it, does so quite well.

While definitely not a blues band, it includes just enough to give this album variety, and possibly an edge over the glut of guitar-oriented alternative music bands on the market today.

Try as it might, though, Drivin' n' Cryin' did not entirely escape the domineering presence of R.E.M. Like a father figure, R.E.M. has definitely served as a model for this aspiring band.

Two of the songs on "Mystery Road" are obviously products of this influence. "House For Sale" is a song R.E.M. could have easily included on one of its later albums, as well as "With the People."

"Straight to Hell," a slow, contemplative piece, finds Kinney in a laid-back mood. Amidst the quiet, country guitars, he seems to mourn not only his idleness, but laziness in general and its "corruptive" powers.

Drivin' n' Cryin' is hard to label simply. In a rather startling, pleasant way, it has not only paid homage to its roots with R.E.M., but explored paths that should lead it to its own identity.

Dulan impresses Snyder in spring drills

By Chris Wilhelm
Sports Writer

At 6-foot-1, 180 pounds, K-State tailback Antoine Dulan was not even listed on the depth chart prior to spring drills. Now, however, the junior from Topeka-Washburn Rural has battled his way into the No. 1 tailback spot, ahead of Chad McKinnis and Sonny Ray Jones.

"Lee Pickett and Tony Jordan (former K-State running backs) were quite a bit bigger than I am," Dulan said, "but you don't have to be big to be successful. It all boils down to how you perform in a game situation.

"We have some good backs this year, and as for myself, I'm trying to get tougher. This year I'm going to lower my shoulder more and try to run through people."

"Antoine is making some strides," Wildcat coach Bill Snyder said. "We set some goals for him. We wanted him to go through 20 days of practice. We wanted him to be involved on the field without injury, not having to sit out. I think he has taken some pride in that.

"We want him to be an aggressive runner and he's beginning to pick up on that."

Dulan played in 10 games for the Wildcats in 1988, carrying the ball 28 times for 115 yards, fourth among Wildcat ball carriers.

Coach Snyder said he has been pleased with the play of his running backs throughout spring drills, citing their ability to hang on to the ball as being a big plus.

"Our players are trying to learn how not to beat yourself and they are definitely showing some improvement," Snyder said. "Our offensive backs have yet to fumble a football, (through 14 days of spring drills)."

"(The backs) got together as a group and we set some goals for ourselves," Dulan said. "The biggest of those was to work hard not to beat ourselves.

"The running backs all get along great together. We all try to help each other out. We talk quite a bit. The team as a whole is coming together much better this season than it did at this time last year. I didn't participate in spring drills last year, but from what I've seen and heard, there is a much better team feeling."

As with the quarterbacks, the running back coaches also seem to have improved relations with their particular players as compared with last year.

"Last year everybody was upset with the losing and the team attitude was pretty bad," Dulan said. "There weren't a lot of 'Is' on the team last year, but there were a few players who were more worried with individual accomplishments than with the accomplishments of the team as a whole.

"My coach (running back coach Charlie Coe) really gets after me. He tells me when I'm doing something wrong. Last year, if you did something wrong, you just wouldn't play. He's pretty consistent with us as far as complimenting us and disciplining us."

Last year, Dulan saw his first action in a K-State uniform after sitting out his freshman year as a Proposition 48 academic casualty. And the 0-11 record the Wildcats posted last season had to be quite a change from what Dulan was used to.

In high school, he led Washburn Rural to two straight Class 5A titles and averaged 11.7 yards per carry, gaining 1,557 during his senior year. He also tallied 19 touchdowns as a senior.

Dulan also helped the Junior Blues defensively. From his defensive back position his junior year, Dulan intercepted a pass and ran it back for a touchdown to help Rural edge Wichita Kapaun for the first of two straight state titles.

He is probably the fastest Wildcat back and has 4.5 speed in the 40-yard dash.

While Coach Snyder remains guardedly optimistic about his team's progress, Dulan's impression of the team is much improved over that of last year's 0-11 campaign.

"From what I see, we're building up quite a bit of confidence," Dulan said. "Things are going all right. We're improving every day.

"Last year's spring drills were run, run, run. This year the drills are more mental and more technique-oriented. Our practices are a lot longer and a lot more helpful."

File/Greg Vogel

K-State tailback Antoine Dulan drives through Oklahoma defenders during the team's meeting October 15. Dulan was not listed on the depth chart prior to spring drills but has since battled his way into the No. 1 tailback spot, ahead of Chad McKinnis and Sonny Ray Jones.

Chiefs go for linebackers

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — It hardly takes a football genius — although many believe Carl Peterson is one — to spot the Kansas City Chiefs' most glaring deficiency.

It's linebacker. But if Peterson's first draft as boss of the Chiefs works out, fans might say linebacker used to be a soft spot.

Starting with Alabama all-American Derrick Thomas in the first round, the Chiefs drafted three linebackers in the 12 rounds. In addition, they acquired linebacker Mike Junkin, a first-round choice in 1987, from the Cleveland Browns.

"This team was 28th against the rush last year," said Peterson, the Chiefs' new president and general manager. "There were holes to fill. I want this position to be a very competitive one. You don't get better unless it's very, very competitive, and I believe what we've done lends itself to that."

Marty Schottenheimer, Peterson's choice as head coach, was instrumental in the Junkin trade since he was the Browns' coach when Cleveland drafted him in the first round two years ago.

"I want this position to be a very competitive one. You don't get better unless it's very, very competitive, and I believe what we've done lends itself to that."

—Carl Peterson Chiefs' president

Linebacker was again on the Chiefs' minds in the seventh round Monday when they took Ron Sancho, a a 6-2, 230-pounder from Louisiana State. A four-year starter, Sancho had 300 career tackles and was quick enough to cover running backs in pass situations.

In the sixth round Monday, Peterson and Schottenheimer opted for Robb Thomas, a wide receiver from Oregon State. After taking Sancho in the seventh round, they returned to running back in round No. 8 and went for Bryan Tobey, a fullback from Grambling. With a supplemental pick in that round, the Chiefs chose another running back, Todd McNair of Temple. In the final rounds Monday, they chose safety Jack Phillips of Alcorn State, McGovern, UCLA cornerback Marcus Turner and running back Bill Jones of Southwest Texas State.

Tennis squad loses, 6-3

By Carolyn Holcroft
Sports Writer

The Wildcat tennis team finished the Big Eight Conference regular season at Nebraska Monday, losing to the Cornhuskers, 6-3.

The 'Cats dropped their top four singles matches in straight sets. Coach Steve Bietau said the team's lack of competitiveness was a major source of the Wildcats' problems.

"We had two or three spots in singles where we didn't even compete," he said. "That really hurt us."

At No. 5 singles, sophomore Thresa Burcham came on strong against the Husker's Rachel Collins to win the first set 6-2, but dropped the second in a close 5-7 bout before taking the final set again, 6-2. Bietau was pleased with her performance for the day.

"Thresa did a good job of hanging in there and gave us a chance going into the doubles," he said.

Captain Annika Emtell also posted a victory against Nebraska. Emtell, who has recently experienced some frustrating defeats at the No. 6 singles spot, bounced back with a win Sunday against Iowa State's Christi Hill and had a solid victory Monday against Leslie Sue Jones of Nebraska, 6-1, 6-2.

At No. 1 doubles, Helen Shildknecht and Sara Hancock started off with a 6-2 win in the first set, but were defeated in the second two by Nancy Tyggum and Doneta Holman, 1-6, 4-6.

Burcham and Emtell also took their first set but were defeated at No. 3 doubles, 4-6, 6-4, 6-1.

"We started the doubles well," Bietau said, "but in two of the matches we didn't concentrate and the matches slipped away from us."

K-State's doubles tandem of Marijke Nel and Valerie Rive remained consistent at the No. 2 position, defeating Idiko Guba and Katherine Edelkotler, 6-3, 6-4. The win put them at 6-1 in Big Eight play with their only loss coming to Oklahoma State.

This week the Wildcats prepare for a road trip to Oklahoma City for the Big Eight Tournament.

Wildcats have tough chore in game at Wichita State tonight

By Scott Paske
Sports Writer

Hopes for postseason play disappeared for K-State's hard luck baseball team last weekend at Iowa State as the Cyclones swept a critical four-game series with the 'Cats, but don't look for tonight's opponent to provide much sympathy.

K-State travels to nationally-ranked Wichita State for a 7 p.m. contest with the Shockers at Eck Stadium. The Shockers, ranked fifth by Baseball America and eighth by Collegiate Baseball, are 41-8 overall, but have struggled in Missouri Valley Conference play with a second place 6-4 mark behind Indiana State. However, Wildcat coach Mike Clark was not hesitant in his praise for the Shockers.

"They and Arkansas probably have the best athletes we will face all year," Clark said. "They hit the ball well and love to run and run and run, so we'll definitely have to go in there prepared."

The Shockers, coached by 12-year veteran Gene Stephenson (654-208 record at WSU), are led by all-American catcher candidate Eric Wedge.

Wedge, a junior, leads the team in several offensive categories and has been on a recent hot streak. Wedge's batting average is .409 with 16 home runs and 61 runs batted in, all career highs. He has hit homers in eight of the last 11 games, including seven in the Shockers' 10 conference games. Wedge's production this season has Baseball America writers projecting him as the 12th pick in the upcoming baseball draft.

"He really impressed me last year all around," Clark said. "We think he could be one of the best catchers in the nation."

Wedge is one of many Shockers who have had to fill the void left by injured outfielder Jeff Bonacquista. Bonacquista, who Stephenson described as an influential team leader, suffered a broken kneecap sliding into home in a game earlier in the month. Joey Wilson, Bonacquista's replacement, has batted .442 with one home run and 13 RBI.

K-State regained the services of one of its injured as centerfielder Sean Collins started at Iowa State for the first time since suffering a broken hand in the series opener with Kansas. Collins rapped out a pair of hits in the 'Cats 6-5 loss to the Cyclones on Sunday.

Clark said the final weeks of the season will allow him to experiment and give his younger players more action.

"We're going to try to play a lot of people the rest of the way," Clark said. "Tonight, we may let nine different pitchers go one inning apiece, just to get some people some duty."

Wichita State will counter with Darrin Paxton. Paxton is 4-1 with a 4.66 earned run average.

Pitino turns Knicks' fortunes around as parity strikes NBA

It's Just Madness

CHRIS HAYS
Sports Editor

If I were a big time betting man, from now on my money would go on whichever team Rick Pitino is coaching. Who would have ever thought Pitino would be able to bring the New York Knicks back to their once-dominating form of the Bill Bradley and Walt "Clyde" Frazier days.

Some thought he had already worked a miracle when he took Providence to the "Final Four" in 1987, but who would have thought he would work his second miracle in just two seasons. Pitino has taken the once-lowly Knicks and made them into NBA championship contenders.

Granted the Knicks didn't exactly have the best record in the NBA, their 52-30 mark would have only tied them for third place in the Eastern Conference's Central Division. But New York is in the same division as the once-perennial Atlantic-champion Boston Celtics.

But thanks to the absence of Larry Bird from the Celtics and the absence of ... well, everbody but Charles Barkley from the 76ers, New York has emerged as the class of the NBA Atlantic Division. But it's not just because the other teams didn't show up this year.

Thanks to Pitino's guidance, Knicks' fans are starting to recall the "Glory Days" of the early '70s.

The first thing he did was turn Patrick Ewing into the dominating player that everyone thought he would be in the NBA. Now the Knicks will just have to pray that Ewing will be able to play when New York opens the playoffs Thursday night at home against Philadelphia. Right now he's nursing a finger injury.

Pitino probably made the best move of his short coaching career prior to this season by obtaining Charles Oakley from Chicago in the deal that sent Bill Cartwright to the Bulls. Why Chicago would give up one of the league's best rebounders in Oakley for a slow seven-footer who has the most awkward jump shot, nobody knows, but the New York brass sure came out looking good in that deal.

Maybe most of the credit for the Knicks' surge to the top this year should go to sleek point guard Mark Jackson. Jackson amazed everbody with his ballhandling skills last year and was named the Rookie of the Year. His assist capabilities are a big reason for the success of Ewing and company underneath.

But even though the Knicks were able to go from a mediocre 38-44 team during the 1987-88 season to the top of their division this year, they are still quite a ways from the NBA title.

Detroit goes into the playoffs as the favorites with the best record in the NBA at 63-19. The defending champion Los Angeles Lakers and the surprising Cleveland Cavaliers are next at 57-25.

But a darkhorse candidate might be the Phoenix Suns, which made one of the biggest turnarounds of anyone from last season. Under mentor Cotton Fitzimmons, a former K-State coach, the Suns were right on the Lakers' heels all season long and finished just two games back of Los Angeles in the Western Conference's Pacific Division at 55-27.

With the play of Eddie Johnson, Dan Majerle and Tom Chambers, Phoenix emerged from the middle of the pack this season and should have the Lakers, who will be Kareem-less next season, a little worried about the future at the top of the Pacific. I don't think Pat Reilly will be making anymore pre-season predictions of the Lakers running away with the title in the near future.

The Suns come in at 5-to-1 odds to win the title.

Boston fought off Charlotte to claim the final Eastern Conference playoff spot Sunday, but the Celtics chances don't look too good going into their opening series with Detroit which starts Friday.

The Celtics put Bird on the playoff roster Sunday but he said he probably will not be able to play for at least two weeks.

I'm afraid, Boston fans, that means the Celtics will see their earliest departure from the playoffs in a long time — even if rookie and recent acquisition Kevin Gamble did score 31 points Sunday. The only gamble that will get the Celtics past the Pistons would be for Bird to play and gamble on reinjuring his heel.

Another team that probably should not be considered lightly is Western Conference Central Division champion Utah. John Stockton, Karl Malone and company gave the Lakers fits last year in the conference semifinals before finally bowing out.

Study suggests genes affect job satisfaction

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Hate your job? Love your job? Part of the reason may be your genes, a study suggests.

By studying identical twins who grew up in different families, researchers found evidence that genes influence a worker's satisfaction with his job.

That may be part of the reason some people seem happy no matter what they do, while others have trouble finding a satisfying job, said industrial psychologist Richard Arvey.

The findings do not suggest that people who dislike their jobs are genetically doomed to unhappiness at work. The apparent genetic impact is quite modest, and like other genetic influences it may be modifiable by environment, Arvey said in a recent telephone interview.

The study is presented in this month's issue of the Journal of Applied Psychology by Arvey, a professor at the Industrial Relations Center of the University of Minnesota's Carlson School of Management, and university colleagues Lauren Abraham, Thomas Bouchard Jr., and Nancy Segal.

Arvey said the study does not prove genetic influence over job satisfaction, but only supports the idea. He also noted that the study was small, and urged caution in applying the results to the general population.

Two scientists who have studied genetic influence on personality commented that the new findings fit in with previous research. John Loehlin of the University of Texas at Austin said other research suggests genetic influence on personality and temperament, and an effect on job satisfaction appears plausible.

Richard Rose of Indiana University in Bloomington said Finnish studies of twins have found evidence that genes may influence a person's job choice, satisfaction with life, and frequency of changing jobs for such reasons as dissatisfaction or being fired.

But psychologist Leon Kamin of Northeastern University, who has analyzed nature-vs.-nurture research, said Monday he was skeptical.

state available to farmers to cut hay or graze their cattle.

He said he expects Yeutter to make a decision later this week or early next week on disaster assistance.

"We remain optimistic," Hayden said of the prospects that Yeutter will provide Kansas farmers with disaster assistance. "Because of the desperateness of the situation, we're urging the USDA to expedite this as much as possible."

Kansas farmers harvested 323 million bushels of wheat last year, a generally poor crop compared with other harvests in the 1980s. The record high harvest was 458 million bushels in 1982.

The Wheat Quality Council's annual crop survey, which begins Tuesday, will make its estimate of the Kansas wheat crop Thursday after completing a three-day tour of wheat fields.

William Morand, manager of Collingwood Grain Inc., an elevator chain based in Hutchinson, said the hot weather sapped remaining moisture from wheat fields. "That will really hurt us if we don't get a rain soon," he said.

Gary Paulsen, an agronomist at K-State, said the worst aspect of the hot weather is that it will speed the development of the wheat plants, causing it to have a smaller head and fewer kernels of grain.

"We've done a lot of research on the effect of heat on wheat plants, and none of the results of it is good," Paulsen said.

The condition of the 1989 Kansas wheat crop continued to deteriorate last week, Kansas Agricultural Statistics reported Monday.

For the first time, KAS rated more than half the crop in "very poor" condition. A year ago, none of Kansas' wheat was rated that poorly at this stage of the growing season.

"Wheat in some western counties continues to show improvement following the snowfall of two weeks ago but, unfortunately, the snowfall was not widespread and the condition of the wheat crop across the state continues to go downhill," this week's summary of the crop's condition said.

Monday's report placed just 7 percent of the crop in good to excellent condition, with 19 percent in fair condition, 23 percent in poor condition and 51 percent in very poor condition.

A year ago at this time, 67 percent of the crop was rated good to excellent, 27 percent fair, 6 percent poor and none of it very poor. That crop produced 323 million bushels, and this year's crop could be far less.

Surface moisture was rated 22 percent adequate and 78 percent short statewide, while subsurface moisture was rated 21 percent adequate and 79 percent short.

"Essentially, all the stands rated good to excellent are in the eastern third of the state," KAS said.

The service said insect and disease infestations are increasing, but effects of winter kill and the drought are so great that it isn't significant.

KAS will forecast size of the 1989 crop on May 11.

Considering the drought situation, KAS said corn planting is off to a good start this spring. By last weekend, 15 percent of the anticipated acreage had been planted, compared with the 10-year average of 25 percent by this time.

The drought has forced some ranchers to cull their herds to reduce feeding costs.

tute "signals to us that large kinds of projects need to be (planned)."

Wood said one of the more expensive projects in the capital improvement program will be a new terminal and parking lot for the Manhattan Municipal Airport scheduled for 1991. Street improvement projects for Tuttle Creek Boulevard and Kimball Avenue will also be considered major projects for the next six years.

Some street improvement projects are set up in benefit districts, where property owners in the benefit district pay a percentage of the cost of the improvements.

Although property owners pay a percentage of the cost of the improvements, the total bill for the improvements is added to the city's debt. If the property owners default on their payments, the city must be able to cover 100 percent of the costs.

The Anderson Avenue widening project and the Aggieville improvement project are 1989 projects and are not included in the 1990 capital improvement program. The Aggieville project is in a benefit district.

Although the capital improvements program plans over a six-year period, it is updated every year. The commission's concern for updating the city's growth plan and land use plan could have a definite impact on the city's debt amount.

Mayor Kent Glasscock said he expects to have an updated growth plan and land use plan completed by April 1, 1990.

greatly. He said K-State expanded from 4,000 to 17,000 students in two years because returning soldiers were funded for college by the government under the G.I. Bill of Rights. While this provided booming textbook sales, it also led to a cash flow problem.

"The government didn't pay for the books for 24 months," Ted said. "I owed a tremendous amount of money to the textbook companies, and they would write piteous letters asking for just a little money because they were broke, too. Finally, the bank loaned it to me because the government owed it to me."

Fifteen years ago, the Varneys retired and moved to Florida. Ted used advice he had been given in the Army as he left his hometown behind.

"When I retired, I retired," he said. "In the Army, I had a colonel who said, 'You put your roots down where you are and when you move, you cut them off.' It's good advice."

A year ago, Ted had a stroke, and the Varneys returned to Manhattan. They live in an apartment in the Meadowlark Hills Retirement Community.

Jon Levin, Ted's business partner, worked for Varney and bought into a partnership. Levin now runs the store.

Since having the stroke, Ted said his mobility is slightly impaired, but he is still able to drive. He tries to stop by the store once a week.

"Well, I do own the place," he said.

But what does he do?

"Drink a Coke," he said with a smile.

Hayden signs appropriations bill

MOE funds increase commitment to higher education

From Staff and Wire Reports

TOPEKA — Gov. Mike Hayden signed into law Tuesday a higher education appropriations bill that includes second-year funding for the Board of Regents' three-year Margin of Excellence Plan and increases state aid to community colleges and Washburn University of Topeka.

Hayden went to the University of Kansas in Lawrence to sign the higher education spending measure, one of 10 bills he announced he had signed.

In signing the bill, Hayden said the money "will enable our state's institutions of higher learning to better meet the needs of Kansans as we prepare to compete in a global economy."

He called it "a funding package that significantly increases our commitment to higher education."

"Students must be better prepared as they face the challenges of a changing and more complex world. That's really the message embodied in this important legislation," Hayden said.

The bill appropriates nearly $900 million to the state's universities and medical and technical schools, 19 community colleges and Washburn.

Hayden's affirmation of Legislative action for higher education in Kansas was lauded by K-State's president, who said the bill represents a commitment to higher education by the state.

"All of us at K-State are delighted with Governor Hayden's leadership on the Margin of Excellence," Wefald said. "We applaud the entire State Legislature for its commitment for support of higher education in Kansas.

"With 100 percent funding of the second year of the Margin of Excellence, this represents two years in a row where all the regents universities can be honored and proud of the support received from Governor Hayden and the State Legislature."

Included in the appropriations legislation is about $15 million for the MOE program of increased expenditures to help universities improve faculty salaries and enhance programs above normal appropriations.

Wefald said the bill allows K-State "to be in a position to retain the good faculty we have and be in a position to recruit first-rate faculty to come to K-State."

Faculty Senate Rep. Susan Scott said, "We (administration and faculty) are very grateful and very pleased that the Legislature understands how important faculty salaries are for us."

Stanley Koplik, executive director of the Board of Regents, was with Hayden when he signed the bill. Koplik said it was a "very exciting moment for all of us in higher education."

"Higher education is at the top of the list of the state's priorities," he said.

Koplik thanked Hayden for his encouragement and support of MOE saying Hayden's recommendation to the Legislature this year was "among the best anyone can remember."

As for continued support of MOE and the possibility of third-year allocation, Koplik said it is "too early to tell."

Third-year approval will depend on the Officials fear outbreak of measles at University

By The Collegian Staff

Seven probable cases of measles have been reported and an outbreak on campus is feared, according to University health officials.

"We have cases which are suspicious of measles," said Dr. Larry Moeller, chief of staff of Lafene Student Health Center. "Our clinical suspicions are high that they will be confirmed as measles."

Moeller said a measle outbreak on campus could become a reality because of students' close lifestyles in community living groups and classroom settings.

"We have seven suspected cases of measles," he said. "That is a lot as far as measles is concerned considering that there are only about 4,000 cases a year in the whole nation.

"The numbers seem to be growing, therefore we want to alert as many people as possible to increase surveillance and decrease the spread of this highly contagious disease."

Students suspected of having measles need to be isolated and are being sent home, Moeller said.

The symptoms of the seven-day measles are fever, headache, muscle ache, cough, irritated eyes, runny nose and sneezing. These usually occur about 10 days after contact with the virus. Four days after the initial symptoms, a red rash usually occurs on the face and spreads to the trunk and extremities.

In order for cases to be confirmed as measles, the blood must be tested twice and sent to the Kansas State Health Department in Topeka. It takes about two weeks to get the confirmation.

A measles station has been set up at Lafene where students can get the vaccination to prevent measles.

College approves reorganization of architecture

By Brad Camp
Collegian Reporter

The College of Architecture and Design's Course and Curriculum Committee last week approved a resolution endorsing reorganization of the college, said Eugene Kremer, professor of architecture.

"The intention is to reorganize the college so it no longer has a department called environmental design ... it will have four rather than five departments," Kremer said.

But he said the reorganization issue, which has been one of "lively discussion for at least a decade," would not negatively affect faculty or administration.

"The resolution called for the reorganization of the college without the department of environmental design. That does not imply that any faculty members would lose their positions," Kremer said.

Faculty in the department would remain in the college and join with one or more of the remaining four departments, he said.

Faculty members in the department will have an opportunity to discuss with the dean their preferences for department affiliation before the reorganization plan is completed, Kremer said.

"Everybody on the faculty now comes from a professional area and they will go back to areas of their mutual choice and agreement," said William Jahnke, assistant dean of the college.

Reorganization is just the beginning of an idea, Jahnke said.

"The purpose is to facilitate — make it easier to make course and curriculum changes to the program," he said.

Richard Hoag, head of the Department of Environmental Design, said the college has voted to look at reorganization during the next couple of years.

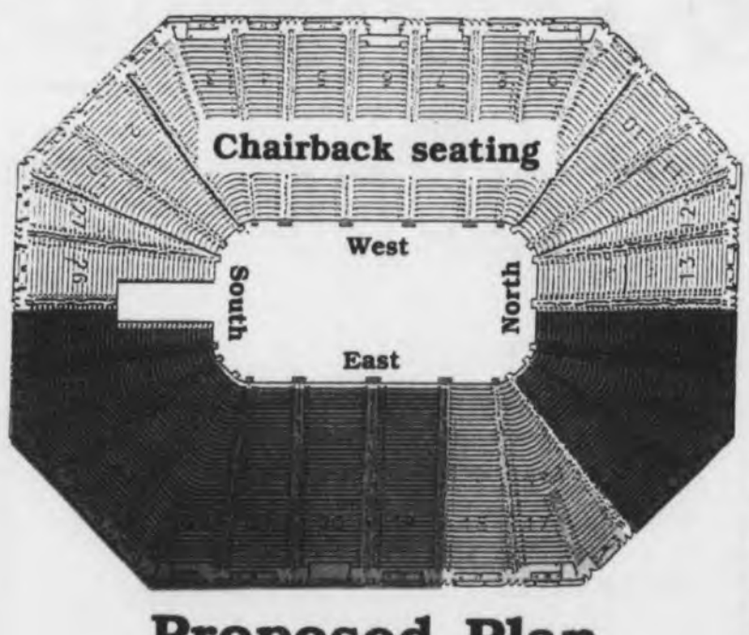
The reorganization is in concert with the fall semester enrollment cap and will study the number of ways the college could deliver its instructional program, Hoag said.

"It's a chance to look at alternative ways to deliver the programs that currently exist in the department," he said.

Jahnke said the reorganization idea has been talked about for years.

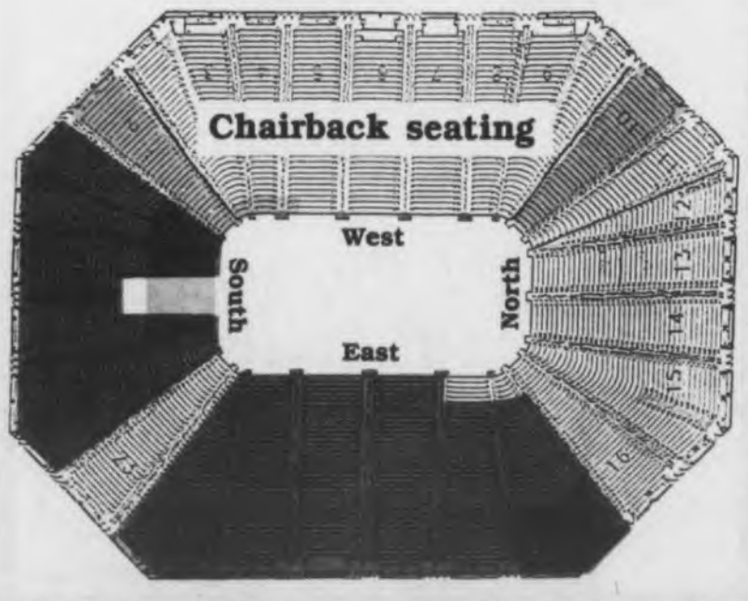
"It has taken a long time to slowly review and talk to people until everybody's agreed," he said. "There is no intention to affect anybody detrimentally.

"It has some carry over of historic considerations within the college ... it means changing patterns of things people have been doing for years."



It is the intention of the college to have a program that is more rapidly responsive to the needs of the professional programs, Jahnke said.

A result of some proposed changes in the college may mean the merging or combining of several professional programs and changes in class and administrative structures.



"We're going to look at the area mission we have as a college and try and figure a way — an administrative

Committee proposes seating area solution

By Chris Hays
Sports Editor

No solution will probably please everyone, but Paul Kowalczyk thinks he and five others have formulated a feasible solution to seating problems in Bramlage Coliseum.

The problem arose last year when patrons in the faculty sections 17 and 18 had difficulty seeing past half court during basketball games when students in section 19 would stand.

To combat this, Kowalczyk, director of business operations for the athletic department, and his committee have devised a new seating proposal. The plan basically calls for the students and faculty to switch places. The faculty would move to all of sections 16 and 23, a few rows in sections 13, 14 and 15, and a portion of the chairback seating in sections 3 and 9.

As part of the proposal, students would move into sections 17 and 18, except for the first five rows, and all of sections 1, 2 and 26. The arrangement would locate the students in the entire east side and almost the entire south end zone of Bramlage.

"From what I could tell in those sections (16 and 23), the view was unobstructed," said Kowalczyk, who was hired as director in January. "(Finding a solution) was really tough because you have two different factions and each of them want what they think they deserve — it does create a problem.

"But I think we took a step in the right direction and have a viable solution."

The committee, headed by Kowalczyk, included ticket manager Carol Adolph; faculty representatives Tony Jurich and David Schafer; and student representatives Todd Johnson and Todd Heitschmidt, both of Student Senate.

Kowalczyk was chosen by Athletic Director Steve Miller to head the project because of his newness to the department and his unfamiliarity with the seating problem.

After being assigned the task of finding a solution to the problem, Kowalczyk decided he needed to experience the problem first-hand and sat in the obstructed faculty section. He also talked with faculty and students from the different sections to get an all-around perspective to the problem.

"It had kind of a ripple effect," Kowalczyk said. "When some would stand up it caused others to stand. Then others would stand on the benches themselves, making it even tougher to see from section 18.

"That was another of the concerns — people standing on the benches. We have put supports on a lot of them, but that is just not an expense the department had anticipated."

Because of the damage, he said next year coliseum officials will police Bramlage to ensure that students do not stand on the bleachers.

In addition, Kowalczyk said, policies may be started that would result in a fan's early exit from a basketball game for not cooperating.

Around the world

Hungry elephants kill peasants

GWERU, Zimbabwe — Hungry elephants broke out of a game reserve in search of food and killed four peasant squatters who were tending crops, news reports said Tuesday.

Families from the minority Tonga tribe recently settled and planted crops on the edges of the Chirisa game reserve in the Midlands, said Claudius Hove, the Department of National Parks and Wildlife's chief warden in the province.

In past weeks, they beat tribal drums to keep stray elephants from their plots. Instead, the drumbeats attracted the animals, Hove told the Zimbabwe Inter-African News Agency.

"These people have been settling in and around the game park and the elephants have been increasingly attracted by crops in their fields," Hove said.

The settlers will be moved from the reserve and game rangers will try to drive the stray elephants back into the park, he said. If the animals don't budge, they will be shot, he added.

Around the nation

Bush announces nomination

EL TORO, Calif. — President Bush said Tuesday he will nominate Richard L. Armitage, the assistant secretary of defense for international security affairs, to be the next secretary of the Army.

The 43-year-old Armitage was picked for the Army's top civilian post by Defense Secretary Dick Cheney in late March after originally accepting a post at the State Department.

Assuming Senate confirmation, Armitage will replace John O. Marsh, who has been in the position since the first day of the Reagan administration and who has made clear his desire to retire once a successor was picked.

In his current job, Armitage has played a key role in overseeing American security assistance programs around the world as well as counter-terrorism and Vietnam POW-MIA issues.

Armitage becomes the second service secretary to be announced by Bush.

Philharmonic director resigns

LOS ANGELES — Andre Previn resigned Tuesday as music director of the Los Angeles Philharmonic amid reports of clashes with his boss, but will continue as a guest conductor for the next three seasons.

"In the current structure of the Los Angeles Philharmonic, it has become obvious to me there is no room for a music director," Previn, 60, told the board, according to a release from the philharmonic.

The philharmonic, however, said a search for a new music director would begin immediately.

Previn, who became music director in 1985, had two years left on his contract.

Jackpot soars as lines form

SHARON, Pa. — At the drug store straddling the Pennsylvania-Ohio line, the big money Tuesday moved to Carol McGhee's lottery machine in Pennsylvania and ignored Debbie Trinckes' machine in Ohio. The difference was a fortune.

The Super 7 jackpot soared to $100 million in Pennsylvania and its upper reaches were limited only by the deadline for the drawing tonight.

Trinckes sold a few tickets for the Ohio Lottery's Super Lotto game, worth a mere $3 million. But even she crossed the line to plunk down $20 for 20 tickets in Pennsylvania.

"I don't even play their lottery," she said, "but since it's so high, I decided to."

Lottery fever heightened not just in Pennsylvania but around the country as state officials upped the ante in the Super 7 Lottery drawing to at least $100 million based on ever-speeding ticket sales from the Delaware River to the Penn-Ohio Drug store off U.S. 62.

The jackpot is the result of six straight weekly drawings with no winner and international publicity, which generated ticket sales Monday of $19 million and a state record for daily sales of $24.34 million Tuesday. Last week's jackpot was $46 million.

A single winner of the $100 million would receive almost $3.85 million a year for 26 years, lottery officials said.

Pennsylvania's Super 7 game lets players choose seven numbers from 1 to 80 for $1. If those seven are among 11 numbers selected, the combination wins the jackpot, a chance lottery officials put at 9.6 million to 1.

Host attacked by 'skinheads'

SAN FRANCISCO — Shock TV host Morton Downey Jr. said Tuesday he was attacked by "skinheads" who cut his hair and marked him with swatiskas, but police said they couldn't verify his report.

"What he's claiming doesn't appear to be the case at all," said Ron Wilson, a spokesman at San Francisco International Airport where the incident was reported at 11:30 p.m. Monday. "We have not yet been able to confirm any of the statements Mr. Downey made."

Authorities found no evidence of skinheads in the area, he said.

Wilson said a witness reported seeing the talk show host in a restroom where the attack was said to have happened, but didn't see any confrontation. The witness said Downey was escorted to a waiting limousine by a man and woman with whom he was traveling.

Downey was cleanly dressed when found in the limousine at the airport and showed no signs of being in a scuffle, said Wilson.

In an interview with the San Francisco Examiner, Downey displayed swastikas scrawled across his face, shirt and pants. His right eye was bloodshot and bruised, his head partially cut.

Downey said he was standing in front of a restroom urinal when someone "put his arm around my throat and his other hand across my eyes and dragged me to a stall. They sat me down on the toilet. One guy sat on me, and another one started cutting my hair."

UPC sponsors K-State day

For the second year, the Union Program Council Travel Committee has coordinated a package trip on Sunday for students to attend K-State Day at Worlds of Fun.

"For only $19 you'll receive a Worlds of Fun Ticket, round trip transportation, donuts and coffee for breakfast," said Mike Penner, graduate student in counselor education and educational pyschology and UPC program adviser.

The Alumni Association helps sponsor the performing groups traveling to Worlds of Fun. "We have scheduled the K-State Singers and the Men's Glee Club for two performances and the Pep Band and Cheerleaders for three performances," said Becky Klingler, director of the alumni association.

Sign-up for the trip is in the Activities Center from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. on the third floor of the Union.

Civil rights chief nominee draws NAACP opposition

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Bush announced plans Tuesday to nominate William Lucas, a black critic of affirmative action, to become the Justice Department's civil rights chief despite opposition from the NAACP.

Attorney General Dick Thornburgh, in a statement released by the Justice Department, called Lucas "a talented, decent and compassionate person whom I have known for a number of years."

"Bill Lucas is fully committed to the vigorous and fair enforcement of our country's civil rights laws and to removing barriers to equal opportunity for all our citizens," Thornburgh said.

The White House said Bush would nominate Lucas, 61, a Detroit lawyer, to be assistant attorney general for civil rights. Lucas, a former Democrat, lost a race for governor of Michigan in 1986 after he joined the Republican Party.

While opponents of the choice appeared to be gearing up for what could be a bruising fight for Senate confirmation, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., a leading member of the Judiciary Committee, told reporters in Boston he would "withhold judgment" on Lucas pending hearings.

"We'll have a chance to examine his record," Kennedy said, noting reservations expressed by civil rights groups.

Lucas is an opponent of racial quotas and is a critic of affirmative action. Since Thornburgh recommended Lucas in February, Lucas has drawn criticism from some civil rights leaders who question whether he is qualified to be the government's chief civil rights enforcer.

Ralph Neas, executive director of the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, an umbrella coalition of 180 organizations, said his group is concerned that Lucas lacks civil rights and legal experience. The group's executive committee has not taken a position on Lucas. Neas said it would meet shortly to discuss whether to take one.

"William Lucas is a disappointing choice for the most important civil rights job in the federal government, a job for which expertise and experience are absolutely vital," said Arthur J. Kropp, president of People for the American Way. "Instead of a strong civil rights advocate, Bush has chosen a man whose qualifications and record are at best a question mark," Kropp added in a statement.

People for the American Way, a well-financed liberal organization, helped spearhead the 1987 fight to have the Senate reject President Reagan's nomination of Robert Bork for the Supreme Court.

On Monday, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the nation's oldest and largest civil rights group, announced its opposition, saying "we do not believe Mr. Lucas is the person for this post."

But opposition to Lucas is not universal among black civil rights leaders. The Rev. Joseph Lowery, president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, praised Lucas in a letter to Thornburgh.

Rep. John Conyers, a black Democrat from Detroit, reiterated his support on Tuesday, saying a fight by civil rights groups to block Senate confirmation "would be a useless one, maybe even counterproductive."

Engineering to receive $500,000

By Angie Smith
Collegian Reporter

The College of Engineering has received a $500,000 gift to fund a faculty chair, said Gordon Dowell, director of publications for the KSU Foundation.

The George J. and Alice Fiedler Distinguished Chair in Electrical and Computer Engineering will help the college attract and retain an outstanding faculty member, Dowell said. Proceeds from the gift will provide an annual supplement which will be added to the usual University salary.

The gift was established by Alice Fiedler of St. Peters, Fla. to honor her late husband.

"The funds will be used in an area where we have great need," said Donald Rathbone, dean of the College of Engineering. "We haven't in the past been able to reward distinguished professors as we would have liked."

"The donors are, and were very interested in education," Rathbone said. "This is a major contribution. We are very grateful."

Fiedler earned a bachelor's degree from K-State in 1926 and a master's from the University of Kansas in 1932, Dowell said. Fiedler's 42-year engineering career included 22 years at Sverdrup and Parcel where he became the principal engineer and section head responsible for projects with Monsanto, NASA, Argonne National Laboratory, General Electric and TWA.

Fiedler had positions with the Navy and RCA and was an associate professor at the University of California at Berkeley, Montana State University and Union College, Dowell said.

Mark Moore, Foundation vice president for major gifts, worked with Alice Fiedler to create the gift.

"After several meetings with Mrs. Fiedler discussing various ways she could make a gift, I was able to plan a concept which looked attractive," Moore said.

"The gift will set a standard for others to follow," he said. "I think it will attract top quality members to the College of Engineering."

Ground broken for TV center

By Britt Owen
Collegian Reporter

The ground-breaking ceremony for the K-State Satellite TV Center was Tuesday north of Umberger Hall where the Kansas Regents Educational Communications Center will be constructed by the Spring of 1990.

President Jon Wefald said the building, which will cover 32,000 square feet, will be used by graduate students to conduct studies and by students of the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications for practice.

The construction of the $5.92 million federally- and state-funded program is "under budget and on schedule," said Mel Chastain, director of the communications center.

Equipment in the building will allow the transmission of classes by television and satellite to rural Kansas schools. It will include six production workshops, labs, editing rooms and computer networks.

"Programming actually begins in six days," Chastain said.

The University is developing teacher in-service training programs in reading, writing, special education, math and science. Other courses include Spanish, genetics and earth sciences.

Wefald said the key player in the constructing of the communications center was U.S. Senator Bob Dole.

"This is a truly cooperative effort on the part of the state," said Charles Hostetler, member of the Kansas Board of Regents. "It will help materially upgrade the courses in high school."

The building is not just about new technology, but about people, he said. The center is to help develop the minds of faculty to teach and students to learn.

Misleading legacy survives Hoffman's death

"In every era the attempt must be made anew to wrest tradition away from a conformism that is about to overpower it ... even the dead will not be safe from the enemy if he wins."

— Walter Benjamin

I was shocked and saddened last week when I read that veteran activist Abbie Hoffman had died of a drug overdose. In his own words, Hoffman was "the best goddamn grassroots organizer in the country."

Whatever his faults, we will miss his commitment to social justice, his candor and his wit.

It was Hoffman who responded to Ronald Reagan's call for widespread drug testing with the phrase, "Don't drop your zipper for the gipper."

While many of his former comrades had joined the ranks of neo-conservative yuppiedom, Hoffman spent his last years participating in campus protests against CIA recruitment. In 1987, his brilliant speech in his defense helped convince a jury that militant actions were necessary to prevent greater evils by the CIA.

Still, my own feelings about Hoffman and much of the '60s radicals are ambivalent. Although he deserved better, Hoffman ceased being Abbie Hoffman the person many years ago and became something of a media-created myth, a symbol for everything that was drug-induced, infantile and naive about activists of the '60s.

True, there were many things about Hoffman's generation of radicals that were mistaken and infantile — most notably, drug abuse. Hoffman himself spent the '70s as a wanted man, not for draft dodging or failure to pay taxes to the U.S. military machine, but for dealing cocaine.

But the media were also partly responsible for this image of violent activists on drugs. The students of the New Left were portrayed as a grave menace to society. The wanton destruction, the disregard for traditional values, the lack of responsibility — all were duly noted and emphasized by the media.

Protesters were marginalized by the overemphasis on their elements of infantile leftism. Little attempt was made to understand why they were willing to carry out such hopelessly naive, yet courageous, acts as putting flowers in the barrels of M-16s.

Today, when people think of the violence of the '60s, many will think about the Black Panthers and the Weathermen, not the wanton destruction and genocide in Vietnam, the systematic violence of institutionalized racism and sexism that pervaded American society, or the ferocious police attacks on peaceful demonstrators.

Commentary

Scott Miller

Collegian Columnist

The image of sex-crazed, drug-influenced student radicals somehow obliterated all this. But the fact that the media fixated on these elements is itself indicative of hypocrisy.

Part of the point of rebellion was to refuse to let traditional authorities dictate what values and standards of conduct one should adopt, especially when the authorities trumpeting traditional values and standards of conduct had little claim to legitimacy.

It was, after all, not black nationalists or dope-smoking hippies, but traditional authorities in government who had protected and preserved policies of racism and segregation. It was, after all, the moderate and respected members of the establishment who had initiated and escalated the war in Vietnam, and then called the police on the so-called radicals when they demanded an end to the genocide.

Today, there is still little attempt to understand what motivated Hoffman and others like him. For example, despite the resurgence of movies and television shows dealing with Vietnam, few have gone beyond the disgustingly chauvanistic "Rambo" genre or the ineffectual liberal "War is Hell" approach to ask fundamental questions about the nature of that particular war. None in this country have ever presented the war from the perspective of, say, a Vietnamese peasant.

Another phenomenon is to make the activism of the '60s into a nostalgic fetish. In the absence of a massive resurgent student movement, people forget, or have never learned, what the activism of the '60s was about. For many, the long hair, the music and the drugs are not peripheral or even irrelevant, but essential to student activism in all times and in all places.

These things have become so intrinsically intertwined that they must appear inseparable. Witness K-State's own offically sponsored "1960s Nostalgia Week" which took place last week under the misleading title of "Student Activism Week."

In short, the activism of the '60s has been fetishized, distorted and sold as a commodity on the open market in the form of everything from "The Big Chill" to the explosion of 20th anniversary commemorative editions of books about the 1968 student rebellions.

But if the repetition and manipulation of cultural symbols have failed to teach us about meaningful protest, they have more than done their job of ignoring the question of why hundreds of thousands of seemingly well-off students, who were traditionally considered an elite group cordoned off in their academic playpen from the real world, were suddenly ready to abandon any sort of affinity with the American system.

And that is the key to the mythology and nostalgia surrounding Hoffman and others. For if the camera can fix its gaze on their styles of dress and hair, their lifestyles and their idiosyncrasies, it can conveniently avoid what it is they were protesting.

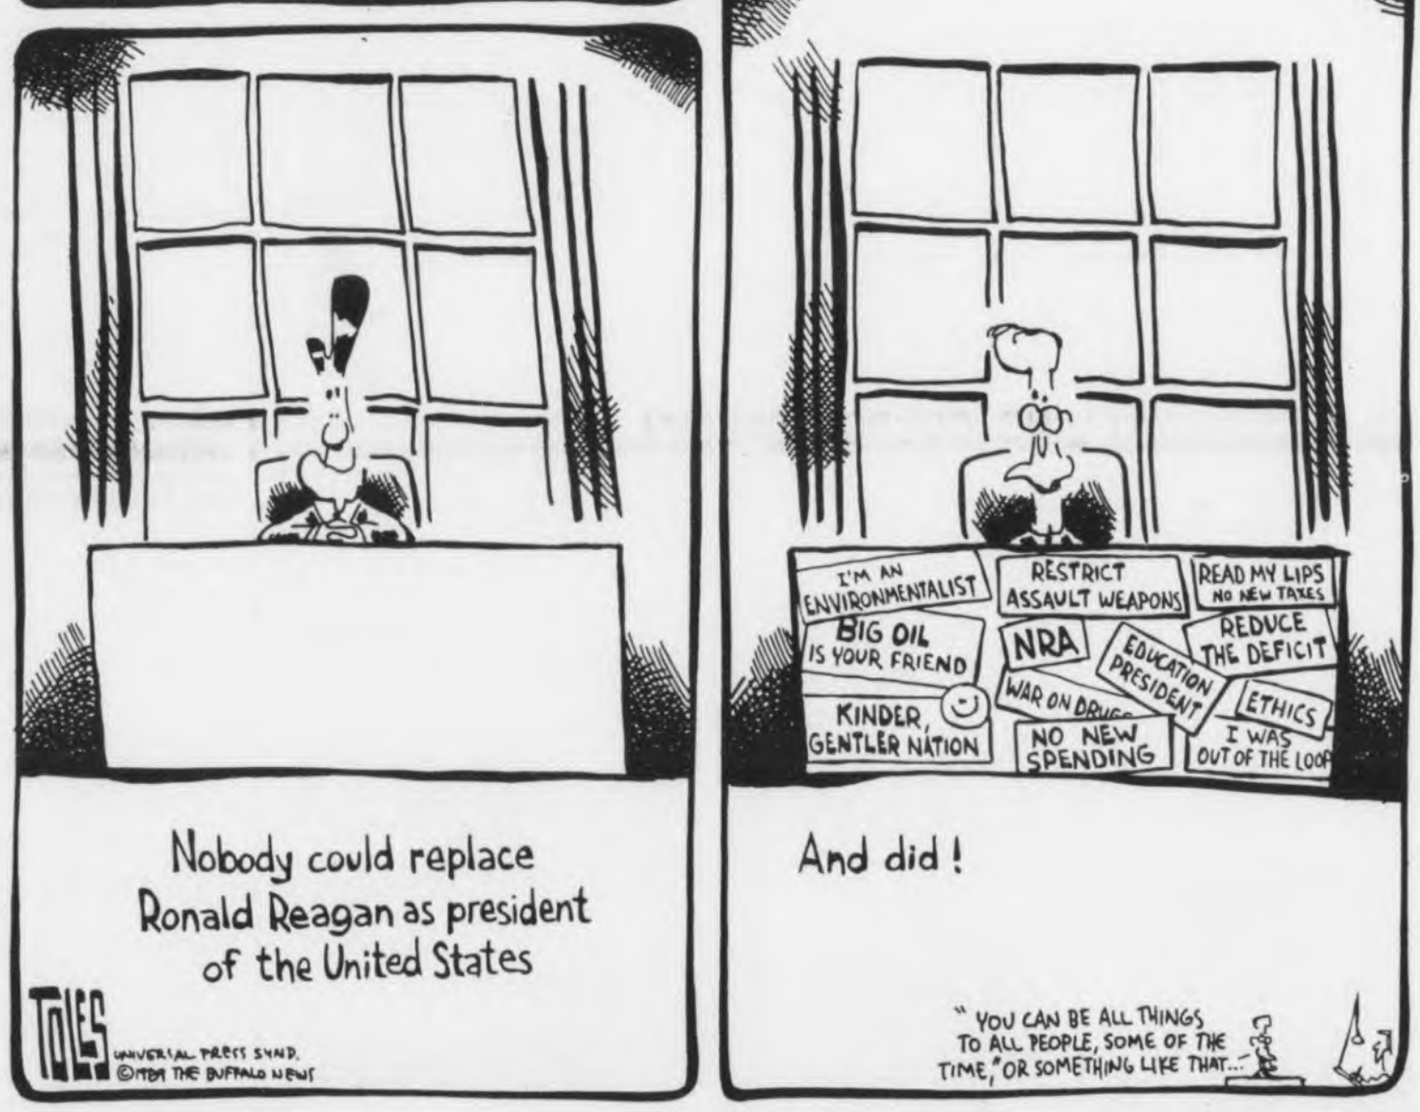
On the one hand, we are barraged with images of hundreds of thousands of young people baring their asses to authority, and on the other, we are left to wonder what would cause them to reject in such a radical fashion the values of their parents.

That is the legacy of the '60s, which today's activists inherit. Unfortunately, that is what survives Hoffman and his generation.

Dirty deeds common in Wright's scandals

When scandals are uncovered, columnist Michael Kinsley once wrote, the real suprise is not what sort of illegal things have been done, but what sort of practices were legal in the first place.

By this standard, the recent controversy over House Speaker Jim Wright is a bona fide scandal. Of the 116 rule violations that special House Counsel Richard J. Phelan found Wright had committed, the bipartisan House Ethics Committee only found 69 worth mentioning.



Of these 69, many are quite disturbing. Wright accepted about $145,000 in gifts from a friend, Texas businessman George Mallick. Among those gifts was an $18,000 yearly salary for Wright's wife, as well as the use of a condominium and a car. In return, Wright helped bail out a savings and loan in which Mallick had sunk a $2.2 million investment. He also saw to it that a project for restoration of stockyards in Fort Worth, Texas, got through the House. Mallick happened to own one of the stockyards.

But the more suprising thing about the Wright controversy is what he got away with. For example, Wright intervened on behalf of his friend Tex Montcrief when Montcrief's son stood to lose drilling rights to land in Israel. Under the Camp David Accords, the land was to be transferred to Egypt.

Wright wrote a letter to the secretary of state, arranged meetings, and personally delivered a letter on the matter to Anwar Sadat. As a result, Montcrief got a $5 million concession out of the Egyptian government. Wright, says the ethics committee, did nothing wrong.

The list goes on. Wright held up important legislation on S&Ls to help many executives, actions which served to deepen the impact of the imminent S&L crisis. By refusing to listen to regulators, Wright made his motives clear — he wanted to serve his friends, not the interest of his country. Nevertheless, the committee saw nothing wrong with this, either.

Last week, one House Democrat warned that, "in the zeal to get the Speaker, we may create rules that nobody can live with." We doubt it. With the sort of practices that the House ethics committee deems ethical, there will still be plenty of dirty deeds left for our elected officals to do once Jim Wright has been made an example.

Collegian Editorial Policies

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR are always encouraged. Those which pertain to matters of campus and/or public interest are especially encouraged, and are given the highest priority.

Letters should be kept as brief as possible, preferably under 300 words. Those who cannot condense their opinions should consider submiting their letter in the form of a guest column. All letters are subject to editing for space, style and taste.

GUEST COLUMNS are also encouraged. The column should be no longer than two double-spaced, typed pages. If the submission is used as a column and not a letter to the editor, it will be accompanied by the author's photograph.

SEND SUBMISSIONS to the Collegian in Kedzie 116.

UNSIGNED EDITORIALS represent the consensus opinion of the Collegian's editorial board. Opinion columns do not necessarily reflect the opinions of the Collegian management, Student Publications, Inc. or the newspaper staff in general.

Keep open mind

Editor,

I enjoyed the recent debate concerning creationism and academic freedom. Let me offer a belated response.

In 1987 the Supreme Court struck down a Louisiana creationism law. That same decision, however, allowed teachers to present "any scientific concept that is based on established fact."

That means it's OK for a teacher to point out that complex life forms appear abruptly in the fossil record without any apparent links to simpler life forms.

Likewise, a teacher may ask the class why, after comparing DNA and protein molecules in hundreds of species, scientists still can't find a genetic connection linking different species.

A gutsy educator might even mention the January 11 issue of Newsweek. You know, the one in which genetic researchers theorized that man may have originated only 200,000 years ago, in a single location and in a single family. (A familiar scenario, no?)

Even outside creationist circles, the intellectual climate is changing. The works of Charles Thaxton and Michael Denton have won reluctant praise from even the most committed evolutionary scholars.

Within a given species, evolutionary theory may account for some minor changes. Beyond that, forget it. When it comes to the major question of origins, available fossil and genetic data will support a carefully constructed creation model.

I know my bias is showing, but let's be honest about this. Academic freedom is doing just fine. Current scientific and legal findings won't support the use of labels like "pseudoscientific" and "criminal" as regards the teaching of creation theory. No one likes what Scott Miller called "ignorance and dogmatism." So let's keep an open mind, guys.

Police need funds

Editor,

I recently gave a speech in Philip Anderson's speech II class concerning the funding of the K-State Police Department.

During the time I was researching my speech, I realized how understaffed and underfunded the campus police really are. Like most students, I felt that campus police only gave out tickets and rode around in their cruisers. I was WRONG.

The campus police are the only people on campus 24 hours a day, seven days a week. They are in charge of the safety of about 19,000 students and 4,500 faculty/staff and for the security of all the buildings on the 650-plus acre campus.

They also handle security at events like enrollment and Landon Lectures. These and many other things are done by 20 commissioned officers with the help of a very small staff who are all crammed in the Old Stadium.

Safety and security are two things we all need. I don't feel that these are being well taken care of on campus. Each day, the police report in the Collegian lists more and more thefts, harassments, etc. The University should act before something major happens where the University is found negligent.

A very simple solution would help to increase the funding for the campus police. A small fee, like 50 cents to $1, could be added in at the time of enrollment. This is a bad time to ask for more money from the students in the form of another fee, but aren't your safety and well-being while on campus important to you?

This fee would be a small price to pay to help avoid serious crimes on campus.

Positive aspects

Editor,

The Collegian receives so many negative letters to the editor that I felt it was about time to praise the positive activities on campus.

The other day I was walking to class in front of Anderson Hall when a man's backpack fell from his shoulder. His folders and the papers inside them immediately scattered in different directions in the strong wind. About 15 other students who were walking by and I chased after the papers, and in a matter of two or three minutes, returned every last one to him.

This may seem like a minor and insignificant incident, yet it has a hidden message. This is what makes K-State the "friendly school." It's surprising how something so little can teach you so much.

Let's try to concentrate more on the positive aspects of K-State rather than on all the negative.

John Daly, assistant professor of history, gave a speech "The Soviet Union: Continuity and Change" Tuesday at the Union Little Theater.

Lecturer addresses U.S.S.R.

Advances in human rights needed for 'real change'

By Susan L'Ecuyer
Managing Editor

"The U.S.S.R. is the only country in the world which is living in the 11th and 20th centuries simultaneously," John Daly, assistant professor of history, said Tuesday.

Daly was speaking as part of the Last Lecture Series, sponsored by the Arts & Science Council. The subject of his lecture was "The Soviet Union: Continuity and Change."

For better or worse, Daly said, problems exist in the Soviet Union that even the government, established by the 1917 revolutions, has yet to address.

Little progress has been made in several major areas, one of which is agriculture. Daly said agriculture still suffers a lack of individual effort in a socialist system.

Nationalism in a nation that has more than 100 nationalities is perhaps the one thing that may tear the Soviet Union apart, he said, referring to increasing calls for independence by Soviet Georgia and Estonia.

In order for "real change" to appear, Daly said major advances must be made in five key areas:

■ Human rights. The continued existence of forced labor camps and the practice of imprisoning political protesters in psychiatric hospitals must be protested.

■ The KGB, the structure of which has resisted fundamental reform and remains largely intact.

"Everyone falls within range of the KGB's influence, including Politburo members," Daly said.

"Everyone falls within range of the KGB's influence, including Politburo members."

—John Daly assistant professor, history

■ The media. The government owns and operates all media, and even the writings of Marx and Lenin have been censored, he said.

■ Religious tolerance. The Soviet Union's Constitution guarantees the right to believe or not to believe, but little tolerance has been exhibited, Daly said.

■ Freedom of residence and travel. An internal passport system dictates where one can live, and freedom of emigration — by Soviet Jews to Jerusalem, for example — must be tolerated, he said.

In World War II, the Soviets suffered 30 million dead, 100 times that suffered by the United States.

In this context, Daly said, it is not hard to understand the Soviet Union's "very real fears" of outsiders.

Daly warned that the United States' habit of regarding the Soviet Union as a political leopard to be threatened with an increasingly larger stick will only result in disaster.

ROTC, Air Force awards to be given

By Mary Ubel
Collegian Reporter

A joint award presentation ceremony with Air Force and Army ROTC members attending is no secret to the cadets, but an element of suspense is involved with the awards.

"The award ceremony is a chance for the faculty to award cadets for their outstanding achievements, but the cadets are in limbo right to the very end," said Capt. Lawrence Everett, assistant professor of aerospace studies.

The ceremony is at 4 p.m. today in Union Forum Hall. All cadets are required to attend.

Staff members from both the Air Force and Army ROTC programs select cadets for each of the awards, said Capt. John Taglieri, adviser to K-State's Arnold Air Society chapter.

More then 40 cadet awards are available, Everett said.

The American Legion awards, which are divided into two categories, scholastic excellence and military excellence, are awarded to four cadets in each of the programs.

The Veterans of Foreign Wars award is awarded to the outstanding senior for overall military performance in the Air Force program, Taglieri said.

The Manhattan Chamber of Commerce awards are presented to a senior and junior in both programs for outstanding citizenship participation, Everett said.

President Jon Wefald will present awards to a representative from each class in each program.

Artist works with clay

Pottery shown around world

By Britt Owen
Collegian Reporter

To mold a mound of softened clay into a beautiful piece of art that is also functional is the challenge of Angelo Garzio, professor of art.

Besides being a professor, Garzio spends his time creating ceramic bowls and containers to display in various art shows around the world.

Since April 5, Garzio has had 45 pottery pieces on display at the Galeria Sargadelos in Madrid, Spain. The work will be there until May 14. One of his main goals was to make each piece of pottery serve a functional purpose.

"Pottery is bought not so much for enjoyment and use, but as an investment role," Garzio said.

Too many people see money in their eyes when they buy pottery from a well-known artist, he said. They know the value will increase later. In many instances, the objects are so expensive they are put on display.

"I, for one, like to think the pots I make are food for the soul, as well as to have food placed on them," Garzio said.

"Pottery is my avenue of contribution to man," he said. "We are all fulfilling a role and only time can tell whether we have indeed created objects that can stand the test of time.

"The show in Spain is not so much an ego trip, but a form of recognition of what I stand for and teach my students," Garzio said.

On a visit to Spain in 1982, Garzio met the editor of the magazine La Ceramica. The editor wrote a feature story on Garzio for the magazine. The owner of Galeria Sargadelos saw the article and asked him if he would like a one-man show, Garzio said.

After working on the pottery for the summer and fall of 1988, nine crates of carefully packed pottery were shipped to Madrid by air. The collection included bowls, vases, pitchers and modified closed forms in porcelain, stoneware and earthenware, Garzio said.

The K-State Presidential Faculty Development Grant plus money from the College of Arts and Sciences helped make the shipping of the crates affordable, he said.

U.S. Customs prevented the show from occurring a couple of months earlier. Paperwork and clearance for objects overseas were the major obstacles raised by the customs service, Garzio said.

When the cargo reached Madrid, Garzio said he looked in the crates with fear of the pottery being broken. However, not one piece was broken or scratched.

Garzio attended opening night where he got to see the diplays of his works for the first time.

"It really looked great — I was really pleased," he said. "It was important that I had the best possible pieces I could make."

Garzio said the opening night went well and he was pleased with the turnout for his show.

He was born in Mirabello Saunittico, a small village in Italy. Garzio said the culture he was raised in has influenced the designs of his pottery.

At one time, he said, the influence of African style and oriental style were evident in his pottery. After a visit to Italy, Garzio started thinking more about his designs with pottery.

"I was able to make peace with myself about what I was and where I came from," Garzio said. His work is now like the environment he was born and raised in.

Garzio is getting ready for one show in Colorado in seven to eight months and one on the West Coast. Along with the show in Madrid, he now has pottery showing in Wooster, Ohio. He said there is also a possibility of having a show in Italy. Having a show to work toward, Garzio said, inspires him to work hard.

Garzio said he works four to five hours a day with pottery when he is not teaching. When he was young, he said, he worked for 12 to 14 hours a day along with teaching.

Garzio said his future plans are to retire. After teaching for 35 years, the classroom would be what he will miss the most, he said. Garzio said he will spend more time in the studio making pottery and working on his 80-acre farm outside of Manhattan.

Captain ignored warnings

By The Associated Press

VALDEZ, Alaska — Radio messages recorded the morning the Exxon Valdez hit a reef show the ship's captain spent up to an hour trying to rock the tanker free, which could have sunk the ship and spilled more oil, the Coast Guard said Tuesday.

The captain ignored Coast Guard warnings that trying to move the ship could have made the nation's worst oil spill almost five times as bad, the recordings show.

The state revised the estimate of the oil spilled from the tanker's punctured tanks to 11.2 million gallons. Officials said its crews had been busy with the cleanup and were slow revising Exxon's original estimate of 10.1 million gallons.

Environmental damage from the oil is still being assessed, but three hatcheries in oil-soaked Prince William Sound have begun releasing millions of tiny salmon because the annual bloom of plankton, an important food source for the fry, was at its peak.

"You can't stop Mother Nature," said Heather McCarty, spokeswoman for the non-profit association that owns the three hatcheries. By mid-May, 800 million salmon fry will be released from five hatcheries throughout the sound.

"If we don't release them now or within the next few days they'll miss the peak for plankton flowering. Then they won't survive for sure," she said.

Salmon fry tend to swim close to the surface of the water and remain close to shorelines until they migrate to the open sea, McCarty said.

Exxon estimates at least 1 million gallons of oil still is floating on the water of the sound and the Gulf of Alaska — and the fry may encounter oil.

Oil-skimming operations were hampered by a third straight day of rough seas. Most vessels remained anchored in safe harbors, and snow fell in Valdez.

The recorded radio messages showed that Coast Guard Cmdr. Steve McCall in Valdez warned Exxon Valdez Capt. Joseph Hazelwood to take it "slow and easy" in trying to get his ship off the reef that ripped his hull on March 24.

Heart drug limitations ordered

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Federal officials ordered new restrictions Tuesday on two heart drugs that have been used for years to treat mild heartbeat irregularities. The officials said they were shocked after a clinical study showed patients dying unexpectedly.

The National Heart, Lung and Blood Institute announced that the drugs Tambocor and Enkaid were being withdrawn from a massive clinical trial studying the use of three drugs for treating patients who had suffered heart attacks and were experiencing mild arrhythmias, or irregular heartbeats.

A third drug, called moricizine, will continue to be used in the drug trials. That drug is not now on the market and has no brand name.

Frank Young, the Food and Drug Administration director, said letters will be sent to doctors to modify the use of Tambocor and Enkaid and that labeling instructions also will be changed. Doctors are being advised to discontinue use of the two drugs for patients with only mild heartbeat irregularities.

Young said, however, that patients taking the medicines should not change the use or dosage until instructed to do so by a physician.

Officials said they were surprised when the drug trials showed that more heart patients taking Tambocor and Enkaid were dying than were patients taking only placebos.

After 90-year rest, mill grinds wheat

The city of Wamego has a variety of tourist attractions, but none is quite like the Old Dutch Mill which opened to the public for the second time in 100 years on April 15.

The 40-foot high structure with a 25-foot diameter base has sat on a manmade hill in Wamego Park since 1924. It began producing flour in 1988, the first time since the 1880s, said Raymond Morris, president of the Wamego Historical Society.

The original wind-driven mill was built on a farm 12 miles north of Manhattan, Morris said.

"It's really a memorial to the pioneers of the milling industry, who started with this kind of a mill," he said. "(The mills) were usually home-built family operations, but they only lasted until the mechanized world caught up with them."

Construction of the mill was begun in the early 1870s by John Schonhoff, a Dutch immigrant, and was completed in 1879.

Schonhoff and his fellow workers built the mill by hand, except for the main drive shaft, which was hauled by wagon from Leavenworth, and such parts as cog wheels and steel frames.

Schonhoff was assisted by local stonemasons John Chadwich and Abe Rawson, who quarried yellow and white limestone for the mill.

The white limestone was used for the trim around the windows and doors, and the yellow limestone for the rest of the structure, said Lauren Hause, mill tour guide.

Above the door, in white limestone, is the face of the goddess of agriculture, Ceres. Hause said one of Schonhoff's many workers carved the face by hand.

"The story has it that (the carving) was a big secret," she said. "He had it out in a field, and when anyone would approach him as he was doing it, he would hide it."

According to that same story, one of Schonhoff's daughters served as the model for the face, but it was not known until they placed Ceres on the mill, Hause said.

Another story that has evolved during the mill's history concerns the unpredictability of the Kansas wind and its effects on the mill's operation.

"Sometimes the (Schonhoff) family would have to stay up all night shoveling wheat into the mill," she said. "If the stones would get too close together, they would shoot sparks. And since wheat dust is flammable, a fire could start up inside if a constant flow of wheat was not maintained in the mill."

Morris said that during windstorms, Schonoff's wife and daughters would move the mill's tail, which is a 40-foot pole that extends from the top of the mill to the ground. By adjusting the pole, the sails were unlocked and rotated out of the main stream of the wind.

Because of the unpredictable winds, at times there was too much flour for the family — and at others, not enough, Hause said.

During the operational days of the mill, farmers would come by wagon train from as far as 150 miles and stay with the Schonhoff family for two or three days to mill their grain, Morris said.

"The person who brought the grain helped do the milling," he said. "It was probably a barter-type arrangement where the price of milling was the use of some of the grain or flour."

Morris said the mill operated for eight or nine years, but when water and steam became more reliable and popular sources of power, the mill was forced out of business.

"It was the water-driven mill in Louisville, which was four miles away, that actually put this mill out of business," he said.

In 1898, the Ed Regnier family bought the farm, and the mill became a sightseers' attraction.

The mill sat basically unused except as a chicken coop or an ice house until 1924 when A.M. Bittmann and Forest Leach, members of the city park board, devised a plan to move the mill into Wamego, Hause said.

Regnier donated the mill.

On June 6, 1924, the moving began, she said. Each stone was taken down and numbered on the back to ensure that the mill was put back together exactly as it stood before.

"It took 18 months and 35 horse drawn wagons to move and reconstruct the mill," Morris said.

The mill was closed for 65 years until the tourism committee in Wamego decided to put the mill back

Cheney plans cuts in future weapon programs

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Bush administration will slow or cancel several futuristic weapons programs, including Star Wars and the stealth bomber, to build more of the arms already in the nation's arsenal, Defense Secretary Dick Cheney said Tuesday.

To further cope with fiscal 1990 budget reductions mandated by a new White House-congressional compromise, the Army, Navy and Air Force will reduce their active-duty strength of more than 2.1 million by 16,800 men and women, Cheney said.

Appearing before the House Armed Services Committee, Cheney ticked off a list of cutbacks. Many of the bigger decisions already had been disclosed, including the fact that $10 billion had been shaved from the proposed defense budget in the compromise with Congress.

The Pentagon's new budget authority, if Congress goes along with Cheney's bottom line: $295.6 billion. Left intact is a proposed 3.6 percent pay hike for men and women in the military.

Adm. William J. Crowe, the chairman of the Joint Chiefs, said he supported Cheney's cuts only because of "dismal realities — both political and economic."

But Crowe, who testified along with the other members of the Joint Chiefs, said the moves were not justified by any changes in the threat posed by the Soviet Union or in American commitments around the world.

Cheney, the former Wyoming representative who testified for the first time since becoming defense secretary last month, said the cuts could not come "without offending somebody, without breaking some china, stepping on some toes."

Among the reductions in "programs which offered potential, but which we could not afford at this time:"

■ "Star Wars," the program pushed by Ronald Reagan to develop lasers and other exotic weapons to shoot down enemy nuclear missiles, will lose $1 billion from its proposal 1990 budget, giving it a new total of $4.6 billion.

Cheney said the focus will shift from deployment sometime in the 1990s to research on "Brilliant Pebbles," a more advanced system consisting of thousands of orbiting satellites.

Spending over five years for the Strategic Defense Initiative would total $33 billion, compared to the $40 billion proposed by Reagan before he left office.

■ The B-2 stealth bomber will have its production pushed back a year to 1993. Almost $4.1 billion is being cut from the fiscal 1990 and 1991 budgets for the radar-evading plane. Recent estimates of $500 million per plane make it the most expensive in history.

■ The Marine Corps' V-22 Osprey, a battlefield aircraft designed to take off like a helicopter but fly like an airplane, will be dropped. The Pentagon had hoped to spend $25.9 billion on 663 Ospreys, including $1.3 billion in 1990. Cheney called this decision his most difficult.

Man released from jail after serving 21 years

By The Associated Press

ARCADIA, Fla. — A judge Tuesday overturned the murder conviction of a former migrant farm worker in the poisoning deaths of his seven children, freeing the 53-year-old man after 21 years in prison.

Retired Circuit Judge Clifton Kelly released James Richardson, 53, to the custody of defense attorney Ellis Rubin of Miami.

The decision came after an extraordinary appeal in which both Rubin and special prosecutor Janet Reno agreed that Richardson, a black man who was convicted by an all-white jury, had been railroaded.

"Within my heart, I knew that these great men were going to get me out — they weren't going to let me stay in there," the gray-haired Richardson, flanked by his attorneys, told The Associated Press. "Right now, I feel fine."

Richardson was convicted in 1968 of murdering his oldest child, an 8-year-old daughter, and sentenced to death. His sentence was later commuted to life imprisonment.

"This court is now convinced that the defendant did not receive a fair trial," Kelly told a packed courtroom in the DeSoto County Courthouse.

"There is a definite possibility of a different outcome in the trial" if material that the defense should have had access to had been provided by the prosecution, he said.

The judge denied defense attorney Mark Lane's motion to dismiss the charge, saying the state would decide later whether to retry the case.

Reno, however, said the charges would be dropped within about 10 days.

Kim Kilpatrick was named co-MVP at the KU Relays last weekend. Kilpatrick placed first in three of the four events she participated in and a second in the other. She took first in the 400-meter hurdles, 100-meter hurdles and took a first as a member of the 440-yard relay team.

Kilpatrick eyes NCAA track title

Hurdler waiting for everything to 'click'

By Chris Hays
Sports Editor

Kim Kilpatrick has already conquered the Big Eight Conference, and now the all-American hurdler is looking to conquer the nation.

The senior from Junction City has been in national competitions before, but this year she will be going for it all at the NCAA Outdoor Championships, June 1-3.

"I at least want to finish in the top three," Kilpatrick said. "I think I'm there and I have a shot at winning, but it's just all got to click. Just that one time."

Kilpatrick qualified for the NCAA meet in the 100-meter hurdles at Nebraska April 15 with a time of 13.58 seconds, but K-State coach John Capriotti said it will take a 13.30 or faster to capture the NCAA title.

"She definitely has to be one of the favorites. She should be right in there," Capriotti said. "Her best is a 13.49 and I think she is right on that now. It will take a little faster than that though."

Kilpatrick has been working hard on the aspects of her race that she and assistant coach Darryl Anderson believe will help take those extra tenths of a second off her time. She is mostly concerned with remembering to follow through with her back leg after she has come over a hurdle.

"Instead of bringing my trail leg through," she said, "I forget and kind of drop it after I clear the hurdle, instead of running on through."

Something like that may not seem to be a major problem, but Kilpatrick said every little movement counts in a race such as the 100-meter hurdles.

"The whole race is so technical," she said. "I know I'm strong enough. We're just in the process of trying to get everything down now."

The portion of the race Kilpatrick has problems with is toward the end at the seven, eight and nine hurdles. At that point, she said she starts to fatigue, so getting over those final hurdles is not as easy as the first six.

"I just need to get through seven and maintain," Kilpatrick said. "The problem with a technical race is that you can't always put everything together."

Kilpatrick has won two Big Eight Indoor titles in the 55-meter hurdles and is the defending outdoor champion in the 100-meter hurdles. She owns the K-State record in both of those events as well as in the 400-meter hurdles.

The hurdler turned in a strong performance at the recent KU Relays, where she was named co-MVP for her efforts in the two hurdle events and on two relay teams. She had her best time ever in the 100-meter hurdles at 13.32, but the wind factor will disqualify that mark from being considered a K-State record.

Her best time in the 400-meter hurdles this season is a wind-aided 1:00.32, but she thinks she can still reach the national qualifying mark of 58.50 in that event.

"The problem with that race is that it is so mental as compared to technical," Kilpatrick said. "Right when I first step into the blocks, I start psyching myself out because the race is so long."

Kilpatrick's competition at the NCAA outdoor in Provo, Utah, will include speedster Tananjalyn Stanley of Louisiana State. Kilpatrick competed against Stanley in March at the NCAA indoor in which Stanley won the 55-meter hurdles while Kilpatrick took fifth.

"(Kilpatrick) didn't particularly have a good race in the finals," Capriotti said of her performance at the indoor nationals.

Kilpatrick said she may take some time off next semester, but the 1992 Olympics in Barcelona, Spain, are still in the back of her mind. She qualified for the 1988 Olympic trials, which were last summer, but failed to reach the finals after advancing with the top 30 into the semifinals.

"I wasn't really ready mentally for that type of competition last year," Kilpatrick said, "but it gave me the opportunity to experience it, so next time I'll be ready for it.

"In track and field you have to mature. The older people know a lot more and I still have a lot to learn. It will come with time."

Tennis players receive honors

By The Collegian Staff

Two K-State netters were honored Tuesday for their efforts on and off the court.

Junior Valerie Rive was named Big Eight Conference player of the week for victories she posted against Colorado and Iowa State last week.

Rive was also named to the first-team academic all-Big Eight honor roll, along with teammate Annika Emtell, for the 1988-89 season.

The award is given for a combination of outstanding records in academics and athletics. Rive is carrying a 3.1 grade point average in marketing and management, while Emtell has a 3.35 in marketing.

In last week's action, Rive contributed two match points at the No. 4 singles spot. The first was against the Buffaloes' Birgit Fink-Jensen, who went down in straight sets, 6-4, 6-2. She also defeated Iowa State's Kim Dempsey. After losing the first set, 1-6, she came back in the last two to post 6-1 victories in both.

Rive finished with a flawless record for the week by posting another two wins paired with Marijke Nel at the No. 2 doubles spot. The tandem finished off both of the opposing teams in straight sets, beating Colorado 6-0, 6-4, and Iowa State 6-3, 7-6. The duo now boasts a 6-1 record in the Big Eight, their only loss coming against Oklahoma State.

It is believed to be the first time a K-State player has received the honor.

"She's making a tremendous contribution to our team," Coach Steve Bietau said. "It's really quite an honor for her, and one I feel she deserves. I'm very happy for her to receive recognition like that."

Golfers take last

From Staff and Wire Reports

AMES, Iowa — At the Big Eight Conference women's golf tournament, the K-State women finished in last place with a 54-hole score of 1028.

K-State coach Russ Bunker said prior to the competition that he believed Iowa State was within reach and the Wildcats led the Cyclones, 517-519, after Monday's round. Iowa State, however, picked up six strokes Tuesday to move ahead of the K-State women with a score of 1024.

K-State's top finisher was Chris Adams who shot 249 to finish in 21st place. She was followed by Adena Hagedorn at 251, Theresa Coyle, 267, Jill Zientara, 268, and Lonna Dale, 271.

Eva Dahllof finished at 229 for her third win and Oklahoma State's sixth consecutive Big Eight title.

Dahllof led Oklahoma's Cathy Stevens and Audrey Bendick by two and three strokes respectively in the second day of the 54-hole tournament at Iowa State's Veenker Memorial course.

Missouri's Christie Howard and Oklahoma State's Carolyn McKenzie tied for fourth at 233, followed by Joanne Brooks of Nebraska with 235.

Defending champion Oklahoma State was followed by Oklahoma, Missouri, Nebraska, Kansas, Iowa State and then K-State.

At the end of 27 holes Monday, Dahllof was ahead of teammate Sheila Luginbuel and Oklahoma's Bendick by three strokes.

Oklahoma State had five golfers in the top seven at last year's Big Eight tournament in Stillwater, Okla., which the Cowgirls won by 48 strokes over second-place Oklahoma. All five were back this year.

Oklahoma and Nebraska are the only schools other than Oklahoma State to have won Big Eight women's championships, each capturing two titles.

Colorado does not have a women's golf team.

Henson 11th at Drake after first-day events

From Staff and Wire Reports

DES MOINES, Iowa — K-State's Steve Henson ended Tuesday's first day of decathlon competition at the Drake Relays in 11th place. After five events, Henson has 3,134 points.

The two-sport star, who doubles as K-State's starting point guard during the basketball season, set a personal record with a leap of 6-8½ in the high jump. He tied for first place in that event.

In his other events, Henson had a time of 12.19 seconds in the 100-meter dash, 55.08 in the 400 meters, went 19-5½ in the long jump and tossed a shot put of 35-4½.

Henson's best score is 6,519 points, which he had last year at the Big Eight Outdoor meet. He owned the K-State record until Steve Fritz broke it this season with 6,994 points at the Texas Relays.

Henson has never finished lower than seventh at Drake and should move up in the standings after today's competition, which includes his best events — the pole vault and javelin. He will also be competing in the discus, 100-meter hurdles and the 1500 meters.

Owners: NFL rookies getting too greedy

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — For the 28 NFL teams, the easy part was dividing up 335 players in this year's draft. The hard part will be signing 334.

Even before the draft ended Monday evening, several top picks were looking at the $11.2 million that Dallas gave Troy Aikman, the No. 1 choice, and saying they would demand comparable remuneration.

If they do, it could be a long summer.

"One of these days, somebody's going to have to stand up to these kids and their agents," Jim Finks, president of the New Orleans Saints said Tuesday. "We just have to draw the line at a certain point and tell them 'it's been nice talking to you, have a pleasant year."'

"Sooner or later," said Jack Donlan, executive director of the NFL Management Council, "the economic reality that the clubs wrestle with all the time will begin to settle in with the players and their agents. That's when meaningful negotiations will take place."

Nonetheless, the draft is barely over and the posturing has begun.

Tony Mandarich, the Michigan State offensive tackle who was rated the best overall player available, said the day he was drafted that he wants to be paid that way — more than Aikman, though both Finks and Aikman's agent, Leigh Steinberg, point out "the scale for quarterbacks has always been different."

Sanders — the cornerback nicknamed "Neon Deion" or "Prime Time" — said he would like $10 million over six years from Atlanta, more than any defensive player in the league. Sanders has more leverage than most — he's an outfielder for the New York Yankees' AA farm club in Albany, N.Y., although he says he prefers football if all things are equal.

"Everybody says Deion is going to get X amount of dollars," said Sanders, who says he is anxious to begin negotiations with the Falcons. "I just want it to rhyme with my name."

Shockers pound Wildcats

From Staff and Wire Reports

WICHITA — Wichita State pounded out 16 hits, including six doubles and four home runs, as it romped past K-State, 17-5, in non-league baseball action Tueday night.

Shocker third baseman Pat Meares had five RBI, including a grandslam in the fourth inning that put WSU on top, 12-1. P.J. Forbes also had a big night, getting three hits and three RBI.

David Hierholzer, now 5-3, took the loss for the 'Cats, who sent seven pitchers to the mound.

K-State, now 25-17, takes a break from its usual Big Eight Conference weekend series and travel to Tulsa, Okla., this weekend for a two-game series with Oral Roberts.

Homers lift KC past Yankees

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Bo Jackson surprised himself with his league-leading seventh home run.

"I just tried to reach out and make contact and I really didn't think it would go out," the Kansas City outfielder said Tuesday night after helping the Royals to a 5-3 victory over the New York Yankees.

Jackson's fourth home run and eighth RBI in six games came in the fifth and was only the second hit off John Candelaria, 2-2.

"He had been throwing the ball really well, hitting the corners, but that one he just got a little too far over the plate," Jackson said.

Bret Saberhagen hiked his record to 2-2 with a complete-game nine-hitter as the Royals won their fourth in a row.

"Saberhagen pitched pretty good, but we had chances to crack him," said Yankee manager Dallas Green. "We left guys all over the bases again. We had chances to score runs with less than two outs and we didn't do it three different times. You can't be successful doing that. This game tonight proves that as good as any game you'll ever see."

Royals second baseman Frank White was assessed his first fielding error in 171 games on a controversial call in the eighth. Rickey Henderson, one of the league's swiftest runners, hit a ground smash that White lunged to his right to stop. But he didn't come up with the ball in time to get Henderson and was given the error.

"It's been this way my whole career," said White, who had only four errors all last season. "It's not fair, but I've never gotten a break in this ballpark."

Candelaria retired the first 10 batters until Kevin Seitzer hit his first home run since last July 6. Jackson's home run, an opposite-field shot into the Kansas City bullpen, tied it 2-2 leading off the fifth.

With two outs in the fifth, Kurt Stillwell and Willie Wilson singled and Seitzer singled to score Stillwell with the Royals' third run. They made it 4-2 in the sixth when Pat Tabler singled, went to third on Bob Boone's single and scored on White's double.

New York moved within 4-3 in the eighth when Steve Sax doubled and, on right fielder Danny Tartabull's fielding error, came all the way home.

The Yankees, who had won seven of 10, would have had at least a 3-0 lead in the fourth if Mel Hall hadn't pulled up lame rounding third base. New York was leading 1-0 on Don Mattingly's RBI double in the first when Ken Phelps and Hall hit one-out singles.

Earthquake hits Mexico City

Widespread panic caused due to '85 quake disaster

By The Associated Press

MEXICO CITY — A strong earthquake struck Mexico City and Acapulco on Tuesday, cracking buildings and an aqueduct, shattering glass and panicking thousands of people who remembered the killer quake of 1985.

One man was electrocuted when power cables fell on him, and two women were seriously injured when they jumped in panic from the second story of a swaying building during the 8:26 a.m. (10:26 a.m. EDT) quake, officials said.

Police sent on inspection patrols throughout the city reported no collapsed buildings or other deaths or serious injuries, but many buildings in the seismically sensitive center swayed widely and were evacuated.

"The quake produced a lot of panic because of the recent (1985) experience," said Mayor Manuel Camacho Solis.

Solis said fallen cables and short circuits caused power blackouts in many parts of the city. He also said the Tlahuac aqueduct, one of several bringing drinking water to this metropolis of 19 million, cracked in several places and caused some flooding.

However, Solis said all services would be restored within three days.

President Carlos Salinas de Gortari made a quick tour of affected areas and, in a television interview, praised residents for maintaining "serenity and coolness." He said their experience in the 1985 disaster had served them well.

Tuesday's tremor shook the Pacific beach resorts of Acapulco and Zihuatanejo, but there were no reports of death or damage throughout the state of Guerrero, according to state government spokesman Miguel Angel Hernandez.

"Even though the quake was intensively felt, everything is normal and there are also reports of no major damage. We did a survey by radio," Hernandez said.

The U.S. National Earthquake Information Center in Golden, Colo., said the earthquake registered 6.8 on the Richter scale. The epicenter was 40 miles east of Acapulco, about 200 miles south of Mexico City, said seismologist John Minsch. Mexico's Seismic Institute calculated the quake at 7 on the Richter scale.

The tremor hit Mexico City at about the same time as the massive earthquake that hit on Sept. 19, 1985, killing at least 10,000 people and destroying hundreds of buildings. That quake measured 8.1 on the Richter scale.

"There's a real psychosis here about earthquakes since 1985," said Alejandro Maura, an office worker who like hundreds of others had not re-entered his building hours after the tremor.

Francisco Guerra, advertising director of the newspaper Novedades de Acapulco, said the quake caused brief power failures and panic.

"I've never felt a tremor so strong in the city and I've lived here for 30 years. I thought the building would collapse," he said.

The quake was reported in the southern states of Oaxaca, Morelos, Michoacan, Jalisco and Mexico.

In Mexico City, the earthquake began as a small jolt and stopped momentarily. Then buildings began swaying back and forth, with plaster cracking and windows breaking.

Speaker: Relations with pets helpful

By Gary Lytle
Collegian Reporter

Pets — they may not be human, but they can communicate and form a bond with their companions.

Leo Bustad, president of the Delta Society, presented a Tuesday evening lecture on animal-facilitated therapy as a prelude to National Pet Week which begins May 7.

The purpose of National Pet Week is to promote responsible pet ownership, the proper care of pets and the psychological benefits of owning pets, said Jacob Mosier, professor of surgery and medicine.

"We are by nature nurturers, and we survived for thousands of years because we had suitable outlets to nurture in other people, in animals and in the natural environment," said Bustad, a dean emeritus at Washington State University.

"Many people who were dependent before having the animals are independent with the animals."

—Leo Bustad president of the Delta Society

But the natural interaction between people and animals has changed as society changed, he said.

"What happened was we industrialized; we mechanized; we urbanized and we concentrated in the city," Bustad said. "We separated a large population from the natural environment, from the animals and from suitable outlets of nurture.

"Compassionate nurturing is what people need, and (the Delta Society members) are the ones to give it."

Bustad has founded numerous People-Pet Partnership Programs around the country with elderly and handicapped persons to further the use of human-animal bonding as a type of therapy for individuals.

One example of this is the Human-Animal Bonding in Tennesee Program, he said. The program involves about 150 volunteers and their animals that visit 31 nursing homes.

Bustad said he has seen many cases of improved psychological and physical conditions in elderly people in nursing homes when they are given a chance to interact with animals.

Prisoners are another group on which Bustad has used human-animal bonding therapy.

A program was developed at a maximum security prison in Washington to teach inmates to train animals for the handicapped, Bustad said.

"Many people who were dependent before having the animals are independent with the animals," he said.

As part of the Partnership in Equine Therapy and Education, individuals train horses for handicapped children and adults.

Legislature prepares for session's end

By The Associated Press

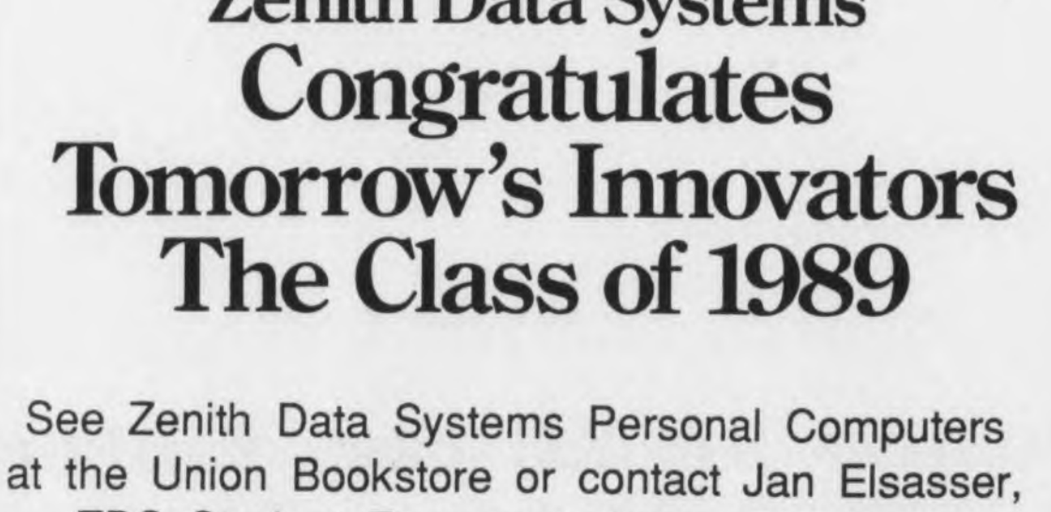
TOPEKA — A Senate-House conference committee Tuesday put the finishing touches on a compromise highway plan as lawmakers geared up for the final days of the 1989 session.

The stage is set for a major debate in the House on increasing the state sales tax from 4 percent to 4.5 percent, with half of the additional revenue going to education and the other half going to highways. Legislative leaders are not optimistic such a measure will pass.

If that bill fails, lawmakers will return to sign the conference committee report agreed upon on Tuesday, with a quarter-percent increase in the sales tax. All the money raised by that increase would go to highways and none to education under that plan.

The plan ironed out by three senators and three representatives resembles the $2.9 billion Senate version in every major way, with only minor differences. Besides the quarter-percent sales tax increase, the plan would give the secretary of transportation the authority to issue up to $1.1 billion in bonds.

The House rejected both a sales tax increase and bonding in its highway plan.



The House plan is considerably smaller than that passed by the Senate or developed by the conference committee. It would earmark $1.3 billion for highways.

into working condition in the fall of 1987, he said.

The committee, in conjunction with the Wamego Historical Society, had the mill working eight months later, Morris said.

"It's not wind driven," he said. "It's good old reliable electricity. We are no smarter in handling the high winds than (Schonhoff) was, so we would have had to face the same difficulties he did."

Because the stones in the mill were extensively worn, the original stone mill, which can still be seen in the museum next to the mill, was replaced by a vintage mill.

The vintage mill is on the ground floor of the Dutch Mill so that it can be seen by those touring the facility.

"We were afraid we might lose some antiquity by replacing the old mill," Morris said. "But the donated mill is probably five or six years older than the original one."

Both the original stone mill and the donated stone mill are unusual in design, Hause said.

"In most stone mills, the top stones move and the bottom is stationary," she said. "But these are the opposite — the top stones are stationary."

Hause said the stone mill is not used very frequently.

"It's difficult to find parts for it," she said. "If it was to break down, there would be no way to repair it."

A modern mill used to grind the wheat is located upstairs in the mill, Hause said.

The wheat is taken upstairs by a conveyor belt with buckets attached. It goes through a metal sifter to remove foreign debris, and then is ground in the new mill. The ground wheat slides back downstairs in a pipe to be bagged, she said.

There is a split in the pipe and the ground wheat can either go directly into the bin where it goes through a series of brushes for sifting, or it can be run through the antique mill, Hause said.

"When we do run the old mill, it's just for show," she said.

Morris said since the mill has been reopened, nearly 10,000 pounds of flour have been produced, but said the flour produced differs from the wheat flour sold in grocery stores because the mill's flour contains wheat germ.

Since the mill's flour still contains wheat germ, he said if it is not refrigerated, the oil in it may start to oxidize in about five or six months, causing the flour to lose some of its flavor.

"The reopening of the mill is really just completion of an old dream," Morris said. "It just took 65 years to make that happen."

state's financial conditions next year and "it is too early to tell what the state's financial condition will be," he said.

"We will proceed according to plan. There has been substantial state progress in the past two years," Koplik said. "At least conceptually, people understand and support MOE in placing Kansas back in the competitive mainstream of recruitment of faculty and students."

Scott said she is encouraged that the state of Kansas and the Legislature have supported MOE.

Also included in the appropriations bill is an increase in funding for a tuition grant program for students who attend the state's private colleges, allowing more than 1,000 students to qualify for those grants next year.

The bill increases funding for community colleges by 14.5 percent — $28.4 million for credit hour state aid, $8.5 million in out-district tuition and $3.7 million in additional state aid.

Washburn receives a $1.4 million increase in its state aid, to a new total of $5.9 million next fiscal year.

structure that best supports those missions.

"There won't be any changes in the structure of the college for at least two years because as a college faculty we need to talk about what our options are," Hoag said.

"We all look at it as an opportunity to look at alternatives," he said.

Measles

"We gave 75 vaccinations today and we expect to see a lot more in the next few days," Moeller said.

He said students should find out if and when they had been immunized for measles by checking with their parents or family doctor for shot records.

"Up to 20 percent of college-aged students are still susceptible to measles whether or not the vaccination has been received in the past," Moeller said. "Some students may need to be revaccinated."

If the vaccination was received before 15 months of age, the shot was given too early to be effective, he said. If the vaccine was received between 1963 and 1967, the vaccine may be ineffective. If the student has never had measles and was born after 1957, they will need to be immunized.

Moeller discouraged students from getting the vaccination if they are pregnant, or allergic to eggs or neomycin.

Students can get the shot at Lafene for $2 and no appointments are necessary.

Chuck Murphy, director of the Riley County-Manhattan Health department, said there have been no cases of measles, outside of K-State, of which he is aware.

Seats

"I don't forsee that happening now, but it is always a possibility," he said, "We do want them to know we're serious."

The planned seating change will have to be approved by Faculty Senate and the athletic department before it is adopted. The student body will probably not be voting on the proposal, Kowalczyk said.

"We had two student representatives and when they came back after hearing our proposal they seemed agreeable and I felt pretty positive that they reflected how the rest of the students felt," he said.

"We basically spoke for the students," said Johnson, who is Student Senate chairman. "We presented the plan to senate and the feedback we got from them was that everyone was pretty happy with the plan.

"It seems that all of the people I talked to think it is a good plan that takes care of everyone's concerns."

The section at the north end of Bramlage which was reserved for the band this year will be one of the spots where faculty seating will be reserved. This means the band will probably be placed in one of the student sections, although that remains undecided.

"This plan ought to work," Johnson said.

Road race honors flight 103 victims

By The Associated Press

LONDON — A 500-mile road race got under way before dawn Tuesday to honor those killed aboard Pan Am Flight 103 and to draw attention to a campaign for a U.S. congressional inquiry into the disaster.

The race by four marathon runners, to be held in stages between London and the Scottish village of Lockerbie, began outside the Houses of Parliament and is due to end Sunday.

A bomb blew apart the New York-bound Pan Am jumbo jet over Scotland on Dec. 21, killing 270 people.

Organizers said the race is being held in memory of the victims and to focus attention on their relatives' campaign for a congressional inquiry and for improved security at airports.

Two U.S. runners, French-born circus clown Yves Pol, 35, and Tom Grace, 48, of New York, are competing against Malcolm Campbell, 55, of Scotland, and Eleanor Adams, 41, of Britain.

They ran 26 miles Tuesday to Hemel Hempstead northwest of London, then set out from nearby Leighton Buzzard for Oakham 62 miles away in central England.

On Saturday, they will race around Glasgow's Ibrox Stadium during the halftime break in a soccer game between Glasgow Rangers and Heart of Midlothian.

They will be joined on the last five-miles to Lockerbie in southwestern Scotland by Eleanor Bright, 32, whose husband died in the crash. Nicholas Bright, also 32, had been returning to his Brookline, Mass., home from a business trip to London.

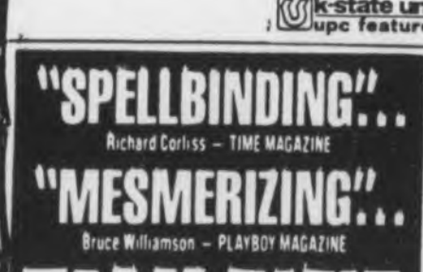
THE UPC ADVENTURE
UNION PROGRAM COUNCIL... YOUR ENTERTAINMENT ALTERNATIVE



"Babette's Feast" is set in the second half of the 19th century on Denmark's remote juland coast, in a small fishing village. The most notable inhabitants are a fervent Protestant pastor and his two beautiful, pious daughters, Martine and Filippa. Based on Isak Dinesen's novel, "Babette's Feast" is a fabel told with passion, intelligence and sumtuousness, with a deep reverence to all great artists. Rated G (English subtitles). Wednesday, 26th and Thursday, 27th, 7:30 p.m., Forum Hall and Thursday, 3:30 p.m., Little Theatre. $1.75 with K.S.U. I.D.

k-state union upc kaleidoscope

In this scathing social satire, the sacrilegious satirical six have taken up the monumental task of explaining THE MEANING OF LIFE. The results are pungent, hilarious, acid and priceless views of sex, religion, birth, war, and death. This relentless and irreverent insanity leaves nothing or noe one untouched. Monty Python tackles life and wrestles it to the ground in the most savagely villainous, rude and amusing, vulgar, and comic, gross and sidesplitting film you will ever see. Friday, 28th, and Saturday, 29th, Midnight, Forum Hall. Rated R. $1.75 with K.S.U. I.D.

k-state union upc feature films

This film details the weekend that a glib, cynical, cruel but often funny Dallas late night radio host Barry Champlain received the biggest break of his career-national syndication. But with this fame and success, he neither relaxes nor celebrates but instead sweeps up his wife, co-workers and his unstable radio audience into an intense, darkly comic marathon that affects all who surround him. Rated R. Friday, 28th, Saturday, 29th, and Sunday 30th. Friday & Saturday, 7:00 & 9:30 p.m. & Sunday, 7:00 p.m., Forum Hall. $1.75 with K.S.U. I.D.

Lafene officials expecting more measles cases

By Lance Schwulst
Collegian Reporter

More than 150 people waited in lines for as long as two hours at Lafene Student Health Center Wednesday to make record inquiries and be vaccinated for measles.

And Lafene officials expect those numbers to increase in the next week.

"I'm concerned with the possibility of a major outbreak of measles at K-State," said Dave Miller, director of immunology at the Kansas Department of Health and Environment. "Right now, the country is experiencing the largest outbreak of measles in years."

There was one new case reported at Lafene Wednesday and a case which was reported Tuesday is no longer considered to be measles, keeping the total number of cases at seven.

"What we might see here is (a drop in the number of cases reported) because of the 10-day incubation period," said Dr. Larry Moeller, chief of staff at Lafene.

"Currently in Kansas, we are looking at 48 cases of measles which have been confirmed by serology (blood testing) and another 120-130 suspected cases," Miller said.

He said most of the 130 cases will likely become confirmed cases of measles bringing the total number of cases in Kansas to well over 100.

"Over one-half of the Kansas cases are in Johnson and Douglas counties," Miller said. "(The University of Kansas) had several cases and Baker University has 10 cases."

Texas has more than 2,000 cases reported and 10 people have died from the measles.

"Measles can kill," he said. "It is not just an annoyance which will go away in a few days."

Moeller said the cases which have been reported at K-State have been identified as the rubeola measles. Rubeola is also known as "the red measles" and the "seven day" measles.

"Rubeola measles are not as severe as rubella (German measles)," he said. "Rubeola is not the (strain of measles) which can cause birth defects. Both strains are highly infectious."

The symptoms of rubeola measles are fever, headache, muscle ache, cough, irritated eyes, runny nose and sneezing. These usually occur about 10 days after contact with the virus. Four days after the initial symptoms, a red rash usually occurs on the face and spreads to the trunk and extremities.

Before anyone can be vaccinated at Lafene, they must read and sign a consent form, Moeller said. Women are asked if they are pregnant and if there is any chance that they might be pregnant. If they are, they are advised to not be vaccinated.

Dr. Charles Crane, a physician at Pediatric Associates in Manhattan, insists that women be tested for pregnancy before administering a measles vaccination.

"Measles Outbreak, check your shot record."

This sign in the window of Lafene Student Health Center was short, to the point and effective. Students waited for as long as two hours for either the vaccine to ensure their health or the confirmation that their poor health was caused by the measles.

"I thought I would check to make sure I was safe," said Kelly Popp, freshman in accounting. "I'm not going to be sick before finals. There is no way. I don't want the measles. I don't want them."

Darius Lechtenberger, freshman in finance, went to Lafene to have his sore throat checked and ended up getting a measles shot.

"They said my throat was not that bad but I might want to get the measles shot," Lechtenberger said. "I had class in 20 minutes. So I thought, 'What the hell. I'll keep myself healthy.'"

"My mom called a few weeks ago when it was going around the Shawnee Mission schools," said Christy Ward, junior in marketing. "She told me to get the shot but I didn't. When I saw the article, I thought I had better get the shot."

Most of the students who had their records checked were advised to get vaccinated, said Phyliss Hammond, head nurse of Lafene.

"The people who have found out that they do not need to have the vaccine have been happy," Hammond said. "A lot of the students who have some of the symptoms are concerned about missing their finals."

One student said she might be placed on the "suspected" list.

"I went to Lafene last night and they could not give me the vaccine because I had a fever," said Laura Gartner, freshman in advertising. "I have to go back Friday morning and if I still have the fever and my symptoms aren't gone, I'll be put on the suspected (list).

"I'm scared about how my finals will go, because they said suspected people will be sent home."

Goodnow Hall staff members have been holding floor meetings to inform the students about the outbreak.

Abortion testimony received by Court

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Abortion opponents led by the Bush administration urged the Supreme Court Wednesday to overturn its landmark 1973 ruling that women have a constitutional right to end their pregnancies.

Outside, police arrested 27 abortion-rights activists, among a noisy crowd of people demonstrating on both sides of one of the the nation's most divisive issues. Those arrested were charged with crossing a police line.

In sharp contrast, the hour-long argument session took place in a packed but hushed courtroom.

"The United States asks this court to reconsider and overrule its decision in Roe vs. Wade," said Harvard law professor Charles Fried, referring to the ruling that legalized abortion.

But Frank Susman, a St. Louis lawyer representing those who successfully challenged an abortion-limiting Missouri law in lower courts, argued, "There can be no ordered liberty for women without control over their ... childbearing."

Missouri Attorney General William Webster urged the court to restore the state's abortion regulations even if it does not reverse the broader 1973 decision, which was based on women's privacy rights.

Fried, a former Justice Department official called back to government duty for Wednesday's session, argued, "We are not asking the court to unravel the fabric of ... privacy rights which this court has woven. We are asking the court to pull this one string."

Susman responded, "It has always been my personal experience that when I pull a thread my sleeve falls off. There is no stopping. It is not a thread he is after."

Questioning by the justices was brisk but not as aggressive as it has been in many argument sessions of recent years.

Seven of the nine court members probed the positions of the three lawyers in front of them. Only Justices Thurgood Marshall, a strong supporter of abortion rights, and Harry A. Blackmun, author of the 1973 decision, remained silent.

The justices, who do not necessarily have to reconsider Roe vs. Wade in resolving the Missouri dispute,

Miller: Fee issue educational experience

By Alan Wilds
Staff Writer

Although the issue of raising revenue in the KSU Athletic Department has been a roller coaster ride this semester, Athletic Director Steve Miller said the relationship between the department and the student body has been improved through better communication.

"It has been a very educational experience for the department," Miller said. "I think both parties learned from it."

In the past, he said, the department did not fully understand the entire process of implementing an athletic fee.

"Student Senate educated us, and we were able to educate students about the athletic department's needs," he said.

The student athletic fee, which was proposed by the department early in January, was drawn up by the Student Affairs and Social Services committee and sent to the Senate floor.

After two sessions of debate, it was passed on to the student referendum on March 27 and 28, where a simple majority of students voted for it, but it failed to get the two-thirds majority required to pass.

Todd Johnson, Senate chairman, said a lot of the debate centered around the referendum process and whether the fee should be passed by a simple or a two-thirds majority.

"A lot of it boiled down to philosophical arguments," Johnson said.

He said any time a fee is discussed there will be and should be a lot of debate, although the process could have been made easier by ignoring technicalities.

"The people who were against it found small technical problems instead of concentrating on the big issue," he said.

Senate is establishing a committee to look into constitutional revisions, one of which is the referendum process.

Miller said although the end result wasn't good, he was pleased that the referendum brought out a high percentage of voters and reaffirmed the students' simple majority position in favor of athletics.

"There was some joy that we achieved as much as we did," Miller said.

The department's alternative solution to the student fee was to raise ticket prices by $1 dollar per game. After this decision was made, Miller said he was informed of increases in out-of-state tuition and living expenses as well as a projected loss of $3 million by the Big Eight Conference for next year. In order to compensate for this, ticket prices were raised an additional 50 cents per game for a total increase of $1.50.

"Student Senate educated us, and we were able to educate students about the athletic department's needs."

—Steve Miller athletic director

"I am not disappointed that we had to raise ticket prices," Miller said. "It is simply a matter of economics." He said there have not been any complaints or phone calls to the department about the increase.

Another revenue-raising proposal is the combined fee for fine arts and athletics which comes up for debate in Senate tonight.

Miller said he proposed a similar fee at the beginning of the year, but at the time the funds were not available.

"I believe it is a monumental step in the right direction," he said. "If the entertainment fee passes, we will once again take a look at our situation and see if any adjustments need to be made."

He said any proposed fee for athletics would have to be combined with fine arts in the future.

"We are just wanting to provide the best entertainment for the best price," Miller said.

Getting more people in the football stands is the department's main goal for next year, he said.

Chris Peterson, assistant athletic director in charge of marketing and sales, has planned several activities for next year's football season to enhance the pre-game atmosphere.

"We have lost the student as a consumer," he said. "We want them to come back excited in the fall and come out to the stadium and take a look."

Peterson said entertainment will be based on surveys conducted at all living groups on what they would like to see.

"We want to create a pleasant pre-game atmosphere for the public," he said. "I realize we are not going to the Orange Bowl next year, but we are looking at winning some football games."

In regard to the fine arts/athletic fee, Peterson said it would be great if it passes, but the budget must be planned assuming it does not.

"Athletics is operated on a blue-sky budget," he said. "The budget can only be determined by how successful you are."

Poison gas use investigated

MOSCOW — Officials have launched a criminal investigation into the use of tear gas by soldiers who rushed thousands of people demonstrating for independence in Soviet Georgia, a Foreign Ministry spokesman said Wednesday.

But the spokesman, Vadim Perfiliev, denied that tear gas or any other chemical substance used by the soldiers killed anyone in the April 9 clash in the southern republic's capital of Tbilisi.

The denial contradicted reports by the Georgian minister of health, Irakli Managarishvili, that at least two of the 20 victims died from the gas and several others died from asphyxiation that may have been induced by the unidentified substance.

At least 1,100 people were injured in the melee, in which soldiers charged the rally with sharpened shovels.

Perfiliev told a news briefing that the investigation is being carried out by the chief military prosecutor. "Due to the fact that tear gas was used on demonstrators in Tbilisi, a criminal case has been opened," he said.

He said none of the victims had died from tear gas or other chemicals.

High school outlaws kissing

NEDERLAND, Colo. — Officials have embraced a "Daylight Rule" to ban kissing and other affectionate displays between students, but the American Civil Liberties Union says the rule smacks of violating constitutional rights.

The daylight rule, which means daylight must be visible between students, was enacted at Nederland School last week. About 270 students, grades 7 through 12, attend the rural mountain school west of Boulder, which offers many teen-agers their primary meeting place.

"As a faculty, we just got tired of saying things to kids about kissing in the hallways," said teacher Marsha Skaro.

Students who violate the rule get a written warning; a second offense merits a letter to parents. A parent-student conference with school authorities is required for the third. Further discipline is not specified.

Boulder County schools Superintendent Jim Hagar said the rule is the school's prerogative.

However, David Miller, regional legal director of the ACLU, said discipline beyond notification of parents could threaten constitutional rights of privacy and freedom of association. "As soon as they start to discipline somebody, then we at the ACLU will take the matter very seriously," Miller said Tuesday.

Fusion scientists testify

WASHINGTON — Two researchers who say they've mastered fusion, the process that powers the sun and the stars, told Congress Wednesday they will duplicate their experiments for government scientists in hopes of quieting skeptics.

"We have 19 experiments being set up now," University of Utah chemist Stanley Pons told the House Science Committee, including a demonstration of room-temperature fusion for scientists from the Los Alamos National Laboratory.

Pons said the federal scientists will monitor the experiment at Utah, then dismantle it and take it to the national laboratory in New Mexico for further tests.

Missionary seeks lost dog

BEATRICE, Neb. — An American missionary in England is looking for her lost dog — in Beatrice.

Jan Haag, who works with Child Evangelism Fellowship in Manchester, England, left her dog with her mother in Dolton, Ill., when she moved to England in July. When the mother, June Haag, decided to visit her daughter, she made arrangements to leave the dog with her son.

John Haag, of Clyde, Kan., met his mother in Iowa City, Iowa, on March 28 to pick up Mosette, a beagle mix. But when he stopped here for supper, Mosette wandered away.

Haag wrote to the police department last week to ask about taking out a newspaper ad in an effort to find the dog.

She told the Beatrice Daily Sun in a telephone interview this week that she pulled the dog out of a river when it was a puppy. She named it after Moses, who also was pulled out of a river.

Senate approves highway bill

TOPEKA — The Senate Wednesday narrowly approved a bill that would create a $2.9 billion comprehensive highway program.

The bill is a compromise forged in a conference committee that ironed out differences between a House-passed highway plan, which would have totaled $1.3 billion, and one passed by the Senate, which would have totaled $2.9 billion.

The conference committee's plan was passed in the Senate 21-17.

The compromise plan is very similar to the one approved by the Senate earlier in the session. It would increase the state sales tax from 4 percent to 4.25 percent, with the additional revenue going to highways. It would also allow the state to issue up to $1.1 billion in bonds.

The House rejected those two funding mechanisms in its version, and relied primarily on fuel tax increases and registration fee increases to raise the revenue.

Lucille Ball dies at age 77

Death concludes four decades of comedian's work

By The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Lucille Ball, the daffy comedian whose harebrained schemes drove her television family crazy but delighted viewers for four decades, died Wednesday of a ruptured abdominal artery. She was 77.

The actress, star of the hugely popular "I Love Lucy" and related situation comedies seen in more than 80 countries, had undergone major heart surgery April 18.

She had been recovering steadily, getting out of bed and joking with the staff, but shortly before dawn Wednesday, she went into cardiac arrest due to internal bleeding and could not be revived, said Cedars-Sinai Medical Center spokesman Ronald Wise.

She suffered a complete heart failure at 5 a.m. and 47 minutes of resuscitation efforts proved fruitless, Wise said. "There was nothing to indicate this would happen," Wise said. "The heart itself apparently was not involved in Miss Ball's sudden death."

In the 6½ -hour surgery at Cedars-Sinai, doctors replaced her aorta and aortic valve. Although the replaced portion of Ball's aorta did not apparently fail, the entire artery was in poor condition when she was operated upon, said Dr. Robert Kass.

Kass, who performed the operation, said at the time the tearing in Ball's aorta "progressed all the way down into her abdomen."

Ball, with her fire-engine red hair and siren wail, was considered the queen of situation comedy and a pioneer of the sitcom format.

"I and 100 million others will miss her," said comedian George Burns. "But we haven't lost Lucille Ball because she's still with us on television and we can see her on and on."

"Her red hair, her antics on the screen, her timing and her zest for life made her an American institution," former President and Nancy Reagan said in a statement. "Just the mention of her name brings a smile. ... We love Lucy and will miss her deeply."

"It's a shock after working very closely with her and loving her for over 35 years," said Ball's frequent sidekick, Gale Gordon, who was in Edmonton, A berta.

While in the hospital, the comedian was deluged with thousands of cards, letters, flowers and phone calls from fans as far away as Australia and Europe.

Ball and her late former husband, Desi Arnaz, starred in "I Love Lucy" from 1951 to 1957 and have been seen since in widely syndicated reruns. The late Vivian Vance and William Frawley played their neighbors, Fred and Ethel Mertz.

Her split-second timing, wide-mouthed wails and exaggerated pratfalls made the "I Love Lucy" show one of the most popular in television history.

Bridge clubs and bowling teams changed their meeting nights to watch Lucy and Ethel cook up still another ridiculous scheme that would push their long-suffering husbands to exasperation.

Ball's real, onscreen pregnancy marked a milestone in television, and an estimated 44 million viewers — more than for the inauguration of President Eisenhower — tuned in on Jan. 19, 1953, to watch Lucy Ricardo have Little Ricky. The real birth occurred just four hours before the previously-filmed show was broadcast.

Ball's singularity as a comedian was matched by her talent as a show-business entrepreneur. She and Arnaz established one of TV's first major independent studios.

Desilu, as their production company was called, made some of the top comedy shows of the 1950s and '60s, including "December Bride," "Our Miss Brooks" and "Make Room for Daddy."

As testament to their value as prime-time stars, Ball and Arnaz signed an $8 million, no-cancellation, two-year contract with CBS in 1953 — the largest in television history at the time and a figure scarcely any TV star can touch today.

The couple stopped making weekly "I Love Lucy" shows in 1957. Despite riches and two children, Lucie and Desi Jr., their marriage floundered, and the couple divorced in 1960.

In 1961, Ball married nightclub comic Gary Morton, who became her executive producer, and remained on TV for 12 more years in the weekly "Here's Lucy" and "The Lucy Show."

Ball was born Aug. 6, 1911, in Jamestown, N.Y., the daughter of an electrician and a concert pianist.

New Wildcat logo to become official

By Joe Kennedy
Collegian Reporter

Within the next two or three weeks University attorney Richard Seaton will start the process of getting the new Wildcat logo trademarked.

Seaton is working on a package needed for the application of a trademark. Materials to be included in the package are a drawing of the logo that meets certain specifications and two or three examples of where the trademark will appear.

The Federal Department of Commerce Patent/Trademark Office may require several months to grant the rights, Seaton said.

Chris Peterson, assistant athletic director of marketing, said the KSU Athletic Department will own the rights to the new logo as soon as the trademark is granted.

"Football will be the only sport to use the logo for now," Peterson said. "But the logo will not be exclusive. It is open to any department in the University that would like to use it."

The logo can already be seen on billboards on Kansas Highway 18 and on walls outside the visitors' locker room of the stadium, he said. It will also be used on the letterhead for the football program and may be used by the athletic department.

With the new logo, the athletic department has a new image that can be merchandised, Peterson said. Although no revenue projections have yet been made, the department has several schools it hopes to emulate.

Peterson said the University of Oklahoma generated $1.6 million from merchandising products with its logo. The University of Iowa generated $1.3 million and the University of Texas generated $160,000 in stadium merchandising alone.

"We won't have any revenue projections until next fall, but we have had several requests from local merchandisers to use the logo on different products," he said. "Until we get a facility to store the inventory, we won't be doing a lot of merchandising."

Peterson said the revenues generated from the merchandising of the logo will go to the Mike Ahearn Scholarship Fund, which helps subsidize the overall operation of the department.

Tom Bookwalter, designer of the logo, said although he has designed many corporate logos, this is the first logo that will be used by a university.

"I didn't do it or recognition, I did it to be a nice guy and help the team out," he said.

Bookwalter received no monetary compensation for the design, but will receive some season tickets.

"I could contribute money, but I decided to put my talents to use and make a contribution," he said.

Resolution would support CFC ban

By The Collegian Staff

Student Senate will hear first readings of a resolution that would give the Senate's support to a ban on the production and use of chlorofluorocarbons in Kansas.

"CFCs are found in polystyrene (Styrofoam) containers that the K-State Union food service uses," said Todd Johnson, Senate chairman.

If approved, a copy of the resolution would be sent to companies in Kansas that produce CFCs, such as Racon Inc. in Wichita.

Senate will vote on allocating funds to the Rodeo Club and to Student Governing Association. The Rodeo Club is requesting funding to pay for ambulance service at rodeos. SGA requested funding for the purchase of a computer and printer for its office.

Senate will also hear first readings of a bill that would approve the Blue Cross and Blue Shield proposal for Student Health Insurance.

"The Lafene Student Health Advisory Committee reviewed all the proposals," Johnson said.

Senate will also hear first readings of a resolution that would commend Kristy Parker, junior in business, on her selection as a Truman Scholar. The Truman Scholarship is for study relating to careers in public service.

Chinese students' riots advocate democracy

The sudden death of Hu Yaobang from a heart attack on April 15 once again triggered massive student demonstrations in some major cities in China. While engaging in mourning activities in public, students are openly advocating "freedom, democracy and an ending of the communist dictatorship."

The series of events in China in recent days reminds us again of the nationwide student rallies in the winter of 1987-88 which led to the abrupt dismissal of Chinese Communist Party General Secretary Hu Yaobang in January 1987. Before his ouster from the leading post, Hu had been a protege of the paramount leader Deng Xiaoping who came back to the zenith of power after Mao's death in 1976.

In the course of consolidating his power base, Deng and his supporters successfully discarded the Maoist "class struggle concept" and replaced it with the more pragmatic policy of invigorating the economy and opening up China to the outside world.

Deng has long been quite aware that the stability of the political leadership and the continuity of his policy is to have followers whose political interests are tied to the success of his economic program. It is believed that with the help of Hu, then director of the Party Organization Department, Deng brought back almost 2.9 million cadres who had been purged during Mao's Cultural Revolution.

If Deng has been the chief architect of China's reforms and open-door policies, Hu contributed enormously in bringing Deng's basic ideas and aspirations into reality. As a veteran leader himself, Hu joined the Chinese revolution at 14 and survived the world famous Long March. He had taken important positions for the party's ideological work before the Communists took power in China in 1949.

Since then his administrative work at the provincial levels enriched his experience as a leader until he was purged along with Deng and other party senior officials during the Cultural Revolution allegedly for taking a "revisionist road."

After his rehabilitation, while deploring the impoverished state of China left by Mao's legacy, Hu shared similar views with Deng that it is impossible to continue the economic reforms without tapping the bureaucratic political system.

Commentary

Yang Ning

Guest Columnist

Editor's note: Yang Ning is a graduate student in political science.

While the political reform was put on the agenda, Hu had been very active in operational terms. Hu was believed to have been the patron for many leading intellectuals who had lost confidence in communism and are for a Western democratization of the political system in China. Leading dissident and astrophysicist Fang Lizhi, who stirred issues of controvery on human rights during President Bush's visit to China in February, is said to have had very close associations with Hu.

However, in his zeal to pursue the political reforms, Hu alienated himself from the more conservative veteran leaders who did not like to see their own interests sacrificed at the expense of the political restructuring. The student protests in 1986 provided the right moment for the conservatives to join forces in toppling Hu.

Hu was accused of being "too soft" on the controversial political issues and of the "usurping of power." He was forced to step down and even Deng could not come to the rescue.

Before his death, Hu still retained a position as a member of the powerful Politburo and was always regarded as a potential force for more radical changes before or after Deng. His handpicked former associates are still occupying key positions in the party's hierarchy and Hu was still exerting tremendous influence on them.

Ironically, his fame grew steadily after his downfall, for more and more people began to realize that the bottlenecks of the ongoing economic reforms in China cannot be broken unless a major political reformation is put into practice. And a democratization of the decision making at all levels will surely curb the rampant inflations and corruption that are connotated with the economic reforms. However, traditional party officials claim that China has its own characteristics and that political democratization can only be achieved under the unified leadership of the communist party.

The recent student demonstration after Hu's sudden death shows that while regretting the loss of a strong advocate of political reforms, students are disheartened by the slowdown of the democratic process in China.

Western analysts worry that such demonstrations might risk triggering another conservative backlash and more tightening up of policies against dissent. It seems not quite possible that the present communist government in China will enforce a harsh crackdown on the students, for the supressing of the April 5 Tiananmen Square riots in Beijing in 1976 are still fresh in people's memories.

Such student demonstrations also put the party elites into a dilemma: Hu was eulogized at last at his funeral, as an outstanding leader of the communist party. Thus are his abortive political reforms to be carried forward, or will a more cautious and highly centralized leadership work better for China in the long run?

Successful comedian leaves legacy behind

America loved Lucy.

The famous comedian who has been a regular in American homes for years died Wednesday at 5 a.m.

Since she began her career in 1926, Lucille Ball has entertained millions on the movie screen, the TV, radio and broadway. Most remember her as the funny redhead who played Lucy Ricardo on the "I Love Lucy" series, which aired for six years in prime time and for eternity in reruns.

More than just a comedian, the talented entertainer starred in more than 75 films and was a sucessful show-business entrepreneur.

While some may say, "What's the big deal, it's just another old entertainer who died," it's important to remember that for most of us, she is a significant part of our culture.

Most of us grew up on "I Love Lucy" and it would be rare to find a home in America where her name was not recognized.

Perhaps former President Ronald and Nancy Reagan put it best when they said in a statement, "Her red hair, her antics on the screen, her timing and her zest for life made her an American institution."

Precautions necessary in measles outbreak

Measles were something we got vaccinated for as babies. That was it. It was almost a forgotten disease.

But it's not. The entire country is suffering from an outbreak of measles, a disease that can kill. With seven reported cases of measles on campus, and as many as 120 to 130 suspected cases in Kansas, the possibility of an outbreak of epidemic proportions is here.

The best defense against this disease is prevention. Students not sure if they have been vaccinated should make plans to do so. Lafene Student Health Center has opened special hours and ordered additional vaccine supplies to help handle the load of concerned students.

Women being vaccinated for the disease should exercise caution if they are pregnant or could possibly be pregnant in order to avoid complications from the vaccine. While Lafene does not require pregnancy testing before administering the vaccine, many clinics consider it so important they will not administer a vaccination for measles to a woman without first doing a pregnancy test.

Dr. Charles Crane, a physician at Pediatric Associates, is in favor of the testing, and has referred to the practice of pre-vaccination pregnancy testing as "absolutely universal." If any possibility of pregnancy exists, the vaccine should be avoided.

If enough preventive measures are used, the spread of measles can be stopped. Students with families coming to town for commencement exercises should be certain that all family members are vaccinated for the disease before they come.

Measles is a serious disease with serious consequences. Lafene should be commended for being open 24 hours a day to vaccinate and reassure students. Any students with doubts or concerns about their immunization situation should make use of the services provided. It's up to everyone to make an effort to stop this disease.

Better interracial relations desired

As the semester comes to a close, I have been thinking about education, minority women, and the columns I have written concerning racism and how destructive it can be to relationships and children.

But now it's important to point out the only good thing racism does. I know the faces are dropping with that statement, but racism does have the potential to bring one good aspect to life. Due to racism and the need to fight against it, friendships have been developed.

The best way to get this column's message across is to provide some theatrical excerpts from plays I am writing on this subject. Although this is my personal interpretation, it should help to inspire thoughts about how racism, as bad as it is, can cause the development of a sincere, honest friendship upon which racial differences have no influence.

Play one: "The Best of Both Worlds." Rebecca (a white female) and Jackie (a black female) have always lived as outcasts in the world. They have been ostracized by their respective races because they want a variety of friends and because they haven't believed the assumption that people of different races can't be best friends.

Yet it is easy for Jackie and Rebecca to make fun of the racism they've encountered because they know the "uniqueness" of their relationship. This is an example of Rebecca and Jackie's friendship.

Jackie: Remember your granddaddy and our Miami Vice days?

Rebecca: Oh, my God, yes. (laughs) You liked Don Johnson.

Jackie: And you liked Phillip Michael Thomas.

Rebecca: Grandpapa would always say ...

Jackie: ... shouldn't that be the other way around?

Rebecca: (grins) Hmmm ... how would we respond?

Jackie: Oh, you remember, one ... two ... three ...

Jackie and Rebecca together: ... who the (Naughty Word) cares, grandpapa?

Jackie: Funny, he never liked that response too well.

Rebecca: Oh, well, that's us. Against the odds.

Jackie: Rebels with a cause.

A moment of silence. Jackie and Rebecca look at each other. They start to laugh.

Jackie and Rebecca together: But isn't it (Naughty Word) fun.

Interracial friendship power.

Play two: "I Have a Dream." Elizabeth is a writer who never really understood or took an active stand for the importance of Martin Luther King Jr.'s dream until she became friends with a man who wasn't of her race.

But after she faces racism for the sake of saving the friendship, she begins to know the purpose of King's dream and decides she should be actively lobbying for the dream.

On King's birthday, she decides to thank her friend for helping her to understand King's dream, for indirectly helping her stand up for what she believes, and for giving her a friendship that isn't looked just because she is a black female and he is a white male.

Elizabeth: This is really going to sound strange, but I never knew what Dr. King's "I Have a Dream" speech meant until I started liking you. I just had no idea. But we talked and it happened. I don't know the day, the time, or even why I just started liking you. But I also felt guilty and ashamed. I tried to hide my feelings because I didn't want something that was so warm, so sincere and so nice to be made into something ugly and sinful. That's what happened. And I got as mad as hell. I decided I was going to fight and stand up for what I believed in. What I felt for you was very special and sincere. No one had a right to make me feel bad about it. And I know more than ever now, how right Dr. King was about hatred and segregation. And I owe that to you . and my feelings for you.

Just like the people in these plays, we also will meet a lot of jerks in our lives from a variety of racial affiliations who make us feel there's no hope left in the world and that it's best to just lock ourselves away because there aren't any true people when it comes to racism.

But there are some true people from all races, so I'll end with part of a tribute I wrote in honor of Dr. King and I hope it will say it all about true friendship despite racism.

No one understands the power or need of your dream until they know the feelings of an interracial friendship; the feelings of warmth and friendship, of knowing that a relationship is giving your life growth, sincerity and love. But there are also feelings of racism and accusations from family and friends. It is hard to be strong, but the faith in your dream keeps us strong and we will continue to speak for interracial friendships.

Thank you for giving us your vision, your hope and your dream. Because of you and some very good friends, I can hope for a better world because I have a dream that one day little black boys and black girls will be able to join hands with little white boys and white girls in friendship and love.

Give buses a try

Editor,

I see that once again the parking problem is being discussed.

It seems that the parking problem is being made into a rivalry between students and faculty/staff. I don't think that should be the case. In fact, I would like to suggest a solution which I have never even seen discussed in the three years I have lived here. Why don't we have a University bus system?

When I was a graduate student at Northern Illinois University, the university had such a system. It was not just a shuttle bus from one side of campus to the other. It was an extensive bus system that stopped at several spots on campus, as well as stopping in many business and residential areas throughout town.

The buses ran regularly, every half hour, and made frequent stops. Buses also ran on the weekends, although less frequently. Anybody with a student ID could ride for free because every student paid a small acitivity fee for the bus. Faculty and staff could buy passes cheaply, and townspeople were allowed to ride for a small fee.

It would seem to me that local businesses might also be interested in supporting such an enterprise, as it would allow students easier access to business areas far from campus. Not only would a bus system alleviate some of the strain that is now put on our parking areas, but it would alleviate the hardship that many students have who cannot afford a car.

There may be reasons why such a system wouldn't work in Manhattan, but I think the idea should at least be open for discussion and further research.

It worked well at Northern Illinois University and the population of Northern Illinois University, as well as the city of DeKalb where Northern is located, is approximately the same as K-State and Manhattan.

Teaching balance

Editor,

A recent letter to the editor stated that teaching creationism in public school would create an "unfair balance" in favor of proponents of creationism. In reality, the "unfair balance" is currently preferencing evolutionism and has been for hundreds of years.

When children are first taught evolution in school, they are at an age in which they believe most everything taught to them. I feel that the change should be made to teach creationism along with evolution in our school system. This would provide both explanations for the beginning of our planet.

Why would the teaching of Christians outside of school make a difference in the balance? The Bill of Rights specifically states our freedom of religion. Therefore it is one's own choice to attend religious services and believe in creationism. Implementing evolution into religion would defeat the purpose of a church.

May the Lord bless you, no matter what you believe.

CFC solution

Editor,

RE: The recent series on CFCs and atmospheric problems.

With all the doom and gloom talk about the sky is falling or deteriorating or something, no one mentioned anything positive. Just "stop using" a group of chemicals, CFCs, that are safe for human contact and perform many useful functions.

This will increase costs for everyone and make it even more difficult to provide refrigeration in places it is desperately needed.

I suggest, with more than 5 billion people on the planet requiring energy to live, that we need a technical solution. One possibility requiring some engineering, but already feasible, is to cut the solar radiation reaching the planet by using the space shuttle to deploy large (100,000 kilometer) "sun screens."

Other solutions are available but this one, considering future population pressures, is at least "do-able" now, or in the near future. This solution may even cost less than developing substitutes for CFCs.

Finally, since carbon dioxide is the major contributor to the greenhouse effect, stopping use of CFCs will not stop its generation. More people equals more carbon dioxide.

The solution suggested here will solve the global warming problem.

Avoid Dark Ages

Editor,

The U.S. Supreme Court should not heed the hysterical eunuchs, religious zealots and their gullible followers who want people to suffer for having sex.

Crucifixion is not for everyone. The idea of "Imitation of Christ," introduced by Thomas A'Kempis in the 15th century, is a ridiculous perversion of original Christianity which simply viewed Jesus Christ's life as a historical epic event opening the gates of heaven.

This could only be accomplished by God Himself and certainly not even imitated by mortals.

Bertrand Russell rejected Christianity largely due to its anti-sex bias and wrote, in "Why I Am Not a Christian," that the earliest Christians saw no use for sex since they believed in Jesus Christ's false prophecy that the end of the world would happen during their generation.

The religious zealot's targets are not only abortion and gay rights, but also contraception of any kind, sex hygiene items such as condoms, divorce, married clergy and female pastors. They cannot even get their own congregations to practice their pious strictures and frequently do not practice those pious strictures themselves.

Let's not return to the Dark Ages.

Cheating policy

Editor,

As a child, cheating was not tolerated, and it should not be tolerated now. That is why I would like to see K-State do two things regarding its Academic Honesty Policy.

First, K-State should publish the Academic Honesty Policy in the college catalog — a simple paragraph on what will and will not be tolerated.

Second, the University should require all instructors to hand out a copy of their Academic Honesty Policy, or their department's, to their classes.

Instructors should also try to use proctors as much as possible. Too many students believe that if the instructor is out of the room, they can cheat.

I realize that most of us know cheating is wrong, but it seems people tend to forget when they are not specifically told.

Programs aid homeless

Attempts made to educate children

By Janette Poole
Collegian Reporter

A child without a home does not have to be a child without an education.

"We have to make sure there aren't any barriers to education and services for the homeless children and youth," said Sandra Suttle, specialist with the state and federal programs of the Kansas Department of Education.

Combined efforts by the Kansas Legislature, the state Department of Education, and various social service agencies are providing homeless children with an education.

In order to determine the number of homeless children in Kansas, a survey was conducted by social service agencies, shelters, police departments, and school districts. The one-day survey conducted Nov. 21 found that 1,496 school-age children do not have a permanent home.

"Homeless children are children that are with their parents that are without a home," said Kathy Rankin, executive director of the Manhattan Emergency Shelter.

A one-day study was conducted "to identify how many homeless children they were aware of that day and to avoid duplication of services to the same individual," she said.

"No count will be totally correct. Those that are truly homeless don't want to be found, especially those that are under 16, because they could become a ward of the state," she said.

Suttle said the survey allows officials to determine the level of cooperation between shelters and schools and to find what percentage of the population was missed — those students who are not in school or in a shelter.

Kansas Senate Bill 64 states that all homeless children living in Kansas are entitled to an education. The bill has passed the Senate but has yet to receive House approval. Suttle said she did not foresee any difficulties receiving House approval.

The McKinney Act of 1987 requires all federal cabinet level departments such as the Department of Health and Human Services, the Department of Housing and Urban Development, and the Department of Labor to direct efforts toward the assistance of the homeless, especially families with homeless children, the elderly, and the disabled.

According to Rankin, homeless numbers are increasing. In 1988, the Manhattan Emergency Shelter housed 99 children that were with a parent. Shelter rules do not allow anyone under the age of 18 to stay at the shelter without a parent or guardian, she said.

The shelter must report parentless children to the state Department of Social Rehabilitation Service or the police department, Rankin said. From there, the parents must be contacted and children will either be returned to them or placed in a foster home, depending on their ages. Children who are near 18 may not be placed.

Most of the children staying at the shelter are between kindergarten and third grade, with 90 percent to 95 percent of these children under the age of eight. Rankin said there have also been middle school and high school age guests at the shelter. The youngest guest housed was a 2-week-old. She said approximately 75 percent to 78 percent of the shelter guests are from the community, while only 23 percent are transient families.

Within two days of entering the shelter, elementary school-aged children must be enrolled in Woodrow Wilson School. The school is within walking distance of the shelter. Those youth above elementary school age attend either Manhattan Middle School or Manhattan High School.

Rankin said the average length of attendance can be from less than one week up to six weeks.

"The school is excellent in working with us," Rankin said.

Dean believes college's program depends on more than ranking

By Deborah Dinges
Collegian Reporter

Although K-State's College of Education is ranked among the best across the nation, Jerry Horn, associate dean of the college, thinks there are better ways of looking at the quality of a program than rank.

Size, concentrations, quality and test scores are all areas that contribute and deserve merit individually, Horn said.

"There are 13,000 institutions that prepare teachers," he said. "With different states and different regulations, it is difficult to compare."

"In terms of achievement scores and grades, the academic quality of our students is very high compared to the rest of the nation," said David Byrne, dean of the college.

"Teacher education students at K-State are well above the national average ACT score for education students," said Michael Holen, associate dean of education.

Another characteristic that makes graduates of the college valuable is that most students can teach in more than one area, Holen said.

"It makes teachers more marketable," he said.

An increase in the college's enrollment is another aspect which has boosted the reputation of the college, which in turn has boosted enrollment of the college.

"Since 1980, there has been a substantial growth rate in the college," Horn said.

A 65 percent increase in enrollment since that time can be attributed to the reputation of the institution in turning out quality graduates, its reputation among families across the state and the comprehensive program, he said.

"My education classes are some of my smallest," said Greg Dyer, junior in secondary education and elected member of the education council.

"What impresses me most are the caring and personable teachers," Dyer said. "They care about us as future teachers and about the students we are going to teach."

One of the challenges the college will try to overcome is the "difficulty in accessing an urban multi-cultural environment," Byrne said.

All the demographic data suggests the biggest increases in school-aged children will be of various cultures and backgrounds in urban areas, he said.

"As teachers, we need to be able to articulate that situation for all schools," Byrne said.

"Our geography creates some dilemmas. The college has incorporated curriculum innovations to deal with the problem of inaccessibility."

A limited number of students can now complete their student teaching requirement in Topeka or Kansas City, Byrne said.

Women golfers end season improved

By Chris Hays
Sports Editor

Although the women's golf team has placed last at the Big Eight tournament for the last two years, first-year coach Russ Bunker remains optimistic — and he may have good reason to be.

This year's squad, the same as last year's except for the addition of freshman Adena Hagedorn, cut 62 strokes off last year's Big Eight tourney total of 1,090. With that kind of improvement, Bunker believes K-State golf definitely has a bright future.

"Like I said earlier in the year, it's going to take more than just one year. It can't be done overnight," he said. "It's just too bad that all anybody remembers is that we finished last. We shot 329 on the second 18 and we used to shoot in the 360s and 370s."

That 329 round on the Ames, Iowa, Veenker Memorial golf course Tuesday, was the best 18-hole round ever for a K-State women's team. But even that round couldn't make up for what Bunker called an "atrocious" nine-hole round Tuesday morning.

K-State went into Tuesday's competition after Monday's 27 holes with a score of 517, two strokes ahead of last-place Iowa State. The Wildcat women then opened Tuesday's play with a nine-hole round of 182.

"We were losing ground like you couldn't believe Tuesday morning," Bunker said. "And after that we had a short visit before we teed it up on the final 18. Then we go out and shoot the best score we've ever had."

That is one of the reasons why Bunker thinks his squad is heading in the right direction.

The K-State women were led most of the season by sophomore Chris Adams, whose highest finish was at the Northern Illinois Snowbird Intercollegiate in Sebring, Fla.

She had a 36-hole score of 159, finishing tied for 21st at the Big Eight tourney with a 54-hole total of 249. That total bettered her 1988 Big Eight score by 17 strokes. She ended the season with an 18-hole average of 82.1.

Hagedorn was the Wildcats' second-leading golfer most of the way. She finished 26th at the Big Eight tourney with a 251 and ended the season with an 85.8 stroke average.

Junior Jill Zientara and sophomore Lonna Dale flip-flopped between the No. 3 and No. 4 spots most of the season. Zientara finished 31st at the conference tourney and had a season average of 88.07. Dale took 32nd in the league and averaged 88.9 this year.

Coming on strong at the Big Eight tourney was freshman Theresa Coyle. Coyle was the No. 5 golfer all season long for the Wildcats until she surprised everyone at Iowa State, moving into the No. 3 spot and finishing 30th. Coyle's average going into the tourney was 93 and she ended the year at 91.7.

"We're making strides," Bunker said. "We've taken a step up, but there is also a long way to go. There's no question we can't compare ourselves to the Oklahomas and Oklahoma States, but the coaches all know that K-State could pull off an upset."

Next season K-State returns the entire nucleus of its team and will also be welcoming in recent signees Valerie Hahn of Las Vegas, Nev., and Amy Guffey of Hays.

Royals down Yankees

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Pinch-hitter Jim Eisenreich's two-run homer in the eighth inning lifted Kansas City past New York 5-3 Wednesday night. The win was the Royals' fifth straight.

Al Leiter, 1-2, walked George Brett with one out in the eighth and was relieved by Lance McCullers. Eisenreich, batting for Gary Thurman, drove a 3-2 pitch over the center field wall for the Royals' first pinch-hit homer since Sept. 10, 1987.

Tom Gordon pitched two innings in relief of Floyd Bannister to raise his record to 3-0. Steve Farr pitched the ninth for his fourth save.

Don Mattingly singled with two outs in the first and scored on Steve Balboni's triple.

In the Royals' second, Bob Boone walked and Frank White doubled before Kurt Stillwell drove them in with a single. Kansas City made it 3-1 on Danny Tartabull's sacrifice fly in the fifth.

Don Slaught tripled off the left field wall to ignite New York's rally that tied it 3-3 in the seventh.

After Bob Brower walked, Mike Pagliarulo, hitting just .036 when the game started, singled for the second time in the game, scoring Slaught and sending Brower to third. Alvaro Espinoza's sacrifice brought in the second run of the inning.

Pat Tabler, renowned for his .556 average with the bases loaded, failed to deliver with three on and one out in the first when he grounded to Mattingly at first base, starting a double play.

Senior Emtell trying not to get emotional

By Carolyn Holcroft
Sports Writer

K-State's only senior tennis player is trying hard not to get sentimental as she prepares for her last collegiate competition.

Annika Emtell, team captain for the Wildcats, will play her last collegiate matches this weekend in the Big Eight tennis tournament at Oklahoma City.

Emtell has finished the regular season with impressive victories including two last weekend against Iowa State and Nebraska at her No. 6 singles position. She also came from behind after an 0-6 loss in the first set to defeat Oklahoma's Shea Hetherington, 6-4, in the final two sets, capturing the match.

In addition, Emtell was honored Tuesday by the Big Eight Conference for her work in the classroom. Her 3.35 grade point average was good enough to place her on the league's all-academic team.

She first started playing tennis at age nine at her home in Djursholm, Sweden. Because her parents both played, Emtell decided to take lessons.

"We started off with those small rackets and those little soft balls," she laughed. "I really liked it, and from then on I kept taking lessons."

She joined a tennis club and continued to play competitively throughout high school. However, the team's structure differed from that of U.S. teams, Emtell said.

Sports in Europe, she said, are not associated with individual schools. This difference was a major influence in her decision to move to the United States.

"I'm very glad I did it. I wouldn't have been able to play tennis and study at the university back home," she said. "It would have been much more difficult than it is here."

Emtell came to K-State at the invitation of her high school doubles partner, who also played for the 'Cats. Upon coming to K-State, Emtell hadn't planned on staying long enough to finish her degree.

She has since changed her mind however, and she'll graduate in May with a degree in marketing.

Emtell said the two things she likes most about K-State are the friendships she has formed and the team's spirit.

"I think that tennis is really an individual sport, but playing for a university, and playing here, it's become more of a team sport for me," she said. "I really like the friendships. We're so different, but we all get along great."

Though she loves playing tennis, she said it doesn't allow her much time to do anything else. She plans to take a few weeks off and do nothing but relax when the season ends.

"I work and work and work, and sometimes it feels like it doesn't pay off. It always does eventually, but for a long time it can be really frustrating to never reach the peak you feel like you could."
— Annika Emtell tennis player

Emtell's plans to stay in the United States have been influenced largely by a recent wedding proposal. She said she hopes to live somewhere on the East Coast, but doesn't have any definite arrangements.

Before leaving the Wildcats, Emtell said she hopes to reach some personal goals in Oklahoma City. Those goals include placing as high as possible in both the singles and doubles brackets, and playing the best tennis that she can.

"I work and work and work, and sometimes it feels like it doesn't pay off," Emtell said. "It always does eventually, but for a long time it can be really frustrating to never reach the peak you feel like you could.

"I really appreciate the opportunity to come here," she said. "People have all been so good to me."

April big, as usual, for Royal outfielder

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — For the third straight year, Bo Jackson is sizzling in springtime.

"In the first two months before he got hurt last year, he was the best player we had," said Kansas City Royals manager John Wathan. "If we can only keep him healthy."

Hot starts have become the hallmark of the muscular Heisman Trophy winner who is a running back for the Los Angeles Raiders when he is not still learning his trade as a major league outfielder. Jackson's first 28 at-bats in April 1987 produced 14 base hits, including one spectacular night against Detroit when he had a grand slam and a three-run home run.

He finished April that year with a .324 average and 15 RBIs, and on June 7, he was hitting an acceptable .253 when he announced he was taking up a new hobby as part-time NFL running back.

After the announcement, he hit .193 and led the team with 158 strikeouts.

Last spring, Jackson had two four-hit games in yet another torrid start and was the Royals player of the month in May after hitting safely in 21 of 27 games.

On May 31, he was hitting .309 with nine home runs and 30 RBIs when he suffered a severely torn hamstring while running to first. After sitting out the next five weeks, he never regained his momentum and finished his second full season as a professional batting .235.

But going into Wednesday night's game against the Yankees, there had been no injuries or bombshell announcements to halt another great getaway, and with four home runs in six games Jackson ranked among the league leaders with seven homers, 17 RBIs and 18 runs scored. He also had a nine-game hitting streak.

"I'm seeing the ball well and I definitely feel more comfortable at the plate," said Jackson, reluctant to say much more.

He refuses to talk about it, but Jackson is on pace to reach the same plateau of 40 home runs and 40 stolen bases that Oakland's Jose Canseco achieved a year ago.

"I don't think there's any question that he hardly looks like the same player," said Royals second baseman Frank White. "He's more confident. He's more relaxed. His progress is remarkable."

"I don't know how long he's going to be able to play both sports, but he's improved his ballplaying," said Boston pitcher Wes Gardner. "He's not trying to pull everything like he was last year. He hits a lot like Canseco does."

Sports Briefly

Dobbins nominated for award

Senior Mark Dobbins, a starting forward on Lon Kruger's Wildcat basketball squad this past season, has been nominated by K-State for the Big Eight's male athlete of the year.

Dobbins was a three-time, all-Big Eight academic selection and twice made the Big Eight's all-bench team. Last season he was also named to the Big Eight's all-defensive team.

The Humboldt native averaged 6.7 points and 4.3 rebounds a game during his senior year.

The Big Eight male athlete of the year is chosen from senior candidates nominated by each conference institution and is selected by a panel of media representatives and members of the sponoring Greater Kansas City Sports Commission.

Alumni return for scrimmage

K-State will have its first varsity-alumni football scrimmage since 1987 at 2 p.m. Saturday. About 90 K-State graduates have expressed interest in returning for the scrimmage.

The oldest of the alums returning is Shelby Neeley, Byers. He lettered at K-State in 1927, '31 and '32.

Among the most recent graduates returning will be Tony Jordan, K-State's third all-time leading rusher who is now a running back with the Phoenix Cardinals. Also returning from teams in the 1980s are Darrell Ray Dickey and Vic Koenning, now coaches at Memphis State. Also, Cincinnati punter Scott Fulhage will be back for the festivities.

Current K-State coach Charlie Coe will also join the alumni squad. Coe is a 1970 K-State graduate.

Henson takes 8th at Drake

Steve Henson finished in eighth place in the decathlon at the Drake Relays Wednesday with a two-day total of 6,314 points. The junior won the javelin portion with a decathlon personal best throw of 199-5 feet.

Pirates' Carlesimo offers no comment

By The Associated Press

LEXINGTON, Ky. — P.J. Carlesimo left the University of Kentucky campus Wednesday without comment or an official offer to become the school's head basketball coach.

"I have absolutely no comment," Carlesimo said while touring Memorial Coliseum to look at the basketball facilities. He was to speak at the Georgetown University basketball banquet Wednesday night.

He continued his "no comment" posture when his flight arrived in Washington.

Kentucky president David Roselle said, "No offer has been made to Carlesimo, at least yet."

Two sources told The Associated Press that Carlesimo, who guided unheralded Seton Hall to the runner-up spot in the NCAA tournament this year, would accept the position at Kentucky, which is awaiting NCAA penalties for irregularities in its basketball program.

"I really ought to ask you to be patient because this to me is kind of an orderly process and this is a phase of that process," Kentucky athletics director C.M. Newton told reporters after meeting with Carlesimo.

Newton said he and Carlesimo met with Jim Host, president of Host Communications Co., which holds broadcast rights to Kentucky sporting events, in order to give Carlesimo a feeling for the job's public visibility.

He said the three did not discuss money during the session that lasted about 75 minutes.

"We're in the process of trying to match interests really," Newton said of the talks with Carlesimo.

The sources told the AP that Carlesimo wanted to talk with Seton Hall officials, specifically those who supported him during attempts to oust him two seasons ago, before making an official announcement.

"Kentucky has a new coach," one source said Tuesday night.

Roselle said Carlesimo's hiring would have to be approved by the school's athletics board, of which he is chairman. He said no board meeting had been scheduled.

Carlesimo just finished the first year of a five-year contract reportedly worth a total of $1.2 million. That average salary of $240,000 could probably be doubled by UK's overall package.

Carlesimo, a 39-year-old bachelor whose coaching record is under .500 despite last season's 31-7 mark, is the first candidate Newton had wanted who has been interested enough to visit the campus.

Choir members to visit Australia for mid-May tour

By Steve Logback
Collegian Reporter

For a group of K-State students, dreams of visiting the land down under will become reality next month when they participate in a tour of Australia.

Forty-seven members of the Kansas State Choir will be on board a plane May 17 destined for Sydney, Australia.

Edward Davis, graduate student in music, said the trip is open to all choir members and is strictly voluntary.

"We don't require that the members go," Davis said. "Since they pay their own way, it is difficult for some to raise the funds."

Davis said the purpose of the trip is to share music and enjoy a place which students would not otherwise have the opportunity to visit.

"Australia is an area that the choir hasn't gone to in the past," he said. "I think the group will be excellent ambassadors for the University. We're excited about representing K-State."

During its tour, the choir will present five concerts and will also participate in such activities as touring the Sydney University campus and enjoying a sightseeing cruise departing from Sydney Harbor.

Kim Pearson, junior in elementary education and member of the group, said she anticipates the viewing of the opera house in Sydney as a highlight of the trip.

"The opera house is going to be really neat to see," she said. "This trip is one of those things you never get a chance to do again. It's too good to pass up."

Pearson said the group made the decision to go to Australia last year.

"We made sure we all wanted to do it," she said. "It was totally a choir-based decision."

Davis said the package price for the trip which includes transportation and accommodations is $2,356. He estimates the total cost to be around $2,600 to $2,700.

To help offset expenses, the members of the group raised money by participating in a jog-a-thon last fall.

After spending nine days in Australia, the choir will enjoy three days in Honolulu before boarding a flight returning to Kansas City, Mo., May 28.

"Anytime you get to go somewhere else, you expand the reputation of your group and get a chance to share the things you're doing with people out of the country," he said. "The members of the choir themselves will also gain considerably. It helps the unity of the group since most of them will be back next year."

Could you use money from Home next semester?
Whether you're starting out for college or finishing up a graduate degree, there's one tough subject you'll have to face next semester.
Tuition.
The good news is, Home State Bank can help you find the money for college. Just last year, more than 1,400 students received their low interest loans from us.
Now, we've become the first lender in Kansas City to have an electronic link-up for the Stafford (formerly GSL) Loan. Which means we can give you loan notification as soon as overnight.
Under the Stafford Loan, first- and second-year students receive up to $2,625 a year. For third- and fourth-year students, up to $4,000 a year. You make no payments until six months after graduation or after you become less than a full-time student.
If you're studying in the health professions, there's a HEAL loan program with a special low rate.
In addition, you may also receive a Supplemental Loan for Students (SLS), and your parents may be eligible for a loan through the Parent Loan program. And remember, guaranteed student loans don't require collateral, a cosigner, or established credit.
To get started on your application, call Connie Holmes at 321-3333.

Annual ceremonies attract graduates

University to name Fellows

By Janette Poole
Collegian Reporter

The University is recognizing seven K-State graduates as alumni Fellows for accomplishments and excellence in their career field.

A Fellow is a comrade or one who shares certain characteristics, interests or pursuits, said Pennie Wallerstedt, director of administrative programs for the alumni association.

The University's Alumni Fellows Program was created to recognize alumni for career excellence. Since its creation in 1983, the University has brought more than 35 alumni back to campus to give classroom instruction and seminars.

"It's a chance for the Fellow to visit on a one-to-one basis, providing the means for students to learn firsthand about the 'real world' and it gives the faculty an opportunity to visit about the current day," Wallerstedt said. "It's worthwhile to all concerned."

This year each college, with the exception of veterinary medicine, will honor an alumni Fellow, she said. The College of Veterinary Medicine has changed deans and has not had the same opportunity to select a Fellow.

The College of Business and the College of Engineering were the first to honor Fellows, Wallerstedt said. Each college has a different method for selection, tailoring the program to the individual college.

The cost of inviting a Fellow to return to the University is a "shared expense between the Alumni Association and each college," Wallerstedt said.

A certain amount is alloted per college for printing brochures, banners, plaques, room accomodations and some meals while individual colleges may pay for additional meal costs, she said.

Each college that is honoring a Fellow has a banner in recognition outside the building where the college is housed.

"We don't pay honorariums," Wallerstedt said. "We feel like this is a way of the Fellows giving back to the University.

"I am really impressed with the Fellows this year. Each is just absolutely outstanding in the career fields and have really excelled," Wallerstedt said.

The program was created after Carroll Hess, former dean of the College of Agriculture, was honored as a Fellow at Pennsylvania State University. Wallerstedt said Hess was so impressed wit i the idea, he returned to K-State to present the idea of creating a similar program because he believed it would be beneficial to the University.

The 1989 University alumni Fellows are: College of Agriculture — Vernon McMinimy; College of Architecture and Design — Clyde Weaver; College of Arts and Sciences — Heidi Byrnes; College of Business Administration — Robert Hagans; College of Education — Peggy House; College of Engineering — Virgil Snell and College of Human Ecology — Janice Hamilton.

The K-State Alumni Fellows Program is sponsored by the Dean's Council, the President's office and the Alumni Association.

Reunion attracts 400 alumni

By Janette Poole
Collegian Reporter

Black and white pictures of the "old days" — pieces of history from the Kansas State University of Agriculture and Applied Science — line the second floor corridor of the Union.

The pictures are part of "Reunion Days '89 — Remembering the Good Times," the annual Alumni Association reunion for K-State graduates, which began Wednesday and continues today.

Each year the association invites three classes on a five-year interval basis back for a class reunion, said Grace Prusik, alumni program director. Classes invited this year are 1939, 1944 and 1949 and the Golden K Club.

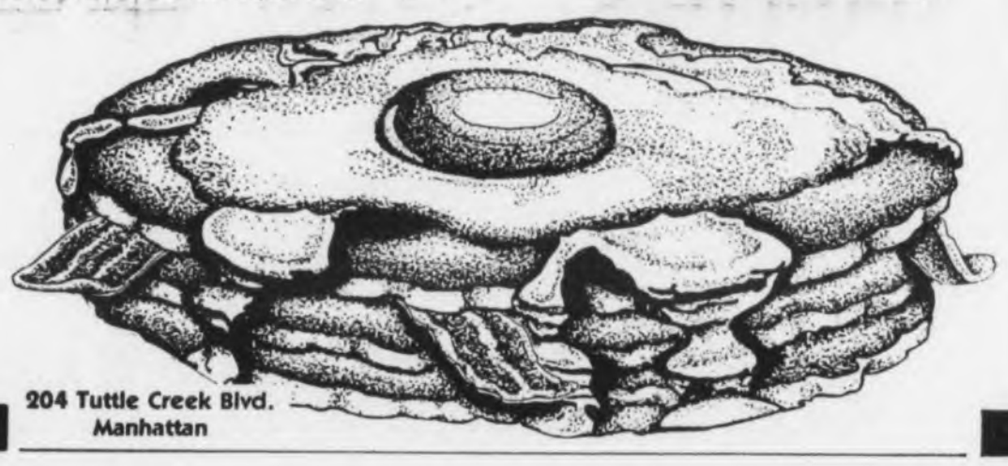
The Golden K Club is comprised of members of the class of 1939 and those graduating prior to 1939. Nineteen members will be welcomed into the club at the Golden K breakfast this morning in Union.

Prusik said 400 graduates from 25 different states are attending the two-day reunion, an increase in attendance of 50 from last year. Top attendence is from the colleges of Agriculture, Human Ecology and Engineering.

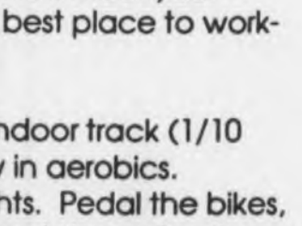
There have always been class reunions, but it has only been in the past 12 years that they have been in the spring while students were still on campus, she said.

"We can personalize much more with (reunions) now. It's a fun time for all of the staff and some of the graduates have such interesting stories," Prusik said.

During a welcome session, a slide show comparing K-State now to the years the graduates attended was presented by Steve Miller, athletic director, and Janelle Larson, senior in animal sciences and industry.



The K-State Singers provided entertainment at the individual classes' dinners in the Union Wednesday night.



Today's activities include additional campus tours and class luncheons.

The class of '39 will assemble for pictures prior to the noon luncheon. An optional "Planned Giving Seminar on Retirement Investing" sponsored by the KSU Foundation will be offered at 1:30 p.m.

Tonight's activites will culminate with a reception and banquet for all graduates in the Union Ballroom. President Jon Wefald will present the State of the University address and the University alumni fellows awards will be presented.

Within two days of entering the shelter, elementary school-aged children must be enrolled in Woodrow Wilson School. The school is within walking distance of the shelter. Those youth above elementary school age attend either Manhattan Middle School or Manhattan High School.

Rankin said the average length of attendance can be from less than one week up to six weeks.

"The school is excellent in working with us," Rankin said.

"We want parents to know it's their responsibility for their children. We don't tell people what to do — the decision is theirs. We can't take over for them," Rankin said.

Suttle said 30 percent to 35 percent of the homeless are single-parent families. She said an additional problem is when families move from "home to shelter to home." She said it's possible that some children attend three different schools in four to five months.

"There is no educational continuity, and that's a major problem," Suttle said.

Rankin said there is a continuous increase in numbers of homeless families and there are many people looking for part-time employment.

"As a result of the part-time, low-paying jobs, people cannot make it on what they earn," Rankin said.

"We have people paying 70 to 90 percent of their take-home pay just to put a roof over their heads," she said. "You are only supposed to use about 33 percent of the take-home pay for living expenses. Many don't qualify for food stamps, but they have to have money for necessities.

"Homelessness can happen to anyone.'

Chinese students to march again

By The Associated Press

BEIJING — Defiant student leaders said Wednesday they would march to central Tiananmen Square to press their campaign for democratic reforms, and some said they were prepared to die for the cause.

Beijing's Communist Party secretary, Li Ximing, said authorities considered the march, planned for Thursday, illegal and would "deal with it" accordingly.

"We must firmly stop such riots," he told a special meeting of 10,000 city party officials.

In a notice read on the local television news, Beijing police banned collecting donations, handing out leaflets, giving speeches and public gatherings — all activities of the students. A separate notice reminded that marches are illegal without police permission.

A convoy of at least a dozen trucks packed with soldiers drove from Beijing's eastern suburbs toward Beijing's universities before dawn Thursday. Two trucks and nine vans filled with troops were seen driving past Beijing University several hours later. On Wednesday, soldiers with bayoneted rifles patrolled the streets near People's University.

A Chinese journalist said senior leader Deng Xiaoping had ordered authorities to stop the students' 10-day-old campaign against official corruption and for democratic reforms such as a free press.

Spurred by the April 15 death of ousted Communist Party chief Hu Yaobang, a reformer, tens of thousands of students marched repeatedly to Tiananmen last week.

Measles

"(This procedure is) absolutely universal," he said. "We do not make exceptions. All women get tested (for pregnancy)."

Miller said pregnancy testing is not required by the state and is left to the discretion of the physician.

"Across the nation, (pregnancy testing) is not the standard," he said. "However, it is not a bad practice."

"K-State does not have an immunization policy so it is difficult to ascertain which students are properly immunized," Miller said. "The University of Kansas is in the process of adopting an immunization requirement for admission and I think K-State should follow suit."

The American Collegiate Health Association has advocated immunization requirments at all U.S. colleges, Miller said. Moeller and Lannie Zwiemiller, director of Lafene, would support K-State adopting a similar policy.

"I would be pro for vaccination requirements," Moeller said. "The measles are in our backyard now and we should learn our lesson."

He said most of the people who have contracted the measles were already immunized but with a weak vaccine.

"Up until 1975 most of the children were inoculated within the first year after birth," he said. "Now it is recommended that children be inoculated after 15 months."

Even though some students believe they have already had measles, it is important that there is an actual documentation of measles from a physician, Moeller said. There are many things which can cause a rash which could be mistaken for measles, and to be safe the students should get the vaccine.

"Once you have actually had measles, you have acquired a life-long immunity," he said.

"We got 400 doses of vaccine yesterday," Zwiemiller said. "That was in addition to the 370 doses we had on hand."

He said if Lafene runs out of the vaccine, additional doses could be obtained in a day from KDHE in Topeka.

"The vaccine supply right now is OK," Miller said. "(The outbreak) is not something we budgeted for, but at this time we have an adequate supply."

Lafene will be open 24 hours to handle the vaccinations and inquiries about shot records. Students will be charged $2 for the vaccine and not be charged after-hours fees.

"We are ready to call in extra staff support and request help from the state and county," Zwiemiller said.

"If you do not know if you have been vaccinated, (getting the shot) is the best prophylactic measure," he said. "It is pretty quick and painless."

Many students will have families and friends coming to Manhattan for commencement ceremonies during the second week of May, and Miller said he is concerned that these people could become infected.

"Obviously there is the potential for exposure to the measles," he said.

ABCs OF FIRST AID

HEART ATTACK

The primary symptom of a heart attack is a persistent chest pain, often radiating to the neck, left shoulder and arm. The victim may have difficulty breathing and the lips, skin and fingernails may turn blue. Call an ambulance immediately. Do not drive the victim to the hospital yourself. Place the victim in a comfortable position, sitting up. Keep warm and loosen collar. Give nothing by mouth. If the heart has stopped beating, administer CPR (only if properly trained). If breathing has stopped give mouth-to-mouth resuscitation until medical help arrives.

The ABCs of First Aid is brought to you as a community service of the emergency room at Memorial Hospital. Be looking for the entire alphabet and always remember to clip and save this announcement for your own emergency care.

gave little indication as to how broad their decision will be. They are expected to announce their ruling by July.

At one point, Justice Antonin Scalia — a potential "swing vote" along with Justices Sandra Day O'Connor and Anthony M. Kennedy — asked whether the court must consider the nature of a fetus.

"Can you derive (a fundamental right to abortion) without making a determination as to whether the fetus is human life or not?" Scalia asked.

"It is very hard to say ... it must be a fundamental right unless you make a determination that the organism that is destroyed is not a human life," Scalia said

THANK YOU
K-STATE FOR A GREAT YEAR!

ENJOY THE SPECIALS IN MAY AT THE K-STATE UNION

LATE HOURS

Are you starting to stay up later and later to get ready for Finals? Why not study at the K-State Union? We're now open later in the evenings for your studying convenience. And during Finals Week, we'll be staying up late with you, with specials in the Stateroom, Recreation Area, Information Counter, Copy Center and Bookstore.

JUST A REMINDER

Do you or your organization have an outstanding financial matter to take care of with the K-State Union? If so, please stop by the Business Office on the first floor of the K-State Union, across from the Information Counter, before leaving campus for the summer to avoid any delinquincy difficulty with your transcripts, pre-enrollment or fee paying process next fall.

K-STATE DAY

Sunday, April 30 is K-State Day at World's of Fun in Kansas City. Get your specially discounted tickets, $9.75 per person, at the K-State Union Recreation Area or the Activities Center on third floor.

WILDCAT CARD NOTICE

Wildcat Card Holders are important customers to us and we thank you for your support. Your balance is 100% refundable the last two weeks of the spring semester, May 1 through May 12 or if you present acceptable proof that you are graduating. Otherwise, a $10 cancellation fee is assessed. Stop by the Business Office, located on the first floor of the K-State Union, for details.

WE'RE MOVING

The K-State Union Copy Center, currently located on third floor, will be moving to the first floor of the K-State Union some time this summer to serve you better.

OPEN EARLIER

The K-State Union Bookstore will be opening earlier for your Dead Week and Finals Week needs. Beginning Monday, May 1 through Wednesday, May 10, the Bookstore will be opening at 7:15 a.m. We'll be open later in the evenings, as well.

BOOK BUY BACK

Your used textbooks are worth something! Bring them to the K-State Union Bookstore upper level from May 3 through May 12, (Monday through Thursday 8 a.m. to 8 p.m., Friday 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., Saturday 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Sunday 12 noon to 5 p.m.) Sell your books! It pays!

REMOTE LOCATION

Live in the Residence Halls and don't feel like carrying your books across campus? The K-State Union Bookstore will feature Book Buy Back at both Derby and Kramer Food Centers from 8:30 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. May 8 through May 10 and 8:30 a.m. to 1:00 p.m. on May 11.

SHUTTLE SERVICE

During Book Buy Back at the K-State Union Bookstore, we really move our bus for you! We'll be featuring a shuttle bus service to various locations around campus to assist you in getting up to campus with your books to sell. Shuttle bus map and time schedule will be available in next week's Collegian or at the K-State Union Bookstore.

WITHOUT YOU

The K-State Union would like to take this opportunity to say "Thank You for your support this year! Without you, we would not exist." So, during Finals Week, nearly every department will be featuring specials throughout the week. Council approves changes to Union, campus parking

By Gary Lytle
Collegian Reporter

The Council on Traffic, Parking and Police Operations decided by unanimous vote Thursday to recommend that parking lot A30, the south Union lot, be equally divided into faculty/staff and student parking.

The council revoked its original decision made last Thursday to keep the lot faculty/staff only.

Parking lot A1, the smaller lot east of McCain Auditorium, will also be changed from general parking to faculty/staff only.

The council also reversed its earlier decision to make lot D1E, west of Memorial Stadium, student-only. That lot will remain a general lot, according to yesterday's recommendation.

The decisions were made during a special meeting of the council called to discuss comments from a public hearing Friday on changes in K-State parking regulations.

The motion was made by Michael Toedman, junior in business management and student representative to the council, who said "there were some valid points brought up (at the public hearing) and I felt that maybe there was a compromise we could come to that would address the issues that were raised."

Toedman said he thought the motion would ease students' concerns they were being given access to parking lots farthest from campus.

He also believed the compromise would give faculty and staff adequate parking and address the issue of safety for students who park on campus early in the day but do not leave until late at night.

"The proposal that (Toedman) outlined is very acceptable to Student Senate Executive Committee," said Senate Chairman Todd Johnson.

The council also recommended that parking meters in lot A29, the north Union parking lot, be set for a maximum of two hours parking, instead of the four hours which was previously considered.

Because of concerns raised by the Farrell Library staff about the turnover in lot A4, next to Farrell, the meters in that lot will have a maximum time of either 15 or 30 minutes, Lambert said.

State vehicles will have to pay to park in the metered lots, he said.

K-State Police Chief Charles Beckom said that when the changes are made to the Union lots this summer, the 30-minute parking zone just south of the Union will be eliminated.

The three motorcycle parking lots south of the Union will be consolidated into one larger lot between A29 and A30, Beckom said.

During the changes to the Union lots, the reserved stalls presently in A30 and A29 may be rearranged but will not be moved from the lot they are now in, he said.

It was also recommended that student representation on the council be restructured.

The recommendation, which passed by unanimous vote, calls for five student voting members on the council: one each from Student Senate, the residence halls, Jardine Terrace Apartments, a commuting student and an at-large student to represent the non-traditional student population on campus.

Currently the council is made up of three faculty members, three classified staff members, three students, one staff person from the area of University advancement and one member for the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce, said John Lambert, director of public safety.

Holton Hall to reopen

Renovation to be finished on schedule

By Ginger Miller
Collegian Reporter

After touring the newly renovated Holton Hall Wednesday afternoon, Robert Krause, vice president for institutional advancement, said the work showed "really tremendous renovation."

Only finishing touches remain before the building is to be reopened in May.

"You wouldn't know it's the same building. It has surpassed everyone's expectations," Krause said.

"They've done a beautiful job," said Mike Lynch, assistant vice president for institutional advancement. "The students will be incredibly surprised and pleased. It's difficult to describe because it's so totally different than when (the construction workers) went in."

The original offices will be housed in Holton again, with the exception of the counseling services, which were relocated to Lafene Student Health Center, Krause said.

Lynch said the first floor will be home to the offices of vice president for institutional advancement, academic assistance and associate dean of student life.

The second floor will hold the women's resource center, Greek Affairs, Upward Bound, Office of Minority Affairs, Educational Support Services, Phoenix Program, services for students with physical limitations and talent search, he said.

U-LearN and the budget office for the building will be in the basement, Lynch said. Special-use and tutoring rooms will be located throughout the building.

Often when buildings are being built or remodeled they aren't finished on time, or cost more than the estimated budget, said Larry Garvin, facilities planning director. In this case, however, both were accomplished according to original plans.

The building was scheduled to be completed in May and the work has

Wefald predicts record enrollment

By Darren Keller
Collegian Reporter

"In August of 1989, K-State will have over 20,000 students for the first time in the school's history," President Jon Wefald reported in an optimistic State of the University Address Thursday.

Not including the 1,500 new students this year, K-State has 1,100 more applications than last year at this time, he said. In the past two years, K-State has had a 44 percent increase in student enrollment, resulting in about $15 million in additional revenue.

Wefald commended both the state and local legislatures for helping keep Kansas' brightest students at Kansas colleges.

"In 1987, we got most of what we requested from the Legislature," he said. "Two days ago the government signed a bill that will grant K-State 100 percent funding, which will give us things we haven't seen in years."

Wefald said a K-State student was honored with a $28,000 Truman scholarship last week.

"There are only between 105 and 120 of the Truman scholarships issued per year," he said. "Last year we had two. We've had 14 since 1979 when the scholarship started, more than any other state school in America."

Since 1974, Kansas colleges have had six Rhodes scholars, five of whom were from K-State.

"We're getting the job done," he said. "K-State produces students who are ready to compete with the top students in the nation when they graduate."

But it is the faculty, he said, who represent the "heart and soul" of the campus.

"K-State is in the top 42 public colleges in the nation," for academic excellence and affordability, according to the March 1988 issue of Changing Times magazine, Wefald said.

The deans, in running the University, have "vision and professionalism" that put K-State ahead of other schools. K-State also has a good teaching faculty known internationally for high scholarship, he said.

"K-State went eight to 10 years without an increase in enrollment," he said. "You have to have great people to get the school to where it is now. We have a committed, caring and passionate faculty."

Wefald also commented on the cleanliness of the campus.

"I've never lived in a finer community. You have to go to Disney World to find a cleaner place than K-State," he said.

"The only problem here could be solved by three inches of rain."

Wefald is somewhat concerned with the lack of wins by the football team, but said collegiate athletics have been overrated since Teddy Roosevelt was president.

"It's not easy sitting up there (in the stadium) Saturday after Saturday without winning, but why is there a 40 percent increase in enrollment when only one game was won in the last two years," he said.

"If athletics were that important, then, if we won five games we would have 25,000 students. I'll go as far as

Senate unanimously endorses resolution supporting CFC ban

By The Collegian Staff

Student Senate voted unanimously Thursday night to adopt a resolution supporting a ban on the distribution and production of chlorofluorocarbons.

The resolution would include sending a letter to companies nation-wide that produce CFCs. The resolution will also be sent to the K-State Union encouraging them to discontinue the use of CFC products.

Faculty Senator Phil Anderson said about six companies nationwide produce CFCs.

"This University uses a lot of products made with CFCs, and I feel that we have every right to question their use," Mike Steinle, education senator, said.

"We have a very viable alternative to CFCs with biodegradable materials," Todd Giefer, engineering senator, said.

Senate also voted to allocate $2,015 to Student Governing Association for the purchase of a computer and printer.

"I am embarrassed at this. Here we are giving ourselves $2,000 after refusing to fund other groups' requests during allocations," Kirk Schuler, education senator, said. "We have gone without a computer for the past 19 years, and have done just fine. I feel that this allocation is not necessary. Everyone on campus could use this stuff (a computer)."

"It is hard to compare SGA with people (organizations) who came to us for allocations," Mary Jo Lampe, executive adviser to student body president, said. "We are an office, and one of the few offices that does not have a computer on campus. A computer would make documents more accessible to senators."

Michel Cavigelli, graduate senator, suggested examining the option of purchasing a used computer.

Senate voted to allocate $980 to the Rodeo Club to pay for the ambulance costs at the last rodeo.

"They (Rodeo Club) deserve the money. They support most of House blocks highway improvement plan

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — A $2.9 billion highway improvement package hit a roadblock in the House only one step from Gov. Mike Hayden's desk Thursday. Negotiations began between the House and the Senate over a proposal to build a new prison.

Republican legislative leaders had hoped to clear a wrapup session's agenda of one of its most contentious issues on its second day. The highway bill hit several snags that forced debate into the night, and the House rejected a compromise plan.

Hayden has expressed support for a large highway package and was expected to sign the bill. A joint conference committee had met twice during the day to hammer out compromises, neither of which differed significantly.

The House voted, 55-70, to reject the compromise plan, theoretically killing it. However, that action can be reconsidered and the bill resurrected Friday.

The House's action came after more than two hours and after a lengthy "call of the House," during which no one can enter or leave the chambers while absent members are sought out.

Usually, a member is sent into hiding so that leaders can twist arms to get members to change their votes.

The Senate's action approved the highway plan, 22-16.

Tornado hits Bangladesh

MANIKGANJ, Bangladesh — A tornado swept through central Bangladesh, killing 600 people and injuring 12,000 others. The tornado flattened buildings and tossed fishing boats, government officials said Thursday. At least 200 people were missing.

Wednesday evening's storm, which also unleashed hail and heavy rain, struck hours after President Hussain Muhammad Ershad led nationwide prayers for an end to a drought that has been tormenting Bangladesh.

Survivors said the funnel cloud raged for 10 minutes at dusk Wednesday in the Manikganj area 25 miles northwest of Dhaka, and tore down "everything, including buildings."

The twister capsized several fishing boats, raising fears that many of the 200 missing may have been killed.

"I saw black clouds gathering in the sky. In moments we found we were flying along with the house," said Sayeda Begum, a 30-year-old housewife in the village of Saturia, near Manikganj.

The government official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, confirmed the toll of 600 dead. A government doctor from the area said at least 12,000 people were injured.

Troops on Thursday searched wrecked villages for survivors. In Saturia, a village of 10,000 people, nothing was standing for about one square mile.

Soviets to get more grain

WASHINGTON — The federal government on Thursday raised the amount of grain the Soviet Union can purchase this year to 24 million metric tons, but a farm state congressman said Soviet negotiators aren't happy with the deal.

The Soviets, who previously had a limit of 20 million tons on the amount of U.S. grain they could buy this year, wanted to expand the amount to 30 million tons under the Export Enhancement Program, said Rep. David Nagle, D-Iowa.

Nagle, who is a member of the House Agriculture Committee, said U.S. negotiators told the Soviets they could not use the subsidy program.

Attempts to contact Soviet officials at their embassy in Washington were unsuccessful.

Study says SAT is biased

WASHINGTON — Girls are losing scholarships, self-esteem and access to good colleges due to biased test questions that could easily be changed or omitted, a researcher said Thursday in releasing a study of the Scholastic Aptitude Test.

Phyllis Rosser said she studied the answers turned in by 100,000 students on the November 1987 SAT, and pinpointed 23 questions of the total 145 in which one sex did at least 10 percent better than the other. Boys did better in all but two.

"These questions are tipping the balance," Rosser said. "As a result, four years of high school achievement go down the drain. They're wiped out by a three-hour test."

The SAT written by the Educational Testing Service is taken by 1.5 million students annually, 52 percent of whom are girls. In 1988, average female scores were 13 points lower than male scores on the verbal section of the test and 43 points lower on the math section.

The major purpose of the SAT is to predict first-year college grades. However, Rosser said studies show that females earn higher average grades than males in both high school and first-year college classes.

Man sues former employer

OLATHE — A man who sued an Overland Park company that fired him after he got AIDS has settled his lawsuit for $40,000.

Mark Sweetland, 28, said Thursday he reached an agreement last week with Telecheck Mid-America, his former employer. The agreement was reached just before a Johnson County District Court judge was scheduled to rule in the case.

Sweetland, of Kansas City, Kan., was fired in late 1986 after Telecheck learned that he had AIDS. He filed a complaint with the Kansas Civil Rights Commission, which ruled that AIDS is a physical handicap and cannot be grounds for dismissal.

The commission ordered Telecheck to reinstate Sweetland with back pay.

But the company appealed the commission's decision to District Judge Janice Russell. Lawyers thought the case could be precedent-setting because few state civil rights commissions have yet dealt with AIDS issues.

Drought prompts prayers

CLAY CENTER — Concern over the drought has prompted local ministers to go right to the source.

The Clay County Ministerial Alliance will have a county-wide prayer service for rain from 3 to 3:30 p.m. Sunday on the north lawn of the county courthouse.

"We have a high stress level in the community, especially among the rural folks," said the Rev. Merrill Broach, pastor at St. Paul's Episcopal Church. "The Ministerial Alliance wanted to make a response to the concern."

Six ministers from various denominations take part in the service, which is open to all county residents, according to the Rev. Fred Lenk of the First Presbyterian Church. The service will include a scripture reading, a litany, a gospel lesson and prayers.

Lenk said the Alliance also has asked each church to recognize Sunday as a "County Day of Prayer for Rain."

"It is the intent of the ministers of the various churches that a common witness of interdependence between town and country, between merchant and farmer, between city church and country church, be expressed in the service," the Ministerial Alliance said.

Classes too hot for students

WAMEGO — Students walked out of classes Thursday at Wamego High School, claiming it was too hot inside the building, officials said.

About 100 of the schools approximately 300 students participated in the protest.

The students said the temperatures in some classrooms have reached up to 100 degrees during the past week's warm temperatues.

School officials have said they plan to review the school's early dismissal policy.

The temperature in Wamego Thursday reached 88 degrees.

Police arrest 27 in raid

LIBERAL — Police arrested 27 people and confiscated drugs, cash and stolen property in drug raids in the Liberal area Wednesday.

Charges against those arrested were for selling crack cocaine or marijuana.

The raids began about 7 p.m. Wednesday and continued for about 12 hours.

Police confiscated about $6,000 in cash, three vehicles, two assault weapons and some stolen property.

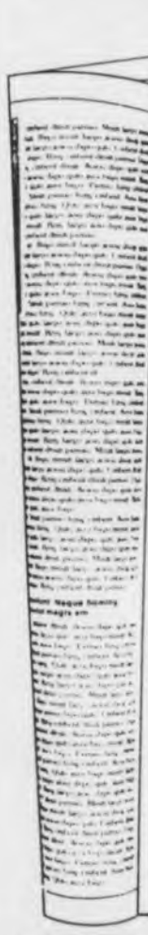
Chinese official to visit



One outcome of a visit to K-State by a Chinese official may be the development of stronger institutional and professional ties between K-State and the People's Republic of China.

Zhao Huian, director of the Department of American and Oceanic Affairs of the Chinese Association for International Friendly Understanding, will be the guest of the Department of History May 9-31. Zhao has served in several civilian and academic posts, including minister of foreign affairs in the Chinese government and visiting Fellow at Princeton University.

During his visit, he will participate in teaching a spring intersession course, "Topics in Non-Western History: A Brief History of the People's Republic of China," offered by Wu Chunqiu, a visiting professor of history from China.

Measles cases occur on campus at Lincoln, Neb.

By Lance E. Schwulst
Collegian Reporter

There are still only seven reported cases of measles at K-State, but health officials at the University of Nebraska have reported two suspected cases.

"We got a call from (health officials at) the University of Nebraska," said Lannie Zweimiller, director of Lafene Student Health Center. "They said there was a similar outbreak in Lincoln and they wanted to know how K-State has handled the situation."

Dr. Milton Fowler, pediatrics resident at NU, said the university has had two suspected cases of measles. He said results of blood tests from one case did not indicate whether the student had measles.

NU students are not allowed to attend classes at the university until they present proof of immunization, Fowler said. The students are immunized in alphabetical order.

K-State students are not required to get immunized or to show proof of immunization, but Zweimiller said he was pleased with the number of inoculations Lafene has administered since the epidemic broke out Monday.

"We saw approximately the same number of students (on Thursday) as we did on Wednesday," Zweimiller said. "As of noon on Thursday, we had immunized over 400 students."

An additional shipment of vaccine for 400 had to be ordered from the Kansas State Department of Health and Environment and was scheduled to be delivered Thursday morning. The shipment was not delivered until noon after Lafene had used up their supply.

"We borrowed some doses of the vaccine from the Riley County-Manhattan Health Department," he said. "We were able to pay back the county in the afternoon."

Zweimiller said the vaccine is provided free to Lafene by the state of Kansas, so the recent outbreak will not put additional strains on the clinic's budget.

"The $2 charge for the vaccine covers the administrative costs and the cost of the supplies," Zweimiller said.

Lafene has an ample supply of needles and syringes, but if the numbers of students getting the vaccine continues, additional vaccine will have to be ordered, he said.

"We are expecting the numbers of visits to continue until finals are over," Zweimiller said.

Party members admit failures

Pravda publishes Communist Party report

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW — Pravda on Thursday published seven pages of admissions by Communist Party officials that their failures had led to embarrassing losses in parliamentary elections and damaged the people's faith in their leaders.

The officials, speaking at a meeting of the party's policy-making Central Committee, said the 20 million-member party is in danger of losing its unity and hold on the Soviet people.

"The people feel uncomfortable, alarmed, have lost their optimism," said Moscow Mayor Valery T. Saikin, who lost in the March 26 elections. "Various generations of people, separate social layers and even regions are quarrelling among themselves."

His remarks and those of President Mikhail S. Gorbachev and 19 other speakers dominated Pravda, the party's official newspaper.

Saikin said people were losing faith in the party, and that as a result, party organizations "have lost their vanguard role." This was a striking admission that the party had failed in one of its primary goals, to lead Soviet society.

Remarks at Central Committees generally are kept secret, and publication of 20 critical speeches delivered Tuesday appeared to be an effort to show the people the leadership is hearing their complaints.

Admissions that perestroika, Gorbachev's 4-year-old restructuring program, has failed to solve many of the country's problems also could serve as ammunition by people fighting for more radical reform.

Gorbachev gained strength to push for more extreme action at Tuesday's meeting, when 74 of the Central Committee's 301 members retired. Because of age, illness or political disgrace, those who retired had lost the top government or party job which entitled them to membership. The remarks of some of those who retired were published Thursday.

Among them was Geidar A. Aliev, the 65-year-old former party chief in Azerbaijan and a close associate of former President Leonid I. Brezhnev.

News reports have accused Aliev of corruption and falsifying records to show he was a war veteran. But Aliev told the Central Committee the accusations were untrue and came from people he had fired in Azerbaijan for wrongdoing.

Yuri F. Solovyev, the highest ranking of the approximately three dozen party officials who lost in the elections to the Congress of People's Deputies, said that despite perestroika, "The minuses here still significantly exceed the pluses."

Because of the failures, said Ivan K. Polozkov, a party leader in the Krasnodar region of southern Russia, "the authority of the party is falling in the eyes of the public."

Many members feel no need to adhere to the party program and rules, and some are so despondent over the lack of recognition of their accomplishments that they have turned in their party membership cards, he said.

Several other speakers painted similarly bleak pictures.

"Today, people do not have confidence in tomorrow," said Vladimir I. Melnikov, the party chief of the Komi region.

"We are losing the workers," he said. The country is "in a real crisis" that Gorbachev is not fully aware of because the Central Committee staff is "safeguarding the general secretary from the severity of the situation."

Astronauts prepare for today's launch

By The Associated Press

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — Five astronauts tracked a perfect countdown Thursday as technicians prepared the shuttle Atlantis for a midafternoon launch today. The mission will propel NASA's "Magellan" probe to Venus and revive America's deep-space science program.

"After an 11-year gap in the planetary program, we're anxious to get started," said John H. Gerpheide, Magellan project manager.

Officials described the countdown as the smoothest of four since the Challenger disaster. The chance of high winds provided slight concern as NASA looked forward to liftoff in an unusually tight launch window that opens at 2:24 p.m. EDT and lasts justs 23 minutes.

Magellan, ready for its 15-month flight to Venus, "is 100 percent healthy and ticking along," said Lennard Fisk, NASA's chief scientist. "We're ready to go fly," said Richard Truly, who heads the shuttle program and is the incoming NASA administrator.

Early Thursday, three Soviet cosmonauts returned to Earth, leaving the Mir space station unattended for the first time in more than two years. Two of the cosmonauts had been in space for five months, the other for eight months.

Atlantis' cargo is the Magellan spacecraft which has a radar system powerful enough to pierce the dense sulfuric acid clouds of Venus and map its surface. The mission costs $550 million, not including the $225 million cost of the four-day shuttle flight.

Magellan's radar images, relayed to Earth and enhanced by computer, should reveal details as small as 100 yards across, about the size of a football field. That is 10 times sharper than previous pictures of the planet.

Stephen Saunders, Magellan project scientist, said the radar images could help scientists understand how Venus was formed and might provide an answer to the puzzling question of how Earth and Venus evolved.

Students' use of Holton suitable for the costs

By the end of May, Holton Hall will have been reopened for campus use, on-schedule and on-budget. Only the finishing touches remain.

The floors and walls have undergone major renovations, and the ceilings have been hung higher in an attempt to recapture the original architecture of the building. Indirect lighting and, ah, blessed air conditioning were also installed.

According to the beliefs of one administrator, the students are going to be pleased with those renovations.

Considering the fact that student monies funded the renovations, they should be. It was a bitter argument and an equally contested decision regarding the precedent of making students responsible for the funding of renovations for an otherwise state-owned and operated building.

With the exception of the counseling services that will remain located in Lafene Student Health Center, all the offices housed in Holton Hall prior to the beginning of the renovations will return there.

The first floor will house the offices of the vice president for institutional advancement, the associate dean of student life and academic assistance.

The second floor will house the Women's Resource Center, the Office of Greek Affairs, Upward Bound, the Office of Minority Affairs, Educational Support Services, the Phoenix Program, talent search and services for students with physical limitations. U-LearN and the building's budget office will be found in the basement.

Perhaps more significantly, however, special-use and tutoring rooms will be located throughout the building especially for the students' uses.

It's gratifying to see that the students who funded the renovations were not forgotten, and will benefit from their somewhat forced investment.

Other Perspectives

Haskell Indian Junior College students have taken a large step toward reclaiming some of their lost rights.

Yesterday, the student newspaper, the Indian Leader, resumed publication after a five-month break. A faculty-sanitized edition of the paper had been scheduled to go to press last month, but students fought back in court. They filed a First Amendment suit in federal court to prevent publication of the edition, which did not include stories on the controversies surrounding the school.

A meeting today will decide what role the Haskell administration should play in the publication of the newspaper. One question that has been raised is whether the administration should be allowed to che k the paper for libel and obscenity. But Haskell students have shown that they can manage that responsibility themselves.

They recognized a First Amendment violation and took action. In fact, the story the Indian Leader ran about the lawsuit was a reprint from the Topeka Capital-Journal. An editor's note reported that because all the members of the Indian Leader staff were involved with the lawsuit, the editor decided to run an article written by a disinterested journalist.

Haskell journalists should be commended in their battle for their rights. The Haskell administration should recognize that and allow them to continue to publish as journalists and not as a tool of the college.

Collegian Editorial Policies

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR are always encouraged. Those which pertain to matters of campus and/or public interest are especially encouraged, and are given the highest priority.

Letters should be kept as brief as possible, preferably under 300 words. Those who cannot condense their opinions should consider submiting their letter in the form of a guest column. All letters are subject to editing for space, style and taste.

GUEST COLUMNS are also encouraged. The column should be no longer than two double-spaced, typed pages. If the submission is used as a column and not a letter to the editor, it will be accompanied by the author's photograph.

SEND SUBMISSIONS to the Collegian in Kedzie 116.

UNSIGNED EDITORIALS represent the consensus opinion of the Collegian's editorial board. Opinion columns do not necessarily reflect the opinions of the Collegian management, Student Publications, Inc. or the newspaper staff in general.

Defies divestment

Editor,

Although I am willing to abide by the Student Senate vote on divestment, I feel that the emotional and largely unsubstantiated editorial by Neba M. Tangie was most inappropriate.

The South African economy is the strongest on the continent and employs more than 1.6 million workers from neighboring countries. The former dictator of Mozambique, Samora Machel, feared the loss of income from his workers in South Africa and was influential in preventing the European Economic Community from imposing sanctions.

Robert Mugabe, the president of Zimbabwe, said, "It became clear that some front-line states are not able to impose sanctions because their economies are tied into the South African economy like Siamese twins."

Americans can magnanimously speak about the pain of transition; when Oliver Tambo and Winnie Mandela do this, they speak of the "elimination" and "necklaces" of blacks who desire a peaceful end to apartheid.

Because the black man can organize unions and travel inside South Africa, every time he defies the death threats of the African National Congress by going to work, he is casting his vote against divestment.

Parking action

Editor,

The KSU General Catalog states that the K-State Union was built entirely from student fees. Therefore, shouldn't students be allocated parking spaces in front of the Union?

There are only three student-only parking lots on campus. Now students are going to lose lot A29 in front of the Union due to the installation of parking meters this summer.

In my opinion, lot A30, which is a faculty/staff-only lot in front of the Union, should be changed to a student-only lot. Students need to take immediate action in order to maintain parking privileges next to the student-financed Union.

Issues unresolved

Editor,

When I was first a student here at K-State in 1968, it would seem that it was another world.

Scott Miller, Collegian columnist, in an expression of late '80s angst, wrote of his feelings of ambivalence toward Abbie Hoffman and the '60s radicals. He wondered why the media focuses on the "myth" of the '60s culture and chooses to ignore his question of why these students were willing to "abandon any sort of affinity with the American system."

Perhaps it was sort of mythology, albeit a different one, that fueled the protests of those times. The message of that mythology was of a purity of an America that gave lie to the reality of the injustices that existed within. This same American mythology provided a rationale to enter into the boundaries of Southeast Asia.

Because of this chasm between myth and reality there was a pervasive feeling among the young that oldsters were tricksters, that government couldn't be trusted (no longer such a revelation) and that only radical methods could serve to penetrate the machinations of the Pentagon.

The media did play a part in the creation of the activist's image, but not in the way described by Miller. It was camera work that brought the war into our homes and recorded the excesses of those with power. And it was the manipulation of media that caused us to wonder whether those championing the exploited were, themselves, becoming exploiters.

So it was with a collective shudder at the excesses, with a war slowly stopped, that we backed a way from those uneasy times. Ignoring the larger questions of right actions, we encapsulated our anger and turmoil underneath the illusionary cover of restored mythology as retold by Ronald Reagan.

It has been written that it took a bad war in Vietnam to question whether any war is good. But the issues of that infamous war have never really been resolved. In this other world of today, we try to live without acknowledging that irresolution.

Honor victims

Editor,

On April 30, 1975 — 14 years ago Sunday — in Saigon, the Vietnam War ended. In the United States, this is not a date for celebration. It is, however, a time of remembrance of the war's circumstances, its meaning and, most of all, its victims. By remembering its victims, we preserve a memory of the very high cost of war.

The approximately five million Americans who served in Southeast Asia from 1959 to 1975, the nearly 500,000 who were injured, and the 58,156 who lost their lives are those we must honor through remembrance Sunday and every day.

Members of the KSU Air Force ROTC and Arnold Air Society will hold a candelelight vigil from 10 p.m. to midnight today at the KSU Vietnam Veterans Memorial site east of All-Faiths Chapel to remember all those former K-State students who served in Southeast Asia and, in particular, those 41 students who died in the Vietnam War.

Bus discussion

Editor,

I am writing this letter in conjunction with Theresa Pruett's letter titled "Give buses a try." She hit the nail on the head when she explained why K-State needs buses.

Buses would be the best idea since sliced bread. Now why haven't University officials or the SGA even mentioned this to help resolve the parking problem?

Now, I know obtaining the buses may be a slight problem and the cost of the buses another slight problem. But look, 19,000 students have been here this year and more are to come next year. There are faculty/staff and more than 45,000 people in Manhattan that may use these buses. Now it doesn't take a great mathematician to figure out that these buses will pay for themselves in a short time.

The fees for the use of the buses can either be an activity fee charged to the students or the passenger can purchase a bus pass with prices set for students, faculty/staff and public use.

It seems to me this service has worked for the Park Place Apartments because their buses are still running all over campus for its residents. And buses are still going strong on the University of Kansas campus. So, why won't they work here?

The buses will not only alleviate the parking problem, but they will also get students to class on time which makes the faculty happy. They will cut down on the congestion of traffic on the streets, keep from tearing up the campus for more parking stalls, plus many other benefits.

If supported by interested businesses, the buses will help them with advertising and promotion.

To Pruett, I and many others, it seems like the ideal solution. So, let's see some discussion on this from SGA and University officials to get something enacted before next year's parking meters and mad drivers kill us!

Requirements bogus

Editor,

Recently there have been articles appearing every day concerning the possible change of Kansas schools from open admissions to selective admissions. We, the undersigned, do not support this change.

The most popular of the options is the one proposed by the State Board of Regents. It requires that a student fulfills one of three requirements.

The first requirement is that a student completes a specific curriculum. This is a good attempt to prepare students for college and, in turn, do away with the nearly $123,000 spent on remedial classes by the University each year.

This requirement is not feasible because in a state such as Kansas, many rural schools are not equipped with the teachers for these required classes, such as two units of a foreign language.

The little known fact in this equation is that it will cost an estimated $200,000 to implement the selective admissions policy.

The second requirement is that the student score at least 23 on the ACT test. This requirement is possibly the most outrageous.

The average ACT score is 17. This means that a person must score six points higher than 50 percent of the nation or in the top 75 percent to 80 percent. But that isn't the only reason that it is so outrageous.

Standardized tests have been questioned for years for their validity and to base college admission on such a questionable test is horrid.

The third requirement is to finish in the top third of your graduating class. This comparison is bogus.

Imagine if everyone in a class of 300 studies their hardest and all of them get grades at the top of their potential. Still, with 300 very sharp, hard-working students, 200 are not qualified to attend one of the regents institutions.

Lost dog results in mystery

Caller asks to receive larger reward

By Chris Koger
Staff Writer

Staff/Steve Wolgast
Kathleen Scully, a graduate student in exercise and physical therapy, offered a reward for her missing dog. On Easter, a caller told her that he had the dog but the reward was too low. She has yet to recover her dog.

Kathleen Scully thought Lucy, her year-old female rottweiler, had run away.

She placed dozens of ads in the lost and found sections of local newspapers and distributed more than 200 flyers with a picture of Lucy, offering a reward.

Then, on Easter Sunday, she got a telephone call.

"He (the caller) said his friends had the dog, and asked about the reward," said Scully, a graduate student in exercise and physical therapy. "When I told him it was $50, he said it probably wouldn't be enough, but he would check with his friends."

During the conversation with the caller, he said the dog was at 1001 Metcalf in Overland Park, Scully said.

"I think that was a smoke-screen, because my parents live in that neighborhood, and I had them check around," she said.

The caller knew the rottweiler was worth more than $50, Scully said.

"He said things like 'I figure she's a good bitch because of her size' and 'A dog like this should be worth more than $50,'" Scully said.

Although Scully hasn't heard from the caller again, she suspects he has Lucy, and is trying to extort money from her.

"I wish I had asked what he wanted me to pay for Lucy's return, but I didn't want to cater to him," she said. "There are so many things I wish I had said, but I was surprised he was asking for more money."

An employee of RC Kennels in Junction City said pure-breed rottweilers sell for an average of $300, which is what Scully paid for Lucy.

Scully purchased the dog last May from a breeder in Germany, where she was participating in an exchange program sponsored by K-State.

Since the call, Scully has placed a new ad stating the dog has been stolen and has not been returned because the reward was too small. So far, none of the calls from people who have seen the ad have led to finding Lucy.

"I've been getting all kinds of calls, but none have sounded like the guy who first called me — he had a southern accent," she said.

Three calls were from a woman in Junction City.

"She was real insistent that the dog she had was exactly the same as the picture on the papers I had posted," she said. "But when I went out there, she showed me a little dachshund, which is kind of comical; but I had hoped it was Lucy."

Another call was from a student who said he had gone through a similar experience.

"This guy called and said a man in Ogden had done the same thing to him when his dog was lost," she said. "He got his dog back, so we went out to Ogden and talked to the man, but I don't think it was the same guy who called me on the phone."

Scully said the man sounded different, and she couldn't hear a dog barking.

"Lucy would have heard my voice if she was in the house," she said. "I also checked around the neighborhood and no one had seen a rottweiler there."

It has been almost two months since Scully came home from work on March 7 to find Lucy was gone.

"I just thought she had gotten loose because my roommate's two dogs were loose, but they were still in the yard," she said. "But then she never came back, and I started placing the ads around town."

Delegation attempts to raise awareness of campus' art needs

By The Collegian Staff

A delegation of University art supporters will travel to Kansas City, Kan., to help raise awareness of the arts and the need for an art museum at K-State.

"K-State has a fine reputation in the arts," said Ruth Ann Wefald, who initiated the program. "This will give the people a first-hand chance to experience and enjoy the arts."

The program committee will travel to Kansas City with a performing group from the University to promote the fine arts at K-State. The committee will also discuss the 1,000 piece art collection owned by K-State.

"At this point, we are not fundraising, but we are friendraising," Wefald said. "We need to have a visible symbol of the arts here at K-State."

The program encompasses the various arts which happen on campus, including events and displays from the departments of art, theater, music and speech.

Stephanie Sikes, graduate student in speech, and Dwight Tolar, junior in music appreciation, will perform songs from the hit Broadway musicals, "Les Miserables" and "The Phantom of the Opera."

"I think this program is a good idea," said Lou Sheldon, head of the theater department. "It will make some of our alumni more aware of some of the arts on campus. It needs to be done."

"We have a wonderful art collection that needs to be shared with a wider audience in a proper atmosphere," said Jessica Reichman, University art curator. "As a university it is important that we display all aspects of culture."

She said before an art museum could be built, the committee needs to find a donor to help fund the construction.

"We are at the moment trying to let people know what we have in our collection," she said. "Everyone that we have talked to has been very positive."

The K-State art collection focuses on regional and midwestern art and includes five works by Thomas Hart Benton, whose work is being featured at the Nelson-Atkins Art Museum in Kansas City, Mo.

Drought causes problems

Conservation level reached at area lake

By Ginger Miller
Collegian Reporter

The amount of rainfall, or lack of it, is affecting almost everyone.

"There isn't a whole lot we can do about it, except worry," said Greg Wurst, park manager at Tuttle Creek Reservoir.

The conservation level — the average water level that is preferred at the lake — is 1,075 feet above sea level. Wurst said the level is at 1,070.09 feet. But this measurement is not what concerns Wurst.

"The bad part is that we had .42 (inches), almost half an inch, of evaporation from 8 a.m. Tuesday to 8 a.m. Wednesday. So if things keep going as they are, hot and dry, we could lose more than a foot a month," Wurst said.

The situation at Milford Lake near Junction City is comparable. Jo Vega, project assistant, said the elevation of the lake is 1,141.55 feet above sea level. The conservation level for Milford is 1,144.4 feet, Vega said.

The evaporation level at Milford is also high. Vega said the evaporation rate has been between .30 and .40 inches per day for the past two weeks. On one day it reached .56 inches.

"It's been running pretty high, and with no rain and this heat it will probably continue to be," Vega said.

Wurst said people go to the outflow area in the summer and watch the water crash through the gates at Tuttle Creek. That outflow is at 500 cubic feet per second, a rate he said is a very low outflow. But he said some have questioned why even that much is being released.

"We're responsible for the water quality for the municipal water supply in Topeka and Lawrence," Wurst said.

Tuttle Creek must keep a certain amount of water going down the river to prevent the water from becoming stagnant. Wurst said he sees the outflow level remaining the same if there is no rainfall.

The level of outflow is determined by the Corps of Engineers Hydrology Department in Kansas City.

Milford Lake's outflow is 134 cubic feet per second, and Vega said for the past few months the outflow has been from 100 to 134 cubic feet per second.

The people who use Tuttle Creek for recreation are very concerned, he said. Two public boat ramps are still usable at the lake, Wurst said.

"Right now we're pleased with our visitation. But if those boat ramps would go out, we'd suffer," Wurst said.

Farmers around Tuttle Creek aren't as worried about the lack of rainfall because their crops have been flooded so many times in the past. If and when water does come, Wurst said, at least their crops won't be flooded.

"In the same respect," Wurst said, "the farmer's farm ponds are drying up."

He said a farmer had recently been in to see if he could pump some water out of Tuttle Creek. But Wurst said the process to get permission to do that is very long and complicated, and he doubted anyone would want to try it.

Drug policies highlight president's first 100 days

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — To no one's surprise, President Bush moved quickly to fulfill his campaign promise of strong efforts against the illegal drug trade. But to almost everyone's surprise, he also suspended imports of assault rifles and talked of possible federal controls.

Drugs and guns have highlighted the domestic policies of the first 100 days of the Bush administration, including an emergency plan to combat drug-related murders in the District of Columbia.

A leftover problem and a sudden crisis put the spotlight on other domestic areas in the 100 days that ends Saturday, as the Republican leader moved carefully in many other policy matters.

Bush sent a major proposal to Capitol Hill to deal with the savings and loan crisis left from the Reagan years. Congress is grinding away on the bailout bill, estimated to cost $157 billion over 10 years.

And then the Exxon Valdez ran aground, pouring oil from the giant tanker into the sea and polluting the Alaska shoreline. The administration came in for criticism for not moving fast enough to try to halt the environmental damage. Bush eventually dispatched Transportation Secretary Samuel Skinner and other top U.S. officials to deal with the cleanup.

But the president made clear from Inauguration Day that dealing with the drug problem was at the top of his agenda.

"This scourge will stop," Bush declared, adding that it was "the most obvious" area "in which we as a society must rise up united and express our intolerance."

The president named William J. Bennett the nation's drug czar, charged with the task of coordinating the fight.

But almost immediately Bush's fight against drugs raised another tough issue, gun control.

With drug dealers killing each other at a record pace in the nation's capital with semiautomatic assault-style rifles, the link to the drug trade was clear. But then a man walked into a school yard in Stockton, Calif., and opened fire with such a weapon. Five children were killed that January day.

Bush, a lifelong member of the National Rifle Association, vowed for the first six weeks in office that he opposed any ban on the rapid-fire assault-style rifles.

He maintained that stance even though his wife, Barbara, told The Associated Press just two weeks after her husband's inauguration that she fears guns and thinks assault weapons should be banned.

Faced with a growing public outcry against the weapons, Bush relented a bit.

Less than a month later, the president asked Bennett to look into the situation and revealed at a news conference that he had told Bennett, "if you come to me with a sensible answer that takes care of the concerns that I've felt over the years, I'll take a hard look at it, and I'll work with you to that end."

The initial suspension on imports of semiautomatic weapons, announced March 14, came only a few days after Bennett was sworn in as director of the office of national drug control policy, and the announcement came out of Bennett's office.

Bush dismissed speculation that the White House had directed that Bennett's office handle the announcement to place some distance between the suspension and Bush. When the administration expanded the suspension a month later to include 24 models of weapons that had been left out of the original ban, the announcement came out of the White House.

The president is a lifelong member of the National Rifle Association, which was clearly not thrilled by the wayward path of its most well-known member. But the powerful lobby kept its powder dry when the first suspension of imports took effect, saying the action would cool off the public outcries over the weapons triggered by the schoolyard shootings Jan. 17 by Patrick Purdy, a 24-year-old drifter, in Stockton, Calif.

The NRA denied allegations by an administration source that it had delivered messages through third parties to Bennett threatening his political future because of his stand on the weapons.

Irwin Kahn, a Republican National Committeeman and machine gun dealer who also owns a $23 million office furniture company in Ohio, said Bush had no other option but to suspend the imports.

Workers join in Beijing riot

By The Associated Press

BEIJING — More than 150,000 students and workers marched through central Beijing in communist China's biggest protest ever. Marchers pushed through police lines Thursday cheering and singing for democracy.

Workers by the thousands joined the students, giving them popsicles and bread in their strongest act of support in 11 days of protests.

Beijing residents escorted the students on bicycles and foot and tried to shield them from soldiers and police, who had issued harsh warnings against marches.

But the security forces were unarmed, and although they pushed fiercely against advancing students in a vain effort to halt their march, they did not use other force against them.

The students say they plan another march Thursday, the 70th anniversary of China's first student movement for democracy.

M.T. Pawcketts and Jott! are portrayed by David and Jayne Whitson-Lind. David has worked as a clown with Ringling Brothers and Barnum and Bailey Circus.

Student's clowning changes life

By Craig Hamrick
Collegian Reporter

In 1987, when Jayne Whitson-Lind, then a K-State senior, visited California with two of her friends for spring break, she had no idea the trip would change her life.

At Disneyland, one of the clowns began following her through the amusement park after she posed for a picture with him.

"He was a silent clown that day, so we could talk to him, but all he could do was pantomime," she said. "He was very mysterious."

As she and her friends continued through the park, the silent clown kept turning up.

"We came out of an indoor show, and he was still there," she said. "There was a blue grass band playing and he grabbed me and started dancing with me, right in the middle of Disneyland. I thought I'd never be more embarrased in my life."

"I've proven her wrong several times since then," said David Whitson-Lind, now her husband and clown teacher.

Through hand signals David, who is a senior in recreational therapy, got Jayne's phone number, though she was reluctant to give it to him. Later he called, and she was nervous about meeting him, but she invited him over.

"My friends and I were sitting there waiting for him, thinking, 'Oh, no what's this guy going to be like?'" Jayne said.

But when he arrived and she saw him without his make-up for the first time, she "thought he was really cute," and they all talked for several hours.

In the months that followed, David and Jayne wrote letters to each other, talked on the telephone and visited each other.

When they met at Disneyland, David had just graduated from the Ringling Brothers and Barnum and Bailey Circus Clown College, which is located in Venice, Fla. He said just as he and Jayne were growing close, he got an offer to travel and perform with the circus. He accepted the offer, but kept in close contact with Jayne from the road. After 4 months, at the end of the season, he quit the circus to marry Jayne.

After having met under such unusual circumstances, David wanted to propose to Jayne in a special way. With the help of Jayne's roommate, he arranged a surprise while he was on the road with the circus. He convinced Jayne he was in Minnesota at his parents' home by calling her on a conference call with his mother, himself and Jayne. Jayne thought David was at home and his mother was on another extension.

After she got off work, Jayne's roommate led her to their front door, where a note started Jayne on a scavenger hunt through the house. Jayne had been talking about wanting a dog, so she thought a new pet would be at the end of the hunt.

"I kept saying to my roommate, 'It's a puppy dog, isn't it? Where is it?' She said 'No, it's not a puppy. You're going to be surprised,'" Jayne said. "The last note was in the basement, and I was looking around corners waiting for a puppy to come out. The note said 'Go into the bathroom.' Well, I thought a dog could be tied up in my bathroom."

In the bathroom she found David in a bubblebath with two wine glasses. Her reaction was not quite what he had hoped for.

"She screamed and ran out of there. I was thinking, 'Maybe this isn't going to work,'" David said. "I just thought it would be romantic but it scared her."

After Jayne got over the shock, David told her to go get a wine bottle out of the refrigerator. On the bottle was a note asking her to marry him.

"He scared me, but I married him anyway," Jayne said with a laugh.

The only sign of David's occupation at the wedding was carried by the ring bearer, Jay-

Japanese television crew films tanks, military maneuvers

By The Associated Press

FORT RILEY — A Japanese television crew visited Fort Riley Wednesday to film exercises involving the Army's M1 Abrams tank.

Ruth Shupp, reporter-researcher from the Washington bureau of NHK, the Japan Broadcasting Corp., said the crew wanted to get something on the new tank "because we know that it's going to be involved in one of the negotiating points in the conventional arms weapon talks in Vienna and we're working on a story on that."

With Shupp were producer Toshiyuki Yamada, cameraman Manato Nagai and assistant cameraman Sachiko Koike.

Shupp said along with the footage shot at Fort Riley on the tank and its capabilities, the crew will also visit General Dynamics in Detroit, where the tanks are manufactured.

She said the story will be broadcast on public television just before the NATO summit that will be conducted in Vienna at the end of May.

Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev "has proposed a certain number of initiatives basically withdrawing a number of tanks from Europe and we're interested in how the Americans are going to respond, or if they're going to respond in any way," Shupp said.

"We feel that it's a bit ironic that even though there are conventional arms reduction talks there seems to be sort of an escalation of tank superiority between the Americans and the Soviets," she said.

Shupp said the Soviets outnumber the Americans in tanks about two to one, but U.S. tanks are of better quality "and it seems the Americans are constantly improving the M1 tank so that they can maintain that quality advantage."

"At the same time the Soviets are also trying to improve their tanks," she said. "So we see it as kind of a conventional arms race and we find this interesting in the face of trying to reduce conventional arms."

At Fort Riley, the crew interviewed Lt. Col. James A. Larson, battalion commander for 4th Battalion, 37th Armor. Soviet experts in Washington will also be interviewed.

The visit to Fort Riley was coordinated through the Defense Department.

Technicians try to retrieve robot

By The Associated Press

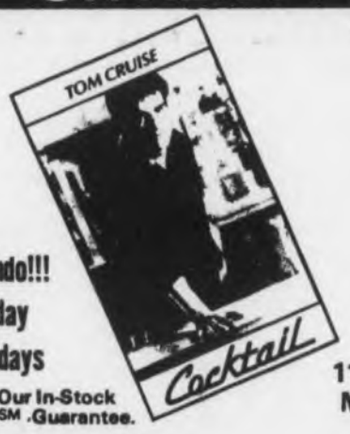
BOSTON — The team that used an unmanned submersible to explore the Titanic wreckage tried Thursday to raise the robot's younger brother, which sank in choppy seas during its debut mission.

Jason, as the 7-foot long remote-operated submersible has been dubbed, is scheduled to be the star of the show Monday, when student audiences in 13 North American cities were to gather at local museums to watch via satellite hookup as the robot explores the ruins of a Roman ship wrecked off the coast of Italy in 300 A.D.

However, when museum officials, teachers and technicians tuned in Wednesday to test the $7 million communications hookup, they were stunned to see scientists aboard the support ship Star Hercules holding the severed cord that had been Jason's lifeline.

Jason is a propeller-driven remote submersible that glides along the ocean floor at speeds up to 1 mph. The vehicle is equipped with a video camera and two arms capable of lifting, pushing, pulling and grasping.

Jason, still in its 8,000-pound mobile garage, Argo, disappeared as engineers at Turner Broadcasting Systems Inc. in Atlanta were coordinating with control centers at 12 science museums in the United States and one in Canada.



The crew was lowering the $1 million exploration team into 2,100 feet of water when suddenly marine biologists began scratching their heads and conferring off-camera. The frayed cable came up and the crew appeared first shocked and then ashen.

"This is just part of the risk and excitement in oceanography," Shelley Lauzon said from her office on Cape Cod. She said the marine explorers planned to launch a second mobile submarine to retrieve Jason and Argo as soon as the 3- to 4-foot waves subsided.

Dr. Robert D. Ballard, director of the Center for Marine Exploration at Woods Hole, said he believed the cable became weakened by its constant scraping against the boat's side in the rough seas.

Three ways to beat the high cost of college.

1. The Montgomery GI Bill
2. Student loan repayment
3. Part-time income

The Army Reserve Alternate Training Program is a smart way to pay for college.

First, if you qualify, the Montgomery GI Bill can provide you with up to $5,040 for current college expenses or approved Vo/Tech Training.

Second, if you have—or obtain—a qualified student loan not in default, you can get it paid off at the rate of 15% per year or $500, whichever is greater, up to a maximum of $10,000. Selected military skills can double that maximum.

Third, you can earn part-time money in college, and here's how it works: One summer, you take Basic Training, and the next summer, you receive skill training at an Army school. You'll earn over $1,200 for Basic and even more for skill training. Then you'll attend monthly meetings at an Army Reserve unit near your college, usually one weekend a month plus two weeks a year. You'll be paid over $80 a weekend to start. It's worth thinking about. Give us a call:

Netters in 'position' for Big 8 tournament

By Carolyn Holcroft
Sports Writer

Wildcat tennis team has a good shot at finishing higher in the conference than any other team K-State has at this weekend's Big Eight Tournament in Oklahoma City.

Thus far, the 'Cats best showing in the tourney was last year's sixth place finish.

Currently K-State is in fifth place in conference with 32 points, only two points behind fourth place Nebraska. Oklahoma State dominates the conference with 60 points, and Oklahoma is in second with 40 points. The Cowgirls have captured the last eight league titles. Kansas is in third with 38 points.

K-State failed to get a win against Nebraska Monday, which would have moved them into fourth place.

"The nice thing is that even though we had a disappointing loss this weekend, the rest of the year has gone so well that we're still in a very good position," Coach Steve Bietau said. "We're in the best position we've ever been in going into it."

This year's team is possibly also the strongest it has ever been, and Bietau said that there's a good chance the 'Cats will have at least three or four players seeded in the singles bracket and at least two in the doubles. Official seedings will not be announced until tonight.

This season's tournament may be the tightest ever, with just 11 points difference between the second through sixth place teams. Bietau said that almost all of the teams have improved from the past, with K-State possibly being the most improved.

He said that even though Colorado may have slipped slightly, they're still in a very competitive position.

"This is the first time that it's been that tight with that many teams in there," he said. "It's a really tight race and it will come down to who plays the best this weekend."

Bietau said that although the Big Eight tournament is what the team has been concentrating on all season, only minor adjustments were made in practice this week and no changes were made from the regular match preparations.

"We're going to try to do the same job we've been doing all year," he said. "I think everybody realizes the circumstances here. This is what we point towards all year."

Bietau geared the squad's season toward peaking this weekend, keeping in mind that only half of the total points are earned in regular conference matches. The remaining points are awarded by individual placings at each position during the tournament, with eight points earned for first place, seven at second, and so on down the ladder.

The first round of singles play will begin Saturday morning, followed by the first round doubles and the second round singles in the afternoon. Second round doubles take place Sunday morning. Championship matches in both divisions take place Sunday afternoon concluding the tournament.

Bietau said he realizes that the 'Cats have their work cut out for them this weekend.

"It's a great challenge. The competition's going to be tough," he said. "I think we're all really looking forward to getting down there and playing."

Ruggers hope for weekend victories

By The Collegian Staff

With the majority of their injuries healed, the men's rugby squads are hoping for two wins this weekend at Swope Park in Kansas City, Mo.

The A side will confront the Columbia Outlaws at 1:30 p.m. and at the same time B side will take on Central Missouri State.

K-State is coming off of a tournment win in Cornhusker Invitational tournament at Lincoln, Neb.

"We're in real good shape," said Greg Barnes, hooker. "We've got a lot of young guys who have really played super."

Team captain and wing forward, Darrel Loder, said this week's practices have concentrated on defending against Columbia's pack — one of the strongest in the region.

"They have an alumnus of our team and I hear his lifelong dream is beating K-State," Loder said. "We hope that doesn't happen."

K-State beat Columbia last fall and CMSU this spring.

If the prediction for cooler weather this weekend holds true, then Loder believes the change will be beneficial.

"We've got a lot of young guys who have really played super."

—Greg Barnes hooker

"We had guys out there (on the field) last weekend who were about ready to pass out," he said. "It would be a big plus for us, and we'd be able to go hard for the whole game."

Following this weekend, the squads will take on Topeka and Washburn rugby teams May 6, the Kansas City Rugby Club May 13 and will take part in the Wichita River Festival May 20.

"We're looking to go out undefeated these last weekends and hope to play a lot of young guys against Topeka and Washburn," Barnes said. "Kansas City has a lot of our alumni and that will be a tough one."

Despite graduation, Barnes expects a veteran team to be back on the field in the fall.

"I look for us to beat KU and go to the Westerns again," he said. "We were there for eight straight years, and after a two year absence, we're ready to get back there."

Clark signs 3 players

Two pitchers and a third baseman have been signed by mens' baseball coach Mike Clark for the 1990 season.

Sean Pedersen is a senior at Northwest High School in Omaha, Neb. A right hander, he was named the U.S. Baseball Federation's Nebraska Player of the Year for 1988. Pedersen was 48-11, including 20-2 in the summer months when his ERA was 1.11.

Kent Hipp, Great Bend, pitches for Barton County Community College.

"We feel Kent can step in and be one of our Big Eight starters next year," Clark said. "He has one of the best arms we have seen in the state this year."

Hitting .356 as a freshman who later received all-Jayhawk Conference honors, Scott Stroth plays third at Fort Scott Community College. He is a Washburn Rural graduate.

Yankees beat Royals, 3-2

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Tommy John allowed two runs in eight-plus innings for his 288th career victory and Dave Righetti got out of a bases-loaded jam in the ninth as the New York Yankees beat the Kansas City Royals 3-2 Thursday night.

John, who will be 46 on May 22, allowed seven hits, walked two and struck out five as the Yankees snapped Kansas City's five-game winning streak.

John took a four-hitter and a 3-1 lead into the ninth, but Kevin Seitzer led off with a double and scored on Jim Eisenreich's single. Danny Tartabull then followed with a single to chase John with none out.

Righetti relieved and Pat Tabler moved the runners up with a sacrifice. After pinch-hitter Bill Buckner was intentionally walked, George Brett pinch hit and lofted a short fly to left field that failed to advance the runners. Righetti then got Frank White to hit a forceout grounder to short to end the game for his third save.

John, 2-3, and 18-7 lifetime against the Royals, walked Willie Wilson with two out in the sixth and Seitzer followed with an RBI double to cut the Yankees' lead to 3-1.

Mike Pagliarulo, who entered the game 3-for-3, singled with one out in the fourth off Mark Gubicza, 1-2, and went to third Don Slaught's double. Stanley Jefferson's infield out scored Pagliarulo and Alvaro Espinoza singled home Slaught.

WSU names assistant coach

WICHITA — Rick Duckett, a part-time assistant basketball coach at Wichita State the past three seasons, will move up to a full-time role with the team, Coach Mike Cohen announced Thursday.

Duckett, 31, who has been responsible for the academic tutoring and study hall programs, as well as off-season conditioning, will add off-campus recruiting to regular coaching and scouting duties.

He is a graduate of North Carolina and began coaching there as a graduate assistant in 1979.

Cohen, who was an assistant under Eddie Fogler, who left for Vanderbilt, earlier named Tom McCorry as an assistant coach and Ron Allen as a part-timer, with Tom Kosich as graduate assistant.

Chiefs sign wide receiver

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Rod Smith, a wide receiver and kick return specialist, has signed with the Kansas City Chiefs as a free agent, the NFL club announced Thursday.

Smith, 23, returned 22 punts for a 17.6-yard average in three seasons at Nebraska. As a junior, he led the NCAA in punt returning with an 18.9-yard average.

He went to training camp with the Los Angeles Raiders last year but was released before the start of the season.

Track team at Drake Relays for weekend of competition

Only portion of squad to make trip

By Chris Hays
Sports Editor

The K-State men's and women's track teams are at the Drake Relays in Des Moines, Iowa, today and Saturday, preparing for the Big Eight Outdoor May 12-14.

The Wildcats will take a partial team and only run individuals in a few events after running most everyone hard at the KU Relays last weekend.

On the men's side, K-State has several conference leaders. Ray Hill leads the charge with a national qualifying mark of 10.11 seconds in the 100 meters. Next is Brad Speer, who leads the league in the high jump following a leap of 7-2 feet at the UCLA Invitational.

Clifton Etheridge qualified for nationals last weekend at KU with a leap of 26-1 in the long jump, which also leads the Big Eight. Thrower Dan O'Mara leads the conference in two events. He has a top mark of 56-10-¼ in the shot put and 187-0 in the discus.

K-State also has a trio of throwers at the top of the javelin honor roll. Pat Allen has thrown 210-2, Steve Henson 199-5 and Richard Croll 198-2. Those three rank 3, 4 and 5, respectively, in the league; and Steve Fritz leads the league in the decathlon with 6,994 points.

On the women's side, Kim Kilpatrick leads the charge. She has the best time in the 100-meter hurdles at 13.32. Latricia Joyner leads the league in the 100 with a time of 11.43; Connie Teaberry tops the high jump honor roll at 6-0; and Angie Miller is tops in both the shot put and discus. She has thrown a league-best 48-0¾ and 168-10 in her respective events.

Also placing high in the Big Eight honor roll for the men are Darrell Wyatt, sixth in the 100 at 10.64; Charles Armstead, third in the 110-meter hurdles at 14.34 and fourth in the long jump at 23-11; Sean Banks (47.25) and Tyrone Watkins (47.44), fourth and fifth in the 400 meters, respectively; Robbie Hays, fifth in the 3,000-meter steeplechase at 9:07.44; and O.B. Berry, second in the triple jump at 51-1¾.

On the women's side, those placing high within the conference honor roll are Markeya Jones, third in the 200 meters at 24.34; Joy Jones, second in the 400 at 54.93; Angie Barry, fifth in the 3,000 and second in the 10,000 at 9:58.51 and 35:24.39, respectively; Greta Semsroth and Debbie Schmidt, second and third in the javelin with throws of 172-11 and 149-7, respectively; DeDe Henderson, fourth in th high jump at 5-8; Carla Shannon, third in the triple jump at 41-0; Amy Dryer, third in the discus at 153-1; and Karen McGaughey, fifth in the heptathlon with 4,582 points.

The Wildcat track squads will have an oper date before the Big Eight Outdoor Championships in two weeks. K-State track members who have not qualified for the NCAA Outdoor Championships will have a chance to qualify at a last-chance meet May 6.

Baseball squad begins trip

Opponents in top 25

By Scott Paske
Collegian Reporter

K-State baseball coach Mike Clark might be considered a crazy man for scheduling games against this weekend's nationally-ranked opponents Oral Roberts and Arkansas, but the Wildcat leader has definite reasons for doing so.

"You can't roar with the lions if you don't play with the lions," Clark said. "If we want to be a top 25 ball club, we're going to have to go out and play top 25 teams."

The Wildcats, who dropped to 25-17 overall with a 17-5 loss to fifth-ranked Wichita State Tuesday, travel to Tulsa, Okla. today for a pair of games with Oral Roberts. Then they move on to Fayetteville, Ark., for two games Sunday with the fourth-ranked Razorbacks.

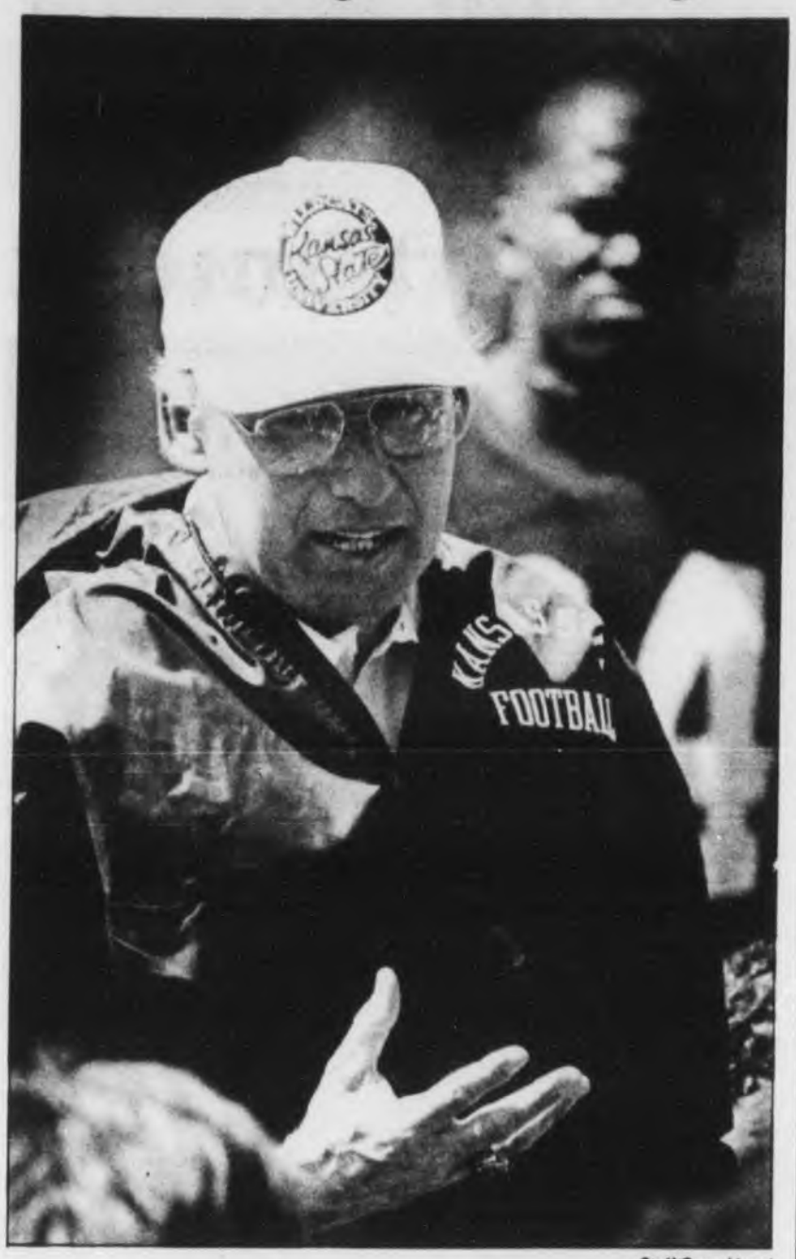
Oral Roberts, ranked 23rd in this week's Collegiate Baseball poll, is led by former K-State coach Gary Vaught. The Titans have struggled to achieve consistency this season, including a pair of setbacks to Kansas earlier this week. However, Clark said Oral Roberts is still worthy of the recognition it has received.

"Oral Roberts probably has as good of talent as anybody in the nation," Clark said. "These are big games for them because they're an independent school and they need as many wins as they can get against Division I schools."

Clark said because the games are so vital for the Titans, ORU will send its top two pitchers to the mound for the series. K-State will counter with senior righthander Bill Schafer for today's 7 p.m. contest, but Clark said injuries to starters Jim Haller and Mike Hedrick have left Saturday's starter a question mark. Haller is out with a pulled muscle in his back, while Hedrick has experienced recent elbow problems.

"You can't roar with the lions if you don't play with the lions."

— Mike Clark baseball coach



The 'Cats might be facing a contender for the College World Series on their second leg of the trip at Arkansas. The Razorbacks, coached by 19-year veteran Norm DeBryn, have spent the entire season in the top 25 while competing in the always tough Southwest Conference. Clark said with Arkansas' great athletes, it is difficult to find many weaknesses.

"They've got one of the top programs in the nation and it was built from the ground up," Clark said. "Norm (DeBryn) and I have been good friends for a long time, and I've tried hard to parallel our program after his."

David Hierholzer and Jeff Peterson are scheduled to start against Arkansas. Hierholzer, despite losing his last two decisions, is making a strong bid for all-Big Eight honors. The junior has completed all four Big Eight starts with a 2.33 conference earned run average. He has also posted wins against Oklahoma and San Jose State, both nationally ranked teams.

Peterson, a fifth-year senior from Birmingham, Mich., continues to climb several career charts for the Wildcats. He is second on the career wins list with 18, third in strikeouts with 157 and owns the K-State record for innings pitched with 238⅓.

Varsity ready to face alumni in scrimmage

Coach Bill Snyder talks to players during Saturday's scrimmage. The team is preparing for the K-State varsity-alumni scrimmage.

Snyder looking for victory of any sort

By Chris Hays
Sports Editor

The most pressing question at Coach Bill Snyder's weekly press conference Thursday was, "Why was Gary Swim absent from last Saturday's scrimmage?"

"Gary's situation was of a very personal nature," Snyder said. "It was just the way he went about it that was not up to my standards. He's being disciplined the way we see fit."

What that means is Swim has been placed below quarterbacks Carl Straw, Chris Cobb and Matt Garver on the K-State depth chart.

"He is still on the team though and will suit up Saturday and in all likelihood will play," Snyder said.

Saturday marks the date of the first K-State varsity—alumni scrimmage since 1987, but Snyder isn't taking it lightly.

"Saturday will give us a little bit of an indication of where we are right now," he said. "The way I figure, we'll either go home 0-1 or 1-0. It's been 27 football games since we've won and every little thing counts.

"We'd take a win over Okinawa (Japan) Junior College right now. I'm being facetious, obviously. But I'll guarantee you that these alumni will come to play."

Snyder is looking at Saturday's alumni game as a chance to see where the Wildcats stand under the first-year coach.

"Saturday will give us a little bit of an indication of where we are right now."
— Bill Snyder football coach

"This opportunity is very positive for us," Snyder said of the alumni game. "This gives our kids the opportunity to come together, which they haven't been able to do yet.

"We need to draw together on solid ground. It's been 18 days that these guys have had to hit each other and this just fits our needs right now."

What Snyder has most impressed through 18 days of spring drills has been the defensive down linemen — of which there are only four who need to fill three positions.

"I feel pretty strongly about these guys because there are only four of them and we have given them hell," Snyder said. "They're just young pups. Anywhere else in the country they would be playing scout squad and the coaching staff would be waiting to bring them along in a couple of years.

"We don't have that luxury. We have to get tham ready to play in the fall."

Those four are Russ Campbell, Jody Killian, Ekwensi Griffith and John Brown.

"They have my respect. We even stepped them aside the other day in practice and the other players gave them an ovation. That's how hard they have worked."

What Snyder has been most surprised with during his first spring practice is the expectations that each player had of himself before Snyder took over the reins.

"I have never been involved with a program where a group of individuals expected so little of themselves," he said. "We came in and said we expect more and we're not going to let you treat yourselves like that.

"We're trying to pay them a compliment and some didn't see it that way."

Which is why Snyder lost several players early in camp. The biggest names of those were defensive lineman Bobby Lawrence and offensive lineman Bob Pacchioli.

"That is just something that is going to happen," Snyder said. "These players expected so little of themselves and then when we expected more, they thought we were coming down on them."

Midwestern meet to prepare golfers

By The Collegian Staff

The men's golf team will compete in its last tune-up tournament as it works toward the Big Eight Conference tournament in Norman, Okla., May 14-15.

The Wildcats will be traveling to Dekalb, Ill., today to compete in the Miller Light Midwestern Invitational, which begins today and continues Saturday.

"There will be a lot of Big Ten competition there and it should be a real competitive tournament," K-State coach Russ Bunker said. "It will be a real good golf meet. There are a lot of tough teams."

Todd Fowler will be taking the place of Daran Neuschafer on the trip. He will be joined by Troy Keller, Jeff Sedorcek, John Shields and Brett Vuillemin.

"Todd Fowler will be going back to his home course," Bunker said.

Fowler is from Rockford, Ill., but he works during the summer months at the Kishwaukee Country Club.

"Todd averaged 78 three weeks ago and he has his average down to 74.5," Bunker said. "So he'll make the trip and I'm real pleased with his progress — plus he has course knowledge.

"I will be very disappointed if we don't finish in the top 10," he said. "The kids are working real hard right now."

The K-State men open play in the Big Eight tournament in two weeks.

COLLEGIAN ADVERTISING
Bringing you to your clients, so your clients will come to you.

When making media decisions your business needs the facts. The Kansas State Collegian is an excellent medium, in which you can communicate your message to more than 18,000 students and 3,000 faculty and staff members. Here are the facts:

- K-State is the largest employer in Manhattan with a projected fiscal '89 payroll of more than $127 million. Student Financial aid totals more than $30 million.
- 25% of all students have greater than $200 discretionary income.
- Nearly 50% of all students have a charge account.
- 96% of students read the Collegian weekly. 60% do not read the local newspaper.
- More than 70% of the readers report that they clip coupons from the Collegian.
- 47% always read ads, 47% sometimes read ads and 6% never read ads.

Information based on a December 1987 Collegian readership survey.

Clown

ne's 4-year-old brother. The wedding rings were carried on the ears of one of David's circus props — a beat-up stuffed rabbit called Stevie.

"A lot of people at the wedding didn't realize that it was the groom's rabbit and not the 4-year-old's," David said with a laugh.

The stuffed rabbit, which David purchased at a thrift shop, accompanied David through clown school and on the road as he performed. They were even pictured together in the December 1987 issue of Life magazine, in a photo of a reunion of the alumni of the Clown College.

Since January, Jayne and David have performed together as clowns as part of a business they run out of their small basement apartment.

The apartment is filled with clown memorabilia including figurines and paintings. In one corner are two large trunks containing their costumes and make-up.

Their delivery service is called "M.T. Pawcketts and Friends." M.T. is the name of David's clown character and Jayne's character is called "Jou!". Individually or together the clowns deliver telegrams and balloons and perform at parties.

In Clown College, which David describes as "11 weeks of intensive clowning," he learned skills like walking on stilts, applying clown makeup and costume making. He has taught Jayne some of the tricks of the trade.

"Being a clown is like an adventure for me, because it is nothing I ever thought about doing before I knew David," Jayne said.

Air travel changed by crash

Planes need more than routine maintenance

By The Associated Press

HONOLULU — The way the world thought about air travel was changed one year ago today when part of the roof ripped off an Aloha Airlines jet like a worn-out convertible top, throwing one woman to her death from an altitude of 24,000 feet.

The image is unforgettable: A Boeing 737, its passenger compartment open to the sky with a 18-foot section of its upper fuselage gone, sitting on the runway of Kahului Airport on the Hawaiian Island of Maui, its stunned passengers still in their seats. Sixty-one people were injured.

Newspaper headlines ranged from "Terror in Paradise" to "Miracle Over Maui."

Passengers and others praised Captain Robert Schornstheimer and co-pilot Madeline "Mimi" Tompkins, for keeping the seriously damaged jet under control for the 13 minutes it took to fly Flight 243 to Maui and land safely.

Although the National Transportation Safety Board report on the "in-flight roof separation" is not due until next month, the accident caused widespread changes in an industry that previously believed a properly maintained aircraft could fly forever.

The Boeing 737 involved in the Aloha accident rolled off the assembly line in 1969 and had 89,000 cycles — takeoffs and landings — in a corrosive salt-air environment.

The industry and the Federal Aviation Administration had believed that metal fatigue in older airplanes, especially cracking around rivets and corrosion, could be discovered in regular visual inspections.

However, in the Aloha case, investigators think dozens of minute cracks — invisible to the human eye — connected and allowed a piece of fuselage to blow out in an explosive decompression, followed by a whole section of the plane.

"I saw the original hole, the smaller one before the whole thing ripped open," said passenger Arlo Clippinger, 51, of Tucson, Ariz. "I still dream about that hole."

A flight attendant was blown out of the plane to her death.

Clippinger has not flown since her "terrifying' flight home from Hawaii after the accident.

Afterward, a task force of aviation industry and government safety experts recommended mandatory structural overhauls on older airliners. The average age of the nearly 3,000 U.S. airliners is about 13 years, with many planes more than 15 years old.

"The accident caused everyone to question the industry folklore that a plane could fly forever," said A. Maurice Myers, president of Aloha Airlines. "Now it's believed that airplanes can fly indefinitely with the proper life-extending programs, but that's not just daily maintenance, it s overall, complete structural inspections."

Since the Aloha accident, nine people died Feb. 24 when a piece of fuselage tore away from the side of a 19-year-old United Airlines Boeing 747 on a flight from Hawaii. That is believed to have been caused by the failure of a cargo door.

"Those two accidents (United and Aloha) were similar only in what you saw on TV, a jet with a hole," said FAA spokesman Fred Farrar. "The best poll of public confidence remains the fact that we have something like 16,000 airline flights every day in the country and they're pretty much full of passengers."

Meanwhile, Boeing Co. this week predicted record sales for 1989, with Chairman and Chief Executive Officer Frank Shrontz saying "concern about aging aircraft is bound to be a significant factor" in the company's sales outlook.

Myers said that despite spending $60 million for two new 737s, defending the company against 19 lawsuits stemming from the accident and spending millions to refurbish older aircraft, the company turned a $5.8 million profit in 1988, up from a $5.6 million profit the year before. The jet involved in the accident was scrapped.

The airline's insurance company is paying settlements to those who did not sue, Myers said, but declined to release the average payment.

"In 43 years of flying we've had one accident," Myers said. "It happened to be one that affected the whole industry and caused widespread changes."

The airline planned a private memorial service Friday.

One injured passenger who asked not to be identified because he "couldn't stand all the attention," said he would mark the anniversary by "trying not to think about it and praying for everybody who was there."

their activities themselves," Ann Krauss, agriculture senator, said.

The formation of a committee to look into the possibility of a combined athletic and fine arts fee was also approved. Senate amended the bill to not allow the athletic and fine art representatives on the committee to have voting privileges.

"I would like to see the students making the decisions," said Rob Karlin, architecture senator.

"The athletic fee is an issue that people have tried to bulldoze through Senate," Loren Sheets, senate intern, said. "It has come up too many times already."

Senate voted to adopt Blue Cross and Blue Shield's proposal for student health insurance for the 1989-90 academic year.

The appointment of Ann Banning, arts and sciences senator, as chairwoman of Senate Operations committee was also approved. Banning replaces Lisa Rephlo, who resigned as chairman at the last Senate meeting.

Senate also approved the appointment of Eva Chatterjee, junior in sociology, as the chairman of Senate Elections committee.

been done within the original budget of $1.06 million, Garvin said. The funds have come from a student body Holton Hall renovation fee.

Most of the faculty and staff will probably wait until after the end of the semester to move into Holton, he said.

The remodeling was done with the original architecture in mind, Garvin said. Major renovations were made to the floors, ceilings and walls.

The ceilings were hung much higher, which gave a traditional flavor to the building, he said. Indirect lighting was also installed in the building.

to say that we're going to win a football game this fall."

Wefald concluded his address by commending the University of Kansas for its excellence, but said students all over the state are anxious to come to K-S ate.

One alumnus said afterward he thought Wefald's address was "very upbeat."

"It made me very proud and I want to be around when we have a winning football season," said Don Davis, a 1944 K-State graduate from Indianapolis, Indiana.

NATO's missile debate unsolved

By The Associated Press

DEIDESHEIM, West Germany — Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher of Britain failed to persuade Chancellor Helmut Kohl on Sunday to drop his demand that the superpowers begin talks soon on cutting short-range nuclear missiles.

The two leaders, trying to reach a compromise on a stalemate that has split the NATO alliance, described their talks as frank and intensive. Kohl defended West Germany's allegiance to NATO, but he and Thatcher admitted they could not solve the crisis.

"We still have quite a lot of work to do," Kohl told reporters during a news conference with Thatcher after an afternoon of talks.

Kohl said he was optimistic the disagreement could be resolved before a North Atlantic Treaty Organization summit in Brussels on May 29-30.

Thatcher's visit to the Rhineland-Palatinate town of Deidesheim was aimed at persuading Kohl to drop his government's insistence that the superpowers begin talks on reducing the short-range nuclear weapons.

Kohl's call has placed him in a battle of wills with Thatcher and President Bush.

Washington and London reject the early negotiations, saying talks on tactical nuclear arsenals should not begin as long as the Warsaw Pact alliance has a superiority in conventional forces.

NATO military officials say elimination of the tactical weapons — the goal of Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev — would leave NATO's troops vulnerable and dismantle the alliance's strategy of flexible response to a Warsaw Pact attack.

Thatcher stood firm on that conviction. "Short-range nuclear weapons are absolutely vital for flexible response," she said.

Kohl, while also affirming the NATO strategy and rejecting an outright elimination of the weapons, added that he hoped a "joint document which takes our special situation into account" could be prepared at the Brussels summit.

Most of NATO's short-range nuclear missiles are based in West Germany.

"That has nothing at all to do with the Germans having become unreliable or anything like that," Kohl said. "There can be no question of that. We

Budget error sparks partisan dispute

From Staff and Wire Reports

Manhattan Democrats Sheila Hochhauser and Katha Hurt expressed concern Sunday that $441,000 in K-State funding, which was eliminated from K-State's budget request due to a clerical error, has turned into a partisan issue in the Kansas Legislature.

Last fall, a clerical error in budget preparations caused the funding problem, which wasn't noticed until February. Although steps were taken in March to correct the mistake by making a budget revision request, the money hasn't been reinstated yet due to what seems to be struggles between the two parties of the House.

The House may vote on inclusion of the $441,000 in the K-State budget today, said Rep. Hochhauser.

She said she was "shocked and surprised that this partisan nonsense had any part of a non-partisan issue in the House, and I'm sorry it happened," in response to comments made Saturday by House Speaker Jim Braden.

Braden said he agreed with Rep. Bill Bunten of Topeka, chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, who reportedly suggested to Republicans during a party caucus Friday that they vote against an amendment restoring the $441,000 removed by Bunten's committee.

Braden denies saying the House should "punish" K-State because Hurt and Hochauser defeated veteran incumbent Republicans in last year's election.

Braden said he thinks voters in the K-State community were shortsighted in turning former House Majority Leader Joe Knopp and veteran Rep. Ivan Sand out of office last year in favor of Hochhauser and Hurt.

Hurt said she was "more concerned about (Braden's) actions than his opinions, but it's unfair that the Republican party feels it has to act this way.

"It's a ploy that is inappropriate in the use of power. I will not be a party to that," she said.

The Clay Center Republican leader of the House elaborated on his position in the wake of allegations by Democrats on the floor Friday night that Braden and the Republican Party were "punishing" K-State in the appropriation process because of the losses suffered by Knopp and Sand.

The accusation came after the House rejected an amendment to the omnibus appropriations bill offered by Rep. George Teagarden, D-LaCygne, a K-State graduate, to restore $441,026 to the K-State budget.

The House allowed $1.5 million of the shortfall to be made up, and also agreed with the Senate to give K-State $668,447 for underestimated utility expenditures.

House Democratic Leader Marvin Barkis followed up Friday's flap with a letter to Braden Saturday asking the speaker to "rethink his position of punishing Kansas State University for partisan political reasons."

Barkis said Braden should apolog-

Van Zile renovation plans to be ready by week's end

By Chris Wilhelm
Staff Writer

The architects renovating Van Zile Hall will submit preliminary plans to the University by the end of the week, said Robert Krause, vice president for institutional advancement.

"The project is proceeding on schedule," Krause said. "The asbestos engineers have completed their findings and are determining cost estimates to have it removed. The design check scheduled for April 15 has been completed. We should receive the preliminary plans giving specifications within the next week."

The residence hall did not receive its scheduled renovations in 1984 because declining enrollment prompted former University President Duane Acker to close it indefinitely.

The delayed action probably cost the University extra expense in rising construction costs, Krause said.

"Anytime you delay a project involving construction, you are going to wind up spending more money," he said. "Rarely does the price of construction materials decrease.

"Unless you can put the work off until such a time when you can get a better financing rate, you will almost always spend more money."

The total renovation is expected to increase on-campus student housing by about 128 beds, said John Pence, head of residence hall food service.

"The renovation will add about 68 beds in Van Zile and about 30 beds each in Boyd and Putnam Halls," Pence said. "I have a feeling that the residents of Boyd and Putnam will appreciate the renovation when it's been completed.

"The lower areas of both of those dorms will be renovated, with air conditioning added to those areas," he said.

With renovations to be completed by August 1990, Pence and Krause said the construction will make that area of campus particularly attractive and cost effective.

"The renovation will make these dorms into a strong complex," Pence said. "We also feel that it will be more cost effective to join the dorms. All of the dorms can be handled from one administrative area and the kitchen facilities will all be in one central place for all three dorms."

Krause said that although the cost of building a new residence hall with the same number of beds would be about the same as the renovation costs, demolition of Van Zile would also have to be paid. Also, he said, "you have a building you want to restore, keeping intact its previous architectural integrity.

"I think this is an excellent project. We are following through on the external feature of the limestone campus and this ought to be one of the more scenic areas on campus."

House passes highway plan

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The House reversed itself Sunday night, passing a somewhat scaled-down version of a comprehensive highway program and sending it to Gov. Mike Hayden to end a long, bitter fight over how to go about rebuilding Kansas' crumbling 10,000-mile highway system.

The vote approving the bill, 63-59, came less than an hour after the House had rejected the latest conference committee agreement, 63-61.

Following a recess, Speaker Jim Braden entertained a motion from Rep. Artie Lucas, R-Highland, to reconsider the vote to send the bill enacting a $2.65 billion highway plan back to conference.

The House adopted the reconsideration motion, 67-55, then passed the bill without a vote to spare.

The Senate had approved it, 22-16, in late afternoon.

The plan had been trimmed by a conference committee from $2.86 billion to $2.65 billion by reducing the amount of revenue bonds to be issued as part of the funding package from $1.1 billion to $890 million.

The eight-year plan calls for a quarter-cent increase in the state sales tax, seven-cent increase in motor fuel taxes over four years, 52 percent increase in automobile registration fees, 30 percent increase in truck registration fees, $890 million in bonding and $223 million transfer of funds from the state general fund to the highway fund to finance.

Those tax and fee increases represent the largest single tax increase ever approved by the Kansas Legislature, a fact not lost on opponents. They warned supporters of the plan that voters may not take kindly to the increased cost of motoring and may express their displeasure at the ballot box next year.

On the expenditure side, $1.16 billion will go for major modification projects, $600 million for system enhancements, $500 million to make up for shortfalls in Department of Transportation needs, $302 million will be shared with local units of government, $100 million will go to replace bridges, and $10 million to elderly and handicapped transportation and city connecting links.

Specific projects are not included in the plan, leaving it to the Department of Transportation to decide

Accidents claim 3 lives

By Karen Allen
Staff Writer

One current and one former K-State student were killed in two non-related car accidents this weekend.

Michael Van Gorp, freshman in arts and sciences, died early Sunday morning in a one-car accident on Dyer Road near the Rocky Ford Tavern.

The accident occurred 1.3 miles south of K-13 on Dyer Road at about 3:30 a.m. Sunday, said a spokeswoman from the Pottawatomie County Sheriff's office. The vehicle rolled several times and burned, she said. Van Gorp was thrown clear of the car and was pronounced dead at the scene. No other passengers were in the car. The cause of the accident has not been determined.

The 20-year-old freshman from Lake Quivira was a member of Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity. A memorial service will be from 7 to 9 p.m. today at Newcomer's Funeral Home in Shawnee. Funeral services will be 11 a.m. Tuesday at the Shawnee United Methodist Church. Van Gorp is survived by his parents and a sister.

Garyn Hoffman, a May 1988 graduate, died Friday after receiving injuries in a one-vehicle accident one mile north of Manhattan on Seth Child's Road. The accident occurred about 10:30 p.m. Friday and Hoffman was transported to The St. Mary Hospital where he later died.

A University of Kansas student, David Schippert, was also killed in the accident. Neither the cause of the accident nor the driver of the vehicle has been determined.

Hoffman, 24, studied correctional administration and was employed in Wichita. While attending K-State, he was a member of the Royal Purple yearbook staff, serving as sports editor during the 1987-88 school year.

A graveside service for Hoffman has been set for 10 a.m. Tuesday at the Indian Hill Cemetery in Chapman. He is survived by his parents and a brother, all of Chapman, and a sister of Junction City.

Sell of baby food to resume

LONDON — A supermarket chain said Sunday it will resume selling canned baby food of the two leading brands because it found no tampering in a check of its stock following a contamination scare.

However, the Tesco company's 375 stores will keep glass jars of baby food made by H.J. Heinz Co. and Cow and Gate Ltd. off their shelves while police continue investigating more than 300 reports of contamination, the retailer said.

Boot's, a drugstore chain with more than 1,000 stores, and the Asda food chain also have stopped selling glass jars of the two brands of baby food.

Reports of taintings with glass shards, pieces of razor blades and caustic soda first surfaced April 7. Most reports involved Heinz or Cow and Gate baby food, but several were in other brands.

Police said most of the reports of contamination were mistakes, hoaxes, or copycat crimes. Scotland Yard, which is coordinating the national inquiry, said several arrests have been made.

Twins surviving despite odds

BANGKOK, Thailand — Siamese twins Viet and Duc are doing well six months after they were surgically separated in Vietnam's Ho Chi Minh City, the official Vietnam News Agency reported Sunday.

The twins were given little chance of survival after their operation, which the report called the most complicated ever performed in the country.

The two boys, about seven years old, were joined at the pelvis, had a single pair of legs and shared other major body parts.

Duc can now operate his wheelchair alone and go outside to enjoy the sun each morning. He is also learning reading, writing, painting and music.

Viet, the weaker of the two, is slowly recovering from encephalitis and remains in intensive care. He recently underwent another skin graft operation.

The twins were last reported staying at Tu Du Hospital in Ho Chi Minh City, formerly called Saigon.

Party to prevent dictatorship

HARARE, Zimbabwe — A founder of Zimbabwe's ruling party Sunday launched a new opposition political movement with the avowed aim of preventing a dictatorship.

Edgar Tekere, 52, said the president leadership was "decayed" and he vowed to challenge President Robert Mugabe as head of state in the next elections, which are due before April 1990.

"We are going to pursue one another right up to the presidential election," Tekere, chairman of the newly formed Zimbabwe Unity Movement, told a news conference.

Tekere, who helped Mugabe establish the ruling Zimbabwe African National Union party in 1963, was fired from the 15-member politburo and 90-strong central committee in October after lashing out at top-level corruption and accusing fellow politicians of weaving a personality cult around the head of state.

"I'm in for a war with the ruling party," Tekere said as he unveiled his movement's emblem — a black, a brown and a white hand clasped together.

Navy crewmen missing

TOKYO — Two U.S. Navy submarine crewmen were missing Monday after three of them fell overboard in waters off Japan's southwestern island of Kyushu, Japanese coast guard officials said.

One of the three men who fell from the 2,145-ton Barbel was rescued later, said an official of the Maritime Safety Agency's local office in Kagoshima.

The official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the three men fell from the submarine about 31 miles southwest of Noma Cape in Kagoshima Prefecture.

He said one helicopter and three Japanese patrol boats were searching for the missing men.

Before the three men fell, the submarine had surfaced after an accident and became unable to sail on its own power, the Japanese official said. It was reportedly taking on water from a hatch, but the official refused to elaborate on the accident or the damage to the hatch.

The non-nuclear combatant Barbel, commissioned in 1959 and equipped with six torpedoes, carries a maximum crew of 85, according to Jane's Fighting Ships 1988-89.

Jackson encourages strike

WISE, Va. — The Rev. Jesse Jackson encouraged striking coal miners Sunday to continue non-violent civil disobedience to force concessions from Virginia's biggest coal company, saying "we will not surrender."

"This is a great moment in which we have come together," Jackson told about 10,000 Pittston Coal Group workers and United Mine Workers union supporters who flooded the Wise County Fairgrounds.

"The tradition of Martin Luther King Jr. and John L. Lewis have come together," Jackson said, referring to the slain civil rights leader and the militant former UMW president. "The spirit cannot be defeated."

The two-time Democratic presidential candidate wore a camouflage outfit, which strikers have adopted as a uniform to make themselves harder to identify.

About 1,700 UMW members went on strike April 5 against Pittston, Virginia's largest coal company, after working without a contract for 14 months.

Prison bill to go to House

TOPEKA — A $73.2 million prison construction proposal, designed to reduce overcrowding, will go to the House for the fourth time today, a day after the Senate approved it for the fourth time.

The Senate approved a joint conference committee's compromise, 33-6, Sunday night. Like other compromises reached by the committee, it called for building a $58.7 million, 768-cell prison and a $14.5 million hospital for the mentally ill.

The House has rejected such a plan three times, the latest Sunday afternoon, 73-51. The closest the House has come to the Senate's plan is a proposal to build a 512-cell, $48 million prison.

Art collection receives 39 additional works

Collection bequeathed to University by alumnus

By Gary Lytle
Collegian Reporter

The K-State Permanent Art Collection has recently received a major collection of artwork.

The collection was bequeathed to K-State by John H. Kohn, a 1950 graduate in architecture, said Jessica Reichman, curator of K-State's art collection.

Kohn, who died in December, was an industrial and interior designer in Dallas and had amassed an extensive and varied collection of art, Reichman said.

The donation consists of 20 prints and 19 antique ceramic pieces, she said. Most of the ceramic pieces are from the Far East and the prints include etchings, lithographs and intaglios.

"We are absolutely ecstatic with this wonderful gift and it really enhances the collection," said Ruth Ann Wefald, who is a major supporter of K-State's permanent art collection.

Of the 20 prints donated, Reichman listed several which would be major additions to the K-State art collection.

- The print "West Texas" by Thomas Hart Benton.
- A Grant Wood lithograph named "Vegtables" which was colored by his sister Nan.
- A print by the surrealist painter Salvador Dali.
- A print by Pablo Picasso.
- An intaglio print by Gerges Braque who worked closely with Picasso.
- The lithograph "Figure" by French artist Gerges Roualt.

All of the prints are first editions and are signed by the artists.

Reichman said she hoped to be able to display the prints and ceramic pieces in the fall. "I do want to share this gift with the University because it is such an important addition to the collection."

"We are absolutely ecstatic with this wonderful gift and it really enhances the collection."

West Texas by Thomas Hart Benton.

The major problem with displaying any of the art collection is the lack of adequate space on campus with the proper security and environmental controls, she said.

The lack of a space to display the collection is, "very frustrating," Reichman said.

"A gift such as this one can really give a boost to people understanding the importance of an art museum," Wefald said.

An art museum is the only capital improvement included in the KSU Foundation's new Essential Edge fundraising campaign, she said.

The Essential Edge is a national campaign expected to raise about $100 million over the next three years.

The 1986 reforms in tax laws also created problems for the art collection and collections across the nation, Reichman said.

Before the reforms, anyone donating artwork could deduct the fair market price of the works from their taxes, she said. Since the reforms, only the amount people originally paid for the art may be deducted.

The print "West Texas" by Thomas Hart Benton is a good example of this, Reichman said.

Since the market price for the print is about $1,500 to $2,000, if Kohn had donated it before 1986 he could have deducted that amount from his taxes, she said.

However, because the print was originally purchased for only $5, if Kohn had donated it after the 1986 reforms he could have only deducted five dollars from his taxes, Reichman said.

"Gifts (to the collection) have been cut in half because the benefits are not as great," she said.

Manhattan hotels, motels full for commencement weekend

By Janette Poole
Collegian Reporter

"No vacancy."

This is the response people will receive for graduation weekend accommodations, said area motel and hotel managers.

Throughout Manhattan, housing is at a premium and although those managers surveyed said graduation weekend, May 12-14, is a prime weekend in the business, they did not expect any additional revenue as compared to other busy weekends.

At the University Inn, Sales Director Stacy Sellers said rooms are sold out, but there is a waiting list.

"We have 17 on a waiting list for Saturday night (May 13) and one on a list for Friday night (May 12)," she said.

Rooms will be reserved for those people on the list in the order requested. She said many reservations have been made for a year. The 116-room capacity hotel is the only one offering a graduation buffet May 13. Sellers said graduation weekend would average approximately the same revenue as any other weekend the hotel is sold out.

The hotel business, Sellers said, has picked up considerably in April due to warmer weather activities such as softball tournaments, greek organization events, and All-University Open House. Increases in their business can come from University activities, she said.

At All Seasons Motel, with 119-room capacity, Assistant Manager Wendy Jensen said all rooms have been completely booked for two months with no waiting list. Jensen said she is not expecting any cancellations. She said most rooms are reserved for two nights and guests started making reservations a year ago.

Jensen said she did not expect graduation weekend to surpass other heavily scheduled weekends. Graduation, she said, would bring in an additional $500 to $700 revenue, which is an approximate average each year.

"I have several weekends throughout the year that are top weekends," Jensen said.

The Manhattan Holiday Inn and Holidome, which has 197 rooms, has been full for approximately six months.

"Because we are a convention hotel, a great number of our weekends are full anyhow," said General Manager Fritz Pyle. "Graduation weekend is one of our prime weekends. It's one of our better weekends. The food business is great as well as the room business."

Esther Hall, assistant manager of Motel 6, said the motel's 87 rooms are full.

"We are sold out, but we try to undersell a little so we aren't sold out," Hall said. "We won't take reservations for anything over a year."

At Super 8, an 87-room motel, desk clerk Jill LaBarge said, "We're booked — we don't have any availability."

Pravda: Safety standards declining at Chernobyl

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW — A regional Communist Party chief said in an article published Sunday that safety standards have slipped at the Chernobyl power plant, and he demanded the government provide it with more well-trained specialists.

The article appeared in the Communist Party daily Pravda and came shortly after the third anniversary of an accident at the plant that killed at least 31 people.

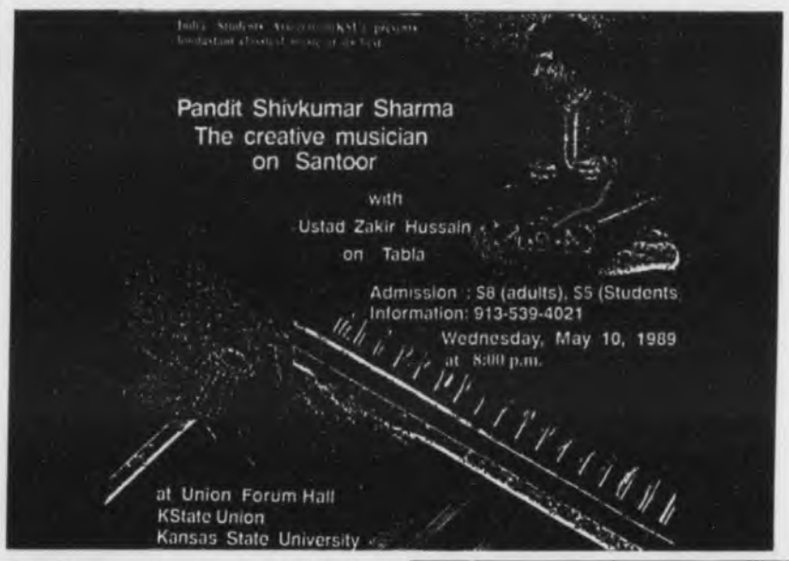
Grigory I. Revenko, 53, first secretary of the Kiev region, where Chernobyl is located, said workers still are searching for the best way to seal the plant's No. 4 reactor, which exploded and spewed radiation in the world's worst nuclear power accident.

The reactor was encased in concrete to prevent further radiation leaks. Revenko, a Ukrainian who was recently elected to the new Soviet parliament, did not say why additional measures were needed to seal the reactor.

While that work continues, Revenko said, "Problems with the safe operation of the station more and more are being moved back to second priority."

"The understanding of the acuteness of the problems, including those concerning the safety of the station, has dulled. We consider this unacceptable and demand decisive intervention by the government," he said.

Other reactors at the plant are working and reportedly have generated more than 40 billion kilowatt-hours of electricity since the accident.



Revenko said Chernobyl workers either have not received the equipment and high-quality spare parts they need or have received them after long delays. He also said scientists and technical specialists throughout the country are poorly coordinating their work on eliminating the accident's consequences.

In addition, he said, the Atomic Energy Ministry is not sending enough workers capable of coping with the specia problems at the plant.

The three-column article said it was taking too long to build housing and other buildings for Chernobyl plant workers in a new town, Slavutich, and that an off-limits, contaminated zone around the plant is being poorly managed.

Recent Soviet news reports have said thousands more people will be evacuated because their land is contaminated by Chernobyl radiation and that deformed animals are routinely born on contaminated Ukrainian farms.

Court abortion ruling should keep precedent

Last week, the nation's eyes fell upon the Supreme Court as the case of Webster vs. Reproductive Health Services was heard. Extensive media coverage was devoted to the hearing and pundits far and wide discussed the possible implications of the day's events.

Regardless of the sticky moral problems surrounding abortion, regardless of the way the issue has split America, regardless of what the Supreme Court will do to the 1973 precedent of Roe vs. Wade, one fact remains: many women will still want, and often need, abortions. In deciding the Webster case, the Court must bear this in mind. Past attempts to make abortion illegal have only sent women into back alleys, where they risked permanent injury or death.

Although it is doubtful the Supreme Court will declare abortion illegal, judging from earlier Court decisions — many written by potential swing-vote Justice Sandra Day O'Connor — it seems very likely the Supreme Court will limit the access that women have for obtaining an abortion.

For instance, the Supreme Court may allow states to require that women undergo a 24-hour waiting period after requesting an abortion, that abortions be performed in fully accredited hospitals, and that abortions be approved by a committee of doctors.

While these restrictions may seem insignificant, they can, in practice, make it harder for poor women to obtain abortions. While more well-to-do women will have no problem with waiting for the approval of a committee, and then waiting an additional 24 hours, a poorer woman, who works long hours and possibly supports a family, may have a hard time making several trips to the hospital. Moreover, hospitals are much more expensive and inaccessible than the abortion clinics, thus placing yet another economic and bureaucratic obstacle in the way of the poor woman.

Secondly, delaying abortions runs counter to the idea that if an abortion is to be performed at all, it should be done early on, while the fetus is underdeveloped. After all, early abortion occurs frequently in nature: 60 percent of all fertilized ova abort naturally in the early stages of pregnancy. In addition, IUD's and low-dosage birth control pills also destroy fertilized ova.

By delaying abortions with bureacratic red tape, future state laws could prevent women from obtaining safer and arguably more humane abortions.

The formula which the Supreme Court worked out 16 years ago in Roe vs. Wade is still the best one available for such a complex moral issue. If anything, Roe should be liberalized to adapt to medical advances which allow for safer abortions at later stages of pregnancy. Roe should not, by any means, be reversed. Indeed, it can't be, because the grim realities surrounding the abortion issue are too strong to ignore.

Columnist defies cigarette war

Commentary

Chad L. Sanborn
Collegian Columnist

This column is a story of corporate espionage, international drug rings, corporations possibly harrassing their employees, and definitely the benefits of free trade.

Furthermore, this story mercifully has nothing to do with South Africa, Nicaragua or the mean ole nasties in Washington. Our story — and it is our story — begins right here in Manhattan. We may never know where it ends.

One evening last week my craving for nicotine drove me to buy cigarettes. To extend the metaphor, my craving drove me in a Rolls Royce. That is to say, I was jones'in for a 'gret.

The dealer nearest my house is Texaco. In addition to cigarettes, I pumped a few expensive gallons of unleaded gas into my car and went in to pay. When I complained about the price of gas, the cashier waxed defensive.

"Cigarettes went back down," he said, pointing to the sign reading "Cigarettes — $1.23." Obviously, he remembered me from a few days before when I whined about the 3-cent increase. Indeed, he was right. The price had dropped a full 11 cents, a rare consumer-oriented event.

Always a reporter with the senses and instincts of a shark, I said, "Why the drop?"

The cashier suspiciously surveyed the small room and surrounding gas pumps. "Price war," he mumbled. I smelled blood.

"With who?" I said, showing my distate for the word "whom."

Ignoring my linguistic faux pas, he put his head down and said one word: "Kleppers."

"Hurray for the free market," I thought, as I ignored the gas pumps and lit a butt.

Clearly the poor worker had no idea he was talking to some bozo who puts gossip in the newspaper. I am not going to identify the cashier for reasons that will come clear to the reader later in the story. I did, however, decide to check out his story.

The next afternoon I called Kleppers, station No. 1, located on Fort Riley Boulevard. After identifying myself, I asked the man on the other end of the telephone if I could speak to the manager. He said OK, and set down the receiver, presumably to get the manager.

The man returned to the phone and told me the manager was not in. I asked for the manager's name. The man replied with a hesitant "Uh."

He then covered up the telephone — though poorly — and said to someone, "He wants a name." A voice replied, "Tell him he's not here."

Even though this is not what I asked, the man uncovered the phone and spoke. "I don't know when he'll be back," he said.

"I understand that," I said. "I would like his name so I can ask for him when I call back." There was a pause in the conversation as the man struggled for another way to duck me.

Suddenly, the line mysteriously went dead. Either the man hung up on me because he was afraid to talk to me out of fear of what his company would do to him, or worse. And worse meant that they were already on to me.

I called back, but it was busy, so I called station No. 2, located on Leavenworth Street. They were more helpful, more brave. I spoke to a man — so fearful that he asked me to refer to him as "A Person Who Works There" — who told me that cigarettes at Kleppers cost "$1.32, $1.39 with tax."

Knowing they wanted to talk, I called back station No. 1. I asked for the manager, and the man on the telephone said proudly "I'm him." He then told me that company policy set cigarette prices, thus negating any cigarette price war or conspiracy.

Doing my best Sam Donaldson, I tried to sneak in one last question. "What is your name, sir?" Some higher-ups from Kleppers must have walked into the room, because he hung up.

"What unmerciful things do they do to their employees?" I screamed as I slammed the receiver into its cradle. Next I called the guy who does the talking for the Texaco station. But he didn't want to talk about the situation on the record.

Like all the great reporters, I never go off the record. I made an exception in this case — because I'm a smoker first and a reporter second — so let's just say that from now on I will buy my cigarettes at Texaco.

Next I interviewed a smoker. He asked not to be identified because "I'm listed on my health insurance as a non-smoker and if they find out — and they will find out ...." I'll call him Dick. A smoker with a healthy one-pack-a-day habit, Dick often spends up to $15 a week on cigarettes when he is reading the paranoid novels of Don Delillo and Thomas Pynchon.

After I told him the fruits of my investigation, his thoughts flowed freely.

"I think the Trilateral Commission is behind it, trying to thwart the Turkish and South American tobacco industries," he said. "What we see here in Manhattan is the tip of the iceberg."

"In the near future, tobacco will be cheap and plentiful. It will return as a coffee table staple," he said, then mumbled something about humidors.

"That or it's an incidious plot by the Russians to undermine our health and the natural force of American will, much like the British did to the Chinese in the Opium Wars."

At the end of our telephone conversation, I noticed a buzzing sound on my phone. "It couldn't be," I thought, sounding as one K-State student senator put it, like a "liberal, radical bullshit" person. Needing to relax, I walked out to my front porch to smoke a cigaratte.

As I exhaled the first puff, I noticed them. Two dorks in matching blue suits, aviator glasses and ROTC haircuts were parked one-half block away in a four-door, grey Buick. And they were watching me!

Already they — and it doesn't matter who "they" are as long as I believe "they" exist — were on to me.

I refuse to let them do this to me. I am not another Karen Silkwood. I am not another Sakarov. I am not another Nelson Mandella. I will fight back the only way I know how.

I will make posters. I will set up a table at the Union. Maybe I'll even sponsor a rock concert. I will not be railroaded.

Need new uniforms

Editor,

Congratulations to the Student Senate for financing at least part of the cost for the acquisition of marching band uniforms.

It seems only fair that if the football team can afford to buy uniforms every other year, that the marching band should be able to have new uniforms at least once every 20 years.

Thank you for helping to put the "Pride" back in the "Pride of Wildcat Land."

Evolution belief

Editor,

When I was taught phsyics here on campus and in high school, I was taught that energy can neither be created nor destroyed.

Anyone familiar with Albert Einstein's famous equation, E=mc2, knows that matter is a slowed-down form of energy.

Therefore, matter cannot be created. Therefore, I believe in evolution.

Forcing beliefs

Editor,

The issue of teaching creationism in our schools under the guise of science is the effort of a few fundamentalist Christians trying to force their specific beliefs on American children. Their efforts are cleverly aimed to take advantage of American ideals such as freedom of speech and equal time for opposing views, but their goals are the exact opposite: everyone should be forced to think as they do.

They argue that creationism should be taught in science courses as an alternative to evolution. The problem is that creationism is not a science but a religious belief. You may believe in creationism, but there is no way to test it as a scientific theory. Indeed, most theologians consider it blasphemy to even suggest that the word of God might be a "theory" or need to be tested.

In a philosophy course, it might be reasonable to consider the relative merits of creation and evolution as theories of the origin of man, but there is no way that creationism can be made part of a science curriculum without gravely insulting both science and religion.

The timing of this fundamentalist onslaught on science education could hardly have been worse for America. At no time in our history has it been so important for our children to become scientifically literate as future progress in agriculture and high technology will be intensely scientific.

We have already lost our world leadership as a net exporter; we cannot afford to lose our place as a leader in new ideas.

Station features 'Into Africa' show

By Laurie Cox
Collegian Reporter

At 11 a.m. every Saturday, African tempos can be heard coming from radios tuned to KSDB-FM. For two years, the radio show "Into Africa" has been programmed for a two-hour slot.

"It came about when a couple of African students approached the (radio and television) advisers with the idea for the show," said Joseph Montgomery, graduate student in journalism and mass communications and operations manager for KSDB.

"They submitted a tape of what they thought the show should sound like and the advisers approved it," Montgomery said. "Since then the show has been hosted by many different announcers."

The current announcers are Robert Guei, graduate student in agronomy; Kouassi Kouakou, graduate student in food science; and Mike Neba, graduate student in agricultural engineering.

"We play 99 percent African music and get a lot of requests during the show," Kouakou said.

"We try to make the show represent contemporary music of the different parts of Africa," Montgomery said.

The music is different from north to south and east to west, Kouakou said. Music from South Africa tends to be political, but most of the other music is culturally based.

"Within our show we broadcast a segment called African File where we tell about news from Africa and its cultural effects," Kouakou said.

He said he has gathered 75 percent of the music used on the show and the other 25 percent belongs to KSDB.

"We wrote 20 letters to record companies and so far have only received two replies," Kouakou said. "The music is quite expensive and we have received discounts from some companies."

The radio station had a picnic April 22 at City Park for the staff of "Into Africa" and members of Black Student Union. About 60 people attended to celebrate the second year for the show, Montgomery said.

"Because of the show's success, it was announced at the picnic that 'Into Africa' will now be one hour longer," Kouakou said.

Starting Saturday, the show will run from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m., he said.

"This will give us a chance to do more on the show," Kouakou said.

Drug war room tracks smugglers

By The Associated Press

MIAMI — A "drug war situation room" unveiled by President Bush last week and one like it in California may be the nation's most sophisticated anti-smuggling weapons yet, but some question whether such high-tech wizardry can do much.

Bush dedicated the Customs Service-Coast Guard interdiction center Thursday during a visit to Miami, where he also addressed top Latin American drug-fighting officials at an international conference.

"Think of this as one of America's drug war situation rooms, as our early warning network against narcotics," Bush said after watching a computer simulation of a drug interdiction in which smugglers were tracked through the skies and seas off Miami and intercepted by jets and speedboats.

The Command, Control, Communications and Intelligence Center, or C3I, is in a squat, peach-colored building southwest of Miami in a field dotted with radar antennas.

Information from a network of land, sea and air radar monitored by the Federal Aviation Administration, Customs, the Coast Guard and the Pentagon will be displayed on a video system.

Specialists will compare radar data with FAA flight plans, field updates and intelligence reports to keep track of up to 5,000 boats and planes across more than 12 million square miles in the eastern United States.

C3I West in Riverside, Calif., has directed air interdiction west of Houston since August.

"My sources within the Defense Department say they don't have anything to match C3I from a technical standpoint. It's a very sophisticated system designed specifically for drug interdiction," said Rep. Glenn English, D-Okla., former chairman of the House subcommittee responsible for overseeing the drug war.

"There's no better way we could spend this $33 million," said Customs Commissioner William von Raab, standing in front of a Customs Blackhawk helicopter outside the center Thursday.

"We were absolutely defenseless in our air borders. Five years ago, you could fly anywhere into the United States and not stand a snowball's chance of getting caught," von Raab said. "Now we are well out in front of the smugglers and we are never going to fall behind again."

Others aren't so confident. They point to longstanding problems such as inter-agency rivalry, a lack of equipment such as radar, planes and boats, and a shortage of intelligence.

Researcher: Many AIDS deaths unreported

By The Associated Press

ATLANTA — One federal health report seemed to suggest many AIDS patients survive for up to eight years after their diagnosis, but a researcher says most presumed survivors have actually died and their deaths were not reported.

A monthly report from the Centers for Disease Control listed 14 adults and two children who were diagnosed with AIDS more than eight years ago and still are not listed among the dead.

If those statistics are an accurate portrayal of AIDS in America, as many as 20 percent of the known patients from the disease's earliest known days — when the number of patients was a fraction of what it is today — are still alive, giving rise to a hope that AIDS is survivable in a number of cases.

But CDC scientists and other AIDS experts acknowledge that most of those early "survivors," along with many others from more recent years, probably have died, their deaths unreported to the federal government. But at least some people are living for five years or more and have been confirmed to have the disease.

"People who are not listed as dead are not necessarily alive," said Dr. Ann Hardy, who spearheaded a CDC study "looking at these people. Are they really alive? Did they really have AIDS?"

Hardy, who has since transferred to the National Center for Health Statistics, said her study managed to track down at least some information on 780 people who, by statistical count, seemed to have survived AIDS since being diagnosed in 1983 or before.

In fact, the CDC study confirmed that 475, or 61 percent, of those 780 presumed survivors had indeed died, but local health officials had not reported their deaths to the federal government.

An additional 186, or 24 percent, "are lost to follow-up," she said. "What we would probably guess is that a good proportion are dead, but they went out of the country, or to another state, and the local health departments lost track of them."

The remaining 119 pre-1984 AIDS patients were still alive at the time of the study, which was conducted in 1987-88. Researchers tried to have those patients tested to confirm that they actually had AIDS; since AIDS tests did not come into use until the mid-1980s, many early AIDS diagnoses, based on symptoms alone, may be wrong, they reasoned.

Commission seeking ideas for use of old train station

By Kevin Kramer
Staff Writer

The future of the abandoned Union Pacific station near downtown Manhattan is still uncertain.

"The reason why nothing has been done to the station is that it still belongs to Union Pacific," said Bruce McCallum, director of Public Works for the city of Manhattan. "The transfer of ownership is in the transfer process between Union Pacific and the city of Manhattan."

The process of transfering ownership has been in the works for two years, he said. The station building and 12 acres of land are involved in the transfer.

"The transfer is actually a swap of land between Union Pacific and the city," McCallum said. This swap is a result of the building of the southern artery — Fort Riley Boulevard — and the moving of the Union Pacific tracks.

"The paperwork process involved with the transfer is the key factor of when the city will gain ownership of the station and adjacent land."

Mayor Kent Glasscock said the city does not have any plans for the station. "We are very open to ideas for its appropriate use," he said.

The city would like to preserve the historical state of the station building and is willing to look at workable solutions, he said. The city has already received numerous telephone calls and letters from persons in the community about doing something with the station.

"We hope to locate funding through the National Historical Preservation Trust Fund for rehabilitation of the building and to possibly make the space available for meetings," Glasscock said.

This would channel funds into Manhattan for local use and stabilize a historical treasure for the community, he said.

"The reason for the possibility of converting the space into a meeting area is that the city's administrative building is too small," Glasscock said. "I have suggested that City Commission vacate its existing chamber space and relocate to another public space. This would open space in the current administrative building for expansion of city offices."

The City Commission has been authorized to seek proposals of what to do with the station, he said. But it does not have the power to make plans for its use until the city gains ownership of the building and property.

The Union Pacific train station sits abandoned downtown near the Manhattan Town Center mall, its future use undetermined. Mayor Kent Glasscock suggested that the station be used as a meeting place.

Boston Harbor cleaner

Officials cite Bush for withholding funds

By The Associated Press

BOSTON — Boston Harbor is getting cleaner, but state officials say that's in spite of foot-dragging by the man who made its filth famous: George Bush.

Bush sailed in during the presidential campaign last September and accused Gov. Michael Dukakis of neglecting an important environmental issue in his own state.

Now, the governor and his top environmental aides are wondering when President Bush will put his money where his mouth was. They want the $59 million recommended for the harbor cleanup by Congress but deleted from Bush's budget.

"It's hypocritical of the president to come to New England in the heat of a campaign and fault the man who began the harbor cleanup for not doing enough and then, once safely ensconsed in the White House, to pull the money off the table," complained John DeVillars, state environmental secretary.

Bush last fall staged a bold raid into Dukakis territory aboard a boat and accused Dukakis of delays that left the harbor "dirtier and dirtier." The governor and his supporters scrambled to line up testimonials about his efforts in 1984 to create the water authority and give it the clout to end the pollution. But as often happened in the campaign, Dukakis was put on the defensive.

By all accounts, the harbor is finally getting cleaner after 350 years of abuse, and decisions have been made on where to locate a new $6.1 billion sewage treatment plant, the biggest public works project in the region's history.

Since February, the agency responsible for the cleanup, the Massachusetts Water Resources Authority, has eliminated discharge of "floating scum," the grease, solids and buoyant plastics that figured in a Bush campaign commercial.

"Thousands of gallons a day were being discharged for the past hundred years. That has stopped for the first time in history," said Paul Levy, head of the agency.

The federal judge overseeing the cleanup is satisfied with the pace, and even the Republican regional administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, Michael Deland, agrees. "Overall, I am delighted with the progress and am optimistic the dates are going to be met," he said.

Still, the harbor water is so foul that according to Levy, if you scoop up a bucketful and pour it back in, you would be violating the Clean Water Act.

Without federal funds, the full cost of the cleanup falls on the water authority's 2.5 million customers, who have seen water and sewer bills rising by 20 percent a year.

"I think the thing that concerns us particularly is, after all the talk about Boston Harbor, the president eliminated funds the Congress had already appropriated for the harbor," Dukakis said in an interview last week.

Deland defended the president's budget decision, citing the deficit and claiming that Massachusetts congressmen were divided over whether to release the money because they cannot agree on where to put a sludge processing plant.

"In my view, from a national perspective, given the deficit situation, one has to raise a question, why a bonus for Boston?" Deland said. Besides, he argued, Massachusetts could have applied for aid years ago when federal funds were plentiful but chose to seek a pollution waiver instead.

Bush, meanwhile, has become enmeshed in a pollution controversy of his own — the Alaskan oil spill. Dukakis declined to comment on the president's response to the spill, but top aides note bitterly that Bush — who said "I am an environmentalist" during the campaign — hesitated in committing federal resources.

"I'm sure these are all oversights," Levy said sarcastically. "But some of us are struck by the inconsistency."

'Appearance eyeglasses' change looks of wearers

By Bryan Ackley
Collegian Reporter

Eye to eye contact has always been an important form of nonverbal communication, but during the 1990s, what people see may not be what they get.

Eyeglass frame styles have not changed much during the past 10 years, but consumer demands have, said Arlis Wickstrum, manager of Royal Optical.

"A lot of students are buying appearance glasses," Wickstrum said.

"They say they want to wear them in front of their professors or in the library because they think these glasses make them look smart or something," she said.

Prescriptions are not necessary to purchase appearance eyeglasses. However, she said she recommends that customers at least purchase scratch-resistant lenses and an ultraviolet light shield. The ultraviolet shield helps to reduce eyestrain.

"High school kids don't buy (appearance glasses) too often, because their parents don't want to spend that much money unless they have to," she said.

Jeff Gabel, sophomore in environmental design, said he decided to purchase "John Lennon"-style frames because he became bored with the ones he was wearing.

"I wanted to break the monotony," Gabel said.

"People tell me I look more sophisticated now," he said. "Someone even told me I look like a doctor."

Gabel, who wears prescription lenses, said he would prefer to wear contact lenses but cannot because his eyes are too sensitive.

He said he did not give much consideration to comfort or practicality when he purchased these frames.

"The only thing that mattered was how they looked," Gabel said. "Glasses are like a part of your face, so they become as important as how you might keep your beard or mustache."

Jon Hennebold, graduate student in biology, said he hopes people don't assume he's intelligent or sophisticated simply because of the style of frames he wears.

"People treat me the same whether I'm wearing my glasses or not," he said.

Hennebold said he disagrees with others who theorize that people who don't need prescription lenses purchase appearance eyeglasses simply for the "bookworm" look.

He said eyeglass wearers have to give consideration to how eyeglasses blend with the overall appearance of their face before they can begin to create a specific look.

Hennebold attributes his need for prescription lenses to the amount of time he spends reading. However, he said he plans to change to contact lenses because his eyeglasses tend to be a nuisance.

Special colored contact lenses are available for people desiring to take the illusion a step further.

Varsity beats alumni in scrimmage, 42-9

Walk-on transfer stars for Wildcats

By The Collegian Staff

After Saturday's varsity/alumni football scrimmage at KSU Stadium, the question most fans were asking was, "Who's this Richard Boyd guy?"

Well, they should know by now that he's a 5-foot-5½ walk-on transfer from Riverside (Calif.) Junior College, who wasn't even listed on the spring roster. He is now and will be the No. 1 tailback when fall practice begins.

Boyd earned that distinction Saturday by rushing for 122 yards and two touchdowns on 11 carries to help the varsity to a 42-9 victory against the alumni.

He got the chance to see more action Saturday with No. 1 tailback Antoine Dulan on the sidelines nursing a shoulder injury, which he suffered last week.

"Richard is a hard guy to find. He is a walk-on who works extremely hard and is a team player," K-State coach Bill Snyder said. "He's a tough little guy. The kind of guy the Kansas State program should be all about.

"He runs north and south very well and he has some quickness. He's had a good spring."

Boyd got the varsity off to a quick start with a 42-yard touchdown burst to put the on the board with just 1:24 having ticked off the clock. His other score was a 16-yard run which also came in the first period.

By the time the first quarter had ended, Boyd already had amassed 99 yards on seven carries. He averaged 11.1 yards for the game.

Snyder said the Wildcats accomplished some of the goals they had set in the scrimmage. He also said the format of Saturday's contest was basically like any other game to ensure that the players were learning.

"We made sure they were learning all the time. We did things today because we will have to do them in the fall," Snyder said.

One thing Snyder has been preaching throughout spring drills is for the Wildcats to learn how to not beat themselves could stop from beating themselves once game time came around.

"We are starting to learn how not to beat ourselves," he said. "We held onto the ball better today and didn't give up the big plays."

The battle for the starting quarterback job will continue into the fall, but Carl Straw saw most of the action Saturday.

Straw played most of the first half and finished the day with 49 yards passing, one touchdown and a run for another.

Gary Swim, who came in late in the game, threw for a 44-yard touchdown pass to wide receiver Michael Smith. Matt Garber and Chris Cobb also saw action in the game.

"It's still wide open," Snyder said of the quarterback situation. "Carl came into spring No. 1 and will go into the fall No. 1."

Straw said that even though the game was only against the alumni, the victory was a positive enforcement for the team.

"It was a big plus because we had high spirits about doing what we had to do," he said. "Its going to make us work harder over the summer. We know there is still a light at the end of the tunnel."

The alumni had not scored before in the previous two scrimmages, but a 33-yard field goal by Mark Porter stopped the scoring drought. The alumni scored a touchdown in the fourth quarter when Stan Weber completed a five-yard pass to Jerry Lawson. The completion topped an impressive 11-play, 63-yard drive.

Snyder seemed excited about the first half of football his team played, but thought his team let down a little in the second half, which included the alumni's lone touchdown.

"We are excited about the intangibles and basically with first half, but a half doesn't make a game," Snyder said. "We have to be tough enough to put someone away. We have to understand how to play 60 minutes of quality football."

Golfers struggle in tournament

From Staff and Wire Reports

DEKALB, Ill. — The Wildcat men were disappointed with their finish Saturday at the Midwestern Invitational K-State, golf coach Russ Bunker said.

K-State shot a three-round total of 901 on the Kishwaukee Country Club course to finish ninth in the 15-team tournament.

"The guys were pretty disappointed because they know they can do better," Bunker said. "I have mixed emotions. We did beat some good schools, but I think we can do a little better."

Bunker said poor performances on two holes during Friday's last round might have cost the 'Cats three places in the team scoring.

"That cost us dearly," he said. "It was just like giving the entire field 10 shots."

K-State was led by Jeff Sedorcek, who shot a 219 with rounds of 74-75-70. That score was good enough to put Sedorcek in 15th place overall.

Sedorcek was followed by Troy Keller (77-74-77) and Todd Fowler (76-74-77), who both had 228. Fowler was playing on his home course. He works at Kishwaukee during the summer.

Brett Vuillemin follwed with a 232 (76-77-79) and Brad Stephans was next at 234 (79-82-73).

Ohio State won the team title with a score of 854, while Illinois finished second at 858.

Speer finishes 5th at Drake Relays

By Chris Hays
Sports Editor

High jumper Brad Speer highlighted this weekend's busy schedule for the K-State track teams.

Speer finished fifth in his event at the Drake Relays, jumping a season-best 7-2½. Speer was one of the few squad members who made the trip to Des Moines, Iowa; others were in attendance at the Southwestern College Relays and at the Penn Relays in Philadephia.

At Drake, K-State had some disappointing performances, but Coach John Capriotti said he expected a slight letdown after so many individuals participated in last week's KU Relays.

"A lot of people were flat coming off such a big meet at KU and it's hard to come back and have another big meet," he said. "We still had some good performances, though."

One of those performances was turned in by Connie Teaberry in the high jump. Teaberry placed third, going 5-9¾. In addition, Charles Armstead had a personal best in the long jump with a leap of 24-11¼ to place sixth.

Kim Kilpatrick got a taste of her future competition at the NCAA Outdoor Championships. Kilpatrick finished fifth behind one of the fastest fields in the 100-meter hurdles she has encountered this season. This year's NCAA indoor champion Tananjalyn Stanley of Louisiana State took first with a time of 13.05 seconds. Kilpatrick, who was named co-MVP at the KU Repays, ran one of her slower times of the season at 13.85.

"She's flat after running all those races at KU. It's not unusual for anyone who runs and wins that many races. I'm not discouraged about her at all," Capriotti said.

In the women's discus, K-State's Angie Miller and Amy Dryer finished fourth and 10th, respectively. Miller had a throw of 154-8 and Dryer threw 146-0.

At Soutwestern, K-State was paced by Dan O'Mara, who finished first in the shot put and discus. In the shot, O'Mara had a toss of 56-0, while throwing 184-5 in the discus.

"A lot of people were flat coming off such a big meet at KU and it's hard to come back and have another big meet."
— John Capriotti track coach

Other first-place finishers for K-State were: Todd Eggers, with a time of 3:57.85 minutes in the 1,500 meters; Kim Richeson, in both the long jump and triple jump with leaps of 18-5 and 38-1, respectively; Greta Semsroth, with a toss of 150-6 in the javelin; Karen McGaughey, with a time of 15.4 in the 100 hurdles; Marge Eddy, with a time of 10:06.26 in the 3,000 meters; Janet Treiber, with a time of 4:34.54 in the 1,500 meters; and Angie Barry, with a time of 17:24.0 in the 5,000 meters.

At the Penn Relays, Jan Jonsson had a personal best time in the 5,000 meters, placing 11th at 14:05.20. David Warders then duplicated Jonsson, establishing a personal best in the 10,000 meters with a time 29:32.02.

"I was really pleased with those guys," Capriotti said. "They did an extremely good job and they are only sophomores. That is the fastest times we've had for sophomores."

The two then joined the 4x1500-meter relay team with Brian Zwahlen and Pat Hessini to finish seventh with a time of 15:39.6.

Of Mizzou, strange logos, and missing Wildcats

Svoboda on Sports

DAVID SVOBODA
Sports Columnist

Some parting shots as I prepare to begin that 16-page term paper due Thursday that I haven't even started.

■ The basketball program at the University of Missouri is likely to get a slap on the hands, in relative terms, when the National Collegiate Athletic Association announces the sanctions levied as a result of its investigation into the wrongdoings in the Tiger program.

Mizzou, unlike the University of Kansas, has no prior record of NCAA violations in major sports, and will likely get off quite a bit easier than did the Jayhawk basketball program.

That's unfortunate. Rules and precedents like the ones in place do nothing but encourage schools on the borderline of success to cheat to get there if they haven't already been caught doing so.

And in today's high-pressure world of collegiate athletics, a few coaches may take those shortcuts, while athletic directors look the other way, if their programs have been squeaky clean up until then. That's disgraceful. If you do the crime, you should do the time. It's that simple.

■ I join a few K-State fans who have already expressed their dislike of the new Wildcat football logo, though I think it looks more like the logo of the Washington State program than that of Iowa. For those of you who followed the old United States Football League, take a look at the logo of the Michigan Panthers and see if you don't see a resemblance to what's represented here. I bet you will.

K-State, Washington State and Iowa logos.

If this logo is purple on a gray helmet, virtually no one in the stands is going to figure out what it is. It's going to look like a jagged purple blob. Either outline it in white so it can be seen, or make the helmets as big as billboards. That's the only way this logo will work with this color scheme.

■ And while we're on the subject of "where's the Wildcat," let's talk about another of my pet peeves for 1988-89 — the lack of a Wildcat on the new basketball floor in Bramlage Coliseum.

If I'm not mistaken, we attend Kansas State University, and our mascot is the Wildcat. The words "Kansas State" appear on the court twice, and that's great. It gives great exposure to the school. But what about the Wildcat?

I realize the basketball with the cursive "Cats" running through the middle has been adopted as the men's basketball team's logo, but have the women adopted that logo? I don't remember that happening.

And are the "Cats" we're cheering on Wildcats, Alley Cats, Bobcats, Tiger Cats (as in the Canadian Football League), or some other type of feline? The same rationale that was used in choosing the new football logo — wanting a distinctive "Wild"cat — should be used in returning a Wildcat to the basketball floor.

■ The Royals are off to the best start in the club's history, but they're going to have to attempt to keep the streak alive without George Brett, who tore a ligament in his knee Saturday night and will miss four to six weeks.

It's really vital now that Bo Jackson, who is the major league leader in homers, and Danny Tartabull, who drove in the tying and winning runs Saturday night after Brett's early exit, assume the mantle of leadership and carry the team for a time.

Sure, the Royals have veterans Frank White and Willie Wilson who are capable of being the clubhouse captains in Brett's absence, but it's Jackson and Tartabull who will likely have to pick up Brett's offensive production.

If they can do it, and the Royals are within eight games of first when Brett returns in early to mid-June, look for Kansas City to give Oakland all it can handle down the stretch. If the team folds its tent without Brett, kiss another year goodbye.

And with that, we kiss another academic year goodbye, and kiss another column goodbye as well.

To steal a phrase from ESPN's Chris Berman, we're "back, back, back, back, back, back, back, gone!"

Tennis team has best Big 8 finish ever

By Chris Hays
Sports Editor

K-State tennis coach Steve Bietau heard over the public address system at the Big Eight tennis tournament what he had been waiting five years to hear.

K-State has never had any singles or doubles players advance past the second round at the tourney. However, on Saturday Bietau finally got what he was waiting for when Valerie Rive advanced to the finals at No. 4 singles. Rive then teamed with Marijke Nel at No. 2 doubles to also advance to Sunday's final at the Oklahoma City All Sports Complex.

"It was kind of neat when it came over from the PA announcer who the finalists were going to be," Bietau said. "I had been waiting five years to hear that and it was just a great feeling."

K-State finished the tourney in fourth place with 78 points, the highest finish ever for a Wildcat squad.

"It was a wonderful finish to a great year," Bietau said. "We had two major goals at the beginning of the season and they were to be playing our best at the Big Eight tournament and to finish in the upper division and we did that."

Bietau was so excited, he didn't even know how many points K-State had scored when asked via telephone following Sunday's final match.

"Oh, boy ... all I know is that we finished one point ahead of Nebraska," he said. "Nebraska was the closest team to us and they played well."

Oklahoma State won the tourney for the ninth consecutive year with 130 points; Oklahoma had 88; Kansas, 87; K-State, 78; Nebraska, 77; Colorado, 63; Iowa State, 44; and Missouri 9.

In Rive's finals match, she could not overcome a tough opponent in Oklahoma State's Jackie Booth. Booth won the match in two sets, 6-1, 6-1.

Rive, with Nel, ran into Booth again, who was paired with Danielle Jones, in the No. 2 doubles championship match. The K-State duo gave the Cowgirls a tough two sets but wound up on the losing end, 6-4, 6-4.

"It's such a great feeling for them," Bietau said of Nel and Rive advancing to the finals.

The fourth and fifth place team standings came down to the final match Sunday. In the No. 3 doubles third place match, K-State had Annika Emtell and Thresa Burcham pitted against Nebraska's Rachel Collins and Leslie Sue Jones. The winner's team would finish in fourth place.

"It came down to that match. The whole thing was tied and they won it for us," Bietau said. The K-State duo took the match 7-6, 4-6, 6-3.

It was a wonderful way to cap a great day for Emtell, the Wildcats only senior, Bietau said.

Emtell had already gone through a three-hour struggle in the third-place match at No. 6 singles with Colorado's Wendi Kaplan. Emtell pulled off the victory 5-7, 7-5, 6-3.

"She just had an incredible afternoon," Bietau said. "She was even down 4-0 in her second set and came back to win it."

At No. 1 singles, Nel finished in fifth place by defeating Kathrin Edelkotter in straight sets, 7-6, 7-6; Helen Schildknecht finished in sixth place at No. 2 singles after losing to Renee Marshall of Colorado, 6-4, 6-4; Sara Hancock finished in fourth place at No. 3 singles by losing to Doneta Holmen of Nebraska, 6-3, 6-2; and Burcham finished fourth at No. 5 singles with a third-place match loss to Debbie Ridgley of Oklahoma, 6-4, 6-1.

At K-State's other doubles, Hancock and Schildknecht lost to Oklahoma's Mars all and Stacey Bullman, 4-6, 6-3, 6-3.

Royals have historic April

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — There are times when the key to winning is heroic resistance to temptation, John Wathan concluded Sunday.

"I was tempted, but I think I wound up doing the right thing," the Kansas City manager said after the Royals beat Milwaukee 2-0 for a three-game sweep.

Floyd Bannister, trying for his 17th career shutout, took a three-hitter into the ninth but walked Rob Deer with one out.

Wathan knew Bannister wanted to finish. But he had Steve Farr, perfect in four save situations, warm in the bullpen.

"I was really tempted. But that was the longest Floyd had gone in a while," Wathan said.

After a short discussion, Farr was summoned and, after walking Glenn Braggs, he retired Cecil Felder and Joey Meyer, giving the Royals the sweep.

Bannister wasn't about to second-guess his boss.

"I wanted to stay in, sure, but I was getting a little tired," he said. "My pitches weren't quite as effective as they had been. And Steve's been doing a good job. You've got to go with percentages."

Bannister, 3-0, was 0-3 against the Brewers last year and is 6-11 for his career. The left-hander struck out one and walked three.

Milwaukee, which hit 10 homers and scored 27 runs in a sweep of Minnesota its previous three games, managed only four runs in three games against the Royals.

"If we don't start swinging the bats better, we had better pitch and defend better," Milwaukee manager Tom Trebelhorn said. "We don't do that, we'd better hope it's 0-0 and we'll play forever."

Mike Birkbeck, 0-2, allowed nine hits over eight innings, striking out three in his first complete game since May 17, 1987, also against Kansas City. Those are his only complete games in 41 major-league starts.

Kansas City, 16-8, set a club record for April victories, topping its 14-8 record in 1978. The Royals have won eight of their last nine.

Willie Wilson singled to open the first, stole second and took third when catcher Charlie O'Brien's throw sailed into center field. After Kevin Seitzer struck out, Jim Eisenreich singled to score Wilson.

Bill Buckner, subbing for the injured George Brett at first base, opened the second inning with a double and was sacrificed to third by Bob Boone. Brad Wellman then scored him with an infield out.

'Cats lose 2 of 3 on road

From Staff and Wire Reports

Sunday night, K-State was defeated by Arkansas, 9-4, at Fayetteville in non-conference baseball action. The Wildcats had split a two-game weekend series with Oral Roberts University in Tulsa, Okla., Friday and Saturday, by scores of 13-5 and 2-9. Here are the game summaries:

Sunday

At Arkansas, starting pitcher Cole Hyson went seven innings and gave up only four hits to lead the Razorbacks to a 9-4 win over K-State.

The Wildcats scored first as leadoff man Sean Collins walked to start the game and scored on a Russ Ringgenberg grounder to third.

Arkansas scored a pair of runs in its first two innings and added three in the third to take early control of the game.

Bubba Carpenter singled in the bottom of the first for Arkansas to score Scott Pose. Tim Thomas walked and later scored on a fielding error by Collins in center field. Pose also singled in a run in the second, and Thomas added an RBI groundout to give the Razorbacks a 4-1 lead.

Arkansas took a lead 7-2 in the third and never relinquished.

Hyson, 6-2, allowed four hits, struck out seven and walked four.

Friday

The K-State bats came to life and bashed out 15 hits to back the pitching of Bill Schafer, as the Wildcats broke a five game losing streak, downing ORU, 13-5.

Ringgenberg, Mike Rosenboom and Kevin Kaufman had three hits each to lead the K-State attack. Rosenboom had five RBI and delivered a three-run double in the seventh inning to secure the game for the 'Cats. Ringgenberg stole two bases to put his school record total for the season at 33.

Schafer, now 5-3, went seven innings, striking out seven ORU hitters. He allowed seven hits and had a no-hitter going into the fourth.

Saturday

One bad inning was bad enough to cost K-State a two-game sweep of its series with Oral Roberts Saturday. The Titans broke open a 2-2 tie in the fifth inning, scoring seven runs, four after two outs, and K-State never threatened from there, losing 9-2.

The Wildcats stranded 11 baserunners.

K-State starter David Christensen went 4⅔ innings in seeing his record drop to 1-1 on the year. He allowed four hits and five earned runs.

Bill Barnard had two hits to lead the Wildcats' attack. Oral Roberts had two home runs in the contest.

K-State drops to 26-19 on the year and will face Arkansas again today in a single game beginning at 2 p.m. The Wildcats then return home to open a 10-game homestand at Frank Myers Field against Nebraska.

Heads up

A softball deflects off the glove of Jeff Leiszler of the Mudrakers after he tried to make a catch in intramural playoff action against Charlie's Bar Sunday. Charlie's won, 10-6, and will play AWACs at 6:30 tonight for the Independent Division championship.

Brett placed on DL

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — First baseman George Brett will be sidelined at least a month with a partially torn ligament in his right knee, the Kansas City Royals said Sunday.

"There will be no surgery, and that's good news," Manager John Wathan said. "They think it will heal just fine. He can't do anything for two weeks, and then he'll start rehabilitation. We're thinking he'll be out a minimum of four weeks and probably a maximum of six."

Brett, 35, underwent an MRI (magnetic resonance imaging) on Sunday.

An 11-time All-Star, he was put on the 21-day disabled list after suffering the injury in the first inning Saturday night against Milwaukee. After fielding a single in shallow right field, he turned to throw back to the infield and caught a spike in the artificial turf.

A two-time American League batting champion, his .390 average in 1980 is the highest in the major leagues since Ted Williams hit .407 in 1941. He was hitting .253 so far this year.

Luis de los Santos was recalled from Omaha, where he was hitting .342 with 14 RBIs.

Ironicaly, it was against Milwaukee on May 15, 1987, in Kansas City when Brett suffered what was described as a slight ligament tear in the same knee and missed 24 games.

"This is not to say we're not going to miss him, but everybody feels we're a stronger ballclub and we can make do 'til he gets back," Wathan said. "In the old days, when he got hurt everybody's shoulders would droop and we'd think, 'How are we going to win?'"

"He's like a time bomb," said outfielder Danny Tartabull, who drove in the tying and winning run Saturday night. "He's always ready to break out. He might have erupted today, got five hits, and carried this club for the next month."

Sports Briefly

Umps substitute for KC tilt

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Fill-in umpire Tim Tschida was flown into Kansas City Sunday when two regular umps had to leave town.

Mark Johnson injured a knee while working behind the plate on Saturday night, the Kansas City Royals said. In addition, Dave Phillips left for St. Louis.

"Phillips had to attend a personal matter, but I don't think it's anything serious," said Dean Vogelaar, the Royals' vice president for public relations."

Vogelaar said it was not known exactly how Johnson hurt his knee.

"He's gone to his folks' home in Louisville," Vogelaar said.

Hoch wins Las Vegas tourney

LAS VEGAS — Scott Hoch, who lost the Masters in a playoff earlier this month, found a measure of redemption Sunday when he dropped an 8-foot birdie putt on the fifth playoff hole and beat Robert Wrenn for the title in the Las Vegas Invitational.

Hoch, who missed a short par putt three weeks ago that would have won him the first of golf's major tournaments for the year, struggled through the five extra holes Sunday before claiming the top prize of $225,000.

Postlewait earns LPGA victory

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Kathy Postlewait shot a final round 3-under-par 69 Sunday to post a one-stroke victory over Val Skinner in the $425,000 LPGA Sara Lee Classic.

The victory was the fourth title in 15 years on the LPGA tour for Postelwait, of Casselberry, Fla. She collected a first-place check of $63,750, tops on the tour for a 54-hole tournament.

One-shot win takes legends

AUSTIN, Texas — Al Geiberger and Harold Henning birdied the final three holes on Sunday to take a one-shot victory over Bob Charles and Bruce Devlin in the $650,000 Legends of Golf with a record-tying 29-under-par total.

Their 72-hole score of 251 tied the record set in 1987 by Orville Moody and Bruce Crampton, and earned the winners $120,000.

Lakers, Pistons, Sonics lead 2-0

By The Associated Press

The Los Angeles Lakers, Cleveland, Detroit and Seattle each picked up victories in Sunday's NBA playoff action. Here is a brief recap:

Lakers 113, Blazers 105

In Inglewood, Calif., Magic Johnson scored 35 points, 20 as Los Angeles took control in the first half, and had 12 assists as the two-time defending NBA champion Lakers beat Portland 113-105.

The Lakers lead the best-of-5 series two games to none and can advance to the second round with a victory Wednesday night at Portland.

James Worthy added 18 points for the Lakers, while Mychal Thompson had 15 and Kareem Abdul-Jabbar 13.

Clyde Drexler led the Trail Blazers with 28 points despite missing most of the first quarter after he quickly drew his third personal foul. Terry Porter and Jerome Kersey had 21 points each.

Pistons 102, Celtics 95

In Auburn Hills, Mich., Isiah Thomas, celebrating his 28th birthday, scored 14 of his 26 points in the third quarter and the Detroit Pistons overcame a nine-point deficit to beat the Boston Celtics 102-95 to take a 2-0 lead in their first-round NBA playoff series.

The best-of-5 series resumes Tuesday at the Boston Garden.

Boston, which led by as many as nine points in the third quarter, started the fourth quarter with an 82-81 lead. But a 3-pointer by Mark Aguirre gave Detroit an 88-86 lead with 9:50 remaining and the Pistons never relinquished it.

Aguirre scored 21 points for Detroit and Johnson had 18.

Parish led Boston with 25, Lewis had 21 and Shaw 20.

Cavaliers 96, Bulls 88

In Richfield, Ohio, Ron Harper outscored Michael Jordan 31-30, and Larry Nance scored eight points during a 13-6 third-quarter flurry as the Cleveland Cavaliers beat the Chicago Bulls 96-88.

The best-of-five series, tied 1-1, moves to Chicago for two games beginning Wednesday, with the fifth game, if needed, to be played at Cleveland on Sunday.

Harper scored 21 points in the first half, a team playoff record, and put the Cavaliers ahead 49-47 at halftime on a driving layup with two seconds left.

Nance scored 16 and Mark Price, returning from a pulled groin that had sidelined him since April 18, had 15.

Scottie Pippen scored 18 for the Bulls.

SuperSonics 109, Rockets 97

In Seattle, Alton Lister and Xavier McDaniel each scored 20 points and the Seattle SuperSonics broke open a close game in the final quarter to beat the Houston Rockets 109-97.

The Sonics can clinch the best-of-5 series Wednesday night in Houston.

With Lister scoring eight points in the last quarter, Seattle broke away after leading 75-73 going into the period.

The Sonics' win came despite a 30-point, 12-rebound, 10-dunk performance by the Rockets' Akeem Olajuwon.

Sedale Threatt came off the bench in relief of Nate McMillan to spark the Sonics at point guard in the fourth quarter.

Michael Cage, benched in the last 10 games of the regular season when the Sonics went to McDaniel as a starting forward, added 16 points on 7-for-8 shooting.

Flyers prepare for Wales Conference finals

By The Associated Press

PITTSBURGH — About a half-hour after the game ended, several Pittsburgh Penguins' employees laboriously popped hundreds of black and gold balloons that were to have been part of the Patrick Division playoff-clinching celebration.

But the guy who really burst the Penguins' bubble was Philadelphia Flyers substitute goaltender Ken Wregget, who will have to do the same in the Wales Conference finals against Montreal — at least in Monday night's opening game at the Forum.

Wregget, a last-minute substitution for the injured Ron Hextall, stopped 39 shots as the Flyers rallied from a game down to beat the Penguins 4-1 Saturday night and win the seventh game of the Patrick Division finals.

"I've never seen this situation occur," Philadelphia coach Paul Holmgren said of Wregget, obtained from Toronto late in the season. "Ken's the reason we came out with the win. We haven't really seen him in game situations, but he works extremely hard in practice. I felt in the middle of the Washington series that if anything happened, he'd be able to step in."

Montreal, however, is a different matter.

The Canadiens finished with 115 regular-season points, second best in the league and 37 more than the Flyers. They are 8-1 in two playoff series and are well-rested, having clinched their series against Boston last Tuesday.

But Holmgren, whose team beat Washington in six games before their seven-game victory over Pittsburgh, isn't worried.

"If we play the same way we have for the last eight wins, we'll be fine," he said. "I think we match up fairly well with them, but that's alright."

And center Mike Bullard added: "We're underdogs, no doubt about that. They were the second-best team in the NHL in the regular season. Nobody really expects that much from us so maybe we can sneak up on them. We can win if we show the character."

"If you're going to win the Stanley Cup, you have to win games like this," Wregget said. "You can't let them get the best of you."

In the Campbell Conference finals, the Calgary Flames, the team that knocked Wayne Gretzky and the Los Angeles Kings from the playoffs in four straight games, will take on the Chicago Blackhawks, the playoffs' surprise team. The series opens Tuesday night in Calgary.

Gunman injures 14 in shooting spree

By The Associated Press

WHITLEY BAY, England — A man dressed all in black and armed with a shotgun went on a 15-minute shooting spree Sunday in a northeastern coastal town, killing one man and injuring 14 people before being arrested, officials said.

Police were questioning the man to determine the motive for his rampage in Monkseaton, about a mile from the Whitley Bay seaside resort and 250 miles northeast of London.

The gunman, who was not identified, roamed the streets shooting at anyone he saw, including one person in a car, another on a bicycle, one in a garden and one outside a church, said a spokesman for a local ambulance service.

"There must have been about 12 different locations given where this man had gone round," said Ken Heads, superintendent of the Northumbria ambulance service. "He was having a go at any person he met."

Witnesses said the gunman was dressed all in black, with dark sunglasses and his hair in a pony tail. They said he wore an ammunition belt around his waist and prowled the streets for 15 minutes, pausing only to shoot.

Ten-year-old Ryan Boyd told the British Broadcasting Corp. TV News:

"Across there on the corner there was this man ... all dressed in black from head to foot. He started walking around here with the gun. He was all sturdy, rigid. He wasn't frightened or anything, he was just running around with his gun from side to side shooting people."

Police later said the man they arrested was a 22-year-old from Whitley Bay. They did not give his name.

After the shooting spree, he drove to a pub, where authorities seized him without any gunfire, police said.

Student Senate tackles issues

Fees, allocations, ethics resolved during semester

By Nancy Prosser
Staff Writer

New student fees, allocations and ethical questions kept Student Senators debating, sometimes into the early morning hours, this semester.

"Senate dealt with some very complex issues this semester," said Todd Johnson, Senate chairman.

Senate, which comprises more than 50 students representing all colleges on campus, met every Thursday night and, during formal allocations, on Tuesdays.

Senate voted to increase the fee for Lafene Student Health Center by $15 for full-time students, and a one-time cost of $25 for part-time students.

Senate also raised the student activity fee by 20 cents to compensate for the Associated Students of Kansas dues increase.

A revised student academic grievance policy was also an issue this semester with both Student and Faculty Senates.

"(Student) Senate pushed for students to be able to be represented by an attorney at academic hearings," Johnson said. "We also encouraged a new policy to expunge academic grievance records of students."

Both formal and special allocations were a big part of Senate's agenda this spring.

"During formal allocations, (Senate) allocated $125,000 to student organizations," Johnson said.

One major allocation was to the K-State Marching Band. Senate allocated $20,000 to the band to pay for new uniforms. The band, which has not had new uniforms for the past 20 years, will also pay part of the cost of new uniforms through its own fundraising efforts.

Senate also dealt with the controversial issue of divestment of student monies in companies that do business in South Africa.

"Divestment was a moral issue. A lot of people were educated about South Africa and the problem of apartheid," said Ira Bolden, chief of staff for student body president. "We also had the chance to hear many non-senators' opinions."

"I feel that we looked at all the aspects of the divestment issue," said Stephanie Haub, business senator.

One of the major issues Senate dealt with this semester was the recurring athletic fee.

Senate voted to send the athletic fee to a student referendum in March. The proposal was voted down because it lacked a two-thirds majority vote in the affirmative needed for approval.

Senate itself then attempted unsuccessfully to pass the fee. The attempt was made because of senators' concerns about the SGA Constitution's voting requirement. A simple majority of the student body did approve the referendum, but it failed because of the constitutional requirement of a two-thirds majority positive vote to pass a referendum if one-third of the student body does not vote.

"The athletic fee will come up again next fall along with the fine arts fee," Johnson said.

"The athletic fee was debated extensively and information about it seemed in abundance to the Senate, as well as the student body," said Todd Giefer, engineering senator.

Giefer also said he supported a unanimous decision by Senate to support the Environmental Action Resolution. The resolution will show Senate's support of a ban on the production and distribution of chlorofluorocarbons.

Navy to retire 3 types of short-range weapons

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Navy has decided to retire three short-range nuclear weapons that account for 5 percent of the total stockpile of U.S. warheads, Navy officials said Sunday.

By 1991, the Navy will retire the ASROC nuclear depth charge, the SUBROC missile and the Terrier missile, a total of 1,100 warheads, according to Navy officers and documents released under the Freedom of Information Act.

The weapons originally were intended to provide a nuclear deterrent against attacks on surface ships by Soviet warships and submarines. But Navy strategists now believe they can protect U.S. ships from other ships by other means and see a greater threat from Backfire and Badger bombers based on the Soviet mainland.

The decision to unilaterally discard the weapons was contained in documents obtained by an independent analyst, William Arkin. It was first reported in Sunday editions of The New York Times and confirmed Sunday by Navy officers who spoke on condition they not be further identified.

It was not clear why the Bush administration chose to take such a major step without public announcement and apparently has not sought to include the weapons in negotiations with the Soviet Union.

The decision was prompted by the realization that the United States has more aircraft carriers and large surface vessels than the Soviet Union, and that such ships are vulnerable to nuclear attack, Navy officers said.

"There is a recognition that if there is a nuclear war at sea, we have got more to lose than the Russians," the Times quoted Vice Admiral Henry C. Mustin, who retired last year after serving as deputy chief of Naval Operations.

"The concept of a nuclear war at sea is a concept whose time has passed," Mustin said in the published report.

Arkin said another reason for the decision appears to be a shift in emphasis by the Navy from short-range weapons to nuclear-tipped Tomahawk cruise missiles. The Tomahawk can fly below enemy radar and strike targets, such as bomber airfields on the Soviet mainland, at ranges up to 1,300 miles.

The Soviet Union has been insisting that the United States agree to limit or ban submarine-launched Tomahawk cruise missiles, but under the Reagan administration the Navy balked. The issue is being considered as part of a strategic review being conducted by the Bush Administration, to be completed by May 10.

The decision to retire the short-range nuclear weapons will not affect strategic ballistic missiles stationed aboard Navy nuclear submarines that form a key part of the U.S. nuclear triad: land, air and sea-based weapons intended to deter a large-scale attack, Navy officers said.

The weapons that are being retired constitute part of the American nuclear arsenal that has received little public attention in the media or on Capitol Hill, compared with the extensive discussions that have occurred on the cruise and ballistic systems.

The ASROC nuclear depth charge, carried aboard U.S. destroyers, cruisers and frigates involved in anti-submarine warfare, has a range of up to 6.2 miles.

The SUBROC missile is carried by attack submarines, and is designed to fly at supersonic speeds, then drop a nuclear charge against enemy submarines.

The Terrier anti-aircraft missile, which entered service in 1962, is fired from surface warships and has a range of up to 21.7 miles, according to Janes Fighting Ships, an independently published military handbook.

Arkin said in a telephone interview that the strategy behind the decision was outlined in the Theater Nuclear Warfare Utilities Study, conducted in January 1988, and supplied to him with significant portions blacked out.

It was not clear whether or how much money the Defense Department will save by retiring the short-range weapons.

NASA repairing space shuttle

By The Associated Press

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — NASA began replacing two faulty fuel-system parts aboard space shuttle Atlantis on Sunday in hope of making another launch attempt as early as Friday.

The launch of the shuttle and its $550 million Magellan Venus probe was scrubbed on Friday only 31 seconds before liftoff because of a power surge on a pump that recirculates liquid hydrogen fuel for one of the shuttle's three main engines.

Engineers later discovered a pinhole leak in a fuel line that carries hydrogen from the external fuel tank to the shuttle.

NASA officials Sunday said they would not set a new launch date until today. But they said liftoff could not occur before Friday afternoon.

Because of the positions of Earth and Venus, there is only a 32-day launch opportunity "window" for sending the Magellan spacecraft toward Venus.

A Post-Graduate Course in Economics, with Credit.

Pre-Approved Credit and $400 Cash Back

At Dick Edwards, we'd like to skip the theory and get to the point. If you're graduating, or have graduated, with a Bachelor's or advanced degree between October 1, 1988 and January 31, 1990, Dick Edwards can improve one of your leading economic indicators: the car you drive. Purchase or lease any eligible new model from stock before December 31, 1989 and receive $400 cash back from Ford Motor Company.
To qualify for pre-approved credit: 1. You must have verifiable employment beginning within 120 days after vehicle purchase at a salary sufficient to cover ordinary living expenses, as well as a car payment. 2. A prior credit history is not necessary, but if you have one, it must be satisfactory.

ize for his remarks about alleged "negative" campaigns conducted by Hochhauser and Hurt against Knopp and Sand.

"For this session to reach a productive conclusion, I advise an immediate change of position on the part of the Republican leadership and urge restoration of funds cut from the Kansas State University portion of (the omnibus)," Barkis wrote.

"I didn't say we ought to punish anybody," Braden said in response.

"The way people have been spending money this session, Bunten didn't feel like we should make up any of the money to Kansas State. Sen. Lana Oleen (a Manhattan Republican) got it in on the Senate floor. When it came over here, the House Appropriations Committee left most of it in, but took out the $441,000.

"Obviously, Rep. Bunten wants to hold the line on spending. He also asked (House Republicans) to remember the vicious campaigns that were conducted against Joe and Ivan last year.

"Frankly, he didn't think we should let (Hochhauser and Hurt) be the people to put the money back in. I agreed with him."

Braden said K-State got "99 percent of its wish list" in last year's budget, "yet the campaigns their opponents ran made it sound like Joe Knopp and Ivan Sand were not supporters of higher education or Kansas State University which, of course, was rubbish."

"Very frankly," Braden added, "there was a lot of anger among Republicans over the type of negative campaign that was conducted against Joe and Ivan. For the Kansas State community, after all they had gotten out of Joe and Ivan, to turn their backs ... it's been very frustrating to members of the Legislature who know how hard they worked for the University.

"It doesn't show a lot of intelligence on the part of the university community to boot out of office the majority leader of the House of Representatives who has purple in his veins.

"It obviously shows the university community doesn't pay a heck of a lot of attention to what goes on down here and was influenced by the negative campaign."

Hurt said she thinks "the people of Manhattan watched the campaigns very carefully, and drew their own conclusions. The campaigns were very honest, and if this attack is on us because they say the campaigns were negative, then so be it."

Hochhauser also said the campaigns were fair, and "for myself, I can absolutely say every statistic I used in the campaign was based on public voting records."

Rod Olsen, chairman of the Manhattan Democrat Party, said Braden was "mistaken in his characterization of the elections.

"I'm concerned about (Braden's) comment on the 'lack of intelligence.' His suggesting that is to show a lack of intelligence on his own part," Olsen said. "It's sad that gamesmanship and vengeance has come into this; it shows what type of leaders there are in the House."

In his letter, Barkis challenged Braden's characterization of the Hochhauser and Hurt campaigns last fall.

"I am familiar with their campaigns and know that they were conducted in a tough, but fair manner and were based upon the public record," Barkis said. "For you to state such an opinion ... constitutes a personal attack on colleagues for whom I hold a high degree of personal affection and professional respect."

Braden said he has gotten to know Hochhauser and Hurt this session, "and we've become friends."

"Frankly," the speaker said, "I thought the ($441,026) amendment would go on the bill. It may well go on in conference. If it does, that's fine with me."

cannot be outshown by anyone in NATO in our reliability."

Thatcher said elimination of short-range nuclear weapons would mean that the "Soviet Union will have achieved its objective of getting land-based nuclear weapons out of Europe. This I believe would be disastrous for us."

Kohl, faced with uncertain election prospects next year, also wants to delay until at least 1992 a decision on modernization and deployment of rockets to replace NATO's aging short-range nuclear arsenal.

what gets built, under a priority formula.

Sen. Bill Morris, R-Wichita, chairman of the Senate Transportation Committee and one of the architects of the plan, said it will provide funding for 16 percent of the highway improvement needs and 20 percent of the bridge replacements needed.

Rep. Herman Dillon, D-Kansas City, who made the motion to return the bill to conference to try to scale down the plan even more, complained that he had tried to get a call of the House to force every House member to vote but Speaker Jim Braden wouldn't recognize him.

Braden decried his protest and the vote sending the highway bill to the governor stood.

The House adjourned shortly after that, to reconvene at 9 a.m. Monday.

The leadership had decided in late afternoon it could not finish the work of the wrapup session Sunday night because of disagreements over funding a prison expansion plan and the omnibus appropriations bill and scheduled the Monday session.

Reps. Rex Crowell, R-Longton, and Rochelle Chronister, R-Neodesha, embraced on the House floor when Braden pounded the gavel.

LaBarge said she did not anticipate any extra revenue from the weekend and no special rates were offered.

"Football season is usually our busiest time," LaBarge said. "A lot of K-State activities definitely bring in the people."

Best Western Continental Inn Manager Dorothy Burgess said, "We've been booked probably a couple of months. A lot of people try to make reservations a year in advance if they know when the (graduation) date will be."

Burgess said she likes people to wait until Jan. 1 to book rooms. People usually start making reservations around the first of the year.

However, she said there would probably be a few rooms because people may cancel the day before or the day of graduation and decide to go home instead. She said that has been the trend for the past three years.

Foundation plans additional work on divestment

By Karen Allen
Staff Writer

After discussing the issue of divestment with student officials, the KSU Foundation Investments Advisory Committee has decided to research the issue further this summer, said Jerry Boettcher, chairman of the committee.

"We have no intention of stonewalling the issue. We're going to make a decision. ... It's going to be hard, but we'll do it," Boettcher said.

In early April, Student Senate voted in favor of the divestment of $10,000 in student monies invested in companies doing business in South Africa. That decision was based largely on a report by the Ad Hoc Committee on Investigation of Investments of Student Funds.

Michel Cavigelli, former chairman of the student committee, said he and other students who have been pushing for divestment are "satisfied for now" with the Foundation's decision.

"I'll be interested in seeing what they have (come up with) by next fall," he said.

This summer, a steering committee comprised of Students for Educational Awareness, Black Student Union and "anybody who is interested" in divestment will be planning a campaign for next semester to create awareness of the issue, said Cavigelli.

Boettcher said it was "getting the cart way ahead of the horse" to say the investments committee will be looking at specific divestment plans during its research this summer.

"We have collected and are in the process of collecting information on the issue ourselves so that we can have an intelligent discussion (next fall)," he said.

Foundation president Art Loub said the foundation's executive committee approved of the investments committee's recommendation to further research the divestment issue.

The committee is comprised of five members, all of whom are Foundation trustees and volunteers. Loub said the committee's responsibility is to "carry out and be the guardian" of all the stewardship the Foundation receives.

The divestment issue will be a "standard agenda item for the next three months," Boettcher said.

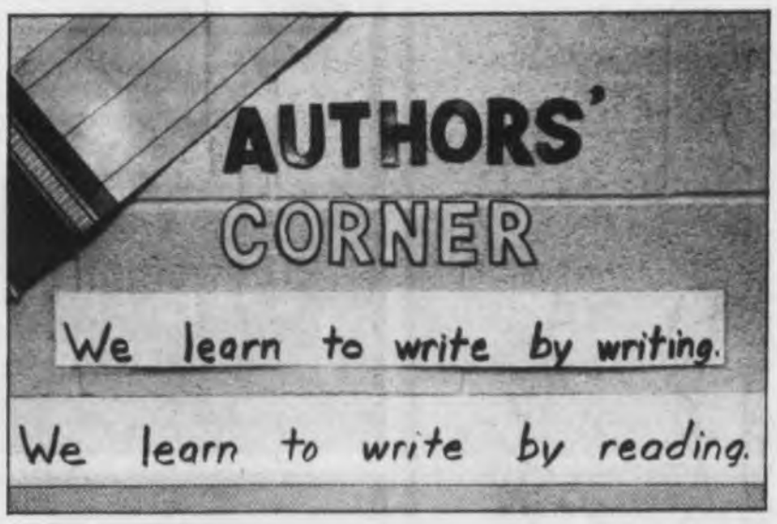
Cavigelli said he knew of 120 schools that have divested in at least some way, including four Big Eight universities. They include the University of Kansas, University of Missouri-Columbia, Iowa State University and the University of Oklahoma.

The steering committee's intent is to urge the Foundation to withdraw its monies from companies with subsidiaries in South Africa, Cavigelli said.

Only four or five schools in the country have divested at that level, he said, one of them being Michigan State University.

School allows students to set pace

By Angie Smith
Collegian Reporter



Amanda Arnold Elementary School teachers are putting aside text books and using a method called the Whole Language Approach, which focuses on students learning at their own speed without the fear of failure.

"It's not a program such as reading, math, etc.," said Barbara Maughmer, a first-grade teacher and facilitator of the Whole Lanuguage Method. "It's a philosophy of what you believe a student and a good teacher are."

"The holistic approach says things need to be kept whole," Maughmer said. "Language is the basis of all learning and it should not be broken into pieces."

It's intergrating the four language skills — listening, speaking, reading and writing. In addition, it is thinking while learning subjects branching from a general theme, she said.

Currently, Maughmer's students are studying a market. She said the students are reading fiction books in which the main characters are pigs and at the same time they are learning about the books' authors. The students are also learning about cars, trucks and other transportation used to get to market. In addition, the children are studying measurements because, if they were farmers, they would have to know how to weigh their pigs, Maughmer said.

A sign in the classroom reminds students of how they learn.

Clark Reinke, principal of Amanda Arnold Elementary School, said it's the school focusing on the needs of the child, rather then the child adapting to the way the school teaches.

Over 100 teachers, administrators, and principals from different Kansas schools have visited Amanda Arnold in the last year to learn about the holistic approach, Reinke said.

"We have the knowledge of the holistic approach and the research to support it and slowly we are teaching teachers to use it," Reinke said. "Lasting changes take time."

It is a thematic approach which integrates all of the subjects, Maughmer said.

"Until now the education approach only focused on academics. The thematic approach includes art, drama, music, etc. We use very few patterns. Instead of, 'here ia a picture of a pig, cut it out,' it's 'everyone draw a pig and then cut it out,'" she said.

Children are not taught just to answer the questions at the back of each chapter, nor is the child's ability to take a test emphasized, Maughmer said.

"The classroom becomes a community," Maughmer said. "The atmosphere is conducive to learning. Everybody is learning, including me. The students learn from the teacher, from each other, and the teacher learns from the students. It's a community of learners."

"Children have the instinct to want to learn and to read and we need to capitalize on this," Maughmer said. "So when one asks, 'Why is the sky blue?' we need to answer them instead of replying, 'Ask that later.'"

When using the traditional approach, the teacher is the only one you have to satisfy, she said. When the teacher assigns the students to write a paper, he or she then tells the

Bill gives payraise to state employees

By Joe Kennedy
Collegian Reporter

House Bill 2553, which will increase salaries and compensation of state classified employees, passed the Senate Monday by a vote of 38-0, said Sen. Lana Oleen, R-Manhattan.

"A lot of senators spoke in favor of the bill before it came to vote," Oleen said. "I spoke in favor of it and I'm very pleased with the overwhelming support."

The bill will provide an increase of three percent for all classified employees and change the length of time it takes to move up steps in the pay schedule from three years to one.

The pay schedule will take effect after the anniversary of an employee's first payroll period chargeable to the fiscal year ending June 30, 1990.

Along with the increase in salaries, the bill calls for a longevity payment plan which will affect classified employees who have been with a state agency for ten years or more.

The longevity plan will maximize benefits to state employees who have provided "experience and faithful service to the state of Kansas" and encourages employees to remain working for the state, according to the legislation.

The $3.4 million allocation was appropriated from the state general fund, and will allow employers to provide the increase in salary and longevity payments.

The bill will now go to Gov. Mike Hayden for signing, Oleen said. The main concern for the bill now is that it is a "very costly package."

Oleen said she would "strongly encourage" Hayden to sign the Poor funding, salaries exacting toll on faculty

By Robert Short
Staff Writer

Below-average salaries and limited program funding are taking their toll as several of K-State's prominent faculty members move on to other universities next fall.

Although all colleges and universities experience some faculty turnover, K-State is demonstrating a trend of losing upper-level professors and researchers to higher salaries and larger programs without replacing them. This trend has become more visible in only the past five years, said Ronald Downey, director of educational research.

"Everything I have seen says we have a higher-than-average attrition," Downey said. "One overwhelming issue is faculty salaries. In the past three to five years, we have gone from slightly uncompetitive to very uncompetitive."

K-State has gone from about 10 percent below comparative salaries at other institiutions to 25 percent below comparative salaries in some areas, he said.

Losing and gaining faculty members is an inherent process for most institutions, said Walter Woods, dean of the College of Agriculture. But a university should have the ability to balance its losses by acquiring quality professors from other universities, he said.

"We are always going to lose professors to universities that pay higher salaries than we do ... to universities that offer greater opportunities than are here," Woods said. "But it is (important) to realize K-State is not as competitive as it should be to minimize the loss of outstanding professors."

Some of the faculty members leaving K-State include Cornelia Flora, professor of sociology, anthropology and social work and a 1988 University Distinguished Professor award winner; Edward Kanemasu, professor of agronomy; Donald Nieman, associate professor of history and Dave Adams, associate professor of journalism and mass communications and director of Student Publications Inc.

Adams said that until he was approached by the University of Indiana, he had not expected to leave K-State. Although the position at Indiana offers a higher salary, it was also a career opportunity.

"I had really not planned on leaving," Adams said. "(K-State) has been a good place to work ... (but) I am the type of person who likes a new challenge."

Although salaries are substantially lower at K-State compared with those at other universities, Adams said monetary support limitations in some programs also have had a detrimental effect on faculty retention.

"I think (K-State) loses a lot of good people because of salaries and other (factors)," he said.

Downey said the inability to get outside money for broadening academic programs has only added to the frustration of some faculty members.

"The people who get hurt are the faculty on staff," he said. "Historically, K-State has served as a training ground."

Nieman said his decision to leave K-State for a teaching position at Clemson University was influenced by the amount of program support offered by the history department there. The resources available to Clemson's history department present more sources for research, support for travel and money for personal computers.

"It is not that we have the resources here that someone else is getting," Nieman said. "They are just not here."

Baker threatens to cut funds

WASHINGTON — Secretary of State James A. Baker III threatened Monday to withhold U.S. financial contributions to the World Health Organization if it votes to admit the Palestine Liberation Organization.

"He feels very strongly about this," said Margaret Tutwiler, the State Department spokeswoman, in announcing Baker's position.

She said if the threat of a cutoff did not deter the 166-member WHO from admitting the PLO at a meeting next week in Geneva the United States would consider other, unspecified steps.

The head of the U.N. agency was expected at the State Department on Tuesday to plead for continued U.S. financial support. Dr. Hiroshi Nakajima, a Japanese physician, said in Geneva on Saturday he had tried to persuade PLO chairman Yasser Arafat to withdraw the application.

The United States bears about 25 percent of the burden of World Health Organization expenses. This amounted to about $150 million in the last two years.

Navy officer suspended

NEWPORT, R.I. — The commander of a Newport-based frigate that collided with another ship 12 days ago has been relieved of his duties on the frigate, a Navy spokeswoman said Monday.

Commander Lewis Athow, who was in charge of the USS Trippe, was suspended after a preliminary investigation and temporarily assigned to Naval Surface Group Four in Newport, spokeswoman Mary Silvia said.

Commander John C. Dranchak has been designated interim commanding officer until a permanent relief can report to the Trippe, which would take two weeks, Silvia said.

The Trippe collided with the USS Platte off the coast of Florida on April 19, causing minor flooding and one minor injury to a Platte crewman. It was during those exercises that the USS Iowa exploded in an unrelated accident, killing 47 crewmen.

Priceless candy stolen

NEWPORT BEACH, Calif. — A thief with a sweet tooth who nabbed a painted chocolate wafer and a marzipan witch may have bitten off more than he could chew.

The chef said the candy is priceless, and police have classified the case as grand theft.

Pastry chef Anneke Jans and her mother, Phyllis Sherohman, were gone a short time Sunday from a culinary trade show — just long enough for the thief to make off with Jans' creations.

The painting of a turkey on the chocolate wafer and the 5-inch-tall marzipan witch cost Jans about $1,000 each in supplies and labor. Sentimental value makes them priceless, she said.

"I just fell apart when I saw (them) missing," said Jans, 20, who is studying culinary arts at Orange Coast College. "Like most people would (value) money and gold, this is my gold."

Cleanup plan revised

VALDEZ, Alaska — Exxon officials Monday released a revised plan for cleansing 364 miles of Alaskan coastline fouled by the nation's largest oil spill, but said their proposal requires a suspension of local environmental laws.

The plan makes no provisions for continuing the cleanup beyond mid-September, and notes that 191 miles of lightly oiled coastline may not be cleaned mechanically at all, but be allowed to be washed naturally by the environment.

"It is expected that this will be the case for all lightly oiled Gulf of Alaska sites," said the two-part, 60-page report.

"We are going to have to take a hard look at that," responded Bill Lamoreaux, the ranking state environmental official monitoring the cleanup.

Since March 24, when an Exxon tanker struck a reef outside Valdez and poured more than 10 million gallons of North Slope crude into Prince William Sound, Exxon has financed cleanup crews fighting the spreading sludge. Signs of the spill have been sighted about 500 miles southwest of Valdez.

The oil company's strategy, which was submitted to state and federal authorities only hours before a deadline expired, divides Alaska's oil-tainted shores into four categories — from the most heavily polluted to those that are "only lightly oiled."

Duck leads to chase

SALINA — Pat Brewer found out the hard way that letting a duck send him on a wild goose chase wasn't all it might be quacked up to be.

After hearing thumping noises in his parlor Friday evening, Brewer opened the door and encountered a peeking duck — looking right back at him.

Somehow, a young Mallard duck had tumbled down Brewer's chimney and was making itself at home among the many plants in the room.

"It had probably been there all day," Brewer said. "We've got all of our plants in there, so it's kind of like the woods. At least there were signs that it had been in there for a while."

The noise Brewer heard was the duck trying to make a getaway through one of the parlor's closed windows.

Although it had injured a wing, the duck was swift afoot and Brewer couldn't catch it.

"It was really funny," Brewer said. "There I was chasing a duck around the house. The fact that there was a duck in the house to begin with was crazy enough."

Fish kill due to weather

CHENEY — Hot weather was being blamed for a large fish kill at Cheney Reservoir in south-central Kansas, officials said.

Hundreds of fish, nearly all of them white bass, were stacked on top of one another near the beach area west of the dam.

On Saturday, the dead fish were stacked by the hundreds on the north end of the lake, said Wynn Bailey, owner of Cheney Marina, but by Sunday the carcasses had drifted south to beach areas near the dam.

"Ain't this a pretty sight," said fisherman Bob Andrews.

Gordon Schneider, a Kansas Department of Wildlife and Parks district fisheries biologist at Cheney State Park, said a combination of weather-related factors linked to last week's heat wave were to blame.

Measles cases number 8

Lafene Student Health Center officials reported another suspected case of measles, bringing the total number of cases so far to eight.

"All of the cases are still only suspected (measles cases)," said Dr. Larry Moeller, Lafene chief of staff. "It will be another week before we get the blood tests back."

He said all of the cases are still clinically diagnosed as measles and will not be confirmed untill the results of blood tests are returned. The testing is done at the Kansas Department of Health and Environment and takes approximately two weeks to process.

Lafene was open Sunday to give the vaccine and check student shot records. About 30 students were vaccinated Sunday, said Lannie Zweimiller, Lafene director.

"Up to this point, we have vaccinated 1,050 students and we anticipate that we will see students until finals," Zweimiller said. "We are expecting another group of cases next week after the 10-day incubation period."

"We order the vaccine as we need it," he said. "I talked to Chuck Miller (director of immunology at the Department of Health and Environment) and he said that they had about 10,000 doses on hand. I am not worried about running out."

From knights to dragons, miniatures used in games

By Brad Camp
Collegian Reporter

Miniatures are not just replicas displayed in a shadow box for visual display. For some individuals, collecting miniatures can offer the challenge of war game competition.

Miniatures, or small representations of playing units, existed as early as the first chess pieces, said Royal Dowdy, owner of Master Gamer.

"Miniatures themselves originated with the first board game," Dowdy said. "Then the first chess pieces came out, and everybody wanted to make or carve pieces to represent the figures.

"Chess pieces can be called miniatures because they represent a unit on a board like any other miniature represents a unit."

He said in early war games, armies would use wood blocks to represent other armies in the battlefield. Armies then shifted to using miniatures with more graphic representations and likenesses of the opposing forces.

Miniatures are collected because they are attractive, Dowdy said. The other use for them is gaming.

"In gaming, you use a miniature to show exactly what you can do and how you can move .... If you weren't using a miniature, it would be like playing chess without chess pieces," he said.

Miniatures are popular due to people's high interest in fantasy and board games, Dowdy said.

Many different types of miniatures are available, he said.

There are representations of most historical battles, such as from the Civil War, World War I and World War II. Fantasy miniatures such as knights and dragons as well as legendary and mythological characters are also popular.

"The most popular is the fantasy miniature because they are used in the games (some collectors) play," Dowdy said.

The mythological miniatures are more popular for people who collect and paint them but don't play role games, he said.

Staff/Brad Camp
Michael Bean, Manhattan, paints a miniature in the back room of Master Gamer. Bean has a collection of about 35 lead miniatures.

"You don't necessarily need to be into gaming to collect miniatures," Dowdy said. "They are a very good painting pastime. It's just like collecting models, but they take up a lot less space."

Many people in Manhattan play Warhammer, a game played with painted armies, Dowdy said.

Michael Bean, of Manhattan, said he has been collecting and gaming with miniatures for two years.

"I have a fair- to decent-sized collection for Warhammer," he said. "Each miniature represents a single person.

"I didn't get into collecting and painting until recently. A friend told me how much fun it was, so I sat in on a couple of games."

Bean has a collection of about 35 lead miniature elves.

"Due to their basic evil, I paint them dark colors," he said.

Lead miniatures usually are bought unpainted. Painting gives them a closer representation and personality to full-sized characters.

KPL to replace gas lines
Project to cost $400 million

By Dave Young
Collegian Reporter

KPL Gas Service is replacing all bare steel residential lines and yard lines with plastic lines in its service area.

The Gas Service Company is replacing all the mains in Kansas, Missouri, Oklahoma and Superior, Neb., in response to three explosions, said Hal Hudson, director of corporate communications.

These incidents included an explosion in Overland Park in September, an explosion in southeast Kansas City, Mo., in November, and an explosion in Oakgrove, Mo., in Feburary. All were caused by deteriorating steel gas lines.

The November explosion in Kansas City killed two elderly people, Hudson said.

Another explosion in Topeka on March 29 was not related to the three explosions which were caused by deteriorating steel gas lines, Hudson said.

David S. Black, KPL Gas Service chief executive officer said, "Overwhelmingly the lines being replaced are customer owned and were installed by contractors or others before 1971."

"KPL will completely replace some 600,000 bare steel service and yard lines that have been the focus of public attention since last September," Black said.

Black said the replacement will start immediately and will take several years to complete.

The estimated cost of the replacement is $400 million.

"It will require a major investment in capital and manpower. It means we will be hiring additional crews and using the services of outside construction contractors," Black said. "About 50,000 individual lines running from the company's gas mains to the outside walls of customers' residences would be replaced," he said.

"We have been working diligently over the past several months with the governors and commissions in both states on matters of pipeline safety."

"While these matters are within the purview o the commissions, we especially appreciate the additional interest and input of the governors. All have taken great care not to politicize these matters," Black said.

Gov. Mike Hayden and Missouri Gov. John Ashcroft met with gas company executives and the utility regulatory commission chairmen of both states to discuss safety measures being undertaken by distributors of natural gas in Kansas and Missouri.

"While the work of replacing the gas lines goes on," Black said, "the company will maintain its continuing inspection of the remaining system for leaks."

Police investigating couple's report of baby's kidnapping

By The Associated Press

ALTON, Ill. — Police investigated a report Monday that a masked gunman abducted a baby girl from a couple who made the same complaint three years ago about another daughter who was found dead yards from their house.

On Saturday, Robert and Paula Sims reported their 6-week-old daughter, Heather, missing from her bassinet after a masked gunman knocked Paula Sims unconscious, police said.

The report was identical to one filed in 1986 in nearby Brighton when the Sims' 13-day-old daughter, Loralei, turned up missing. Her body was found five days later about 150 feet from the Sims' house. No arrest was made although the parents were considered supsects.

"What are the chances of somebody breaking into your house and taking your small infant child once in your life?" said police Sgt. Billy Lawrence. "You figure out the odds, and then figure out the odds that it could happen a second time in a completely different city. But I'm not trying to say anything."

The Sims have an unlisted telephone number and could not immediately be reached.

On Monday, police in this Mississippi River city across from St. Louis said they were still treating Heather's disappearance as a reported kidnapping.

"We are doing everything we can possibly do, but we have no idea where the child is."
— Bud Pyatt police sgt.

"We are doing everything we can possibly do, but we have no idea where the child is," said police Sgt. Bud Pyatt.

"We were told (Paula Sims) was approached by a male outside the home, forced back inside the house and knocked unconscious," said Pyatt. "But we have no information other than what was obtained yesterday."

The reported timing of the abductions was nearly identical. In 1986, Paula Sims said she was knocked out about 10:20 p.m. On Saturday, she told police the assailant struck at 10:30 p.m. as she took out the trash.

Police said a 15-month-old son was sleeping in the house at the time Paula Sims said Heather was abducted, but the boy was not disturbed. No valuables were reported missing.

Paula Sims told police her husband arrived home Saturday night about an hour after she was knocked out and revived her.

Police searched around the Sims home on Sunday, and Pyatt said investigators might broaden the search.

Sims' brother-in-law, Herb Condray, of Cottage Hills, said police had advised the couple to make no public statement about the case. "They told the parents to let the police handle it and that's what they're doing," he said.

Solidarity groups rally to celebrate May Day

By The Associated Press

Poles shouted "Down with communism!" in a May Day march through Warsaw, Soviet Armenians defied a ban on demonstrations, and rallies burst into riots in Czechoslovakia and South Korea on Monday as workers marked their worldwide holiday.

Clashes in Turkey left 36 people injured, including one man who was shot in the head; riot squads fired tear gas when leftists tried to march on the U.S. Embassy in the Philippines; and 300 radicals donned masks and looted stores in West Germany.

The Soviet Union held a traditional parade through Red Square, China used the occasion to try to ease a burgeoning student uprising, and a man holding a poster of Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev was dragged away by police in Czechoslovakia.

Around the world, thousands gathered on the international labor day to celebrate their gains with banners and balloons, or protest their losses with hurled rocks and smashed windows.

Up to 100,000 Solidarity supporters marched through Warsaw, the union's first legal May Day gathering since it was suppressed eight years ago. Workers chanted "Down with communism!" during the impressive show of strength.

"We not only can organize uprisings ... we can also build a normal democratric order," Warsaw Solidarity leader Zbigniew Bujak told the crowd, referring to recent reforms that resulted in Solidarity's legalization and opposition participation in elections.

Nearby, about 20,000 attended the official celebration. Although Warsaw's main events were peaceful, at least one clash took place later when about 100 young demonstrators marched and threw rocks at police.

But in Wroclaw, police with clubs used tear gas and water cannons to break up a rally organized by militant Solidarity splinter groups, said opposition spokeswoman Maria Pinior.

West Germany seeks NATO allies' support

By The Associated Press

BONN, West Germany — The government began a new effort Monday to rally NATO allies behind its proposal for superpower talks on reducing short-range nuclear weapons, which has caused a dispute with the United States and Britain.

Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher was quoted as saying West Germany's argument must have "special weight" because it is the alliance's front line in a war which would be fought on its territory.

Both the United States and Britain say the negotiations proposed by Chancellor Helmut Kohl might endanger Western security.

Genscher's remarks were the first official West German comment since a meeting Sunday in which Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher of Britain tried, but failed, to change Kohl's mind on the issue.

In pursuit of support for the West German position, Kohl plans to visit Rome today and Genscher will go to Paris.

Italy has said it agrees with West Germany that negotiations on the short-range weapons should begin.

France has not made its position clear.

West Germany claims the support of nearly half the 16 North Atlantic Treaty Organization members.

New seating proposal suffers same problem

Much like Jason of "Friday the 13th" fame, the seating fiasco at Bramlage Coliseum just can't be laid to rest.

The problem arose last semester, when some faculty members in sections 17 and 18 complained they were unable to watch the games over the heads of students standing in section 19.

The KSU Athletic Department announced Wednesday a proposal to modify the seating arrangements at the Coliseum. Students are to be grouped together on most of the south and east sides of Bramlage, and faculty are to be dispersed in four sections throughout the coliseum. The new plan calls for most of the faculty to change places with students, apparently for the benefit of all.

The problem is that the plan earmarks section 23, a wedge-shaped section between the south and east sides of Bramlage, to be occupied by faculty. Section 23 is bordered on both sides by students, much as the controversial sections 17 and 18 were this year. Faculty in section 23 will still not be able to see past halfcourt when students on the east side stand up, unless they also stand during the games.

The new seating proposal is a step in the right direction, but it is not enough. Students are not going to sit down if they don't want to, no matter how many complaints are filed. After paying $70 for season tickets next year, it is more than likely students will want to get their money's worth at every game.

If the Athletic Department plans to solve the problem, it should seat all students together, with no faculty in between. Sections two and 10 are the same size as section 23, and either could be used to seat faculty. More importantly, neither section is surrounded by students, and would not have the potential to generate complaints. By surrounding faculty with students, the new proposal is an invitation to disaster.

Other Perspectives

If you're a supporter of equal rights, give three cheers; if you're a regular at ladies night, kiss it goodbye. In a ruling Wednesday, the Iowa Supreme Court decided that ladies days at race tracks and nightclubs are discriminatory. As a result, the court banned them.

The ruling stemmed from a suit in which the Council Bluffs Run greyhound track was sued by a man who was refused a discount admission on "Ladies Day." He said it was unfair that he had to pay full admission while women could get in to the track free and pay discount prices for food and souvenirs.

Sound familiar? It should. For years, Ames bars have offered ladies nights weekly in attempts to draw a crowd. Such nights feature specials, like no cover charges for women, reduced prices on drinks, and even free drinks. They usually fall on a night when business tends to be slow, such as a Wednesday. Business picks up regardless of specials Thursday through the weekend.

The specials are often ridiculously sexist in nature: a couple of years ago the Cave Inn advertised specials for women wearing mini skirts. Of course, the obvious intent of drink specials is not only to bring in a female crowd, but to lure a male crowd as well.

Now all of that will come to an end. Justice Bruce Snell, joined by five others on a panel of justices who heard the Bluffs Run case, wrote that civil rights laws do not "provide an exception for discriminatory conduct." So much for ladies night.

Commentary

Mark Schmeller
Collegian Columnist

It is a melancholy object to those who walk through this great town or travel in the country, when they see the streets, the roads and cabin doors crowded with officers of the United States Army, Fort Riley Division, followed by three, four or five troops, all dressed up in battle fatigues or civilian attire. These fighting men, instead of being able to work for their honest livelihood, are forced, for lack of 100,000 acres of proper training grounds, to employ all their time strolling the streets of Aggieville and engaging in fighting initiatives of their own.

Methinks 'tis agreed by all parties that this prodigious number of men in arms, deprived of proper facilities, is, in the present deplorable state of the kingdom, a very great additional grievance. Therefore, whoever could find out a fair, cheap and easy method of making these men sound, useful members of our armed forces, would deserve so well of the public as to have his statue set up as preserver of the nation.

But my intention is very far from being confined to provide only for the better defense of the Flint Hills area. It is of a much greater extent and shall take in the whole number of peoples in the Flint Hills area so as to make their lives more peaceful and secure.

As to my own part, having turned my thoughts for many years upon this important subject, and maturely weighing the several schemes of our projectors, I have always found them grossly mistaken in their computation. It is true, the proposed expansion of Fort Riley, which will require 100,000 acres of farmland, houses, small villages and townships, can be made with little impact upon the lives of our better citizens. Indeed, those requiring relocation are but gypsies, peasants and rapscallions whose numbers are but an insignificant portion of our greater population.

Why, therefore, must we concern ourselves with the relocation of these none-too-desirable elements, especially when our military stands in such urgent need of proper training grounds? It is with this in mind that I shall humbly submit my own modest proposal for preventing an undertrained military from being a burden to its country and for making the Flint Hills region, including the town of Manhattan, beneficial to our national defense.

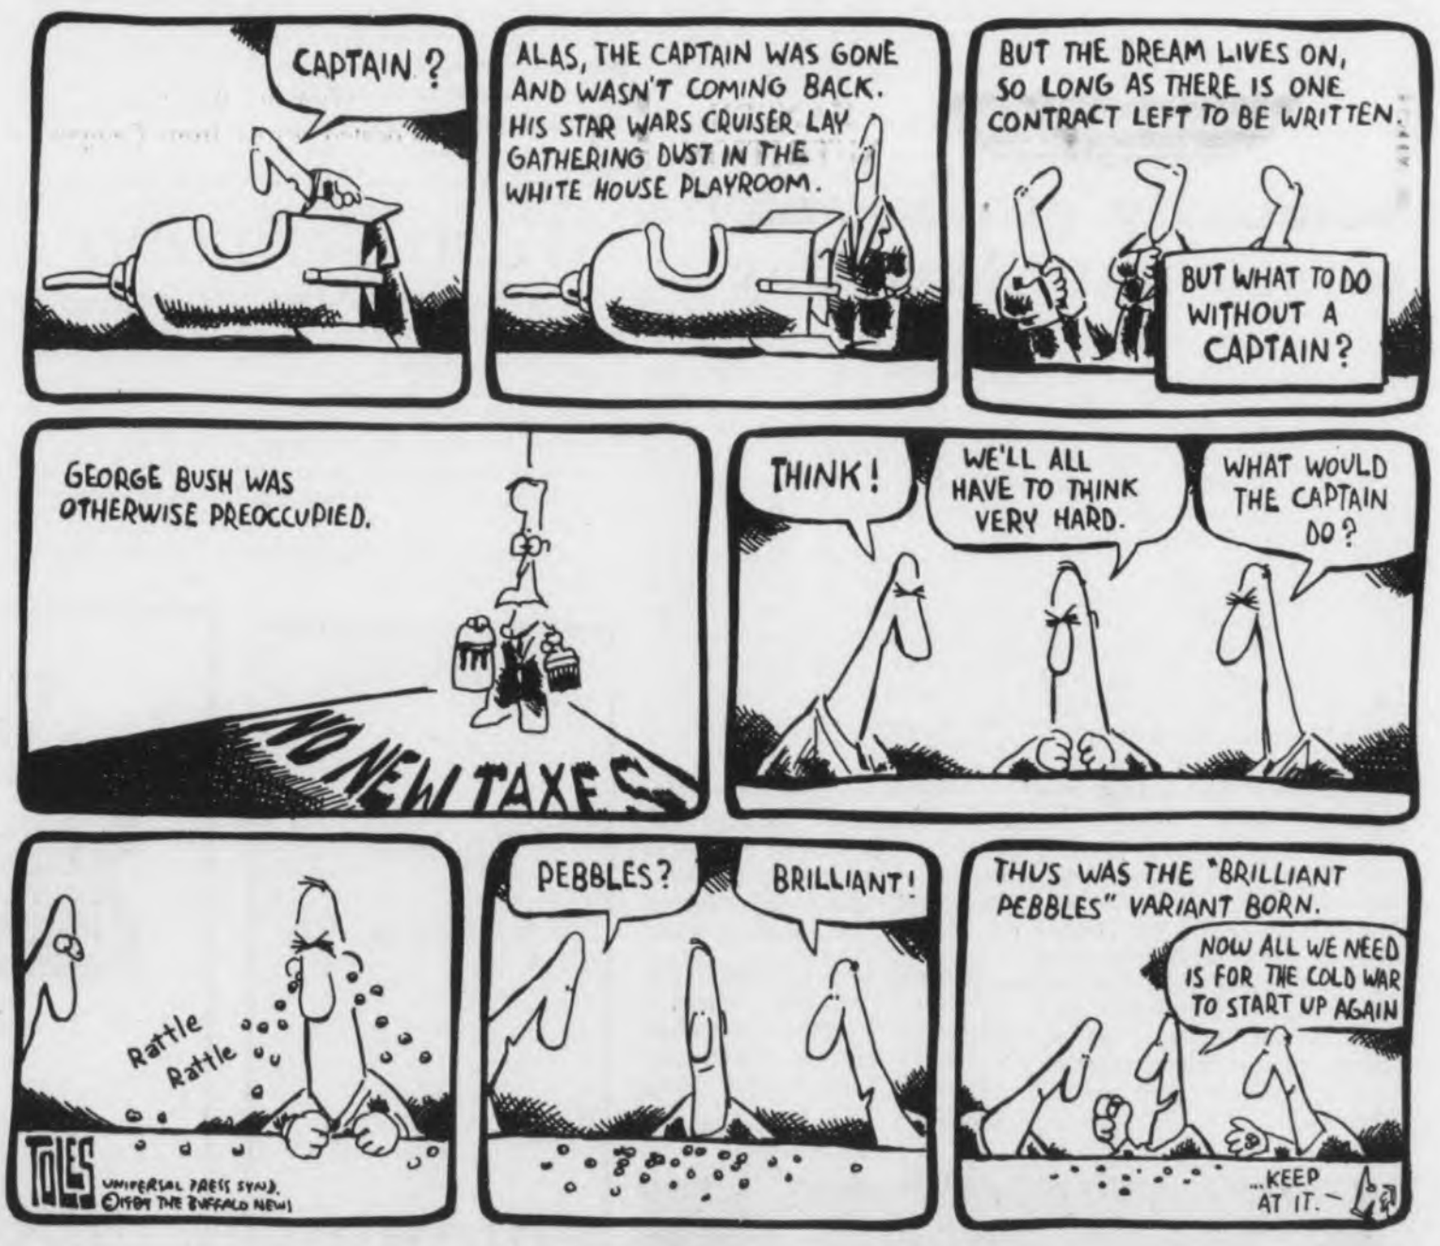
I have been assured by a very knowing military acquaintance that a large, varied area is most favorable to robust training and maneuvers. Such an area must include hills, valleys, plains and, in this most modern day and age, urban areas. It would therefore seem most prudent that our military, if it is to train rightly, should have such urban areas as Manhattan and Junction City, indeed all of Riley and Geary counties included within its grounds.

As to our city of Manhattan, the city streets may be used to simulate the rigors of urban combat. In the event of inclement weather, maneuvers may be moved indoors to Manhattan Town Center so that nothing may stand in the way of our military preparedness.

A very worthy person, a true lover of his country and whose virtues I highly esteem, was lately pleased in discoursing on this matter in order to offer a refinement upon my scheme. He said that military gentlemen, after many long days of training, stand in danger of demoralization unless some sort of entertainment be provided to lift their spirits.

The solution to this problem came upon me later as I heard the wise words of another worthy person, who spoke of the many resemblances between the campus of K-State and Disney World. Indeed, what better way is there to provide wholesome enjoyment to our brave fighting men than to let them roam the peaceful grounds of our magic kingdom, to smell the flowers, lie upon the grass, frolic with the squirrels and birds and kill them?

But I digress.



Some persons of a despondent spirit are in great concern about the vast number of people in the town and country of Riley and Geary counties. They fear that once these counties are turned over to the military, innocent civilians will be caught in the crossfire and shelling of military exercises.

But I am not in the least pained about this matter because it is well known that the primary objective of our armed forces is the protection of our citizenry. What better way could there be for our armies to practice this objective than to train in the midst of the people?

Our fighting men shall learn to thread automatic machine fire between women and children, to throw grenades into playgrounds without undue loss of life and to make careful and most delicate use of mortars in residential areas.

After all, what is the use of allowing our fighting men to use live ammunition if we deny them live targets? A few citizens may come to be maimed or killed as a result of military exercises, but that is the sort of sacrifice we must all endeavor to make in the face of a common enemy. I would hope that none among us would shirk from such a responsibility, as neglecting it would serve to weaken the security of the greater central Kansas area, thus playing into the hands of the barbaric Nebraskan hordes to the north.

I profess, in the sincerity of my heart, that I have not the least personal interest in endeavoring to promote this necessary ceding of Riley and Geary counties to the military. I have no other motive than the public good of my country and welcome our fighting men to the streets of Manhattan. I hope that other good and stout citizens, desirous of a stronger national defense, will do the same.

Genetic variation

Editor,

In Floyd Lee's search for the truth (Letters, April 26) he makes the statement that "... a teacher may ask the class why, after comparing DNA and protein molecules in hundreds of species, scientists still can't find a genetic connection linking different species."

I hope any teacher who asks that question is prepared to give due credit to the astute student who might cite dozens of papers that report examples in which a large percentage of the genome of one species is exactly the same as a similar proportion of the genome of another species.

Such similarity has been shown even between species validated as being biologically distinct from one another by being unable to share their genes to produce offspring. It is assumed that the minor unlike portions of the genomes are responsible for the differences between closely related species.

Progressive intraspecific genetic variation is well known in both lay and scientific terms. Coupled with isolation of populations, it has plausibly led to divergence great enough to prevent gametic union between the populations should they be united.

I have no doubt that the process is proceeding today. Likewise, Lee probably has no doubt the differences are limited to intraspecific variances. We are deadlocked.

However, his letter was titled, "Keep open mind." With that in mind, I suggest he avail himself of a segment of scientific literature that he has apparently missed — literature on comparative studies of genomes of closely related species as well as across phyla.

He might start with a reading of "The Invisible Ape," in the New Scientist, Dec. 3, 1988.

Leave logo alone

Editor,

This letter is written in response to David Svoboda's sports column Monday in which he takes time from his term paper to take a shot at the new Wildcat football logo.

Yes, the new K-State logo does slightly resemble the Washington State wildcat logo. But what modern wildcat design that didn't look like a pussycat wouldn't?

There are so many wildcat logos around the country that it is almost impossible to design one that some columnist somewhere isn't going to compare to the logo of another school.

So I extend to you a challenge: take another few minutes from your term paper and design a better wildcat logo for your next column.

Officials caution against validity of service's offer

By Bryan Ackley
Collegian Reporter

Officials in the Student Financial Assistance office are concerned about letters from the Academic Financial Advisory Program Research and Processing Center in San Diego, Calif., sent to K-State students.

In one of the letters, Marianne Bryson, divisional supervisor of the Academic Financial Advisory Program Research and Processing Center, said the company charges customers a processing fee of $57.50, and, in return, provides them with a list of potential financial aid sources obtained through the use of a computer database search.

The company will refund 100 percent of the processing fee to each customer who doesn't receive at least one grant, scholarship or fellowship as a direct result of its services, Bryson said.

Larry Moeder, associate director of financial aid, said he hasn't been able to obtain much information about the company, and is concerned there might be some level of risk involved for students who choose to do business with it.

However, students do not need to take any risks because an equitable search for financial aid can be conducted on campus through the financial aid office, Moeder said.

"I know we're legitimate," he said. "A scholarship search through our office costs $15 for K-State students or prospective K-State students."

According to Bryson's letter, the company only searches for financial aid awards which will not require repayment.

Eligibility is guaranteed, regardless of a student's financial background or academic status, she said.

"There are no guarantees," Moeder said.

Students who are conducting a search for financial aid must be aware of application deadlines, he said. In most cases, it is too late to apply for scholarships and grants, Moeder said.

"It's unrealistic, at this point, to encourage students to apply for fall and spring because most scholarships are offered for the full academic year," Moeder said.

Beatrice Mafnas, spokeswoman for the Better Business Bureau, said there have been complaints made against the Academic Financial Advisory Program Research and Processing Center.

"We are currently investigating these complaints, so we cannot make a recommendation at this time," Mafnas said. "However, we have asked them to provide information to us about their business, but they have refused to do so."

NASA sets new date to launch

Technicians work for Thursday deadline

By The Associated Press

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — NASA Monday rescheduled the once-aborted launch of space shuttle Atlantis for Thursday afternoon. This is after technicians worked around the clock since Friday to replace two faulty fuel system parts.

The space agency said in a statement that "This plan is optimisitic ... pending completion of testing and analysis to understand clearly the problems encountered during Friday's launch attempt."

But officials said they were confident enough of making a Thursday launch that they gave the signal to start a new countdown at 8 a.m. Tuesday for the first shuttle planetary launch.

The five astronauts aboard Atlantis are to propel the $550 million Magellan spacecraft toward Venus to map the cloud-veiled surface.

The launch opportunity "window" on Thursday is 64 minutes long, beginning at 1:48 p.m.

The launch was scrubbed Friday, 31 seconds before the planned liftoff, because of a sudden electrical surge in a hydrogen fuel pump. NASA said Monday that tiny metal particles found in the pump may have caused a short circuit.

After the launch was postponed, engineers also discovered a pinhole leak in a 4-inch-diameter line that carries liquid hydrogen from the external fuel tank to the shuttle.

Officials had said Sunday that Friday was the earliest launch possibility. But with the replacement work going so well, they said Monday that Thursday was possible.

"This is a very dedicated team here," said Warren Wiley, deputy director of engineering at the Kennedy Space Center, speaking of the repair crew. "When the chips are down they really get out and hustle. They did a bangup job."

The delay meant a loss of valuable days in starting Magellan on its voyage. Because of the shifting positions of Earth and Venus, there is only a 32-day period when the spacecraft can be launched toward Earth's sister planet.

If the shuttle can't get off the ground by May 28, the mission would have to be put off for two years, at a cost of more than $100 million, until the two planets are again properly aligned.

To maintain their efficiency, the five astronauts who will fly the mission scheduled practice sessions in a shuttle simulator at their training base in Houston.

They will fly back here Tuesday to again make final preparations for liftoff.

Court refuses to hear tribe's suit

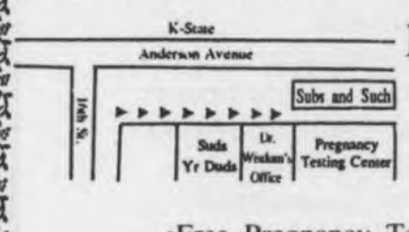
By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — An Indian tribe's suit seeking to reclaim 12 acres of land in suburban Kansas City won't get a hearing before the U.S. Supreme Court.

On Monday, the court let stand a December ruling in which the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Denver said the Absentee Shawnee Tribe of Oklahoma does not have rights to the land in two Kansas City suburbs, Mission and Fairway, Kan.

The land in question is the site of the Shawnee Indian Mission Museum and now belongs to the state of Kansas. And although the suit involved only the 12 acres of state-owned land, there was concern about implications a ruling for the Indians would have for some 1,900 acres of nearby residential and commercial property.

The Indian tribe, with about 25,000 members, sued the state in 1984, contending it still owned the land under terms of an 1854 treaty. That treaty ceded 1.6 million acres to the federal government, but permitted the tribe to retain ownership of 200,000 acres, of which the disputed parcel is a part.



In 1865 the federal government issued a patent for an area that includes the land in question to the Rev. Thomas Johnson, a minister who ran the Shawnee Mission Manual School for Indian Children.

The suit contended that the patent was void because when it was granted, Johnson had been dead for three months, having been shot at his home in January of 1865.

U.S. District Judge Dale Saffels of Kansas City, Kan., decided for the state, saying the government could award land to the estates of deceased applicants. The appeals court agreed, saying that under a law in effect from 1836 to 1976, the patent was good even though Johnson died before it was issued.

Movie-goers treated to horror, blood in King's 'Pet Sematary'

By Stacy Sweazy
Collegian Reviewer

It is known as the story that scared the master of terror. Not too surprising since it is this year's blood bath of embarrassment for Paramount Pictures.

Based on Steven King's 1983 bestseller, "Pet Sematary" is gravely a nightmarish, gut-wrenching addition to his list of many horror flicks.

Review

The film follows the norm of King's basic setup of an all-American middle class, yuppie family, complete with two adorable children. The family is moving from Chicago to a white frame house in a seemingly nice area of Maine. The neighborhood comes with spooky neighbors living in dark, rundown, two-story houses and a winding path leading the curiosities of the Creed family to investigate.

Beyond that haunting picture, across the highway, is a rough-and-tumble earthly hell of animal burial grounds full of dead carcasses. The animals are roadkill victims from the constant convoy of 18-wheeler trucks that travel the nearby highway.

Beyond that is yet another graveyard in which the dead return to life but are possessed by evil spirits. The grounds were the territory of the MicMac Indian tribe until the soil went sour.

King blundered when he wrote the screenplay verbatim from his novel. The script was a bit messy in more ways than one. His interpretations of trepidation from paperback to silver screen were too predictable.

Although his success is dazzling with films like "Carrie" and "Christine," King lacks substance this time. His prior films left audiences buried in their seats in paralyzing fear. "Pet Sematary" left most of the audience sick to their stomachs and wondering why they didn't read the book instead of waiting for the movie.

Fred Gwynne portrayed the character of Jud Crandall with the charm and basso voice of Herman Munster. His persona was a definite plus. The rest of the cast, Dale Midkiff (Dr. Louis Creed) and Denise Crosby (Rachel Creed) acted scared and wore bloody garments well, but that wasn't enough to make their performances convincing.

Director Mary Lambert fell into the same rut with King and added no new twists of terror but deserves some credit for making "Pet Sematary" the most gruesome movie of the year.

Although King shows a keen knowledge of striking terror into the hearts of the public, he needs to make the conflicts of death in the final scenes less prognostic.

This flick is definitely not up to par with the other movies that have made King America's best-selling horror author, but even his most loyal fans (animal lover or not) should wait for the videotape.

Mediterranean 'live'

Robot shows sea bottom to students

By The Associated Press

BOSTON — Auditorium lights dimmed and thousands of youngsters nationwide went silent Monday when a $7 million science project whisked them to the bottom of the Mediterranean Sea, live and in color.

Television screens showed them the satellite-relayed view of a camera-equipped submersible robot being towed over the ocean floor. It was the first of two weeks of live broadcasts to an expected 250,000 students at 13 museums from British Columbia to Florida.

The project suffered a temporary setback last week when the 7-foot-long robot Jason, a newer version of the camera-carrying submersible that explored the sunken ocean liner Titanic, sank among the ruins of an ancient Roman trading ship off the coast of Italy.

The cable used to lower the million-dollar Jason and its mobile garage or transporter, Argo, snapped and the pair plunged 2,100 feet to the soft, silty ocean floor.

Organizers said the show would go on — with or without Jason. The robot was resurrected apparently undamaged Saturday but still wasn't used in Monday's 40-minute broadcast.

Jason has propellers and can be remotely guided in and around underwater objects. Its replacement Monday, Medea, was merely a sophisticated camera platform that is towed over a target area from the surface.

In addition to the underwater shots, expedition leader Robert Ballard, discoverer of the Titanic, talked to the students from the bridge of the support ship Star Hercules in the Mediterranean. He took questions from students at three of the 13 participating museums, narrated live footage of underwater volcanoes and introduced films on satellite technology and the ancient Greek voyager Jason, for whom the 20th-century undersea robot was named.

"Our journey to the Mediterranean has been anything but uneventful," Ballard said in recounting Jason's mishap. "The voyage became a non-stop exercise in problem-solving."

During weeks of lessons and classroom discussion, the students have developed an affection for the little robot explorer.

The biggest laugh of the morning came when a boy identified only as Kenneth, a grade-school student from Memphis, Tenn., got to question Ballard.

"Is Jason all right?" he asked.

"Jason is fine," Ballard said. "His pride's a little hurt but luckily none of his instrumentation is."

Greg Tardiff, a seventh grader from Beverly, Mass., said word of Jason's loss last week spread rapidly through the Shore Country Day School.

"We were crushed," the 13-year-old said. "We thought the whole thing would be called off."

For some of the kids, too, the show wasn't quite the same without Jason.

"The teachers said it was going to be so real that it would seem like the water could come right off the screen," said 10-year-old Almas Rathod of the Walter J. Paton School in Shrewsbury, Mass. "It wasn't like that."

But classmate Barry Lyall said it met his expectations.

"It's much more interesting than hearing about it in a classroom," the 9-year-old native of Scotland said.

Kansas FFA contests end today

By Janette Poole
Collegian Reporter

From livestock judging to agricultural mechanics to newswriting, Kansas Future Farmers of America members are at K-State to test their skills against their peers.

About 1,200 students representing 115 high schools from throughout Kansas converged on campus for the 66th annual FFA state contests, which began Sunday afternoon and will end this morning. The contests involved particpants from FFA chapters of high school vocational agriculture departments.

"The main reason (for the contest) is a motivational tool for learning. The primary reason for judging contests provides a much greater motivational factor for learning than not having contests," said Michael Dikeman, professor of animal sciences and industry and coordinator of the state FFA contest committee.

K-State acted as sponsor for the judging contests. The individual contests were designed and coordinated by various departments within the College of Agriculture. Medals and plaques, courtesy of the College of Agriculture and the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce, will be presented at the awards ceremony at 2:30 this afternoon in McCain Auditorium.

Contest categories included livestock, dairy cattle and poultry judging; meats identification; agriculture mechanics; crops identification; agriculture construction; soil and water conservation; agriculture power and machinery; agriculture structures and electrification; agriculture newswriting; dairy products; entomology and horticulture.

In the judging portion of the contests, such as livestock, dairy cattle and poultry, participants make selections and give oral reasons for their selections. Various divisions of the contests also require a written exam.

"The contest is a great tool for teaching students to make decisions," Dikeman said. "It allows students to become proficient in a few topic areas. It is focusing on a few important discipline areas and allowing them to develop considerable confidence in those areas."

"It's not 'old hat.' Each year we change and update to keep up with the current happenings in agriculture," said Mary Kane, executive secretary of Kansas FFA.

Kane said 157 FFA chapters comprise the seven Kansas regional districts.

Interviews for Star Agribusinessman and Star Farmer were conducted. Kane said the star award is given to one individual from each district that is selected on the basis of leadership and supervised occupational experience. Winners will be announced at the state convention the last week of May.

Officials propose plan to test high school athletes for drugs

By The Associated Press

PARSONS — Drug tests would be administered to all Parsons High School athletes under a plan to be presented by school officials to the Board of Education Tuesday night.

School officials said the program, which would be the first of its kind in Kansas, is not being proposed because of a big drug problem at the school. "It's for the health and safety of the kids involved," said Larry Wiederstein, assistant principal.

Superintendent Willis Heck said drug tests would be given to athletes, including cheerleaders and members of the drill team, because they serve as role models for younger children.

The estimated 250 athletes at the high school would be tested by urinalysis during the annual physical examination required by the Kansas State High School Activities Association and by random selection later in the school year. The school has about 500 students.

Tests would be conducted for cocaine, marijuana, alcohol, amphetamines, barbiturates, PCP and opiates.

The proposed policy was scheduled for discussion at a special board meeting Tuesday night. But no action is expected before the board's regular meeting May 15.

Several athletes interviewed about the program said they believe it is a good idea.

Chris VanWey, a sophomore football and basketball player, and Barry McMillan, a junior member of the football and track teams, acknowledged problems with alcohol but said drugs did not pose a major problem at the school.

"I think it's a good idea in sports because it's a privilege to play," McMillan said in an interview. "A lot of people are watching you, kids and stuff, and they should not be able to get by with that."

McMillan said as many as 20 to 30 percent of the athletes might be disqualified if testing is approved.

Mistrial possible in North case

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — While the Oliver North jury deliberated for the ninth day Monday, the judge raised the question of a mistrial if the news media succeed in forcing disclosure of a sealed document in the case.

"If you prevail in this matter," U.S. District Judge Gerhard A. Gesell told a lawyer for 10 news organizations, "one possibility is I must discharge the jury."

The jurors, knowing none of this, returned to the courthouse after a second weekend under the eyes of U.S. marshals and deliberated for five hours before quitting for the day. The total for the nine days stood at 45½ hours, still without an indication of what is delaying a verdict.

The document in question, a stipulation of facts agreed to by the government and North, summarizes highly secret "intercepts" of intelligence gathered as the National Security Agency tracked a CIA-assisted November 1985 shipment of Hawk missiles from Israel to Iran.

Legislators, judge discuss prison overcrowding

Meeting called an attempt 'to stampede' new measures

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Federal Judge Richard Rogers met Monday with four legislative leaders, but did not tell them what they should do to satisfy his order that Kansas eliminate prison overcrowding and improve conditions for mentally ill inmates within two years.

The meeting was arranged by Senate President Bud Burke, who attended along with Senate Minority Leader Michael Johnston, House Speaker Jim Braden and Rep. Donna Whiteman, who represented House Minority Leader Marvin Barkis.

Burke, Johnston and Braden came away from the meeting convinced the judge wants the Legislature to build the larger of two prisons being proposed.

However, Barkis said his reading of the meeting was that it was "just an effort to try to stampede us into doing something."

Barkis, who said as an attorney he didn't feel comfortable attending the meeting, said the legislative impasse over prisons is the result of a personality conflict between Braden and Rep. David Miller, R-Eudora, leader of a dozen dissident House Republicans who have been at odds with Braden all session.

"This is a contest of wills," Braden said. "The Republican leadership doesn't want David Miller and the 'reformers' to have a victory here at the end of the session. We'd be out of here if it wasn't for personalities."

The meeting with the judge came shortly before the House rejected — for the fourth time — a Senate-backed plan proposed by the Department of Corrections and supported by Gov. Mike Hayden.

It would spend $58.7 million to build a 768-bed maximum security prison and $14.5 million to build a new hospital to hold up to 256 mentally ill inmates.

A majority of House members are holding out for a 512-bed plan offered by Miller, which is backed by most House Democrats and the GOP rebels.

"This is a contest of wills. The Republican leadership doesn't want David Miller and the 'reformers' to have a victory here at the end of the session."
—Jim Braden, House speaker

The purpose of the meeting was for the lawmakers to discuss informally with the judge his order and the Legislature's effort to satisfy it.

"He isn't going to tell us what to do," Burke said of the meeting. "He isn't going to tell us what size prison we should build.

"What he did say was that if he were back in the Senate, he would vote for the 768 beds. It seemed to him the 768 and 256 seemed right. What he said was 768 appeared to be a more appropriate number.

"But it doesn't mean he's going to do anything about what the Legislature does. It's up to the plaintiffs at that point."

Braden agreed with Burke's assessment.

"The judge isn't going to tell us what to do," Braden said. "But he obviously feels something should be done.

"There is no doubt he feels more comfortable with the Senate version. However, I did not get any clear signal that he would object if we only passed the House version. His only concern is what the plaintiffs would do."

Rogers' order resulted from litigation initiated by Kansas State Penitentiary inmates.

Those inmates, represented by Washburn University law professors, could appeal the case to the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Denver if they feel the Legislature's response to Rogers' order is inadequate.

Rogers said in an interview recently that the 10th Circuit might order an immediate reduction in inmate population in the Kansas prison system if it reviews the case. That could mean the release of prisoners, as has occurred in some other states.

Johnston said Rogers "believes the evidence supports construction of a facility."

"He didn't say how many beds," the Senate Democratic leader added. "But he said the only plan developed by professionals is the department's plan. He urged us to give 768 (beds) strong consideration."

Johnston also said Rogers didn't threaten immediate action if the Legislature does nothing this session.

"But he expressed concern about an appeal," Johnston said. "He knows the pressure is building, and that reinforces what he's said in his order."

Despite the assessment of Burke, Johnston and Braden, House Democratic Leader Barkis, an opponent of the Senate plan, remained unconvinced.

He said the Senate has refused to negotiate seriously with the House majority that keeps rejecting its plan.

"Ours isn't a hocus-pocus plan. It's a good, solid plan," Barkis said. "It addresses both the overcrowding and the mental health portion."

Nieman, a 15-year faculty member, said low salaries at K-State are costing the University not only existing professors but are also acting as a block to individuals seeking entry-level positions. The salary increase being offered by Clemson would take several years for K-State to match, he said.

"It hurts to think of the lost possibilities. ... We're having a hard time getting beginning people," he said. "You have to attract them before you can keep them."

Some entry-level teaching positions are offering salaries that are not substantially less than salaries offered to existing faculty, Nieman said. This situation is causing "a real morale problem" among faculty members.

"People are not just slightly underpaid, they are grossly underpaid," he said.

One proposed solution designed to help improve higher education in Kansas has been the Board of Regent's Margin of Excellence plan, which would provide increased funding from the state. Both the Kansas Legislature and Gov. Mike Hayden have supported the plan.

Hayden signed a higher education appropriations bill Tuesday that included funding for the second year of MOE. The bill appropriates about $900 million to state universities, medical and technical schools, and Topeka's Washburn University.

In an earlier statement, President Jon Wefald said the bill places K-State in a position to not only retain quality faculty, but recruit "first-rate" faculty. The bill will also support salary increases and improve existing programs.

Woods said he agrees that raising salaries is a key factor in retaining faculty.

"It does point out that K-State should try to increase salaries as much as it can," Woods said. "We are not competitive. ... The MOE plan is going to help."

Downey said that although MOE provides more than average salary increases for K-State faculty, it will take several years for K-State to achieve the same salary levels of comparable institutions. K-State needs "10 percent to 15 percent increases for a couple of years," he said.

The state will need a "sustained effort" for several years if it expects to improve salaries and program support, Nieman said.

"I'm sure the Kansas Legislature has the staying power" to continue MOE for a third year, he said.

"Kansas is going to face a real crisis in higher education."

students what topic to write about, the length, the margins, etc. When using the holistic approach, the student makes up his or her topic, writes about it and shows it to the other students to proofread.

For the Whole Language Method to work the teacher must know her curriculum, Maughmer said

"You have to know, for instance, what the children are supposed to learn in first grade, but when I teach it and how I teach it shoud be relevant to the kids in my classroom," Maughmer said.

Amanda Arnold Elementary School started using the Whole Language Method in 1982.

Maughmer said, "teachers know what works with the kids because we are with them. We were spending the essence of our time on planning, grading papers, worksheets, etc. Now we're spending it with them."

The Whole Language Method was first researched in Australia, New Zealand and Canada, Maughmer said. New Zealand has the highest literacy rate in the world, she said.

Preparation for tests and evaluation are two disadvantages of the Whole Language Method, Maughmer said.

Man found guilty in retrial

By The Associated Press

EL DORADO — A Latham man was convicted Monday for the second time in connection with the 1987 execution-style slaying of an 18-year-old Andover man.

A Butler County District Court jury deliberated about two and a half hours before finding John Beebe guilty of aiding and abetting first-degree murder, felony murder and aggravated kidnapping in the January 1987 shooting death of Leland Capps.

Capps' body, chained to a cinderblock, was pulled from the White Water River southwest of Augusta in southeast Kansas on Jan. 5, 1987. He was shot once in the back of the head with a .22-caliber pistol.

Beebe had originally been convicted of aiding and abetting first-degree murder and aggravated kidnapping in Capps' murder. But, the Kansas Supreme Court overturned that conviction last December. The court said Butler County District Court Judge John E. Sanders erred in his instructions to the jury in the Beebe case.

Beebe was arrested Jan. 5 after Billy Mathis, Douglass, confessed to the shooting and turned himself in. Mathis eventually implicated Beebe and Bill Horton, also of Douglass, in the shooting.

Mathis pleaded guilty to felony murder and aggravated kidnapping in connection with the shooting and is serving concurrent life sentences on those counts.

bill.

This bill directly impacts the overall atmosphere at K-State, she said.

The bill will affect about 3,000 classified workers at K-State — 1,600 of whom will be affected by the longevity payment plan, said Rosalind Fisher, director of personnel. Faculty and administrators will not be eligible since they are unclassified employees.

According to the bill, it will take effect and be in force after publication in the Kansas Register.

Faculty downs Student Senate, 21-11

Staff/Joe Freeman

David McIntyre, junior in electrical engineering, has trouble handling a ground ball during the softball game between Student Senate and Anderson Annihilators Monday. The administrators won, 21-11.

By Paige Gantz
Collegian Reporter

"Never before has a more finely tuned, mentally alert, physically gifted group of administrators been gathered together for a common cause — the destruction of SGA."

That was the message John Fairman, assistant vice president for institutional advancement, gave his team before the second annual softball game between the Student Governing Association and the K-State administrators.

Fairman, otherwise known as Dr. Doom, coached the administrators to a 10-run victory against SGA at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex Monday. Fairman said the "talented" administrators would try to keep the game close, however, "with SGA's talent, it could be very difficult" to score that few runs.

The game was spiced with a little revenge on the part of the administrators who were attacked by SGA members during a practice Saturday morning. The SGA members loaded slingshots to bombard water balloons at the administrators.

"We launched 35 water balloons at the administrators and then individually grabbed two balloons so that we could charge them," said Todd Johnson, chairman of Student Senate and junior in agronomy. "They were soaked!"

That move, Fairman said, sparked the Anderson Annihilators to their 21-11 win.

"Because of that stunt we will have no mercy today," Fairman said. "We plan on living up to our name which is to annihilate them."

Fairman, who had discarded his normal suit for a pair of sweats with boxers on the outside, did give SGA members some credit.

"We think they brought in a few ringers. I mean a few of the players actually look athletic. However, the rest of them look like the typical SGA stereotype," he said.

By the top of the third inning, Monica Connet, communication chairman and team captain, was beginning to show signs of anxiety. SGA was losing, 14-0.

At that point she turned to her team and said: "If you hit fly balls then you will never bat again."

The game's main rules required that two women play in every inning, the presidents pitch the first and fifth innings and the loser purchase the pizza and pop for a get-together after the game at President Jon Wefald's house.

However, the president rule caused problems for Student Body President Laurian Cuffy, who didn't have quite the pitching talent Wefald exhibited.

"I pitched the first inning and planned on continuing until Monica said, 'Laurian, you're out of there.' Yes, I knew nothing about softball until two weeks ago," Cuffy said.

Following the loss, SGA players called "foul play" and claimed that the game was rigged and that the administrators had an unfair advantage.

"There was definitely foul play going on," Johnson said. "We all saw our coach, Monica, giving a pile of bills to Fairman. She was obviously buying him off."

Connet agreed.

"We also heard Fairman say that the only way Wefald would pay for the pizza was if SGA let them win," she said.

The referees were an added problem, Johnson said.

"The refs, who were adminstrators themselves, were calling balls strikes and strikes balls. These must have been people who had just gotten raises," Johnson said.

"We knew we had to blow the game since a lot of (SGA) members plan on graduating and figured a loss could or would jeopardize this," he said.

Despite the loss, Connet issued a challenge.

"We challenge them next fall to another game in which the game will be played with SGA rules and referees," Connet said.

"I would say this is a monumental victory for 'The Annihilators,' especially given the fact of how Fairman built this game up," Wefald said. "We all had a lot of fun and plan on making this an annual affair."

Nel, Rive finish best season ever

By Carolyn Holcroft
Sports Writer

The dangerous duo of Valerie Rive and Marijke Nel turned in the best doubles finish ever in the history of K-State Sunday at the Big Eight tennis tournament by advancing to the finals and finishing second at the No. 2 doubles spot.

The tandem finished the regular season with a 20-6 record overall, getting key wins against Oklahoma and Kansas, as well as going undefeated on the Florida tour during spring break. They finished second in the Big Eight regular season standings at 6-1 and were the first Wildcat doubles team ever to advance to a championship round at the conference tournament.

Both Rive and Nel agree that experience has played a large factor in their success this season, but their attitude is what has made it fun.

Nel said the duo has much more fun than some of the teams they've played, and that some don't even seem to be enjoying the matches. Rive said they try to keep the mood light.

"We have little things that we make jokes about," she said, "like little private jokes when it's getting kind of tense. They're things that we say to each other to relax."

The two have been together as a doubles team for two years. Nel and Rive laugh in remembering their history together.

"It's been two years, on and off... it sounds like a relationship," Nel said, giggling. "In the fall we weren't separated, were we?"

"Yes. We were divorced," answered Rive, laughing.

Nel believes part of the reason tennis coach Steve Bietau separated them periodically was because of their playing styles. She said Bietau categorizes players as either explosive or consistent. Nel and Rive are both explosive. Rive said one of the duo's major accomplishments was gradually becoming more consistent without losing their extremely aggressive attitude.

Both have become familiar with each other's game and adjusted accordingly. Rive has become accustomed to Nel taking desperate dives after impossible shots.

"Marijke, as you probably know, is known for diving," she stated, laughing. "And sometimes you'll be in a long point, and she'll be diving for everything. Finally, when we get an easy lob, I'll miss it."

"Yeah, I'll be smashing my face up against some fence and I'll hear Val giggling over there," Nel contested.

Both netters particularly enjoyed their performance last weekend. Rive said that, going in, she knew they had the potential to at least advance to the finals, if not win. Both agreed that even in the final match, the stress didn't become a controlling factor.

"We didn't have anything to lose. I think we did scare them, and they weren't prepared for it," Nel said. "The girl we played against was South African, and I enjoyed that because you always have something to prove to a fellow countryman."

Richmond named top rookie

Former Wildcat star gets 80 of 85 votes

By The Associated Press

OAKLAND, Calif. — Former K-State standout Mitch Richmond, who overcame Coach Don Nelson's aversion to rookies and helped Golden State post the fourth most improved record in NBA history, was named Rookie of the Year Monday.

The Warriors' first-round draft choice and first guard chosen last summer, Richmond played his way into the starting lineup early in the preseason and averaged 22 points per game, 16th best in the NBA, along with 5.9 rebounds and 4.2 assists.

"He's as good as anybody that I've ever coached," said Nelson, who had All-NBA players Marques Johnson and Sidney Moncrief during 11 years as coach of the Milwaukee Bucks.

Golden State's shooting guard was an easy winner in balloting for the Eddie Gottlieb Trophy, receiving 80 of 85 votes from a nationwide panel of sports writers and broadcasters.

Willie Anderson of the San Antonio Spurs received four votes and Chris Morris of the New Jersey Nets drew one vote from the media panel, composed of three from each league city and 10 representatives of the national media.

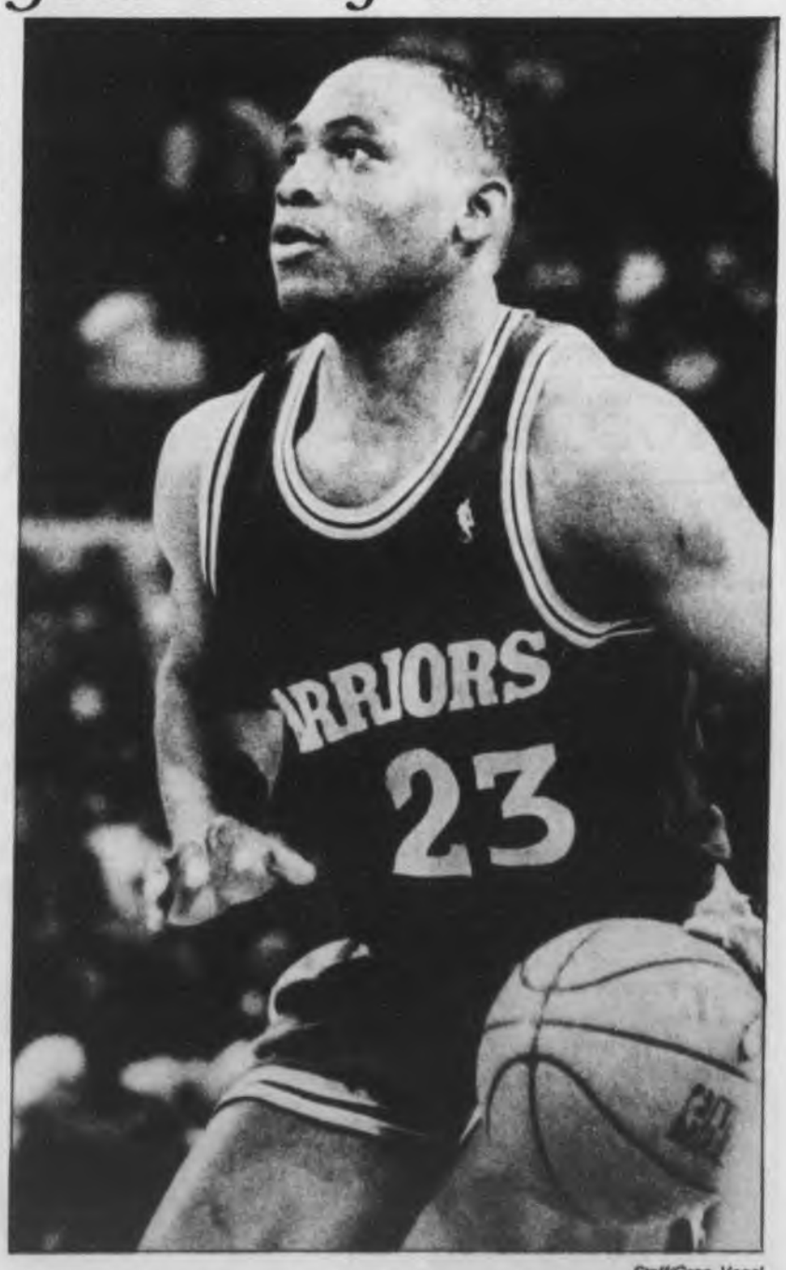
"This is something very special to me, something I'll cherish," Richmond said at a press conference at the Oakland Coliseum, where the Warriors will try to complete a three-game playoff sweep over Utah tonight at 9:30 (CST).

"I was fortunate to be drafted by Golden State, which gave me the opportunity to play early and prove myself early," he said. "I'm surprised that things happened so early for me. When I got confidence in myself, everything jelled and came a little easier for me."

The 6-foot-5, 225-pound Richmond, a member of the 1988 U.S. Olympic team, started all 79 games he played as the Warriors improved their record by 23 victories over last season.

He helped the Warriors go from a 20-62 record a year ago to a 43-39 mark and their second playoff berth in 12 years.

"He's turned this whole team around," said Chris Mullin, who teamed with Richmond to form the league's highest-scoring duo this season at 48.6 points per game.



"Mitch is a much better player as a rookie than I was. He's been a great player from Day One. He's got no weaknesses, and he has a great attitude. He's hungry and wants to be the best."

Nelson, who for years has disliked giving rookies a lot of playing time, told Richmond last summer that he might not play much in his first season even though he was the fifth player selected in the June draft.

But Nelson was impressed enough to give him a great deal of playing time during preseason, and he responded by averaging 21 points. One night in October, he scored 14 of Golden State's 16 overtime points in a victory over the Jazz.

"I knew I had a special player going into our camp," Nelson said. "Then, in camp, it wasn't more than a day or two old when all the players and myself realized we had somebody special who was going to play a lot. I inserted him in the lineup and he just stayed in there."

Richmond, an outstanding defensive player in college, made a big impact Nov. 29, when he outscored Chicago's Michael Jordan, the NBA's two-time scoring champion, 27-26, in a 109-99 Golden State victory.

Fishing increases with warm weather

By Todd Jenkins
Collegian Reporter

Fishing — as a sport or as a hobby — can offer the angler a challenge.

"Fishing is more of a hobby for me," said Darin Davis, sophomore in business administration. "I started fishing when I was 6 years old. It was something we did as a family. As a kid, after school I would always run home, grab my rod, and head for the pond next to my house."

Fishing can also be a competitive sport for anglers, which is the case for Kerry Kruep, a K-State graduate.

Kruep has earned a "reputation as one of the state's best bass fishermen," according to Kansas Game & Fish magazine.

Chuck Bever, fish biologist for Tuttle Creek Reservoir, said now is the time to start fishing.

"With the warmer weather ... the fishing is starting to pick up," Bever said. "The north part of the lake warms up faster. Because of this, the crappie start their spring spawn in this area."

Tuttle Creek has a wide variety of fish, he said. Anglers can fish for channel catfish, flathead catfish, largemouth bass, white bass and crappie.

When fishing for the spawning crappie, Bever said, "look for steep banks, rocky shorelines, brush piles or weed beds.

"Depending on the weather and water clarity, crappie can be in deep or shallow water. If the water is muddy or murky, the fish will be in shallow water. If the water is clear, the fish will be located in the deeper water."

Many baits can be used for fishing crappie, but the standard baits are the jig or live minnow, he said.

To catch other types of fish at Tuttle Creek, many different baits are available, Bever said. Spinner baits, crank baits, buzz baits, plastic worms, and different types of live baits all attract the fish. Fishing with these baits in the morning and evening will consistently work the best.

Before casting a baited pole, fishers must purchase a permit. For Kansas residents, a one-year license, valid until December, can be purchased for $13.50. A 24-hour license costs $3.50. For out-of-state anglers, a season license is $28.50, a five-day license is $13.50, and a 24-hour license is $3.50.

Water plan's funding, program's creation denied by Senate

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The Senate killed a bill Monday that would create both a program to regulate underground storage tanks and provide permanent funding for the State Water Plan.

The Senate, led by rural lawmakers, defeated the bill, 25-15. The vote put the issue to rest for this session.

"This is the best deal the farm community will get," said Rep. Dennis Spaniol, R-Wichita, who carried the bill in the House. "If the bill would have passed, it would have closed the door on the issue for the next three to five years. Now the door remains open."

The Senate debate focused on funding for the water plan, and scarcely a word was mentioned about the storage tank provision.

The Water Plan financing would have assessed a 3-cent fee on every 1,000 gallons of water sold by municipalities or used for industrial purposes or stock watering. Irrigators were not included, however.

The bill also would have increased the registration fee on all pesticides by $100 and the inspection fee on each ton of fertilizer by $1.40.

It also called for $6 million from the state general fund and $2 million from the state Economic Development Initiative Fund to be used for water projects.

"We're not talking about fees; we're talking about new taxes," said Rep. Janice Lee, D-Kensington. "I don't think this is a time to be putting a tax on agriculture. There will be no wheat crop this year."

She was joined by other opponents who said the water funding proposal placed an unfair burden on farmers and harmed agriculture.

"What's good for agriculture is good for the state of Kansas," said Sen. Leroy Hayden, D-Satanta.

Supporters said the bill did not single out farmers.

"The water plan is long overdue," said Sen. Audrey Langworthy, R-Prairie Village. "This may not be the perfect plan. It has been criticized extensively from all sides. But it's time to move on."

Senate Majority Leader Fred Kerr, R-Pratt, said passage of the bill will make a clear statement that Kansas is dedicated to preserving a clean water supply. Any flaws in the bill could be corrected next year, he added.

"I think there'll be a lot of criticism of the Legislature for not addressing a long-term water plan," the Republican leader said.

Sen. Jim Allen, R-Ottawa, himself a farmer, warned rural lawmakers that the proposal could be the best that will be offered.

He noted that after reapportionment in 1990, 56 of the 125 members of the House will come from the four most populous counties — Sedgwick, Shawnee, Johnson and Wyandotte — and in 1992 urban lawmakers could have the upper hand in the Senate.

Fees assessed on farmers for water use could be a lot stiffer in the future, Allen warned

"Yes, agriculture is going to pay," he said. "But they are going to pay a lot less than they are going to get back."

The bill combined two different bills — the Storage Tank Act and the State Water Plan Financing Act. The House Calendar and Printing Committee, which is composed of the House leadership, amended the water plan into the storage tank bill after the water plan bill was killed by the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee, headed by Sen. Ross Doyen, R-Concordia, a farmer.

Commission proposes changes in wheat classes

By Gary Lytle
Collegian Reporter

Hard and soft white winter wheat may look the same and be graded the same, but they are different types of wheat.

Some kernels look alike, but the two grains have different milling and flour properties, said Robert Bequette, cereal chemist in grain science.

To help solve the problem of identification of the two types of wheat, the Hard White Wheat Classification Subcommittee of U.S. Wheat Associates and the Kansas Wheat Commission have developed a proposal for changes in the classification system for white wheat.

The University's Department of Grain Science served as consultants for the proposal.

By current U.S. Grain Standards, the white wheat class is divided into hard and soft subclasses, Bequette said. If a sample of wheat has less than 75 percent vitreous, non-chalky kernels, it is classified as soft white wheat. Samples with 75 percent or more vitreous kernels are classed as hard white wheat.

"Many times a soft white (wheat) which should be used for cakes, cookies and ice cream cones will be graded hard," he said. "Hard white (wheat), which should be used for bread, often will be graded soft white and then be dumped with the cookie wheats even though it would not be suitable for baking cookies."

"When you condition (wheat) and mill it, you can always tell what type it is because (hard and soft white wheat) don't mill the same, and the flour is not the same," Bequette said.

During the past year, much of the soft white wheat in Washington, Oregon and Idaho was graded as hard white because of the effects of the growing conditions on the quality of the wheat, he said.

"The current grading system does not properly identify white wheat," Bequette said.

The proposed changes in the white wheat classification system contain six main points, according to a report on market classification of hard white wheat, which was prepared by Bequette.

- Hard white and soft white wheat should be defined as separate classes of wheat instead of subclasses of white wheat.
- Soft white, white club and western white should be defined as subclasses of soft white.
- Hard and soft white wheat should be distinguished on the basis of near-infrared hardness tests, single kernel hardness tests, by both types of hardness tests, or by distinct external varietal kernel features.
- All other wheats should be treated as contrasting classes when mixed with hard white wheat.
- Hard white wheat should be treated as a contrasting class when mixed with soft white.
- The grade determinations for white wheat given in the Federal Grain Inspection Service grain inspection handbook should be maintained.

The proposed changes were submitted to the service Dec. 1, Bequette said.

Two changes have been made in the proposal by the service, he said. One involved the change of a subclass name from soft white to common white wheat.

The other change concerned using visable kernel features to distinguish hard white varieties because hardness testing equipment and procedures have not been finalized. In addition, only a few hard white varieties are produced or considered for general release, according to the report.

At the present time, the proposal is in the General Council of the service, said Don Leathn, analyst for the agency.

After the proposal is considered by the General Council, it will be reviewed by the General Secretary followed by an Office of Management and Budget review, Leathn said.

After the review, the proposal is to be published in the Federal Register, a government publication, and the public has 60 days to comment on it, he said.

Leathn said he did not expect to see the proposal published in the Federal Register until mid-June or later.

At the end of the 60-day period, the service will evaluate the public's comments and use the input to draft a final proposal, he said. The final proposal will return to the General Council, General Secretary and Office of Management and Budget. If there are no changes in the proposal, it will be adopted.

The U.S. Grain Standards usually require a one-year period between adoption and implementation of changes to the wheat classification system, he said.

If there are no major conflicts, the proposal could be implemented by the beginning of the 1990 crop year, Leathn said.

The white winter wheat developed by K-State researchers is shorter than the standard red wheat grown in Kansas and has a higher yield potential, said Rollin Sears, associate professor of agronomy.

"White wheat's Achilles' heel is that as a rule, it tends to be susceptible to pre-harvest sprouting," Sears said. "If you get a rain during harvest, or right before, the wheat can germinate in the head and that reduces the quality of the grain harvested substantially."

Bequette said even before visable signs of sprouting appear, the baking properties of the wheat can be altered.

For this reason, white wheat is better suited for western Kansas where there is less chance of rain before or during the harvesting season, Sears said.

Because hard white wheat is a new type of grain in Kansas and because there is no specific classification for it, it must be grown and handled on an identity-preserve basis, Bequette said.

Until a white wheat classification system is established, the American White Winter Wheat Producers Association, a growers' co-op, will oversee the production and marketing of the white wheat grain to eliminate the risk of contamination by other types of wheat, he said.

Farmers growing hard white wheat must sign a contract stating they are able to grow the grain in identity-preserve conditions and will sell the grain only to the association, Bequette said.

The lack of a market classification for hard white wheat is an impediment to marketing the wheat to grain mills and creates a problem of seed availability for planting, said Ralph Wolffing, instructor of grain science and industry.

It could easily be five years before hard white wheat is in general release for use by the average farmer, he said.

Inn offers 'mystery' to guests

Some weekends reserved for mock murders

By Lori Siegrist
of the Collegian Staff

Although many people visit small-town America to escape crime, some come looking for it at the Morning Star Inn Bed and Breakfast in St. Marys.

During the past few months, the inn has become the scene of many "murders," averaging at least one every other weekend. Certain weekends are designated for Murder Mysteries, allowing guests to become involved in mock murders during the course of an evening.

Formerly a convent for the Sisters of Charity, this bed and breakfast establishment, featuring the Camelot Dinner House, not only accommodates and serves its customers but also entertains them.

Guests are not observers. They are usually notified beforehand what character they will be portraying so they can come in costume. Often they become not only a "victim" of the "murderer," but an addict to the attraction and allure of the escapism found in such a getaway.

"We're always trying to think of things that will get people in their cars and get them to come out here," said Ann Smith, owner of the Morning Star Inn, located about 30 miles east of Manhattan on Highway 24. She and her partner, Adele Frederick, opened their business in May 1988 to accommodate parents visiting students at St. Marys Academy and College, a private school in the predominantly Catholic community of about 2,000.

After three weeks of refurbishing, the inn opened to the public. The owners credit some of their good fortune to the nuns, who cared for the wood of the door frames and staircase. The 1902 limestone building sat empty for more than a decade, playing host to community haunted houses and blood drives.

No hint of sullen nights spent by nuns or eerie haunted houses remains. The deep hues of blues and greens in the downstairs parlor and dining rooms give a lively, warm feeling to the Victorian velvet furnishings and antiques.

The eight upstairs guest rooms are named after priests or saints, including the Carte Blanche a la Keane suite, complete with private bath and refrigerator. The suite was a chapel for the nuns. The sisters were so discreet, they paneled over two bathroom windows which carpenters later discovered.

No doubt the nuns who once inhabited this convent-turned-inn would no longer be comfortable in this modern getaway, especially during Murder Mystery weekends.

"It started with a crazy group of people who had formed an out-to-dinner club," Smith said. "They had eaten here and wanted to come out to spend the night but asked 'What is there to do in St. Marys, Kan.?'"

Although the staff had never had a Murder Mystery, they all agreed they'd love to do it, and this outgoing group seemed to be perfect first-time volunteers. After contacting the K-State Players, theater students revised an old script to the needs of the inn. Since then, the staff has created the characters and general plot.

"We don't have scripts," Frederick said. "It is ad lib by the actors." The staff recruits local people to portray key roles. They take the spotlight for adventure and just to have dinner, she said.

"Wildly successful" is how Smith described the first mystery, which entailed bickerings, rampant affairs, embezzling, poisonings, shootings, sirens blaring, guns firing and babies crying.

After creating about five different mysteries, they are beginning to repeat the themes, with different groups and actors who "portray the parts just a little bit different each time," Frederick said. "They guide the general direction of the whole thing."

Although many bed & breakfasts do not have extracurricular activities or the capability to handle private parties, having the dinner house helps when planning those events, Smith said. "We're kind of unique in that way."

"Some (B&Bs) are creating special promotions to build attendance and business," said Steve Kappler, public relations manager for Missouri's Division of Tourism.

Mike Werner, Missouri and Illinois representative for the national Bed and Breakfast Association, said the smaller B&Bs are more traditional, more like "the real thing," which is what many tourists, especially Europeans, are seeking.

So individuality can go a long way toward attracting business. "We take a building and individualize it," Werner said. "To promote a B&B, we think of the community location and the area. Each place must come up with its own idea."

Customers are responding to this specialization. Werner said the average guest is about 35 years old and a professional, usually in the education profession.

Smith could not specify a certain type of person who visits the Morning Star Inn. She said customers are from 21 to 65 years old.

With most of its clientele coming from Topeka and Manhattan, the inn is usually full on special nights, he said. Besides Murder Mysteries, it has featured luncheon fashion shows.

"Lovers' Nights" are popular, featuring tableside flambee and Caesar's salads prepared at the table. Live music lingers in the background as guests sip wine or other drink.

Frederick said many events center around holidays or special celebrations, such as an Easter Brunch, and receptions for graduations and weddings. Smith said one couple had their wedding in the parlor, before retiring for the night in one of the rooms upstairs.

The most successful venture by far, though, has been the Murder Mysteries, she said.

"At first we booked five consecutive parties," Smith said. "We were bouncing off the walls with ideas." Plots have varied from a 1950s reunion/sock hop to a marriage between the children of two mafioso families, in which guests were frisked at the door if they didn't know the password.

"Some we told; some we didn't," Smith said.

As Werner said, "You never know what you're getting into when you visit a B&B. Guests need to be adventuresome."

Disney, MGM blend movie magic, rides at new theme park

By The Associated Press

LAKE BUENA VISTA, Fla. — Disney-MGM Studios opened its $400 million theme park Monday, hoping to lure the nostalgic to its version of Hollywood's golden era and thrill-seekers to rides that will take them to places like Catastrophe Canyon.

The 135-acre complex blends filmmaking with backstage studio tours and ride-through, walk-through attractions. Movie and TV production began last summer on its three sprawling sound studios and backlot street scenes.

The new attraction on the entertainment giant's 43-square-mile Central Florida resort complements its other two theme parks: the Magic Kingdom and Epcot Center. It has its own admission fee: $29 for adults and $23 for children 3 to 9.

Disney Chairman Michael Eisner and comedian Bob Hope were on hand to do the opening day honors on an outdoor stage in front of a re-creation of Grauman's Chinese Theater on Hollywood Boulevard.

"It's the largest theme park run by actors, or cartoon characters, unless you want to count Washington D.C.," Hope joked.

"The world you have entered was created by the Walt Disney Company and is dedicated to Hollywood ... a world that never was and always will be," Eisner told the crowd.

A Pennsylvania carpenter and his family led the way through the gates as the first visitors at the Florida attraction.

"We wanted to be first and beat the crowd but never expected anything like this," said Allan Gutierrez, 37, as he and his wife, two daughters and father-in-law strolled into the park.

"It's incredible," said Mary Gutierrez, 37, about their back-to-back appearances on national television and meetings with a gamut of Hollywood stars attending the grand-opening ceremonies.

Disney officials would not disclose attendance figures, but at least 15,000 were expected for opening day. Most attractions were crowded. Disney hopes to attract 3 million to 5 million visitors a year.

The grand opening followed a star-studded weekend of parties and previews for 4,000 journalists and family members.

Some 40 movie and television stars attended a Saturday night gala and paraded down the park's Hollywood Boulevard in vintage automobiles Saturday night. Among them were Bette Midler, Lauren Bacall, George Burns, Audrey Hepburn, Betty White and Kevin Costner.

It took Galileo 16 years to master the universe. You have one night.

It seems unfair. The genius had all that time. While you have a few short hours to learn your sun spots from your satellites before the dreaded astronomy exam.

On the other hand, Vivarin gives you the definite advantage. It helps keep you awake and mentally alert for hours. Safely and conveniently. So even when the subject matter's dull, your mind will stay razor sharp.

If Galileo had used Vivarin, maybe he could have mastered the solar system faster, too.

State provides funding to repair Bluemont heating

By Joe Kennedy
Collegian Reporter

The heating system in Bluemont Hall has been a problem for several years, but the problem may be resolved with state appropriated funds to redesign the system, said Lawrence Garvin, director of facilities planning.

"Senate Bill 67 called for a transfer of $390,000 from the construction defects fund to the department of administration for Bluemont Hall defects repair," Garvin said. "It will be combined with an omnibus bill for appropriation that will include appropriations for all state agencies, highway and prison."

The redesign will include replacing parts that were operating inadequately, Garvin said. The system is the same one that was installed when the building was constructed in 1981.

"It has never functioned successfully."
—Lawrence Garvin director of facilities

"It has never functioned successfully," he said.

The facilities planning department has been aware of the problem since the first winter the building was occupied. The designer of the system, Van Doren, Hazard and Stallings Inc., has attempted to fix the problem on three occasions.

The company wanted to attempt fixing the system once more and then be released by the state from further work on the system, said Vincent Cool, associate director of facilities planning. The state refused and employed Clark, Richardson and Biskup, a consulting engineering firm from Kansas City, Mo., to give an estimate on the needed work.

Several years ago, instructors in Bluemont Hall notified the facilities department of the problems, and facilities has been very responsive ever since, said Leo Schell, professor of curriculum and instruction.

"(The intructors in Bluemont Hall) kept the facilities department notified, especially when it got so cold that our plants would freeze," Schell said. "We realized that it was out of our hands and at a higher level, consequently letters and phone calls would come to no avail."

The state has appropriated the funds for the repair and it may attempt to recover the funds if fault is found with the design of the system, Cool said.

Ticket manager loves working with public

By Ginger Miller
Collegian Reporter

Students sometimes camp for days to purchase athletic tickets for prime seating, but few people realize almost 34 years of experience are behind the scenes of ticket sales.

On June 5, 1955, Carol Crumbaker Adolph was hired as a bookkeeper. In 1968, Adolph was promoted to ticket manager — and she still has the position.

Simply put, Adolph said she loves her job.

"The people ... I think that's what has kept me here," she said. "I like working with K-Staters. They're really special to me."

Overall, Adolph said, the types of coaches, athletes and students have not changed through the years, but the KSU Athletic Department programs have, which has kept her job interesting.

Adolph witnessed the move from Memorial Stadium to KSU Stadium in 1968, and more recently the move from Ahearn Field House to Bramlage Coliseum.

"Work has increased, but because we're able to sell more tickets, we can reach more people," Adolph said.

Memorial Stadium could seat from 7,000 to 8,000 people, whereas KSU Stadium can accommodate 40,000, she said.

"The expansion of our department has really been dramatic," Adolph said.

At one time, every athletic office was housed in Ahearn, she said. Now the offices are in three different buildings — Ahearn, Bramlage and the football office.

"I don't feel we have the same closeness we once had," Adolph said. "But all the areas have grown and we had to expand.

"I still have so many good memories of the things at Ahearn — the great crowds, the enthusiasm. It takes a while to adjust to the change."

Adolph has seen the K-State basketball team led by four coaches. When she first started, Tex Winter was the coach. Since then, she has worked with Cotton Fitzsimmons, Jack Hartman and Lon Kruger.

Although Adolph said she would not want to single out any one game or coach for a favorite memory, she said, "the last game in Ahearn was very emotional for me. It's a game I'll always remember."

The changes haven't all been pleasant, Adolph said. She was disappointed in the students' support of football last fall.

In contrast to last year's football support, though, she remembered how things used to be.

Staff/Brian Kratzer
Carol Adolph, a K-State employee for 33 years, has worked her way up from bookkeeper to her present position as ticket manager.

"Seeing the stadium filled during 1971 and 1972 was real rewarding, inspiring," she said. "It really kind of hurts ... remembering how people used to come and enjoy being at the games."

Adolph said the alumni support has been good through the years, but enthusiasm comes from the students. She's hoping the new coaching staff and attitude will bring about a change.

In addition to the management of tickets, much of her job involves pleasing people, she said.

"I try to please everyone, but that's impossible. Especially since everyone wants to be at the 50-yard line or at half court. But I do strive to please the customers," Adolph said.

Assistant director appointed to national association

By Todd Jenkins
Collegian Reporter

Sylvia Scott, assistant director in the Union Program Department, has been appointed Heart of America regional coordinator of the National Association for Campus Activities.

NACA is an educational, trade and professional service association in campus activities.

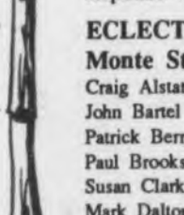
"I work with people from the states of Kansas, Colorado, Nebraska, Missouri and Wyoming," Scott said.

The association works with student activities, primarily campus entertainment programming, she said.

"I'm responsible for the steering committee of our region," Scott said. "It is made up of around 20 volunteers from throughout the region. The steering committee makes the policies and monitors the budget."

Scott said she doesn't believe it will affect her current position.

"It is very demanding time-wise, and I have to have the support of my staff. They will have to pull together," Scott said. "One thing it does is bring a lot of positive recognition to the University, and I represent the University then to a lot of people."



This new position is voluntary, she said.

"I volunteered and was elected but it is not a paid position," Scott said. "It is very self-satisfying to see what you can do with a group of volunteers. It's also a way to keep abreast of new things that are happening as far as things that apply to my job."

The position is a two-year appointment with the option of a third year, she said.

The Union Program Council belongs to NACA, Scott said. There is a membership fee to belong. UPC gets to see the possible talent that could be brought to the campus, she said.

NACA has a membership comprised of more than 1,000 colleges and universities and more than 400 associated firms in the contemporary entertainment, performing and fine arts, recreation, travel, and leisure services industries.

Collegian Sports is a hit.

③ SNEAK PREVIEWS, Jeffrey Lyons

Wednesday, May 3, and Thursday, May 4, 7:00 & 9:30 p.m., Forum Hall
A chance meeting between two young girls under Atlantic City's Boardwalk marks the beginning of a remarkable 40-year friendship in "Beaches." Bette Midler and Barbara Hershey star in the poignant film about love, loss and loyalty. Rated PG-13. Admission: $1.75 with KSU ID

Friday, May 5, Saturday, May 6, 7 & 9:30 p.m., & Sunday 7 p.m. Forum Hall.
Melanie Griffith plays a working girl determined to pull herself out of the secretarial pool and into the upper ranks of New York's brokerage business. Harrison Ford plays Griffith's ally and romantic interest and Sigourney Weaver is her high-powered boss. "Working Girl" is a wonderfully entertaining movie that combines the breezy charm of a 1930's screwball farce with the sharp stinging wit of a 1980s comedy. Rated R. Admission: $1.75 with KSU ID.

Wright defends ethics

Endorsements included in investigation

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Speaker Jim Wright, now defending himself against House ethics charges, in 1985 inserted in Congress' official journal his effusive endorsement of a home video program sold by a company employing his wife.

In the endorsement, later used by the company for promotional material, Wright praised the program as "a marvelously useful home video tool."

Congressional rules generally bar members from receiving benefits as a result of improperly exerting their position, and guidelines caution lawmakers against becoming so "affiliated with a particular enterprise" that it creates an appearance of impropriety.

The speaker, who is defending himself against charges that he broke House rules 69 times during the past decade, has argued recently that the career of his wife, Betty, is totally separate from his work as a member of Congress.

But in the Dec. 9, 1985, edition of the Congressional Record, Wright inserted a 350-word endorsement of the Pacific Institute's family video series that Betty Wright had helped develop. He did not mention her $36,000-a-year job at the Seattle, Wash., company or role in its production.

"It was a nice gesture. We didn't ask for it," said Jack Fitterer, the company's chief operating officer. "We were pleasantly surprised."

Asked Monday about the incident, Wright said he would have no comment.

In the endorsement, Wright calls the marketing of the video "a heartening development indeed" and notes that the series is "available at a nominal price within the range of most American families." The tapes sold for $34.95 each.

He also terms the taped motivational program "a marvelously useful home video tool to promote togetherness and really productive family conversation."

Wright adds: "From its base in Seattle, Wash., the Pacific Institute has drawn upon the skills of professional educators and specialists in personal and family development to perfect a series of 21 home video programs .... The institute promises to make these services available widely throughout the country."

The company later reprinted Wright's Congressional Record comments as promotional material for its video series.

Any member of Congress is free to insert material into the Congressional Record, which is the daily journal of Congress' official floor activities. But the rules generally bar any member from receiving benefits "which would occur by virtue of influence improperly exerted from his position in the Congress."

The guidelines also caution lawmakers not to become "too closely affiliated with a particular enterprise" to prevent the appearance that the rule is being broken. They say further that "communications should be drafted so that they do not lend themselves to misinterpretation as an official endorsement from the Congress."

And the rules specifically bar members from letting their congressional stationery be used by outsiders for commercial promotions.

In addition to charging Wright with 69 instances of House rules violations, the ethics panel is continuing to investigate a Texas gas well deal that brought huge profits to Wright's blind trust in a short period last year. Wright's ties to the Pacific Institute and his wife's employment are not currently subjects of the ethics probe.

It is not known whether the committee was previously aware of Wright's submission of the promotional material to the Record, first reported Monday by the Wall Street Journal.

But Betty Wright's employment by another company, the investment partnership she and her husband had with Fort Worth real estate developer George Mallick and his wife Marlene, is central to the ethics probe. The panel found reason to believe that $18,000-a-year job from 1981 through 1984 was nothing more than a conduit for gifts.

Students to create designs for human habitats in space

By Janette Poole
Collegian Reporter

K-State students will be formulating designs for human habitats in outer space.

NASA has chosen K-State as one of 17 universities nationwide to particpate in a three-year design study for the control of closed environmental systems used in space travel and living, said Allen Cogley, professor and department head of mechanical engineering. The project begins with the first design team starting in the fall semester.

Cogley said the mechanical and chemical engineering departments were chosen to administer the project which incorporates the use of an advanced design team of about 20 students per year.

The proposal, titled "Automation of Closed Environments in Space for Human Comfort and Safety," provides $25,000 per year for the salary of a graduate assistant, permanent equipment, communication networks, travel expenses, and supplies, he said. The graduate assistant acts as the liaison between the University and NASA.

At least 20 percent of the team members, who will be able to obtain credit from their departments for their work, will not be engineering students, Cogley said. Applicants should be second semester juniors or first semester seniors due to the time commitment and the level of work involved.

The project is an excellent opportunity for future employment with NASA, Cogley said.

"It's a good opportunity for students and faculty to get their foot in the door," he said.

K-State has participated in NASA projects, such as when the mechanical engineering department design team won the national competition in 1983-84 for its work in the specialized design of a space glove.

Cogley, who wrote the proposal for the University, said the nationwide program was announced in January.

He said the project is interdisciplinary, with students and faculty from departments of mechanical, chemical and electrical engineering, biology, computer science, human ecology, and veterinary medicine/physiology. All faculty members are potential consultants for the project.

Yearly written and oral final reports will be given at national meetings at various NASA centers.

Legislature passes University's request of additional funding

By Chris Koger
Staff Writer

An amendment correcting a $441,000 clerical error in K-State's budget request was added to the Legislature's omnibus appropriations bill Tuesday following a dispute about the funding in the House last weekend.

The funding request was passed in the Senate without debate, but hit a snag in the House when the amendment was rejected. House Speaker Jim Braden criticized Manhattan voters for being "shortsighted" in voting Republicans Ivan Sand and Joe Knopp out of office last November. His comment drew complaints from Manhattan Democrats Katha Hurt and Sheila Hochhauser.

Hurt and Hochhauser said Braden was making the non-partisan issue of K-State's funding into a partisan dispute, and that his comments were "uncalled for."

The $441,000 was added to the $1.5 million shortfall in the budget already approved to be made up by the Senate and House. The appropriations bill also accounted for $668,447 in underestimated K-State utility expenditures.

John Struve, budget director, said the $1.9 million wouldn't change the budget, but it restores the shortfall so it won't have to come from sources other than the omnibus appropriations bill.

"Had it not come to us, on the other hand, it would have most certainly had disastrous effects on our funding," Struve said.

Manhattan Sen. Lana Oleen said that although Gov. Hayden has an option of vetoing line items on the omnibus bill, there is no chance he would exercise it concerning the K-State funding.

"He wanted this for K-State and was behind the funding when it was sent to the Senate," Oleen said.

The inclusion of the $1.9 million and the utility funding allowed K-State to receive all the University's budget requests, Oleen said.

"K-State couldn't have done any better than it did," she said. "The University made out all right."

The clerical error was made last fall when the University miscalculated enrollment levels, and was detected in lat February. Steps were taken in Marc to correct the mistake by making the budget revision request, which was endorsed by Hayden.

Martina Bulk, horticulturalist and K-State alumna, looks through a group of test roses in the greenhouse at the Reinisch Rose Garden in Gage Park in Topeka. All but one of the 18 workers employed at the garden are K-State alumni who grow and test roses.

Task force targets minority retention

By Ginger Miller
Collegian Reporter

The K-State Task Force on Minority Student Retention reported Tuesday the results of a study, initiated seven months ago, on minority student retention and graduation.

"The task force worked vigorously and continuously to identify problems and solutions," said Bob Krause, vice president for institutional advancement. "The University administration is committed to acting upon the committee's recommendations."

The task force has made 27 recommendations, Krause said. The first is an appeal to the entire University to aggressively commit itself to President Jon Wefald's initiatives on the recruitment and retention of minority faculty.

"We haven't enjoyed the success we'd like to in that area," he said.

The University is trying to establish relationships with black colleges in order to recruit more minority graduate students, which would aid recruitment of minority faculty, Krause said.

The main recommendations the committee made were to establish permanent distinguished minority professorships, to reduce the loan percentage in a minority student's financial aid package from 44 percent to 22 percent, to decrease the debt burden on the students.

"In order to lower the loan from 44 percent to 22 percent, the other would need to be picked up by grants, as well as private scholarships," Krause said.

The committee also recommended to maintain and enhance tutoring and academic support services for minority or first- generation students. An orientation class of all students, minority and majority, that includes a multicultural component, should also be created.

Ken Gowdy, associate dean of engineering and co-chairman of the committee, said one position has already been established, par-

Rose garden ranks in top 5

Alumni grow top flowers at Topeka's Gage Park

By Carol Knorr
Collegian Reporter

Kansas is usually thought of as the wheat state, but in Topeka, a group of K-State alumni know Kansas also houses one of the largest test and display rose gardens in the United States.

All but one of the 18 workers employed at Reinisch Rose Garden in Gage Park are K-State graduates who grow and test roses, said Bob Foster, park naturalist and K-State alumnus.

The garden was constructed in 1930 and was named after Topeka's first park superintendent, E.F.A. Reinisch, said Martina Bulk, horticulturalist and K-State alumna.

"After his death in 1929, his friends decided to put in the rose garden," Bulk said. "By April of 1930, they turned sod for the project. In June, there were 9,000 roses in the garden."

The funds for the project were donated, including the lighting from KPL Gas Service, flowers from nurserymen, and maintenance assistance from the city, she said.

"The rose garden has been unique throughout the years," Foster said. "Even though it's a memorial, Reinisch started planning it before his death in 1929."

He said when the garden was first constructed, the soil was excellent because it had not been cultivated for more than 40 years.

"Unfortunately, we've had different people come along," Foster said. "One of them was a commissioner who had the wonderful idea of digging out the soil and putting in soft yellow clay because prairie roses grew easily in clay."

The clay made it difficult to work with the ground, he said.

"I remember (the clay) would be too wet before lunch and too dry afterwards," Foster said.

In the mid-60s, the clay was removed and the topsoil was replaced, but Foster said their problems were not solved.

"It was at about this same time that K-State had a theory that rose beds should be lowered in the ground about 2 inches so that it would be easier to water the roses," he said. "The theory sounded good, but to solve one problem you create two more."

Bulk holds a miniature baby ophellia rose at the garden in Topeka.

Foster said it was easier to water the plants. However, he remembered looking across the whole garden that spring and only seeing 10 flowers bloom. Since then, the beds have been returned to their original height.

The garden has 6,500 roses with more than 40 varieties, Bulk said. The colors vary from white and yellow to pink and dark red. The garden also has several violet and lavender roses.

She said white and yellow are the most difficult to grow because of the Kansas climate, and as a general rule, the pink are the easiest to grow.

"The worst part of growing roses in Kansas is the fact that they kill back in the wintertime if we have a harsh winter," Bulk said. "We had some (rose bushes) that were 6 feet (tall) last winter, and now there is nothing left."

The roses are in full bloom twice a year — in early June and again in mid-September, she said.

"When I first came here in 1963," Foster said, "the postcard said they had 13,000 roses. Where we have four roses now, they had seven. You could hardly get a size nine foot in there without stepping on a darn rose."

The garden has two main sections, Bulk said. The main part is a display garden, which consists of about 300 different types of roses.

The opposite end of the garden contains about 100 different roses that have been submitted by companies. Foster said the roses are tested and judged, and a winner is selected

Stacks lack fire hoses, extinguishers

By Joe Freeman
Of the Collegian Staff

Being on any of the eight levels of Farrell Library's stacks could be dangerous if a fire breaks out.

There is only one fire extinguisher in each level, the fire hose boxes in the stairwells have no hoses in them, and no exit signs are displayed within the stacks.

Paul Markley, chief of the fire prevention division of the State Fire Marshal's office, said not all buildings require fire extinguishers.

"There are not many requirements for fire extinguishers except where hazardous materials are present," Markley said. "As for the library, our main concern is getting people out of the building. I doubt if too many students would be fighting fires."

"KSU is on the Life Safety Code and there should be no more than 75 feet between each fire extinguisher," said Larry Zentz, fire safety officer for the department on campus.

Including the A and B rooms on each stack level, the area per floor is approximately 7,000 square feet, with walls 103 feet long. According to the National Fire Protection Association's code book section 3-2.1 —— 3-2.3, any building with a floor area of less than 11,250 square feet should have at least one extinguisher of the minimum size.

"We feel there are enough fire extinguishers around to put out a fire if it starts," said Jack Lambert, director of public safety for the University.

K-State complies with the Life Safety Code on placement of fire extinguishers, Lambert said.

"There are numbers in the life safety code and we meet those," he said.

The regulations state that buildings constructed before the codes were put into effect do not have to meet the requirements unless renovations or additions are made or unless there is a definite safety violation.

"I'll be the first to tell you that all buildings don't meet the codes, but existing buildings don't have to," Markley said. The library will be receiving new fire alarms in the coming months, Lambert said.

"Fire alarm should be in this year ... the money is here, but (the alarms) just need to be put in," he said.

As for the fire situation at the library, Markley said, "in any building with four floors or more, the hoses should be on the rack at the location of the stand pipe."

A stand pipe is a pipe that runs vertically up the building with hoses connected to it at a similar location on each floor.

"(The hoses) should be placed on the rack or in a hose cabinet near the box," he said.

Along the main stairway in Farrell, all the stand pipes have been inspected, but there are no hoses on the five floors.

Jean McDonald, of the library's administrative services office, said she did not know the whereabouts of the hoses.

"I didn't know that they were not there and I haven't seen them in any storage area where I have been, but I have only been here for six months," McDonald said.

Markley said in addition to the hoses, Farrell lacks directional signs for exits in case of an emergency.

The National Fire Protection Association Life Safety Code states, "Every exit shall be clearly visible or the route to it shall be conspicuously indicated in such a manner that every occupant of every building or structure who is physically and mentally capable will readily know the direction of escape from any point."

In the stacks, there are no exit signs of any kind except for the main lobby of the library, despite the fact that monthly fire safety inspections are conducted by the Department of Public Safety on campus and annually by the State Fire Marshal's office.

Manhattan Fire Marshal Larry Wesche said a fire in Farrell could be dangerous. The city of Manhattan is

Libyan pilot granted asylum

CAIRO, Egypt — Egypt will grant political asylum to a Libyan pilot who flew his helicopter to southern Egypt last week, a newspaper reported Tuesday.

A government source also said Egypt has opened its border with Libya to allow thousands of Egyptian workers to return home for a religious holiday.

The daily Al-Messa newspaper quoted unidentified sources as saying the pilot, Maj. Fath'i Miloud al-Saghir, would not be returned to Libya, where he would face a death sentence. The 26-year-old pilot peeled off from a five helicopter squadron flying from Libya to Sudan on April 27 and landed in southern Egypt, where he requested asylum.

According to a government source, Egypt has opened its border with Libya to allow tens of thousands of Egyptian workers there to come home this weekend for Eid, the end of the Islamic month of Ramadan.

Libya and Egypt have no diplomatic relations. Relations soured in 1972 after Cairo spurned a bid by Libyan leader Col. Moammar Gadhafi to merge the countries.

Hungary tears down barriers

HEGYESHALOM, Hungary — Hungary on Tuesday began cutting down the barbed-wire fence and alarm system that divides it from Austria, removing one more barrier between this increasingly liberal socialist country and the West.

A crowd in this border town watched as bulldozers removed one of the concrete pylons that hold up the winding, 8-foot high fence. Rusted barbed wire lay in bundles nearby.

Hungary says it expects to have all the fencing, which has a built-in electronic alarm system that was used to detect people escaping to the West, by Dec. 1, 1990.

Hungary said last year it would remove the fence it built 40 years ago because of fewer travel restrictions, a desire for closer ties with Austria and the cost of maintaining a barrier that has become obsolete.

The event marks the "closing of an era" in Hungary's relations with the West, said Andras Koevari of the Interior Ministry.

"Hungarian glasnost has many faces, and one of them is the world passport which moved Hungary closer to Western Europe," Koevari said.

Picture results in sentence

ALLENTOWN, Pa. — A picture was worth at least 6½ years in prison to John J. Cottle.

Cottle, whose hobbies include photography, was sent to prison last week for burglary and receiving stolen property. Police exposed his connection to the 1988 break-ins because he took pictures of himself posing with the goods.

Police arrested the 29-year-old after developing film found at his former apartment. At the bottom of the photographs were the dates and times they were taken. One was taken a half-hour after a break-in.

"And there is John Cottle with all his prizes," said Assistant District Attorney William Ford.

Woman placed on probation

PONTIAC, Mich. — A woman who pleaded guilty to stealing a $20,000 dress worn by Madonna in the video "True Blue" has been placed on two years' probation and ordered to undergo psychiatric counseling.

Krista M. O'Sada, 20, of Dearborn, admitted taking the blue chiffon dress from a display case at a suburban Detroit shopping mall in July.

She could have received up to five years in prison.

Coleman president fired

WICHITA — Sheldon Coleman announced Tuesday he has been fired as president and chief executive officer of the Coleman Co., the outdoor products manufacturer his grandfather founded.

Coleman said Wall Street takeover strategist Ron Perelman, who bought the company six weeks ago, terminated him during a meeting Monday night in Houston. Coleman said the decision was reaffirmed Tuesday.

Perelman and his staff had said they wanted Coleman to stay on as chief executive officer. Perelman probably is best known for his 1985 purchase for $1.8 billion of the Revlon Group Inc. and his acquisition of five failing savings and loans in Texas, a move that gave him significant tax advantages.

At a news conference, Coleman, 36, said he was told Monday he and Perelman's acquisition corporation should part company because he "didn't respond enthusiastically enough or quickly enough to some of their suggestions" about his possible role on the new management team.

"I think they have tried to treat me well," Coleman said. "It is not a happy time for me. I'm extremely sad to be leaving a company that has been part of our family for 89 years."

Coleman said Perelman's newly formed acquisition company, Lantern Acquisition Corp., hadn't appointed anyone to succeed him.

Senator arrives dramatically

TOPEKA — There was some high drama at the Kansas Capitol Tuesday as the Legislature concluded its 1989 session.

The Senate resurrected and passed a bill to fund the State Water Plan, but not before it had to summon to Topeka a suburban Kansas City senator who is recovering from heart surgery so he could cast the deciding vote.

With the vote of Sen. Gus Bogina, R-Shawnee, a bill to fund the water plan passed, 21-19. Bogina was brought to the Statehouse by a speeding, siren-blaring Highway Patrol car that hit 120 miles an hour, while lawmakers waited for more than an hour during a call of the Senate that forces all senators to vote.

Bogina's was the 21st vote, the bare majority to pass bills in the 40-member chamger.

"We need it," Bogina said of the water plan.

Bogina underwent bypass surgery on April 4, and has been recovering nicely, said his wife, Nancy, who is secretary to Senate Minority Leader Michael Johnston.

Bogina, who had visited the Legislature since his surgery but not resumed his duties as chairman of the Senate Ways and Means Committee, said he walks two miles a day. He was picked up at his office by the patrolman. He is an engineering consultant.

Seneca death investigated

SENECA — After a third autopsy on a woman who died almost a year and a half ago, Nemaha County authorities have asked that a grand jury investigate circumstances surrounding her death.

Madeline Sue Christner, 48, of Seneca, died Nov. 4, 1987, in the Nemaha Valley Community Hospital where she was being treated for a gunshot wound to the rib cage area. Her employer and companion, Jim Markley, told authorities that she accidently shot herself the day before when she slipped and fell.

Nemaha County Attorney Bill Halvorsen, who took office Jan. 9, says he has been actively working on the case since then. In early March, Christner's body was exhumed and a third autopsy was performed by a Wichita forensic pathologist.

Results of that autopsy have not been made public.

Neither Nemaha County authorities nor Kansas Bureau of Investigation agents have classified the shooting as accidental or intentional.

A grand jury would consist of a 15-member panel drawn from the jury list "who would either direct me to prosecute or dismiss," Halvorsen said.

Student injured in fall

Kenneth Lynch, sophomore in forestry, is listed in severe condition with head injuries at the intensive care unit of Stormont-Vail Regional Medical Center in Topeka after he fell from a roof he was shingling in Junction City Saturday.

Lynch was helping his friend Don Rice shingle the roof of Rice's house when he fell. Lynch has worked for a roofing contractor for two summers, said Rice.

"I was working on the ground when he fell, so I'm not really sure what happened," Rice said. The cause of the fall is still not known.

Lynch was taken to the Geary County Community Hospital and then transported to Topeka by an ambulance Saturday morning.

Selection committee continues search to fill dean's position

By Joe Kennedy
Collegian Reporter

The search for a new vice provost and dean of the graduate school is still on because the leading candidate was not acceptable to a broad segment of the community, said Elizabeth Unger, chairwoman of the vice provost selection committee.

The selection committee started soliciting additional candidates for the position last week after Anthony Coelho was turned down.

Coelho, who believed the sign of a good university was reflected by a strong foundation of research programs, was rejected because he did not have enough experience with graduate education programs, Unger said.

Provost James Coffman said the committee decided to look at some additional candidates because the support for Coelho was not unanimous and the position is new.

"There was some degree of reservation," Coffman said.

There are currently no new candidates for the position and the job of dean of the graduate school is being performed by Associate Provost Robert Kruh, Coffman said.

When a vice provost and dean of the graduate school is chosen, the position of associate provost will be changed to vice provost for academic services and the vice provost will be responsible for the implementation and support of academic programs, he said.

Unger said the selection committee has placed advertisements in The Chronicle of Higher Education and has let K-State faculty members know about the opening.

The committee is not sure how long the process of selecting candidates will continue, she said.

"We will go at it and find the best person we can for the position," Unger said.

Hoeflin stone house road postponed indefinitely

By Kevin Kramer
Staff Writer

Construction of a road through the playground at Hoeflin Stone House Child Care Center has been deferred indefinitely.

"The desired location of the road is to be constructed as proposed, but until there is need for the road in the future, the University is going to defer its construction," said George Miller, vice president for administration and finance.

He made the decision Monday, following discussions with his staff, chairman of campus development and traffic, and Provost James Coffman, he said.

"The University will address it when the campus is more developed in that area," he said.

Barbara Stowe, dean of the College of Human Ecology, said, "We are gratified as to the decision to not build the road through the Stone House playground."

Miller said the rescheduling of the road's construction depends upon a number of factors, including the rate of University growth, capital improvements, and the need to deve-

Late alumnus bequeaths $768,000

By Ginger Miller
Collegian Reporter

The KSU Foundation announced Tuesday the estate distribution of more than $768,000 to scholarship programs in the colleges of Veterinary Medicine and Architecture and Design and to Intercollegiate Athletics.

Dorothy Palmquist, who received a bachelor of science degree from K-State in 1926, funded the scholarship programs with a bequest in her will. Palmquist, a Topeka resident, died October 20, 1987.

"These scholarships will stand in perpetuity as a just and fitting memorial to Dorothy Palmquist," said Art Loub, foundation president. "The benefits of these endowments will be shared by many deserving students for generations to come. A person can leave no greater legacy to higher education."

Gordon Dowell, assistant director of the foundation, said it works with alumni, friends and corporations to raise private support for the University in the form of money or equipment.

"We tremendously appreciate gifts like this, because of what they provide for the students of Kansas State University," Dowell said.

The foundation is constantly working to gain the support of private persons, he said. The alumni are very important to this process, and one way the work the foundation does is most visible is through the Telefund.

Dowell said the Telefund in February raised $587,734. About 1,200 students called thousands of alumni to ask for donations. There were 18,694 alumni that responded.

In the last fiscal year, which ended June 30, the foundation raised $12.5 million in gifts from 28,000 individuals, Dowell said. The majority of the gifts are not of the magnitude of Palmquist's.

In the past n onth, however, the KSU Foundatio n has received an unusually large number of major gifts, Dowell said. On April 20 there was a gift of $846,000 made, and a few days later $500,000 was given.

Funding from MOE not enough for parity

The Margin of Excellence is just not enough.

K-State will receive about $3.87 million next year from MOE in funds recently allocated by the Kansas Legislature. At the same time it will lose some of its best and brightest faculty — in part because it can't keep salaries competitive.

Although about $2 million of K-State's MOE portion will go to faculty salaries, it is not keeping them here.

Through the past few years, K-State has gone from about 10 percent below comparative salaries at other institutions to 25 percent below in some areas.

The purpose of MOE is to improve the quality, condition and performance of the seven regents institutions through "salary parity" and "mission-related enhancements."

But parity, or rough equality, in faculty salaries has yet to be seen. Though salary figures are increasing, and efforts are being made to increase K-State faculty salaries with the recent 100-percent funding of MOE, K-State is still losing out.

Next year K-State will be denied the talents of many distinguished and gifted faculty members, such as Cornelia Flora, professor of sociology, anthropology and social work; Dave Adams, associate professor of journalism and mass communications and director of Student Publications Inc.; Edward Kanemasu, professor of agronomy; and Donald Nieman, associate professor of history.

These professors are only a sampling of the number of valuable faculty K-State has lost in recent years due to insufficent salary levels and lack of resources.

The Legislature is aware of the salary problems in all areas of higher education due to the recent approval of MOE. Legislators are also pushing for a bill which will give classified state employees compensation in longevity pay.

In order for K-State to continue offering quality education through recruitment, retention of outstanding faculty and development of resources, Kansans must support the strengthening of higher education in the state and communicate that support to legislators. MOE cannot be the sole mechanism through which the University attempts such efforts, because it is simply not enough.

Good sense needed as semester closes

Thus the end of another school year rapidly draws to a close. With only a much deserved dead day (what ever happened to dead week?) between us and finals, it's time for a few little reminders before everyone prepares to flee K-State and head into the world.

All mothering aside, between finals and papers there is still a lot of time available for partying and reminiscing with old friends. But at this time of year, with so many farewell parties planned, it's important to remember the old standard "Don't drink and drive."

This is true especially for graduating seniors. Heck, K-State is going to need you guys to make donations to help support scholarships and activities far into the future, so take care of yourselves.

Also, take care of those innocent pets that seem to get acquired during the school year. If you have to leave and can't take your pet with you, don't just dump it. These animals are pets, and Manhattan residents cannot possibly absorb a huge number of strays dumped on the street.

They will suffer the fate of many strays — hit by cars, infected by disease, or killed in fights. Be responsible, find them a new home or take them to a shelter. Setting them free will hurt them more than help them.

Above all, be responsible: for yourself, your life and your friends. This is it. After Saturday's pomp and ceremony, the real world will begin.

Other Perspectives

In its present form, the Kansas Board of Regents consists of members selected by gubernatorial appointment. These men, or women, are typically political cronies of the governor or are people whom the governor owes a favor or two.

It is precisely because of this appointment process that the present form of the Board of Regents needs to change. The governor may appoint people who aren't really involved in the Kansas education process.

Global responsibility needed

RE: Robert Campbell's "solution" for CFCs.

There is nothing positive to say about the deterioration of this planet and its atmosphere. Ironically, Campbell's suggested solution, logic and argument present a beautiful example of the shocking lack of responsibility scientific communities and the public have when they fail to recognize the connection between their actions upon the environment and the consequences of these actions. This reasoning illustrates the typical capitalistic mentality: as Campbell speculated, "this (the act of withdrawing usage of CFCs) will increase costs."

Costs are relative according to one's priorities. If the incentive to each endeavor is that of profit, economy or convenience, the ecological benefits of the endeavor, of course, are not considered.

For the entrepreneur, the earth is a source of passive receptivity — the earth is a source of raw materials for capital and manipulation. If the earth and the maintenance of our ecosystem — of which we are a part — were top priorities, then to stop using CFCs would not be bothersome.

What is bothersome, instead, is having to sacrifice convenience and habit for environmental considerations. Do we as consumers need Styrofoam cups? Are we so feebleminded and trivial that having to hold a cup that sweats is more bothersome than the thought that the single cup you hold with dry happy hands will sit within or perhaps on top the earth at a landfill already filled up never to rot, but to add to the layers of waste until we are surrounded by the waste we attempt to justify, rationalize and put out of our view?

The earth cannot carry the burden of our over-consumption and apathetic, unconcerned attitudes toward trash, recycling and the increasing presence of gases in the earth's atmosphere.

While the making of a single Styrofoam cup or the refrigerating effects of freon within your car on a hot summer's day may seem trivial in light of a global problem, we forget "the sum is greater than the parts." Each instance CFCs are permitted to be produced or used in production the problem worsens until the minute is magnified into the global.

Thus the suggested "solution," the engineering of large sun screens to be hoisted above us like a big beach umbrella, is not feasible or effective. Again, a destructive attitude juts forth in such solutions, a "power over" approach where technology will suddenly cure itself with technology.

But this solution will only place a Band-Aid over a deep wound that has been neglected of cleaning and sterilization. Infection will surely grow beneath this covering.

Too, considering the speed and efficiency of NASA, I would not even think of calling this solution "do-able" now. Now we should be considering daily acts of preservation, of heightening awareness, of education, and of executing changes in thought and structure when working within the environment.

The ecosystem cannot be blamed for the "gloom and doom" that may fall upon us like a shower of brimstone. The ecosystem works in a state of homeostasis. If a force throws it off balance, the system will attempt to compensate. Without the meddling of mankind, the issue of carbon dioxide could not even be raised.

You say, "more people equals more carbon dioxide." This is true, but the habits, "needs" and endeavors of people produce this excess of carbon dioxide. Cars, destruction of the rain forests and industry: all are innovations of man, likened to the innovation of CFCs. All push nature toward imbalance.

CFCs are still an issue even with carbon dioxide as the major contributor. The increasing of both is due to the same destructive mindset — man's profit-seeking foolery.

The global warming problem will not be solved or even touched upon until attitudes change. We must take responsibility for what we produce, not only in consideration of the atmosphere, but in consideration of the earth.

The rapid production of waste in this society needs to be halted. Recycling must be implemented on a society-wide scale. States on the East Coast already have mandatory recycling laws for alumninum, paper, plastic and glass. If individuals took responsibility for their portion of waste, the global problem could start to diminish, and at least wouldn't increase in magnitude.

Let's work within our environment, cleaning up what we have created. There is no need to engineer a Band-Aid to strap across the sky when the wound is in need of care and cleaning.

Change for better

Editor,

As long as people are not born knowing what they are going to do with their lives, selective admissions may prove to be painfully unwise.

Considering the academic environment of differing social classes, it is clear that for environmental reasons, some students start with very little incentive to achieve in school. They may not deem academic accomplishment as important until into their high school years. It would be a tremendous waste of potential to deny these kids the opportunity of education at a Big Eight school.

The reason selective admissions must be defeated is obvious.

People at birth do not know what they are going to do with the rest of their lives and are capable of changing their minds. Let's let them make it a change for the better.

Violence to women

Editor,

In my years of living on both the West and East coasts, I never read a news story that called a rape an alleged rape.

When the Collegian used this qualification last semester, while never using a similar qualification when reporting other types of crimes, I gave you the benefit of assuming that this was just due to an inexperienced writer.

Since your article dated April 20 used this qualification in both the headline and the text, I am forced to instead assume either: (a) the Collegian has a policy of presuming that women might be lying about rapes, (b) the Collegian is unconsciously expressing denial about the prevalence of sexual violence, (c) the Collegian, along with the National Inquirer, prints rumors as if they were news, or (d) the sheriff's department and K-State Police have a policy of presuming that women might be lying about rape and the Collegian is uncritically passing on the terminology used by these agencies.

Whichever the case, please make it a policy in the future that the actions of those accused of crimes will be qualified by the term "alleged" but an occurence of a crime will be uniformly reported in language that affirms the experience of the survivor, whether the crime be assault, theft or sexual assault.

The reason for uniformity should be obvious, but I should probably point out that rape is the only crime that society has historically viewed as a crime against the man who owned the survivor — her father or her husband — and has been more recently viewed as a crime against the individual woman. (Progress of sorts.) We need to move into cognizance of the fact that rape affects us all in great measure, perhaps even more than the other violent crimes that are traditionally considered crimes against society.

The reason for believing survivors of crimes is threefold. First is simply that the FBI documents that only 5 percent of all reports of violent crimes, including rapes, are false, so reporting crimes as if they actually occurred corresponds more closely with objective reality than does disbelief.

Second, since denial of the extent of sexual assault is so pervasive in this society (how many of you are shocked to learn that one of three women you know and love will be raped in their lifetime?), you do us a disservice by feeding the myth that "rape will never touch me or my loved ones."

The third reason for affirming a woman's account of being assaulted is an extremely personal one. Imagine surviving the horror of being dominated, humiliated and degraded for hours by someone you thought you could trust but who is now acting so crazy you think he might kill you. Imagine deciding to report the crime even though you know the juries may still be living within the illusion that a rape by an acquaintance is not rape.

But before you even get a chance to prove beyond all reasonable doubt that this is the man who committed the crime against you, your community newspaper decides to doubt that your horrendous experience ever took place. Such denial itself is a form of violence to women.

Handicapped seats unaffected

Proposal deals with design of Bramlage

By Janette Poole
Collegian Reporter

Proposed seating changes for Bramlage Coliseum will not affect those patrons with physical limitations.

"We are very concerned that the building remain usable and we are trying to make the building available to everyone. There are certain design aspects of the building we have to live with," said Jim Muller, assistant director for the coliseum.

There is no easy access to the floor for those with any physical limitations, Muller said.

The proposed changes in coliseum seating are only for basketball games and will not affect handicapped seating in any way, he said. Graduation ceremonies for K-State and Manhattan High School will occupy all the floor seating at the coliseum.

"We are very concerned due to the limitations placed on us by the building," Muller said, referring to the coliseum design.

"We have four handicapped sections in the building which can seat six (handicapped) people with an accompanying party," Muller said.

The level of rise from the floor to the handicapped section is 45 feet. Muller said, the handicapped seating is good compared to other facilities of similar size such as the Kansas Expo Center in Topeka, the Kansas Coliseum in Wichita and Kemper Arena in Kansas City, Mo.

"It's a repetitive-type problem, you see it throughout the country."
—Charlie Thomas director

Charles Thomas, director of the coliseum, said many regional facilities have many of the same problems as Bramlage.

"It's a repetitive-type problem, you see it throughout the country," Thomas said.

Attendants are available for assistance for visual or physical handicapped patrons, Muller said. Guests with such problems, should notify the attendants of their problem.

Gretchen Holden, coordinator of special services and adviser for Students for Handicapped Concerns, said a letter was written to the coliseum management regarding accessibility concerns by club members.

Holden said members outlined concerns such as problems of inadequate signage, restroom doorknobs and the length of the ramp entrance to the coliseum.

Vince Cool, associate director of facilities planning, said the University is appreciative of the (handicapped students) committee because "we may be able to read codes but we may not be experienced in what problems the handicapped have."

"We are seeing a real effort to solve problems and a showing of good faith by the management. They are working on solutions," Holden said.

Changes have been made to increase awareness and safety in the facility, she said. A chain has been installed above the stairway at the handicapped seating area to prevent anyone from accidentally falling down the stairs. Signs have also been added, indicating access to various handicapped areas.

An elevator is also located on the north side of the coliseum for use by the elderly and handicapped.

"We are in the process of examining handrails for the west side of the coliseum, which is used mostly by older patrons," Muller said.

Holden said installing handrails will aid patrons without handicaps, more so than those with limitations.

The first plan for the coliseum was for a split-level facility requiring a supported level structure. Cool said the first plan was about $3 million more than the budgeted cost for the coliseum.

He said construction plans for a coliseum should make the best use of space to create a compact crowd and be economically feasible. The second plan, from which the building was constructed, fit those criteria.

"We have to find ways to do things at reasonable cost. Cost is always a factor," Cool said.

Thomas said accessibility was part of the coliseum plans, but "... just because something fits and meets the code, doesn't mean it is right."

Commission approves landing fee ordinance at Manhattan airport

By Robert Short
Staff Writer

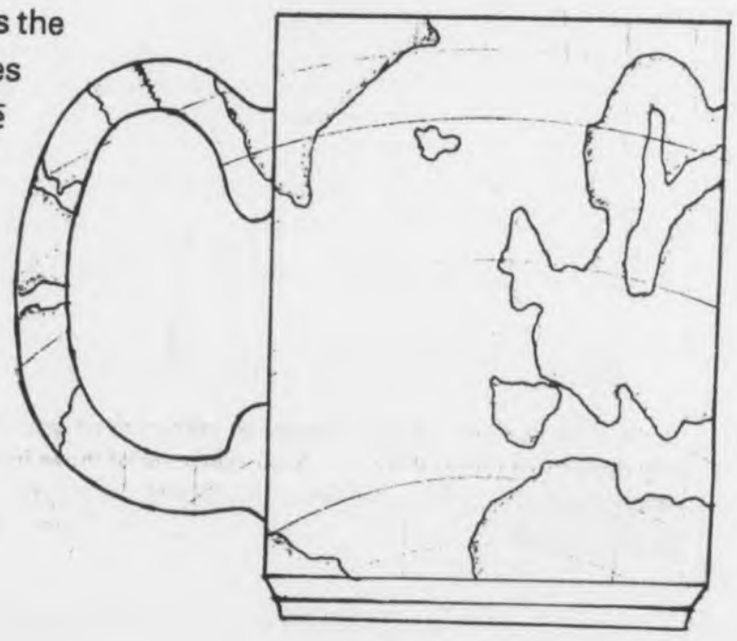
Manhattan City Commissioners gave approval Tuesday to the first reading of an ordinance raising the landing fees for commercial aircraft at the Manhattan Municipal Airport.

Raising the landing fees represents only one of three actions the Commission expects to take in order to raise funds to support the addition of a control tower this spring, said J.R. Pearson, assistant city manager.

The mayor and city clerk were also authorized by approval of the consent agenda to execute an addendum contract with two airlines, Spicer Aircraft Inc. and Capitol Air Lines, for increasing fuel flowage fees from 5 cents per gallon to 7 cents per gallon.

Hangar fees will also increase to help support the recent improvements, Pearson said.

Commissioners Eugene Klingler and Richard Seidler both said they hope the recent addition of a control tower will promote more business for the airlines. If business does not improve for the airport, some commissioners say they may not support renewing the control tower contract.



"If we don't see any improvement when this item comes up for renewal next year, I am going to recommend to this Commission to get rid of that tower."

In other business, the Commission unanimously approved the transfering of the title of land including the Big Lakes Developmental Center Inc. from the city to the center. The purpose of the transfer was to give Big Lakes additional assets to use as collateral.

Big Lakes can now borrow against the land and will be responsible for any special assessments on the property previously covered by the city.

Project unites differing fields

Professors build model on crop yields

By Gary Lytle
Collegian Reporter

The fields of agronomy and statistics may not seem to be closely related, unless an individual is building a model to measure the impact of weather on crop yields.

And that is just what Arlin Feyerherm, professor of statistics, and Gary Paulsen, professor of agronomy, have been working on since the mid-1970s, Paulsen said.

"I got interested in studying weather and the effects of weather, in using the computer to do statistical calculations, and then, I went to the agronomists to make sure that I gave those results the proper agronomic interpretations."

—Arlin Feyerherm professor of statistics

"By putting our two fields together, we have come up with something neither one of us could have done alone," he said.

"I got interested in studying weather and the effects of weather, in using the computer to do statistical calculations, and then, I went to the agronomists to make sure that I gave those results the proper agronomic interpretations," Feyerherm said about the origins of the project.

Tuseday afternoon, Feyerherm gave a presentation at the Conference on Applied Statistics in Agriculture, which was Monday and Tuesday at the Manhattan Holiday Inn & Holidome.

Staff/Joe Freeman

Arlin Feyerherm, professor of statistics, gave a presentation dealing with agronomy and statistics Tuesday afternoon at the Holidome.

Feyerherm presented information about choosing a data set which will provide the best results for the model.

The objective of the ongoing project has been to develop and refine a statistical model which will predict the impact of weather conditions on crop yields, especially wheat crops, Paulsen said.

Originally, the model was designed for large cropland areas and was funded by NASA through their Large Area Crop Inventory Experiment program, Feyerherm said.

"When the (project) started, the idea was to predict crop production around the globe," he said.

The project has also received funding from the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, Feyerherm said.

In the past four to five years, Feyerherm and Paulsen have focused their attention on using the model to estimate domestic crop yields.

The men have been working with the National Agricultural Statistics Service, Feyerherm said. The service distributes production estimates for various crops throughout the nation.

"We have been working with the Kansas office (of the National Agricultural Statistics Service) to try and improve crop estimates in the state," he said.

The model has been developed "primarily for hard red winter wheats which are the types that are grown in the Great Plains states," Paulsen said.

Factors determining productivity and growth and development of wheat are two areas in which Paulsen's expertise as an agronomist have been used for the project.

Weather variables, including rainfall and temperature, management practices and productivity of different wheat varieties are some of the variables considered by the model, he said.

Since wheat progresses through distinct growth stages, "one of the things we had to model was the impact of different environmental conditions and management practices at each growth stage on the final grain yield of the wheat," Paulsen said.

The data base for the model is continually refined as new information on weather conditions and crop yields become available, he said.

The data base began to the early 1900's when extensive records for weather and crop yields started to be compiled, Paulsen said.

New enrollment procedure may benefit students

By Kevin Kramer
Staff Writer

Students who have made a last-minute decision to attend K-State next fall or who want to make changes to their schedule for next semester may benefit from an open enrollment period for continuing students and drop-add at the Enrollment Center in the basement of Farrell Library.

"The open enrollment period is for continuing students who failed to enroll during the early enrollment period this spring," said Donald Foster, registrar. "They can enroll anytime now to Aug. 1."

In addition to open enrollment, drop-add is also taking place for students who want to make changes to their fall class schedules, he said.

"The changes in open enrollment and drop-add are among several changes made by the registrar's office as ways to hopefully solve the last-minute crunch that occurs at registration time in August," Foster said. "The largest change, payment of deliquent bills and fines, is still in effect for this open enrollment period."

There have been postive reactions to the use of the new policy of deliquency payments before enrollment, he said. The registrar's office is pleased with the change and hopes it will alleviate problems during the fall registration period in August.

"We have also increased the number of days for fee payment for next fall," Foster said. "We hope this will help prevent an overload upon the computer system. The registration and fee payment is about a 20-minute process when students come at their appointed time."

Foster said students should review the fee payment procedures in the class schedule and cautions them to use the extended hours.

Another feature to the enrollment procedure for the fall is the dropping of class schedules if students fail to pay fees on their scheduled day.

"If students do have a problem in returning on their scheduled day, they should contact the registrar's office that day or in advance," he said.

The changes that are occuring now will lead to larger changes in the enrollment and fee payment system, Foster said.

"We are about two years away from having enrollment done by mail," he said. "One goal we have is to have students do self enrollment over a touch-tone telephone and mail in fee payments. The system would also credit any financial aid against the bill."

But the first step to implementing this process is to have a computerized financial aid package on-line, Foster said.

Pillsbury Crossing's attraction fades

Due to the drought, a difference in water level from past years is noticeable at Pillsbury Crossing, and the number of people visiting the area has decreased.

A scenic eight-mile drive east of Kansas Highway 177 will lead to a popular recreational spot, Pillsbury Crossing. Although it has recently lost popularity due to the drought, it still serves the purpose settlers had in mind when they discovered the area — relaxation.

"I can tell a difference between now and a couple years ago (at the crossing). It hasn't been the same this year because of the drought," said John Schultheiss, junior in journalism and mass communications. "Last year there was more water — clean water."

John Gray, senior in construction science, said, "I'd take the dogs out there ... it's a good place because there's lots of room for them to roam. And at any given time, there would be no more than a couple dozen people — unlike the rocks (at Tuttle Creek)."

Gray was introduced to Pillsbury Crossing his freshman year by fraternity members who visited the crossing frequently. He said he has enjoyed going there each year, but it is definitely a seasonal recreation due to the algae.

"We'd go on weekdays, mostly. My friends and I would play frisbee, throw a football or just sit in a lawn chair in the water and converse," Gray said.

Steve Schmitt, senior in psychology, said Pillsbury Crossing is a good place to hike and "an all-right place to ride mountain bikes."

The crossing is popular as an area to visit with friends, but it doesn't offer shelters or activities other than those people create for themselves.

Gray said, "It's the closest thing to a waterfall around ... and it's a different environment than a crowded lake. But it's a dry spring, so it's basically out (as a recreational option this year)."

Although resources — other than natural — are limited at Pillsbury, people seem to have little difficulty entertaining themselves there.

Mike Pinkston, who studied business at K-State in 1986-87, said, "We played softball out here — we'd just bring out a Hacky Sack and pick up a stick. But there hasn't been running water out here for I don't know how long. Even second semester last year it was pretty dry.

"It's the closest thing to a waterfall around ... and it's a different environment than a crowded lake."

—John Gray senior in construction science

"The first time I came out here was about two years ago, and I only came a couple times. ... It's not as crowded as it used to be. There used to be five or six cars here when we'd come down."

People are often attracted to Pillsbury because they are able to drive vehicles onto the sheet of solid rock six to eight inches beneath Deep Creek, but part of the crossing's history includes its use as a crossing for wagons moving along the south side of the Kansas River.

History

Pillsbury Crossing is named after Josiah H. Pillsbury, who came to the Zeandale, Kan., area in 1855. Not only did he name the Zeandale community, but he located his home at the crossing where the community's post office was located.

Pillsbury, born in Hebron, N.H., in 1821, taught school in New York and New Hampshire, but had many other interests, including carpentry, surveying and printing.

In 1854, he and his wife left Boston for Kansas with an Emigrant Aid party. Pillsbury went not to seek fortune, but to make Kansas a free state. He had earlier "come in contact with Horace Greeley and was imbued with his crusading, anti-slavery spirit," according to The Pillsbury Drive Extra, a newspaper supplement published by the Manhattan Tribune-News.

After a two-week trip to St. Louis, the 162-member party traveled along the Missouri River to Westport, which is now Kansas City, Mo., according to the article.

"They traveled by horse-team and wagon from Kansas City to Lawrence where they built a cabin and spent the winter. After settling their families in the new cabin, the men came on west to the Zeandale area, selected their claim sites, then returned to Lawrence," according to Winifred Slagg in her book, "Riley County, Kansas."

Pillsbury returned to his claim in the spring of 1855. He had been selected as county surveyor of Riley County, according to Slagg.

"The community of Zeandale was located by Pillsbury on the banks of Deep Creek at the falls known as Pillsbury Crossing. Owing to later extensive settlement of Kansas River bottom lands, a reconstruction of Zeandale became advisable, and the post office and headquarters of the little community were moved to the town's present location," the article stated.

His daughter, Annie Pillsbury Young, describes the crossing in her writings: "Mr. Pillsbury gave the settlement the Greek name Zeandale, meaning corn valley. He had previously been out in the territory and selected the claim which still bears his name.

"(Josiah H. Pillsbury) had selected this particular spot because of its beauty."

—Annie Pillsbury Young daughter

"He had selected this particular spot because of its beauty, and the possibilities he saw for obtaining water power from the falls in Deep Creek at that point. The natural, rock-bottom crossing there might also have been an advantage, for at that time, there were no bridges."

A "Motoring Around Manhattan" pamphlet published in 1926 described the crossing: "At the falls, we find one of the most delightful picnic places in Riley County. The stream is crossed on a natural pavement. The pond above the falls provides good boating and fishing. Below the falls, fishing and swimming are available recreations.

"The shade is good and the scene is picturesque. The falls are well-encased in rock, just like Niagara, and if not so boisterous they are at least more restful."

An article in the Aug. 29, 1948, issue of the Mercury Chronicle describes the crossing.

"Below the waterfall, massive rocks make the creek a bubbling stream. The rocks fell years ago from the rim-rock on the bluff on the north side of the stream.

"College students and townspeople from Manhattan and Zeandale have found the crossing an excellent place to give the family car a bath and keep cool at the same time."

In 1863, Pillsbury moved to Manhattan, purchased printing equipment, and started publishing the Manhattan Independent newspaper.

"Even in the 1860s and '70s, the ford was a popular place for picnics and outings," the Chronicle article states. "It was always considered quite a jaunt at that time, at least, for residents of Manhattan.

"Today, as then, the spot is still popular as a place to fish, swim and generally enjoy yourself."

Below the waterfalls, Jeff Hodge, Junction City, helps his daughter Jennifer, 4, attempt to catch a fish at Pillsbury Crossing.

But times have changed, as have the legal restrictions at Pillsbury Crossing since becoming a community recreational area.

In 1965, Edwin J. Frick, former head of surgery and medicine in the College of Veterinary Medicine, retired and donated the 80-acre area to the Manhattan community.

According to a 1973 Collegian article, the Pillsbury Crossing site is under the auspices of Kansas Forestry, Fish and Game Commission, which is now Kansas Wildlife and Parks.

The article stated the regulations of the site, which in 1973 were "no swimming or wading, no car washing, no firearms or littering."

A temporary ban was placed on alcoholic beverages from April 1 to June 1 of 1987 because of the large volume of trash associated with beer parties and vandalism, according to a 1987 Manhattan Mercury article.

Now anyone visiting the crossing will notice signs posted banning alcoholic and cereal malt beverages indefinitely.

Although more regulations have been implemented, it does not seem to discourage students and residents from taking advantage of the spot.

'Major League' offers comedy

By Nancy B. Chartrand
Collegian Reviewer

"Major League," the latest baseball comedy, could be subtitled "The Bad News Bears Grow Up."

Starring Tom Berenger, Charlie Sheen and Corbin "L.A. Law" Bernsen, the movie follows the ups and downs of an extremely mismatched baseball team.

As the movie opens, the owner of the Cleveland Indians has just died, amidst the team's worst losing streak in history.

The ex-showgirl wife of the new owner, Mr. Phelps, who has more passion for nail polish than baseball, takes over the team with the intent of keeping them losing. According to league rules, if attendance falls under 800,000 for the season, she can relocate the team to Miami.

So she hires a washed-up coach and signs some of the worst players her scouts can find: Jake Taylor (Berenger), a has-been, Rick Vaughn (Sheen), a punk who is "a juvenile delinquent in the off-season," and Roger Dorn (Bernsen), a pretty boy who looks like he would be more at home at a country club than a baseball diamond.

During spring training it looks as if Mrs. Phelps will be packing her bikini by mid-season. The Indians are so bad that a Brownie troop could probably shut them out.

But then something strange begins to happen. The team begins to win a few games. Once the players find out that the only reason they were recruited was to lose games, they become more determined to win.

True to the spirit of baseball and the American dream, the team ends up winning and the wicked Mrs. Phelps gets stuck in Cleveland for another season.

The movie also contains a weak sub-plot surrou ıding Taylor's attempt to win back his ex-girlfriend. The m ıvie would have been just as go ɔd without this part, but hey, baseball and romance go together, don't they?

"Major League" isn't nearly as steamy as last year's baseball hit, "Bull Durham," but it's just as funny.

If you like baseball or just like a good, fun movie, "Major League" is worth seeing.

Eateries to offer Saturday buffets

By Ginger Miller
Collegian Reporter

Not only are Manhattan hotels preparing for graduation, but restaurants are as well. Several restaurants are offering graduation buffets.

The Union is having two buffets: Friday evening, May 12, and Saturday morning, May 13. Roshana Ariel, reservations secretary, said about 100 tables have been reserved as of Monday.

Parties will be seated at one table, regardless of the number of people in the group, Ariel said. Reservations are necessary, and can be made by the phone, through the mail or in person.

The buffet will be from 6 to 7:30 p.m. May 12 and from 11 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. May 13. The cost on either day is $9 for adults and $4.50 for children under 10 years of age.

The University Club Restaurant is offering two graduation buffets on Saturday. Stan Hershenow, general manager, said, "We've had a real good response. We anticipate a big crowd."

The lunch buffet will be from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. and the evening buffet will be from 5:30 to 10 p.m.

Hershenow said meals cost $8.95 per person. The children's price is $3.95.

Hershenow said a Mother's Day brunch will be from 10:30 a.m. to 2 p.m. Sunday, May 14. The price for the brunch will be $12.95 for adults, $5.95 for children. He said reservations are recommended.

A buffet will be available at the Holiday Inn & Holidome on Saturday, May 13. It will be from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. The cost for the buffet is $11.50 for adults and $5 for children ages 6 through 12.

Sue Kemp, catering director, said reservations are required.

Not every graduate will be hunting for a place to eat with relatives. Some students prefer a more personal touch.

Joanne Young, senior in marketing, opted for a more private celebration of her graduation.

"My family is coming from Texas and we're going to graduation, and then we'll have a little party afterwards at my house," Young said. "I don't want to be with a lot of people. It's a special time."

Tip leads owner to missing dog

By Chris Koger
Staff Writer

It has almost been two months since Kathleen Scully began a search for her lost dog, Lucy. After posting flyers, placing ads, tracking down leads and telling her story in The Collegian, Lucy's finally home.

Scully, a graduate student in exercise and physical therapy, said she thought Lucy had run away at first, but a telephone call on Easter Sunday alerted her to the possibility that Lucy had been stolen.

An unidentified male who made the call said the $50 reward Scully was offering for the year-old rottweiler wouldn't be enough. A purebred rottweiler is worth about $300, Scully said.

It wasn't until an article ran in Friday's Collegian that Scully's efforts to find Lucy paid off.

Scully said an Alma woman called her Monday morning with information.

"She said her neighbors had a dog for about two months just like the one in the paper, and described the dog to me," Scully said. "She said she didn't want to get involved, but hated to see a person lose their dog."

Scully drove to Alma and picked up the dog from the back yard while the house's owners were away.

"She was real dirty, and at first I wondered if it was really her," Scully said. "But she was so excited to see me and had the same collar she had on when I first lost her.

"There's no doubt about it being her — she was so excited to see me again," she said.

Lucy was well-fed during the time she was gone, Scully said.

Scully notified the Riley County Police that she had her dog back, but said she doesn't plan to pursue the matter any further.

Scully said Lucy is already adjusting to life at home with her two other pets, a cat and a dog.

"I took the two dogs for a walk and everyone noticed I had her back — they were asking if it was Lucy and if I found her," she said.

"I took them to the yogurt place because they kept the picture of Lucy up the longest, and they fed the dogs some yogurt," Scully said.

The Collegian reaches more than 18,000 potential customers daily.

Moving guidelines suggested

Trucks, trailers available for convenience

By The Collegian Staff

With the spring semester nearing its end, many students may be planning to move home or to their first job after graduation. The transition can be tedious and require time and effort, not only in packing, but in moving.

It is important to get an estimate of the amount of personal items to be moved so the individual can determine if they will fit in one car, according to the pamphlet "Mover's Advantage." If not, an individual could consider using a moving van or trailer.

The eight moving firms in Manhattan can provide trucks ranging in size from 10 feet to 24 feet.

"Prices vary according to the weight of the truck and the distance and time traveling," said Jon Ytell, employee with Coleman American Moving Services Inc. "Travel outside of Manhattan is considered an intrastate move and is regulated under Kansas Tariff laws, which means the price is not the same for a local move.

"We contract our trucks with drivers and helpers during the move, and we specialize in overseas moves."

Craig Dunn, employee with Kings North American, said, "The students we have coming to us are usually graduating seniors who are moving to their future place of employment and have a lot to move."

Boxes, both new and used, can be purchased from moving services.

"New boxes run about $2.25 to $10, depending on the type of box. Used boxes are half price, but availability is a contributing factor," said Inge Wilson, Reliable Transfer and Storage Company employee.

If the individual does not think a truck is necessary, U-Haul Neighborhood Dealers lease trailers ranging in size from 4 feet by 6 feet to 6 feet by 12 feet.

"It is important to consider if you have a car that can pull a trailer, and if the trailer weighs or will weigh more than the car can pull," said Wilbur Hunter, U-Haul employee.

"In Kansas, prices have decreased approximately 20 to 30 percent less than two years ago, but this year there is a real shortage on trailers. It would be a good idea to reserve one soon," he said.

For an overview of the loading process, the "Mover's Advantage" pamphlet offers the following tips:

- Load large appliances first and slide them all the way forward.
- Load large furniture next, with table legs removed and table tops protected by pads or blankets.
- Stand box springs, mattresses, mirrors and pictures on their edges along the sides of the truck.
- Place rolled rugs lengthwise in the center of the truck.
- Fill in spaces with small boxes.

Costs may cause closing of theater

By Laurie Cox
Collegian Reporter

This may be the final year for the Summer Repertory Theatre presentations due to costs, Charlotte MacFarland, instructor of speech and repertory director, said.

"We have very limited funds and may not offer the entertainment next year because not enough money is made from box office support," MacFarland said.

MacFarland said the productions to be performed this summer are "Little Footsteps," an American comedy by Ted Tally; "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?" by Edward Albee; and "Spoils of War" by Michael Weller.

"All three shows will be K-State entries in next year's American College Theater Festival competition," she said.

The series of plays performed on alternate nights will run June 28 through July 22 and will be at 8 p.m. every Wednesday through Saturday.

"We try to choose plays with small casts and try to stay away from typical, big mass-appeal shows," MacFarland said. "This is the first time 'Spoils of War' has been done since it closed off Broadway. When we wrote for the rights to the play we had difficulty getting a copy because the play was so new. There were no prior script books."

"Virginia Woolf" is a very powerful and difficult play, she said. The cast has already started reading for the performance.

Cast members selected for the repertory cast are Penny Cullers, graduate student in speech; Tony Espinosa, freshman in theater; Patricia Foltz, graduate student in speech; Matthew Mazuroski, graduate student in speech; Tom McLaughlin, graduate student in speech; and Wendy Walburn, junior in theater.

Chinese college students give government ultimatum

By The Associated Press

BEIJING — Student leaders in Beijing on Tuesday gave the government 24 hours to recognize their new student union or they would take to the streets again. In Shanghai, thousands demonstrated for democracy and freedom.

The developments added new tension to a situation the government has been trying to calm by holding talks with officially sanctioned student unions.

Last week's activism crested with a march of 150,000 students and their supporters in China's capital.

The official student unions took no part in the marches, the biggest in communist China's history, and student activists say the talks won't satisfy their yearnings for a freer and more open China.

The protest in Shanghai, China's most important trading and industrial city, began in the early afternoon when about 6,000 students, carrying banners reading "give us democracy and freedom," blocked traffic in front of city government offices.

Student leaders presented petitions demanding political reform and the Xinhua News Agency said the protest ended about 10 p.m.

An American teacher said a class boycott, which started in Beijing and spread earlier this week to Tianjin, has moved to Shanghai. About half of the students at Fudan University, the city's leading school, are striking, said Jason Hurtado, of Portland, Ore.

He quoted student activists at Fudan as saying that student leaders from Beijing helped organize the strike and the march. Student leaders have also been sent to Beijing for more coordination, he said. Earlier, students from Tianjin came to Beijing for guidance with their movement.

In Beijing, 65 student leaders from 33 universities bicycled more than 7½ miles to deliver an ultimatum to the National People's Congress, China's legislature; the State Council, its cabinet; and the Central Committee of the ruling Communist Party.

In a handwritten letter, the students demanded the government recognize and hold talks with the United Association of Beijing Universities.

Plan calls for new prison

Institution to include 640 cells

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — A $65.5 million prison program that calls for the state to build a maximum security institution for the first time in this century went Tuesday to Gov. Mike Hayden.

The plan, patched together early Tuesday by a joint conference committee, calls for construction of a 640-cell, $51 million prison and a $14.5 million, 256-bed hospital for mentally ill inmates. The Senate approved it, 37-1, and the House passed it, 111-13, about 90 minutes apart.

The proposal is designed to meet U.S. District Judge Richard Rogers' order requiring the elimination of all prison overcrowding by July 1, 1991, to improve conditions at three state prisons and improve services for mentally ill inmates.

On his last day in office, Corrections Secretary Roger Endell declared victory. Endell, who announced April 10 that he would resign at the end of the session, pushed for the construction of a new prison for more than a year.

"It's a significant commitment," Endell said. "This really will bring the Kansas correctional system into the 21st Century."

The Legislature's swift action Tuesday ended five days of frustration for Endell, Hayden and other supporters of a Senate proposal to build a 768-cell, $58.7 million prison.

Although it has built institutions for medium security and lower security inmates within the last decade, the state has not built a maximum security prison since the Kansas State Industrial Reformatory in Hutchinson opened in 1895. The state's first maximum security prison, the Kansas State Penitentiary in Lansing, opened in 1864.

Hayden has proposed that the new prison be built outside El Dorado, a city of about 12,500 some 25 miles northeast of Wichita. Endell said site work could begin Aug. 1, with foundations laid in late September.

The state would start work on 512 cells immediately. Construction of the next 128 cells would go forward unless the Legislature passed a bill and Hayden signed a measure to revoke authorization for the project by Jan. 31, 1990.

A site for the hospital has not been chosen, though Hayden and Endell have proposed it be built adjacent to Larned State Hospital. The state will hire a consultant to advise it where the new hospital should be located.

EPA move may cause water bills to increase

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Environmental Protection Agency proposed on Tuesday to limit the maximum amounts of 38 types of cancer-causing chemicals and other pollutants found in drinking water, a move that will cause increases in household water bills.

But the EPA said it can't meet a congressional deadline on two dozen other water pollutants because it is short of money and staff.

The 38 chemicals, including many widely used pesticides and other highly toxic carcinogens, must be monitored and kept below the required levels in all public drinking water under the EPA regulations issued Tuesday. The rules will be made final after a period for public comment.

Michael Cook, director of the EPA office which deals with drinking water contaminants, said most public water systems already meet the proposed requirements, but additional purification equipment will probably be needed in about 2,500 public systems, most of them in rural areas.

In some cases, a household water bill could go up as much as $460 a year, although the increase will generally be much lower, Cook said. The additional costs will chiefly be because of equipment.

The EPA estimated that the cost of public water in areas where additional pollution controls are required could increase from $10 to $460 a year, depending on the size of the water system and the contaminant and treatment technology involved.

The water systems likely to be in violation of the federal standard will account for roughly 3 percent of all the water systems in the country and provide water for 2 million people, Cook said.

Private wells are not covered by the regulations.

Cook said that when the regulations, covering 17 pesticides and 21 other pollutants, take effect, the EPA will have established maximum allowable levels for 55 of 83 dangerous drinking water contaminants singled out for action by Congress nearly three years ago.

Many of those federal standards probably will not go into effect for another year or more, however.

Three years ago, Congress told the EPA to establish federal standards on all 83 pollutants by June 1 of this year, but Cook said the agency won't be able to meet the deadline on the 28 remaining chemicals. He said the process is expected to take another year as maximum safe levels and water treatment techniques for each of the remaining contaminants are worked out.

"If we had more money and manpower we could have sped those (calculations) up," said Cook, blaming agency budget constraints and staff shortages.

from the entries every two years.

Foster said the Reinisch Rose Garden is one of the top five out of the 22 test gardens in the nation.

The rose garden became an All-American Rose Society test garden when the organization was developed in the 1940s.

Before the AARS was formed, Foster said there were problems with naming a rose because people would steal cuttings from the rose garden and market the same rose under a different name.

"We judge the roses on 15 different things," he said. "To me, right now one of the main things (the rose industry) is looking for is a maintanence-free, disease-free and a great-smelling rose. It would be even nicer if you could find one that would repel insects as well.

"But the perfect rose has not come along yet. There's always something else you want in it."

Foster said some people want to market a rose without thorns.

"There had been numerous attempts to get thornless roses," he said. "But the gene for the thorns is the same one that holds up the stem. So everytime you got one with no thorns, the flower would droop.

The "Old Smoothy" rose was one that had potential on the market because it had no thorns, Foster said.

"The man who made 'Old Smoothy' found a way to split the gene," he said. "Unfortunately, after everyone had (a rose with no thorns), the novelty wore off."

lop the northern area of campus.

"The long-range planners have indicated that the road, connecting Mid-Campus Drive and McCain Lane, is needed," he said. "But it is hard to speculate as to when in the future the road will be needed. The present traffic volume does not necessitate the need for the road and the exit to Manhattan Avenue.

"The decision is a reasonable solution until the area is developed. We will sit back and wait to see when that occurs. Deferring construction of the road will just make it a little inconvenient for the students who park in the lots B-3 and B16."

The $45,000 set aside for the road construction will be used for other improvements in a $2.7 million project to pave and update campus parking lots, he said.

contracted by the University to fight fires on campus.

"Anytime you have that much fireload, you've got a potential for a major fire," Wesche said. "Assuming that we get prompt notification, we could contain the fire, but if it happens at night and goes undetected for an hour, it could be a major fire."

tially due to the committee's efforts.

A search committee has been named and will begin interviewing this summer to find the University's first assistant provost for multicultural affairs and director of minority graduation program development.

"The (task force) met twice weekly for seven months, in an in-depth and occasionally frustrating process, to explore the issue and propose solutions," said Susan Scott, associate dean of student life and co-chairwoman of the task force.

Data was collected through one-on-one interviews with 105 minority students, Scott said. Students interviewed represented all minority groups and undergraduate colleges. Questionnaires were mailed to an additional 250 minority students.

"Task force members were committed and diligent — the report represents the best example of shared responsibility and leadership."

"A large group of people composed of faculty, students, staff and others in the community need to carry on the work begun by this task force," Gowdy said.

Netters lose just one senior

By Carolyn Holcroft
Sports Writer

The Wildcat netters finished with the best season in K-State history last weekend, capturing fourth place in the Big Eight, going 16-6 overall. The tournament matches put the team well over the .500 mark for the first time, finishing with their highest winning percentage ever at .727.

Early in the season, the 'Cats went undefeated against two Southwest Conference teams for the first time and also defeated conference rival Oklahoma in a 5-4 dual match. The most points K-State had taken from the Sooners was one.

The 'Cats were led by the No. 2 doubles tandem of juniors Valerie Rive and Marijke Nel. The duo compiled a 20-6 overall record, and went 6-1 in conference play with their only loss coming against top-ranked Oklahoma State. The pair was the first ever to make it into the finals at the conference tournament.

Rive is also the first K-State player to make it to the final round of Big Eight singles play. She took second place at the No. 4 spot after losing to Oklahoma State's Jackie Booth, 6-1, 6-1. She was also the first Wildcat to be named Big Eight player of the week after her victories against Colorado and Iowa State.

Of all the events throughout the season, Coach Steve Bietau said the highlight was definitely the tournament, especially after they were shaken slightly by their loss to Nebraska four days before the tourney.

"The tournament was such a wonderful experience. They did what they wanted to do, and that was play their best tennis at the end of the year," Bietau said. "The way that they accomplished it just leaves me speechless."

Bietau was referring to five suspenseful matches, four of which took place Sunday. All five were crucial situations in which they were up against opponents who had beaten them in the dual matches during regular conference play. The deciding match came at the No. 3 doubles spot, as Annika Emtell and

Bietau named league coach of year

From Staff and Wire Reports

K-State tennis coach Steve Bietau was named the Big Eight women's tennis coach of the year Tuesday. The selection was based on a vote by the conference coaches.

Bietau helped lead the Wildcat women to a fourth-place finish at the Big Eight Conference tournament — K-State's best finish ever. K-State finished the Big Eight Regular season at 4-3, marking the first time it had ever finished with a record of .500 of higher.

In 1987, Bietau led the Wildcats to their first winning season at 9-8, and since then his teams have continued to climb the ladder with this year's team topping at 16-6.

Bietau came to K-State after a successful five-year stint at Hutchinson Community College, where he led the Blue Dragons to a 13th-place finish in the national junior college tournament in 1984. Bietau also was the heading teaching professional at Prarie Dunes Country Club while at Hutchinson. He was at the club from 1979 to 1984.

He is a graduate of Doane (Neb.) College, where he was a three-time NAIA national tournament qualifier. Bietau is in his fifth year as the Wildcats' head coach.

Golfers preparing for loop tourney

From Staff and Wire Reports

The men's golf team has a little more than one week to finish preparing for the Big Eight Conference Tournament at Norman, Okla.

Head coach Russ Bunker is hoping for an upper-division finish at the tourney, the Miller Light Midwestern Invitational, in which the Wildcats finished last a year ago.

The squad has not been set and only two players are guaranteed a spot on the team.

Jeff Sedorcek and Troy Keller will definitely make the trip to Oklahoma, while Todd Fowler, Daran Neuschafer, John Shields, Brad Stephens and Brett Vuillemin are vying for the final three spots.

Sedorcek had the top finish for the Wildcats in their most recent tourney. He placed 15th with a three-round total of 219. Keller and Fowler followed with 228 each, then Vuillemin at 232 and Stephens at 234.

Fowler's three-round average at the Midwestern was 76, which leads the Wildcats. In 11 rounds, Sedorcek had an average of 77.1, Keller averaged 77.6 and Vuillemin 78.4. Neuschafer has a two-round average of 79.5 and Shields averaged 83.5 in six rounds.

Crew squad eyes national regattas

From Staff and Wire Reports

After earning three third-place finishes at the Midwest Rowing Regionals last weekend, K-State has advanced three teams to nationals June 1.

Rowing for K-State on the men's side will be a varsity four, a varsity pair and possibly a varsity-freshman mixed pair.

The women will have a freshman eight shell rowing at nationals.

"It's a little early to tell who will be rowing what right now, so we don't have our positions set," K-State crew coach Don Rose said. "We will practice twice a day after exams and we should have plenty of time to make our minds up."

At regionals last week in Madison, Wis., the crew team had the varsity men's eight, the men's pair of Troy Kolb and Kurt Becker and the freshman women's four, all place third in their respective divisions.

The men's varsity eight had a time of 5:48.5, Kolb and Becker had a time of 7:13.8 and the freshmen women's four was four Manhattan High students representing K-State.

"I feel that the K-State and Manhattan High School teams performed well ... I'd rate them at about a B plus," Rose said. "It was the first time we've medaled in a couple of years at regionals. It's always nice to bring medals home from a meet like this."

Varsity/alumni scrimmage offers entertaining atmosphere

Bleeding Purple

BRIAN HUMMELL
Sports Columnist

Don't get me wrong, the details of the game not withstanding, the varsity-alumni football scrimmage was quite entertaining Saturday.

Oh sure, the competition wasn't quite Big Eight caliber. Not too many of these fellas had much luck as college players, as evidenced by the record compiled over the past 20 years.

And the balding pates on these fellas were due to advanced age, not steroids.

But, in the week previous to the scrimmage, coach Bill Snyder had impressed upon anyone who wanted to listen how badly his team needed a victory.

He even would have settled for a match with the local junior high team. These plans unfortunately stalled.

It seems the junior high players don't have spring drills and besides, they've practically used all of their junior high eligibility and will soon be high schoolers. Maybe we can schedule them during the regular season instead of Nebraska.

So anyway, it was a beautiful, perfect day for football. No parking fee, but still not too many cars in the parking lot. Bright sunshine pouring down, but no sweltering heat. Plenty of chicks in shorts.

And even though the atmosphere resembled a high school soap-and-towel scrimmage blown out of proportion, I was allowed to keep my bar of Lava pumice soap because admission was free too.

What was missing from this glorious afternoon on the gridiron was the pre-game activities intended to draw all the kiddies to the stadium this fall. Not one mime, not one juggler, not even a dredlocked reggae band member was in sight.

Also missing after each touchdown was a recording of the loud, reverberating, almost unintelligible refrain of Purple Haze from the drug-induced and very much dead legend Jimi Hendrix.

Adopting Hendrix in likeness and with the title of his most famous song as a marketing device may seem like a public relations boo-boo to most, but it is actually a coup.

Imagine beating Oklahoma in Norman this year after the band strikes up a couple bars of Purple Haze and the Sooners get all misty-eyed as they reminisce about the departed Charles Thompson. Start practicing, Marching Band.

But, back to the game. As one of the literally hundreds of Wildcat fans there, I was surprised by the intensity of the players on both sides.

Of course the game doesn't mean squat in the standings and K-State still owns the longest winless streak in the country, but maybe it was enough to give the players at least a little bit of confidence when the heat of August rolls around.

Regardless of what happens next year, it was certainly a pleasant experience walking away from the stadium with time still left on the clock and the Wildcats comfortably ahead.

Up and down season once again at peak

By Scott Paske
Collegian Reporter

K-State's baseball team reached another peak in its proverbial roller coaster-ride season this weekend in the land of the nationally ranked.

Coach Mike Clark's squad, swamped with injuries to key players, a lack of power hitters and the syndrome of having to put younger players on the field all season, split a series at both Oral Roberts and Arkansas. The victories gave the 'Cats their fourth and fifth wins against top-25 competition this season.

The highlight of the trip came Monday night when K-State's offense built a six-run lead in the opening innings and senior Jeff Peterson yielded just six hits while striking out a season-high nine in a 7-2 win against the No. 9 Razorbacks. The win raised K-State's season mark to 27-19.

"It was a good series for us," Clark said. "I think the kids felt comfortable with the lineup back in tact and these wins were a good indication of just how close we are to being competitive on a national level."

Clark credited battery mates Bill Schafer and Dan Skala with key roles in the 'Cats weekend success. In the series opener with Oral Roberts, Schafer, a replacement for injured starter Jim Haller, held the Titans to five hits and recorded seven strikeouts in seven innings of work. Jim McClellan tossed the final two innings to preserve a 13-5 win.

Skala was the 'Cats offensive spark plug in the final three games, hitting 6-for-8 with a pair of doubles and three runs scored. The junior catcher raised his season batting average from .238 to .264 with the streak.

"Schafer secured his spot in the pitching rotation with his effort," Clark said. "He really threw well for us. Dan (Skala) hit the ball a lot better than he has been. I think he's seeing the ball better and he's cut down on his stroke, which I think has helped him."

Pitcher David Hierholzer fell victim to rare control problems in the opening inning and Wildcat outfielders committed four errors as Arkansas won Sunday's opener 9-4. Hierholzer, who dropped to 5-4, allowed nine hits, struck out seven and gave up four earned runs over seven innings.

Righthander Dave Christensen took the loss in a 9-2 decision to Oral Roberts on Saturday. The Titans used home runs by Rod Steiner and Brian Kelly and a seven-run fifth inning rally to break up a 2-2 score.

All of K-State's remaining games are at Frank Myers Field, but finals week arrangements have forced changes in the schedule. The upcoming weekend series with Nebraska, scheduled for Saturday and Sunday, has been moved up a day to accomodate both schools' testing periods. Doubleheaders on Friday and Saturday will begin at 1 p.m.

Clark said finals week conflicts have forced the cancellation of the May 9 rematch with Wichita State. Faculty Senate members from both schools prohibited the teams from playing road games during finals, and Clark said no other alternative was available.

K-State's games with Creighton on May 11 and Oklahoma State May 12-14 will be played as scheduled.

League signs TV pact

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Amid all the criminal arrests and NCAA scandals, the Big Eight is happy to report some positive news:

The nation's most successful conference baseball tournament is already a sellout, for one thing; and for another, a unique new television contract has coaches in the so-called "non-revenue sports" doing cartwheels.

"We're just delighted," assistant commissioner Bill Hancock said of the two-year arrangement with Prime Sports Network, a Denver-based cable company. "We've never had anything like this before."

Beginning in the 1989-90 academic year, 10 Big Eight championship events will be aired, including men's and women's indoor and outdoor track, volleyball, wrestling and men's and women's gymnastics.

But most significantly, the agreement will put Big Eight women's basketball on television for the first time. The post-season tournament will be televised from Salina, along with four regular season games.

"We've had selected televising of a few non-revenue championship events, but only a few," Hancock said. "This company is connected with a dozen other cable networks around the country, and we think it will give us close to national exposure."

And with national exposure, the hope is that women's basketball in the Big Eight will begin catching up with other conferences.

'Showtime' knows how to get his job done

By Chris Hays
Sports Editor

K-State sprinter Ray Hill knows what his job is. And, come meet time, he usually can be counted on to do it. That is why some former teammates dubbed Hill "Showtime" for his ability to come through under pressure.

"It's basically because I always come through at all the meets," Hill said, "and it also plays a mind game with the other teams."

Hill said he doesn't get much ribbing from his teammates about the nickname because, "They know I'll be doing my job."

He definitely got the job done at the NCAA Indoor Championships,

They call Ray Hill 'Showtime', "basically because I always come through at all the meets."

— Ray Hill
K-State sprinter

winning both the 55 meters and 200 meters and helping the 4x400-meter relay team to a first-place finish.

"I thought I would do good going into the indoor meet because I had some good times," Hill said.

But Hill surprised almost everyone else last winter at the Big Eight indoor in Lincoln, Neb. The Husker fans were used to Nebraska speedster Mark Perry picking up victory after victory in the short sprints, but they found out who Hill was after he defeated the home-team favorite in the 55-meter dash and 200-meter dash.

Hill even had a lot of the Bob Devaney Sports Center crowd on its feet and applauding his efforts after his final victory.

Hill was little known around the Big Eight region prior to the indoor season, but he was very well known on the national junior college circuits two years ago.

Before transferring to K-State, Hill attended Central Arizona Community College, where he was the outdoor national champion in both the 100 meters and 200 meters in 1987. He also was a member of the national champion 4x400-meter relay at Central Arizona.

Hill concentrated on his academic work last year and did not compete with the K-State track team. So his celebrated juco career was virtually forgotten when he sprang on to the K-State track scene this year.

But Perry knew who Hill was. They had competed in the open 100 meters at last season's KU Relays and beat him in the process. That race formed a pattern for Hill and Perry, which has developed into a good, competitive friendship — a friendship which Hill says helps raise the competition level between the two Big Eight stars.

Hill and Perry were even laughing with each other following the finish of the 200 at the Big Eight indoor.

"He was talking to me during the race, but I couldn't quite make out what he was saying," Hill said. "We're pretty good friends and it's fun when you get along with the other guys."

Hill will encounter Perry again May 13-14 at the Big Eight Outdoor Championships in Lincoln, a meet from which Hill wants to bring home four gold medals. He will compete in the 100, 200, 4x100-meter relay and 4x400-meter relay.

From the Big Eight meet, Hill will move on to the NCAA outdoor, which will be June 1-3 in Provo, Utah. Hill has already qualified in the 100 meters with his 10.11 seconds clocking at the KU Relays. He now hopes to qualify in both the 200 and the 4x400-meter relay, in which he is joined by teammates Sean Banks, Corey King and Tyrone Watkins.

Hill's 100-meter time puts him fourth in the nation, and he is aiming at winning the event at nationals.

"I think I have a good shot," he said.

"It will definitely be tough. Ray will have to be at the top of his game," said assistant coach Darryl Anderson. "That might be the toughest event at the meet. There will be some guys that can run there. The key for Ray is to get into the finals."

The field will include Olympians Dennis Mitchell, of Florida, and Jamaican Ray Stewart, of Texas Christian; and Mike Marsh of UCLA, all of whom have faster times than Hill this season.

Hill made it to the finals in the 55-meters at the NCAA indoor, but he also slightly strained his hamstring in the event and did not compete the rest of the meet.

The KU Relays was the first time Hill had run the 100 meters since coming back from the injury, and Anderson thinks it will probably not be until the NCAA outdoor until Hill is 100 percent.

"We're just concentrating on getting him feeling good before the Big Eight meet," Anderson said. "We get him to the meet feeling good and he will take care of everything else."

Staff/Joe Freeman

Ray Hill, also known as "Showtime," got his nickname for coming through under pressure. Hill won the 55-meter and 200-meter dashes at the Big Eight Indoor Championships.

Pattern of AIDS differs

Lecturer: Problems face Africa

By Dave Young
Collegian Reporter

There is currently little understanding of the prevalence and incidence of aqcuired immune deficiency syndrome in Africa, said Don Adamchak, associate professor of sociology.

Adamchak spoke about "AIDS in Africa" to a group of about 50 people Tuesday afternoon in the Cottonwood Room of the K-State Union.

Adamchak spent two years in Zimbabwe conducting a survey of 722 men about their knowledge, attitudes and practices regarding AIDS.

"(As) of yesterday, five to 10 million people worldwide are human immunodeficency virus carriers," he said. "A minium of one million people in Africa are infected, perhaps two or three million.

"We know that the pattern of AIDS in Africa is different than that of North America or Europe," Adamchak said. "HIV infection in Africa is mainly the result of heterosexual contact, the passing of the disease from mother to child during pregnancy and blood transfusion, as opposed to homosexual contact and intravenous drug use."

Adamchak showed slides of his results to emphasize his research.

"It seems that the younger, urban and more educated people have an advantage of knowing about AIDS, and how you can contract it," he said.

In each one of his slides, Adamchak pointed to the difference between the educated and uneducated, the young and the old and rural and urban people.

Adamchak said he is concerned about educating all age groups.

"There seems to be a gap between knowledge and practice," he said. "Knowledge of the dangers of AIDS is relatively high, and yet, practice seems relatively promiscuous.

"The role of medical science is to find a vaccine for AIDS, and the role of social science is to find patterns of transmission in order to control the spread of the disease until a vaccine can be found."

Prevention will likely be the primary weapon against AIDS for the next decade, Adamchak said.

Vernon Larson, dean of agriculture and director of the International Activities Luncheon, said the luncheons were for faculty to share some of their overseas experiences.

Larson said this was the 71st luncheon since they began in 1980.

City to plant about 200 trees throughout city right-of-ways

By Bryan Ackley
Collegian Reporter

The Manhattan Parks and Recreation Department is planting about 200 trees throughout the city street right-of-ways.

Some of these trees have already been planted, and potential sites for others are being reviewed by the department, said Ron Fehr, assistant director of the Parks and Recreation Department.

The department's annual tree-planting program was implemented several years ago; however, the department is dedicating this year's effort to demonstrating its support of the American Forestry Association's Global ReLeaf program, he said.

"It's going to cost $12,000 to $15,000 to plant these trees, and that money is in the Parks and Recreation Department's budget," Fehr said.

The department will not plant trees on property which is intended to be used for commercial purposes.

A program has been implemented which allows any Manhattan resident to request a tree to be planted on his or her property. The department reviews each potential site and determines what tree species it will plant, Fehr said.

"In the past, most of the requests have come from (people residing in) the new subdivisions because those areas usually don't have many trees," Fehr said.

Once the department has planted a tree on the city's right-of-way, the property owner is no longer allowed to plant additional trees in that area, he said.

"It won't cost (people) anything to have us plant a tree in their yard," Fehr said. "All we ask is, when people give their own trees a drink of water, they give ours one as well.

"Most of the people who request to have trees planted in their yards are usually interested enough to help care for them, so this program works out pretty well."

Fehr said he is concerned about the potential damage which could occur if Kansas is subjected to another drought, such as the one that occurred last year.

"It's a critical problem because during a drought, trees are under stress," Fehr said. "When the moisture reserves in the soil run out, the trees undergo even more stress."

The current moisture reserve in the Manhattan area is comparable to the conditions which existed toward the end of last summer's drought, he said.

"I've seen stress in trees already," Fehr said.

Under current drought conditions, it is best to water trees once per week, and slowly enough so the water does not accumulate on the ground's surface, he said.

"About one hour per week should be OK, as long as the water is absorbed into the ground," Fehr said.

According to an American Forestry Association publication, there are an estimated 100 million tree-planting spaces in urban areas in the United States.

The publication states that shade provided by these trees could reduce the amount of energy consumed to air condition homes and businesses by as much as 50 percent, saving consumers as much as $4 billion in annual energy costs.

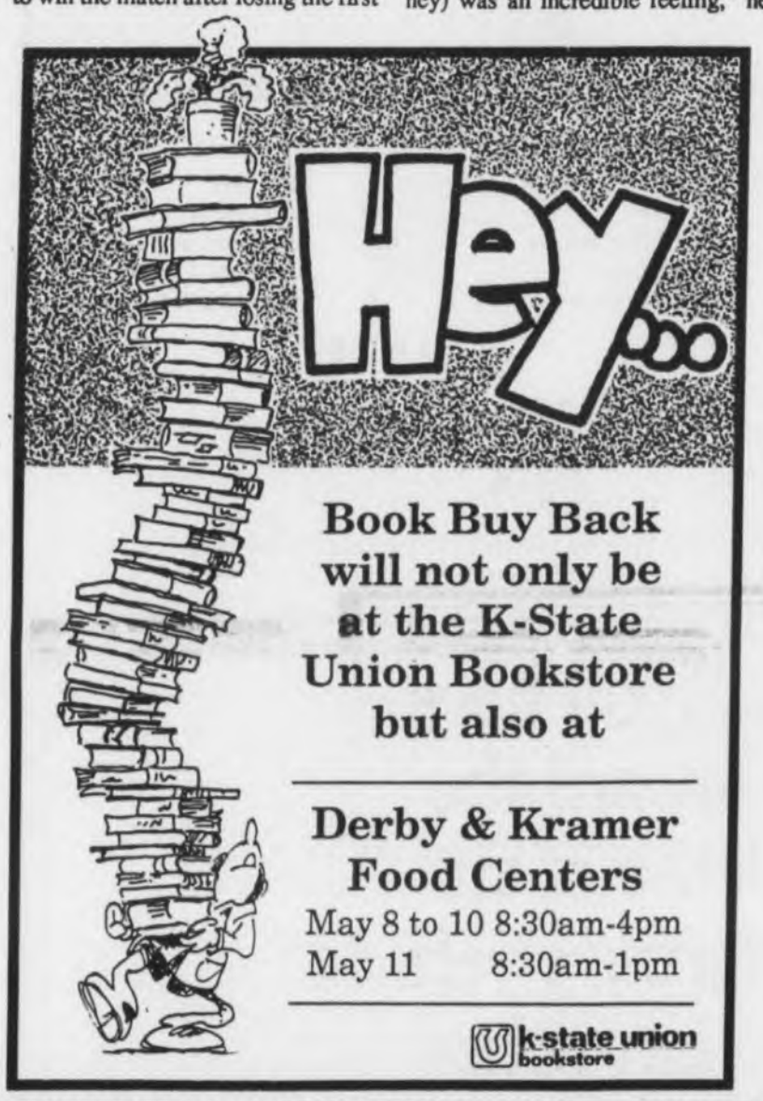
Thresa Burcham defeated Nebraska's Rachel Collins and Leslie Sue Jones.

In a similar situation, Rive avenged her earlier loss to Kansas' Elba Pinero to move into the finals round.

Bietau said he thought perhaps the most exciting match was Emtell's at No. 6 singles. The senior came back to win the match after losing the first set and being down 4-0 in the second against Colorado's Wendy Caplan.



"Annika's performance was quite a way to end her career at K-State," he said. "I was really happy to see her efforts rewarded in the way that they were, and at the time that they were."

Bietau was also pleased at having reached his season goal of finishing in the upper division in the conference.

"Hearing those girls' names and Kansas State University (over the loud speaker at the Big Eight tourney) was an incredible feeling," he said. "I'm very proud of what they've done."

Emtell is K-State's lone senior this year and the Wildcats will return the rest of the squad. K-State will also have prep stars Angie Gover from Topeka West and Suzanne Sim from Shawnee Mission West joining the team next season.

Good luck on finals from the Collegian staff!

Identical names cause confusion, constant hassles

By Ginger Miller
Collegian Reporter

Problems caused by people on campus having the same names may not be common, but they can become a nuisance.

Four years ago, Joseph P. Kennedy, senior in journalism and mass communications, met Joseph E. Kennedy, senior in marketing.

There's been confusion ever since, Joseph P. said.

The financial aid process was delayed when the double name caused problems. Joseph P. said he had his papers in on time, but the two Kennedys' files were confused.

"It was an easy mistake to make, but luckily there were no (monetary) losses," Joseph P. said.

He has received numerous phone calls for Joseph E., and even received the other's W-2 forms from work.

The phone calls have not necessarily been a nuisance for Joseph P. One call, in particular, resulted in an opportunity for him.

"One time I got a call from Procter & Gamble Co.," he said. "The company was calling to confirm an interview with the other Kennedy."

Joseph P. told the company recruiter he had the wrong person, but said, "I'd like an interview anyway."

He got the interview.

Joseph P. said even their signatures are similar. In addition, the woman that dated Joseph P. two years ago was involved in the little sister program at the Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity and was Joseph E.'s pledge daughter.

Jennifer Leigh Jones, senior in radio and television, has been in several situations in which her name has caused an inconvenience.

"One semester I had another Jenny Jones in a class, so I had to write 'Jenny Jones 2' on all my papers. And any time the instructor said Jenny, we would both answer," Jenny L. said.

She said she has not had problems with receiving the other's mail or phone calls, but during her freshman year, she did have to clarify a situation with Check-Rite.

Cure's album continues trend

Compulsive music highlights upbeat music

By Doug Fall
Collegian Reviewer

Review

After a decade and 14 albums, The Cure has released "Disentegration." Picking up where "Kiss Me Kiss Me Kiss Me" left off, this new album is a fabulous continuation of the trends first started on its last album.

"Kiss Me Kiss Me Kiss Me" began a bold new era for The Cure. Brighter subject matter infiltrated the lyrics as the music grew more dense and suitable for large arenas. With the band's growing popularity, the members felt comfortable experimenting even further with their style of music.

The result of these slight changes has not only resulted in a few upbeat hits, such as "Just Like Heaven" and "Why Can't I Be You," but has allowed Robert Smith, the obsessive lead singer, to delve even further in his exploration of the unconscious.

"Disentegration" is a mixture of hopeless love and compulsive music. With this latest effort, The Cure should strengthen its hold as one of today's great techno-synthesizer bands.

Starting the album is a faint wind accompanied by the tinkling of wind chimes. Recorded at such a low volume that it is inaudible except at the highest volumes, the chimes are a prime example of how The Cure has expanded its already intriguing music. A note on the inner sleeve, "This music has been mixed to be played loud so turn it up," seems to sum up the direction The Cure has chosen.

The first single from the album, "Fascination Street," is pretty typical of the type of music The Cure has produced this time around. This moderately paced piece has all of the keyboards and effects intertwined in a way that has grown to be the band's trademark.

The love songs that have recently found a place with The Cure are again present on "Disentegration." "Lovesong," "Pictures of You" and "Last Dance" are all sung to a girl who was once present but is now gone.

Songs like these, as well as the numerous ones with even gloomier subjects, have given The Cure a reputation as a mysterious band dwelling only in "dark" music. While most of its songs are like this, cracks in this front have let its audience see a more hopeful side.

The endless depression and neurotic fears have by no means disappeared, though. "Lullaby" is perhaps the most disturbing song Smith has ever written. "Prayers for Rain" and "The Same Deep Water As You" also center on these hidden fears.

Viewing the album as separate works, though, is to defeat the real intent of The Cure with these latest progressions. Each song flows into the other and all together give an entirely different feeling than if they are divided and rearranged. This movement was remarkably effective on "Kiss Me Kiss Me Kiss Me" and is very similar on "Disentegration."

Aiding this is the length of the album. At more than 70 minutes, it comes close to the length of the last album, which was double length. This helps it gel together into an interconnected work.

The usually prolific Cure waited almost two years before the release of "Disentegration." The result is a distinct album that achieves an identity of its own while continuing trends started on the last album. With The Cure's surging popularity, "Disentegration" should only bolster its rise to fame.

Beavers adapt to habitat, cause damage to crops

By Mary Ubel
Collegian Reporter

The highly adaptive beaver can modify its habitat to survive in Kansas, but the beaver cannot modify humans' attitudes about its survival method.

"Beavers cause damage in Riley County and throughout Kansas, but the damage they do is what they were created to do," said Bob Henderson, Extension specialist in animal damage control.

"Beavers have adapted to eating corn and milo in Kansas," said Lloyd Fox, with the Kansas Department of Wildlife and Parks in Emporia. "In the summer, corn has a very high sugar content. The beaver will eat and clear an entire area in a corn field. It looks like the area was swept."

Henderson said beavers store food for winter and cut as much as an acre or two of corn or milo.

"Beavers are tied to permanent waters, like ponds and lakes," Fox said. "If farmers wouldn't plant right next to the water bank, farmers wouldn't have such problems (with beavers) in crop losses."

Because beavers are clumsy on land, they depend on water for survival, which protects them from predators, Henderson said.

"Beavers generally only range from the water about 100 feet," Fox said. "They cut down a tree and go right back to the water. The impact (of the damage) is limited to a small area, but is very substantial.

"Generally, beavers don't build dams in Kansas. (In other areas of the country), they build dams to flood trees."

"Beavers do burrow into the banks of Kansas stock ponds, and the digging can cause a pond dam to go out," Henderson said.

Beavers begin burrowing below the water level to build their lodge. As they progress into the bank, they move up into the bank above the water level for air, he said.

"This continual burrowing makes a shallow roof, and farmers can drop a tractor tire or even a whole cow in this lodge," Fox said.

If people would learn to modify their crop planting and trap beavers to prevent growth in the population, people and beavers could function in nature, he said.

"The beaver is a highly specialized animal," Henderson said. "It's the only animal that can modify its habitat to suit its needs besides man."

Fox said beavers' digestive systems allow them to use poor quality food, such as the inner bark of trees.

"Indians thought the beavers were magic because they could survive by eating such a poor food source," he said.

Although beavers eat weeds and foliage during grazing season in the summer, they must continue to chew bark, Fox said.

Beavers' teeth grow continuously, Henderson said. Their teeth can grow into their mouth in a circle and penetrate the skull.

Problems with beavers are handled on an individual basis. If individuals have problems, action — such as putting wire around the bottom of trees — can be taken, he said.

Beavers are protected by law, so the individual with the beaver problem must obtain a permit from the Kansas Department of Wildlife and Parks to remove beavers if not during the trapping season, Henderson said.

Trapping season lasts two months in the coldest part of the winter when the pelts are the best, he said.

"In the late 1970s, fur prices were high and about 12,000 licenses were sold in Kansas. Today, only about 7,000 licenses are sold in Kansas," Henderson said.

Child abuse discussed

Helpline aids troubled parents

By Carrie Law
Collegian Reporter

"If we don't find a way to prevent the painful abandonment, abuse and exploitation of children, we will spend the rest of our lives building mental hospitals and prisons."

The words of Dr. Karl Menninger hauntingly echo the reality many children face every day.

In 1977, reports of child abuse in Kansas stood at 4,573. By 1987 that number had increased to more than 28,000. Sexual abuse reports have tripled since 1979. Although these numbers seem great, it is frightening to realize that many cases of abuse and neglect are never reported.

The Kansas Committee for Prevention of Child Abuse (KCPCA) believes part of the reason for the increases in child abuse cases reported in the state over the past five years is due to the regional economy. Children are usually the first to suffer in emotionally and economically strapped families.

The number of child deaths in Kansas attributed to abuse and neglect has risen from nine in 1985 to 12 in 1987.

In a one year period alone, 5,156 Kansas children were known to have been abused or neglected.

The KCPCA realizes that child abuse and neglect may lead to criminal behavior in adult life as well as augment mental illness. The cycle is a tragic one — abused children are likely to abuse their own children when they become parents.

KCPCA believes many children can be saved from abuse through appropriate education. It has started programs geared to children, parents, teachers and community-based professionals.

One such program is the Parent helpline. This phone-in program was developed to help parents with any questions or problems they may have concerning their children. They also provide information about how children grow, share tips on parenting and offer suggestions on other community resources.

Anne Nelson, KCPCA's hotline/helpline coordinator, said that "one of our prime targets (for the hotline) are groups of parents who are feeling isolated. They're at a high stress factor. They don't have enough social support that they can turn to."

Nelson said another group they try to target is single parents.

"Single parents (because) they feel totally alone. Maybe they feel there's nowhere they can turn. When they hear about the helpline ... that is something they can do — somewhere they can turn for help," said Nelson. "It's important to help people like that."

Nelson said KCPCA believes being a parent is one of the toughest jobs in the world.

The telephone counselors are trained volunteers who come from all walks of life, she said.

"We have some extraordinary people volunteering," said Nelson. "We're getting some highly qualified people. We have a person who is working on a masters in psychology, several graduate students in counseling ... we have a middle-aged mother with several children as well as an elderly man who has 30 years experience as a school principal."

Nelson feels the parent helpline has been a successful project.

"We're definitely moving along at a very good clip. Every single month we've had an increase in the number of calls and it has progressively gone up as we get our phone number out," said Nelson.

"We're not where we want to be yet, but I'm not sure any program can ever be at where you ultimately want it to be. However, we're working towards that goal," she said. "We're moving right along and we're very pleased with this program."

TELENET to offer summer courses

By Linda Kleiner
Collegian Reporter

K-State students may acquire college credits this summer without setting foot on a college campus via the TELENET program.

TELENET is operated by the Kansas Regents Network, a division of K-State Community Education. The central TELENET office is located in Umberger Hall and the network reaches out to Goodland, Colby, Liberal, Hays, Newton, Arkansas City, Concordia, Chanute, Lawrence, Wathena and 27 other towns in the state.

Emporia State University, Fort Hays State University and K-State offer 14 different courses in the areas of education, human development, reading, and foods and nutrition.

"TELENET turns the state of Kansas into one giant classroom," said Jan Kruh, director of Kansas Regents Network. Communication between students and instructor is handled by a two-way voice network, Kruh said. The instructor is located in one central location teaching while the instructor's voice is being heard through speaker boxes in 36 other towns.

Just as in a regular classroom, students are able to ask questions or carry on a conversation during class time. This happens with the use of a microphone, Kruh said. Each TELENET location is staffed with an aide to help people register for a course, to handle course materials and to assist with the microphones.

Seven of the TELENET courses this summer are being offered by K-State, Kruh said. The other seven courses are divided between Emporia and Fort Hays.

The courses taught by the universities are set up on a rotating schedule.

The public or students can enroll and pay fees the first day of class, said Jill Shelley, TELENET program administrator.

Beer club provides world tastes

By Brad Camp
Collegian Reporter

For some people, the best way to get a taste of the world would be to spend several thousand dollars and walk the soils of foreign countries.

For about 2000 other people, the best way to get a taste was to join the "Around the World Beer Club" at the Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon.

The club, which has existed since the bar opened in the early 1970s, is unique in Aggieville.

Joe Rice, manager, said the club has been popular with students and visitors to Manhattan.

Some club members, he said, visit Last Chance only a few times a year during the football season. "Some people come up just four times a year for a football game."

The club is designed to give the the customers a chance to sample many different types of beer, Rice said.

"The idea is to get a little turnover in the bar," he said. "A lot of people won't try new products unless you give them some incentive.

"We carry so many (brands of beer) here we like to give everyone a chance to try a few. If we can get people to try a different beer and they like it, that may make our bar grow."

Club members are given a passport to use as their record of where they have been, Rice said. Members then "travel" to any one of 21 countries in the world and try the respective beer. The country is marked off as completed when all the types of beer have been sampled.

Currently, the club has access to 82 types of beer. The actual number of beer types varies from time to time, he said.

"It fluctuates because sometimes our distributors will drop a beer or they have a hard time getting it," Rice said. "We only have a cooler supply of about two weeks, so when they run out, we run out."

The average cost of completing the passport is about $170, Rice said. Finishers receive a Last Chance shirt identifying them as a Passport Beer Club member. In addition to the shirt, members also get 25 cents off all import and domestic beer.

About 420 people have completed the passport since the club started, but many of them have graduated or moved away from Manhattan, he said.

Last Chance used to place engraved beer mugs on the walls with the finisher's name and passport number on them, but lack of wall space has discontinued the practice.

"We have about 300 of them stacked up. ... We just have too many glasses now," Rice said.

Chris Jackman, K-State alumnus, said he has been a member of the club since July of 1988.

"I enjoy drinking foreign and domestic beer ... and the free T-Shirt," he said. "I'm not quite finished yet. I still have a couple left."

The average time it takes to complete the passport ranges from 10 days to years, Rice said.

"I had one guy from Fort Riley finish in about 10 days," he said.

Wheat states remain parched despite rains

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Heavy rains have helped the western Corn Belt and nothern Great Plains, but much of the sorely damaged winter wheat area is still parched from lack of moisture, a government report said Tuesday.

Winter wheat was in "mostly fair to poor" condition during the final week of April, particularly in the central and southern areas of the plains, the Joint Agricultural Weather Facility said. But rain helped improve winter wheat in the northern Great Plains.

"In Kansas, high temperatures and wind stressed winter wheat," the report said. "Condition was mostly very poor to poor. Crop development was poor in most fields. In Texas, winter wheat was mostly fair to poor."

Lack of moisture continued to put stress on Nebraska's winter wheat, and crop condition was reported as mostly poor to fair. Rain improved the crop in Montana and South Dakota.

Rain slowed planting of spring wheat, which is far behind for this time of season. In North Dakota, planting was 16 percent complete, 23 percentage points behind normal.

But corn planting spurted ahead sharply.

Republican leaders urge sale of grain to Soviets

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Bush, who has argued for eliminating trade subsidies, neared a major trade and foreign policy decision Tuesday on whether to approve U.S. subsidies for the sale of 3 million tons of grain to the Soviet Union.

Senior Republican leaders of the House and Senate said they strongly urged the president in a White House meeting to move ahead with the subsidies, amid indications Bush would approve at least a partial subsidy plan.

The subsidies have been suspended while the Bush administration reviews both the budget impact of the program and overall U.S. relations with the Soviet Union.

Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., a staunch supporter of the program, said Bush promised a decision by day's end.

Dole said Bush did not indicate which way he was leaning during a breakfast meeting with GOP leaders. White House aides reported divided views on the subject among Bush advisers.

Speaking with reporters after the meeting, Dole said "strong pitches" were made by lawmakers, "the point being, if we're going to trade with Soviet Union, which we are, then we have to be competitive, we have to meet world prices."

It would be Bush's first approval of a major agricultural subsidy.

The export enhancement program involves subsidies to U.S. exporters in the form of surplus government-owned commodities. The exporters are able to sell grain to a foreign buyer at a reduced price and then collect government surpluses as "bonuses" or subsidies to make up the difference.

The Bush administration, following the lead of the Reagan administration, has called for eventual elimination of all export subsidies. But Bush has said he would not "unilaterally disarm" and call for doing away with such supports for U.S. crops so long as other trading nations subsidize their exports.

The Agriculture Department has promoted the sale, but skepticism has been voiced by the Office of Management and Budget and the National Security Council.

After a sale of subsidized grain to Egypt earlier this year, negotiated by the Reagan administration, Budget Director Richard G. Darman suspended use of the export enhancement program while the review was under way.

Last month, Bush said in a broadcast interview with farm radio stations that his administration intended to use the subsidy program to try to help U.S. farmers gain new markets. "We are rebuilding confidence in American agriculture in terms of reliability in foreign markets and we're going to have to continue to do that."

Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., chairman of the Senate Agriculture Committee, said that Bush had called him Monday night for advice on the program, and that he had urged the president to resume the sale of subsidized grain.

The Soviet Union and China have been major buyers under the program, with the Soviets buying more than 4 million tons of U.S. wheat for delivery in 1988-89. In addition, the Soviets have bought about 14.6 million unsubsidized tons of corn for 1988-89.

According to the Agriculture Department, since the subsidy program began in 1985 it has helped sell more than 81 million tons of grain to all foreign recipients, including about 60 million tons of wheat, plus assorted other products such as frozen poultry, eggs and dairy cattle. In all, the sales are valued at about $8.14 billion, with the subsidies costing more than $2.5 billion.

Could you use money from Home next semester?

Whether you're starting out for college or finishing up a graduate degree, there's one tough subject you'll have to face next semester.
Tuition.
The good news is, Home State Bank can help you find the money for college. Just last year, more than 1,400 students received their low interest loans from us.
Now, we've become the first lender in Kansas City to have an electronic link-up for the Stafford (formerly GSL) Loan. Which means we can give you loan notification as soon as overnight.
Under the Stafford Loan, first- and second-year students receive up to $2,625 a year. For third- and fourth-year students, up to $4,000 a year. You make no payments until six months after graduation or after you become less than a full-time student.
If you're studying in the health professions, there's a HEAL loan program with a special low rate.
In addition, you may also receive a Supplemental Loan for Students (SLS), and your parents may be eligible for a loan through the Parent Loan program. And remember, guaranteed student loans don't require collateral, a cosigner, or established credit.
To get started on your application, call Connie Holmes at 321-3333.
Low-interest loans for higher education. Now, isn't that a good reason to call Home?

One Last Pop Quiz

Q. What's the difference between a PS/2 bought before graduation and a PS/2 bought after?

A. A great student discount.

Here's one quiz you'll definitely want to pass. Because buying an IBM Personal System/2 before you graduate is a good time to start for your future.

Another good start is the IBM PS/2. And there's a good chance that IBM will be the computer you'll work with in your career.

So get an A on this Quiz, and you'll get an IBM PS/2 for less.

For details on other promotional computers and prices, stop in and see us today.

Available at the K-State Union Bookstore now through June 30, 1989

WE'RE PAYING CASH FOR YOUR BOOKS NOW!
10% off any Non Textbook Items at Varney's Book Store in Aggieville
SELL YOUR BOOKS AT VARNEY'S
(regardless of where you bought them)
AND GET YOUR YELLOW TOKEN

★Get your yellow token, which is good for 10% off any non textbook items, when you sell your books the last two weeks of school. You decide what the token is worth by the amount you purchase. THE MORE YOU BUY THE MORE YOU SAVE! You can use the token whenever you want. Use it for gifts to take home, for something for yourself or for next semester when you buy your school supplies.

★Bring all your books to Varney's (regardless of where you bought them) and our buyers will value them individually. You choose what you want to sell! WE BUY BOOKS EVERY DAY! However, you can usually get the most for your books by selling them to us at the end of the semester.

★The price we pay for books is determined mainly by two factors—if the books will be used again at K-State and we need the books for our stock. If we cannot buy your books for our stock, we will offer you the best price we can, based on the national market.

★Remember, it's what you get for all your books that counts, and we think that the wholesaler we buy for pays the highest prices.

★We know you're busy and in a hurry so we have a lot of buyers to take care of you. We try to keep the time you spend in line to a minimum. We also buy until 9 at night May 1-6 and until 10 at night May 8-10.

Miller, Kruger, fans to set sail on Wildcat cruise to Mexico

By Janette Poole
Collegian Reporter

K-State basketball coach Lon Kruger and Athletic Director Steve Miller will be sailing the high seas bound for the ports of Catalina Island, Calif., and Ensenada, Mexico, during mid-June for the "KSU Wildcat Cruise."

The second-annual cruise, from June 23-26, is being sponsored by International Tours of Manhattan.

June Stewart, owner of International Tours, said there are currently 60 confirmed reservations. Last year 60 people participated, and this year they are hoping for about 80. She said those wanting to make reservations now will be accepted on a case-by-case basis depending on availability on the 750-person capacity ship.

The cruise price includes: round-trip airfare from more than 131 departure points; a four-day/three-night cruise to Catalina Island and Ensenada; a private cocktail party for all K-Staters; all dining and on-board activities and K-State cruise bags.

Stewart said the idea for the cruise was generated out of support for the basketball team as a way of spreading comraderie among fellow K-Staters.

There are people attending from all over Kansas as well as out-of-state, including some who will join the group in California, she said.

"We put together an extensive list of all people who have been previously involved with the basketball programs, either by a being a fan, alumni, former player or a member of the community," Stewart said.

She said last year's cruise was popular because the vacationers did not know each other but had a common bond because of an interest in K-State athletics.

Different age groups were represented on last year's trip including small children, college graduates and retired people, Stewart said.

"There was a wide range of people, mixing all the different age groups with an interest in K-State," she said.

"It's a good opportunity to spend time with people who back Wildcat athletics," said Barb Kruger, wife of Lon Kruger who participated in last year's cruise. "Last year was the first cruise for the family and we kept busy every minute."

Kruger said the family is looking forward to the trip this year.

"There's no motive other than enjoying each other," she said.

"A cruise is so all-inclusive because everything is paid for in one price," Stewart said.

Stewart said Lon Kruger was the only one invited last year and it is yet undecided who will be invited to attend next year's cruise. She said the travel agency makes that decision.

Last year, the cruise sailed from Cape Canaveral, Fla., to Nassau, Bahamas, and a private island owned by Premier Cruise Lines, Stewart said. This year, the ship sails from Los Angeles and goes to Catalina Island and Ensenada.

The date of the cruise will make a difference in attendance, she said. Last year, the cruise was taken over Labor Day weekend, which interfered with some people's vacation plans. The same thing has happened this year with changing the date to mid-June.

Program to entertain kids

By Laurie Cox
Collegian Reporter

With summer vacation approaching, many parents may wonder how their children will spend free time. For the fourth year, Community Education has coordinated the Summer Adventure program for children.

"Special programs designed to entertain and expose students to interesting and new topics will be emphasized," said Scott Langton, coordinator of Summer Adventure.

"The program provides students with a creative, educational environment to develop a positive sense of self-understanding and self-esteem," said Deb Bettencourt, assistant coordinator of Summer Adventure.

A new feature, "Leadership in Training," is a special program developed in conjunction with Summer Adventure.

"The leadership program has been developed to provide educational and leadership awareness opportunities for fifth- through eighth-grade students," Langton said.

Participants are challenged in a creative and innovative way to discover their leadership abilities, Bettencourt said.

Topics which the children will discuss include the following: computers, high school survival, career enrichment, small business operations, radio and television production, sign language, adopt-a-grandparent program, and teen-age fashion.

"The kids we are involved with are very motivated," Bettencourt said. "We offer them the chance to challenge themselves."

"As a parent, I appreciate the convenience of an on-campus program with hours set up to accommodate my work schedule," said Cheryl May, director of News Services, in a letter to the National Committee of Educators Association Awards Committee. "More importantly, I appreciate the quality of this program. I know my child is in a safe, caring environment during my work day, and that he is being stimulated by exciting and fun activities."

A strength of the summer program is it introduces children to activities which they might not try on their own, May said. Her child discovered oral history and drama, which he would not have explored if not for Summer Adventure, she said.

Bettencourt said, "The older kids have changes occurring in their lives and want more responsibility and to be treated more like an adult. It's their program, and we facilitate to their needs."

"I like Summer Adventure because it's something to do besides watch TV. It is there for you to have fun and to educate you," said Lisa Daly, a Manhattan 12-year-old.

Summer adventure consists of four different sessions, each lasting two weeks. The first session begins June 5. Children may attend sessions for the entire day, for the morning, or for the afternoon.

"Fees for sessions I, II and IV are $155, which include lunch. The fee for Session III, including lunch, is $144," said Bill Butler, administrator of the community education program.

Local Chinese students protest massacre

By Chris Koger
Campus/City Editor

More than 70 Chinese students attending K-State participated in a pro-democracy demonstration Sunday near the Nelson-Atkins Museum of Art in Kansas City.

Chinese students from the University of Kansas and University of Missouri at Kansas City, as well as Americans attending the universities, also attended the demonstration which drew a crowd of at least 300.

The students, reacting to news reports of the bloody military actions in Beijing, rallied in the streets for an hour, shouting "Down with the Communist Party" and "Down with Li Peng." Li is the premier of China.

Lin Li, graduate student in biochemistry, said the demonstrators first met to condemn the massacre in China, and then to show support for the students.

Jie Yang, graduate student in sociology, said the demonstration was not to ask the U.S. government for more action against the Chinese government, but to support the actions of the demonstrators who until Saturday had occupied Tiananmen Square.

Yang, a member of K-State's Chinese Student and Scholar Association, said the students are protesting "government attacks on peaceful demonstrators and demand the step down of officials since they are not willing to cooperate or even talk to the people."

"They are murderers — no matter how official they are," he said.

A participant from K-State who asked to remain anonymous to keep family members out of jeopardy said he has a relative who joined the hunger strike in Tiananmen Square. "At least we are getting together and raising our voices," he said.

Another group of about 10 K-State students traveled to Chicago early Sunday to participate in a demonstration at the Chinese Consulate, joining the thousands of students who demonstrated in cities across the country. Demonstrations in other countries, including a major rally in Taiwan that attracted an estimated 10,000 people, have denounced the massacre as a "mad action."

Many of the Chinese students studying in America have been unable to contact friends and relatives in Beijing. Yang said it has been a month or more since some have made contact.

"There is an obvious block of communications," he said.

Although estimates concerning the number of wounded and dead students in Beijing conflict, some students here fear several thousand have been killed, and news reports have estimated up to six thousand may have been killed.

A friend in Boston called Lin Li and told him of second-hand reports from Beijing which said that murdered students were being carted away by troops and cremated, ensuring that families were unable to identify the victims.

"She said they are killing everyone because they don't want to leave witnesses. There are a lot of dead bodies because they are clearing the streets with machine guns," Lin Li said.

He was told soldiers in trucks and helicopters were taking those not yet dead to be cremated even before ambulances were able to transport

Troops fire on civilians again, at least 500 dead

By The Associated Press

BEIJING — Troops again opened fire on thousands of angry civilians Monday as China's capital lay paralyzed after two days of a military crackdown on pro-democracy demonstrators that has left at least 500 people dead.

The new clash broke out after hundreds of thousands of people returned to the streets to block army troops who cut a bloody swath through the city during the weekend, clearing Tiananmen Square of protesters.

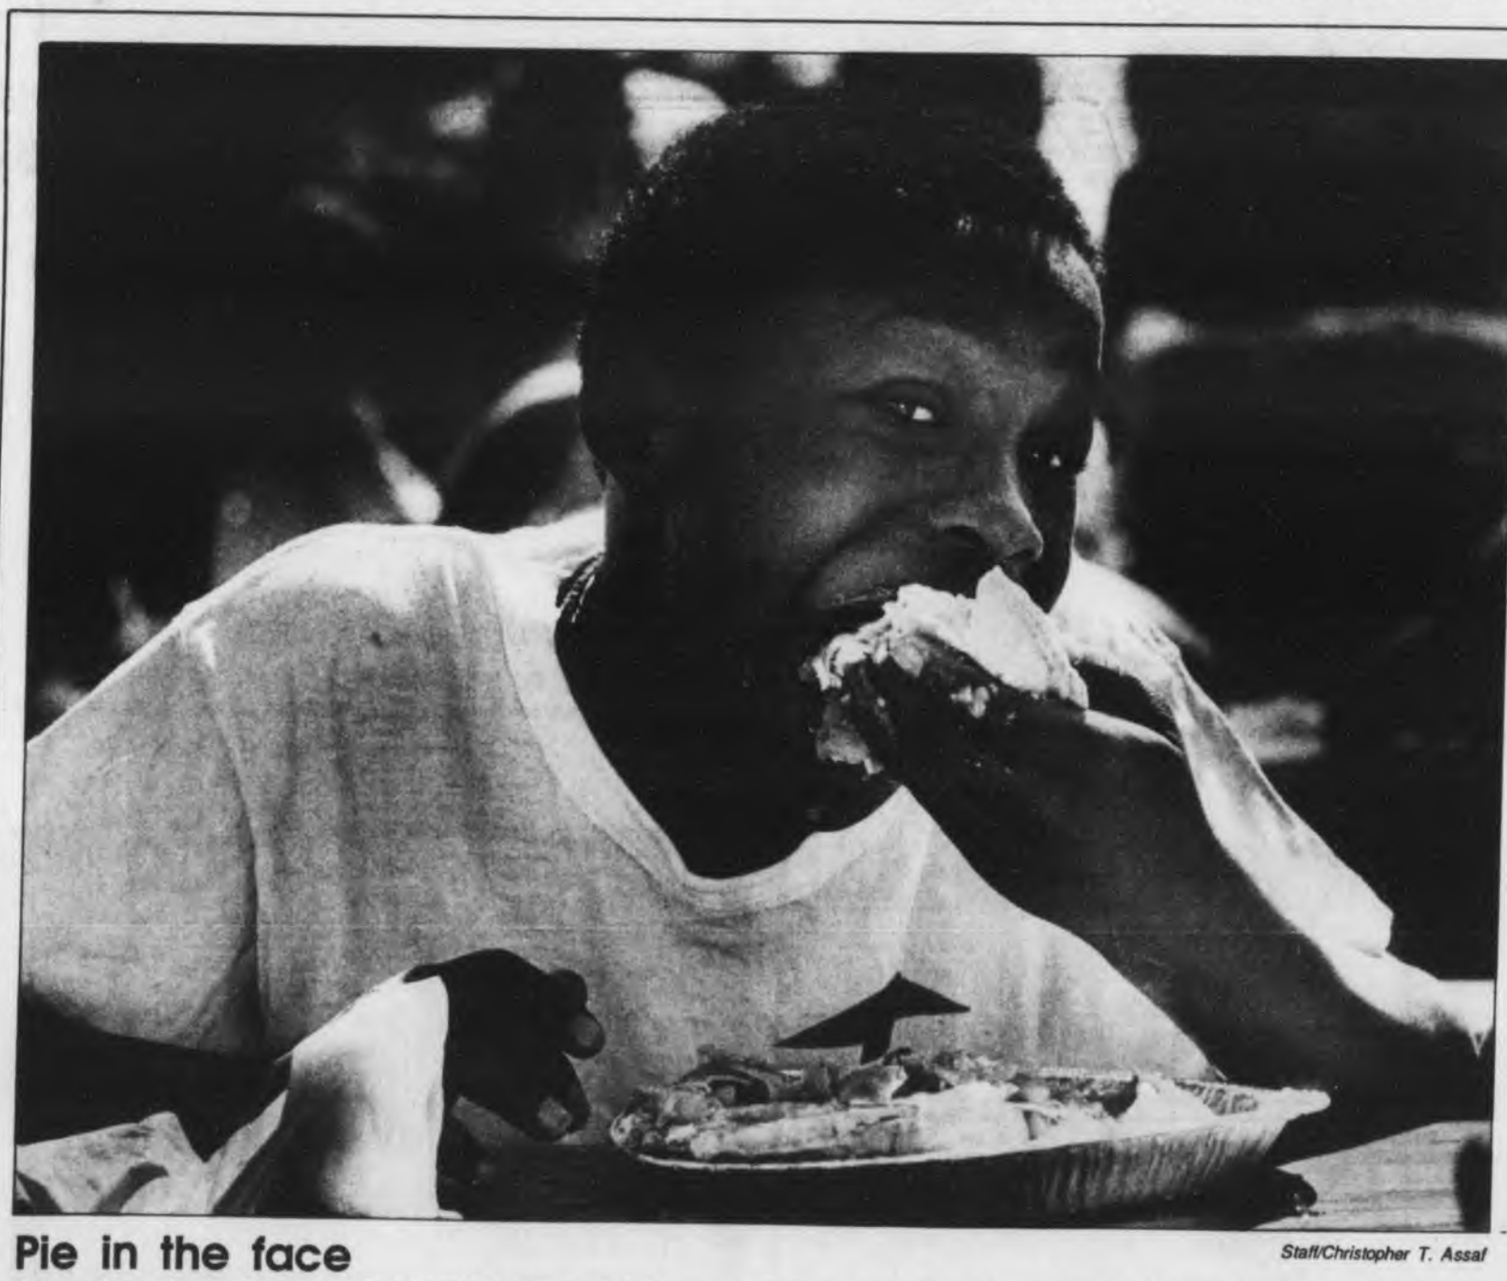
Monday morning, about 50 soldiers began firing heavily at a crowd of nearly 3,000 on the main street northeast of the square. It was not immediately known if anyone was hit, but one bicyclist was dragged off and beaten by troops.

About 2,000 soldiers, backed up by 20 tanks, were guarding the northeast entrance to the square at the heart of this capital of 10 million people.

Troops also fired at citizens in at least one incident late Sunday, and protesters were reported blocking streets in Shanghai, China's largest city. However, no troops were there, according to Shanghai radio.

The slaughter that left at least 500 dead, perhaps thousands, drew worldwide condemnation but failed to completely quell the 7-week-old student-led campaign.

Chinese sources said senior leader Deng Xiaoping ordered the bloody assault from a hospital where he is seriously ill with prostate cancer. "Even if they're functioning out of ignorance, they are still participating and must be suppressed," Deng, 84, was quoted as saying of the protesters.



The sources were from the office of Li Xiannian, the former president and now the head of an important advisory body. Officials never have confirmed Deng is seriously ill.

The Chinese government continued to defend its actions.

The State Council, the chief executive body, charged in a statement on national television Monday that a "small group" of people trying to overthrow the government had led rioters, who had killed dozens of troops and police. It also accused the protesters of wrecking more than 100 military trucks and public buses, beating soldiers and police, looting stores, and attacking the Great Hall of the People and other public buildings.

The statement, which did not mention civilian casualties, said the government had been too soft on its enemies and would "fight to the end."

Khomeini dead; Khamenei named new ruler of Iran

By The Associated Press

NICOSIA, Cyprus — Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini whispered Moslem prayers and then died in a Tehran hospital, and Iran's sharply divided leadership on Sunday chose President Ali Khamenei to succeed him.

The stern-faced Khomeini, who ruled the Islamic Republic he founded for a decade, died Saturday at age 86. He had been hospitalized after undergoing surgery for intestinal bleeding 11 days earlier.

The government declared 40 days of mourning and hundreds of thousands of grief-stricken Iranians jammed Tehran's streets, beating their heads in the traditional Shiite Moslem show of extreme grief.

"We have been orphaned ... Our father is dead," wailed one woman.

Iran's fractious leadership, which had been angling for power as Khomeini's health declined, met to study a document left behind by the leader that is believed to be a blueprint for the nation's future.

Later, an 83-member assembly chosen to handle the succession issue selected the 49-year-old Khamenei, considered a pragmatist opposed to fundamental radicalism, to replace him.

Tehran radio, monitored in Nicosia, said Khamenei was selected by a ⅔ majority of the assembly in a vote taken after five hours of discussions.

It was not clear whether the appointment was permanent or an interim measure.

Iranian media monitored in Nicosia said Saturday the ayatollah's condition had deteriorated because of an unspecified "complication."

Tehran's Resalat evening newspaper said Khomeini died just before midnight (4 p.m. EDT Saturday), nine hours after he suffered a heart attack.

"From God we come, to God we go," a radio announcer said, reciting a verse from the Koran, Islam's holy book.

Khomeini led the revolution that overthrew Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi in January 1979. A virulent enemy of the United States, he condoned the kidnapping of 52 Americans hostages from the U.S. Embassy in Tehran. They were held 444 days.

It was also not clear what, if any, effect Khomeini's death would have on foreign hostages held in Lebanon, most by pro-Iranian Shiite Moslem extremists. They include nine Americans.

In Kennebunkport, Maine, where President Bush was spending the weekend, White House officials released a statement saying: "With his passing, we hope Iran will now move toward assuming a responsible role in the international community."

Khomeini ruled Iran during the eight-year war with Iraq, and Iraqis cheered the news of his death and expressed hope that Iran now would sign a treaty to permanently end the war.

The ayatollah left behind a 29-page political testament in which he is believed to have proposed how the Islamic republic should be governed.

The "divine political will and testament" was read at an emergency session of the Majlis, Iran's parliament, the official Islamic Republic News Agency said. It did not report what the document said.

Khomeini had been reported ailing since he suffered a heart attack in 1986.

IRNA said Khomeini's body, "washed and shrouded according to Islamic laws," was taken to a mortuary. The funeral is expected Monday.

Outside Khomeini's residence in the north Tehran suburb of Jamaran, hysterically weeping bearded men beat themselves on the head.

Women clad in black head-to-toe chadors wept and beat their chests with their fists as loudspeakers blared recitings from the Koran.

Several men and women were carried into a mosque next to the residence after being knocked unconscious in a stampede. At least two men were bleeding from head injuries.

The radio and television broadcast appeals to the huge crowd to disperse to avoid injuries. But it swelled into a surging tide of people, reminiscent of the throngs who welcomed Khomeini in his triumphant return from exile in February 1979 to overthrow 2,500 years of monarchy.

Khomeini is survived by a wife, three daughters and his son, Ahmad. His eldest son, Mustafa, died while Khomeini was in exile in Iraq.

Changes to speed up enrollment

New schedule extended

By Paige Gantz
Staff Writer

With a revised summer enrollment process, students not owing the University delinquent fines should be able to complete summer school registration today faster and more efficiently.

During spring semester registration, students who had debts from unpaid traffic tickets, emergency student loans, library fines and residence hall payments had to wait in long lines to pay the fines before they were permitted to finish enrolling.

"No one will be permitted to enroll if they have any of these bills," said Donald Foster, University Registrar. "Even before we allowed people to pre-enroll in April, we made sure they didn't have any outstanding debts.

"By doing this we hope that the number of people owing money will be dramatically reduced."

The new fee system, which replaced the computer cards, also caused problems last spring.

"This caused an overload of the computer," Foster said. "Significant results would be achieved with a bigger computer, which the University hopes to have by January."

To prevent a computer overload, the time allotted for student enrollment has been increased by four hours. Students can now enroll from 8 a.m. to 8 p.m. An alphabetical registration schedule has also been established to speed up enrollment.

"The entrances will be controlled so students must report at their assigned time," Foster said. "However, if a student happens to miss the assigned time they may come from 7:40 to 8 p.m."

A $10 late registration fee will be assessed to those who fail to pay their fees by 8 p.m. These students will also be dropped from their pre-enrolled class schedule.

"We hope that by stretching out the registration schedule we will keep the computer from gumming up," said Doug Ackley, assistant controller for cashiering and student loans. "This procedure is not much different than that in the spring, but will definitely allow a third less people coming through at a time."

"We'll always accept personal checks, which is the most popular way in making fee payments. (Other payment methods are) credit cards, sponsored fees and cash," he said. "We try to limit cash transactions since it is not a safe medium to work

France explodes nuclear bomb

WELLINGTON, New Zealand — France exploded a 20-kiloton nuclear bomb at an underground site in French Polynesia on Sunday, New Zealand government scientists said.

The explosion, the third conducted by France this year, probably occurred on the Pacific atoll of Mururoa, the Department of Scientific and Industrial Research said.

The department said it recorded the explosion on a seismograph.

There was no immediate comment from French officials.

The test was the 106th in France's underground series. The previous test, on May 20, measured two kilotons.

France bans ivory imports

PARIS — France is banning imports of ivory to help save African elephants, the government announced Sunday.

Brice Lalonde, the environment minister, said the import prohibition will take effect Monday.

Experts estimate that the African elephant population has dwindled to half a million under pressure from poachers who kill elephants for their tusks.

France currently imports $3 million worth of ivory annually, most of it processed in Hong Kong.

Around the nation

Cartoonist dies of cancer

NEW YORK — Cartoonist Dik Browne, whose "Hagar the Horrible" and other comic strips have entertained millions, died of cancer Sunday. He was 71.

Browne was the only cartoonist ever to have received the National Cartoonists Society's Reuben Award for two different comic strips, "Hi and Lois" in 1962 and "Hagar" in 1973.

Browne, born in Manhattan, started at age 16 with the New York Journal and joined Newsweek in 1941.

After a stint in the Army, he worked in advertising, creating the Bird's Eye bird and Chiquita Banana and redesigning the Campbell Soup kids.

Browne collaborated with Mort Walker, creator of "Beetle Bailey," on 'Hi and Lois," which debuted in 1954 and still appears in more than 1,100 newspapers worldwide.

In the last year, Browne's two sons, Chris and Robert, have been drawing "Hagar" and were expected to continue to do so.

Pepper honored at service

MIAMI — Congressional leaders, clergymen and constituents welcomed U.S. Rep. Claude Pepper home for the last time Sunday, eulogizing him as a "guardian of the elderly" who left his mark in the hearts of the common people.

The 88-year-old congressman, who died Tuesday in Washington, was praised in his downtown church as a shining example of U.S. citizenship, filled with passion and dedication to those who needed his help and influence the most.

"He will never be replaced," said U.S. Rep. John Moakley, D-Mass. Moakley said Pepper "in a very real sense remains with us," with a long record of accomplishments.

Parks honored at reception

TOPEKA — Rosa Parks says she never meant to start the civil rights movement when she refused to move to the back of a segregated bus in Montgomery, Ala. in 1955.

"When I got on the bus, I only wanted to come home," she said Saturday night during a press conference in Topeka. "I just knew that as far as I was concerned, I would never ride on a segregated bus again."

Parks, 76, was the guest of honor at a reception commemorating the 35th anniversary of the landmark civil rights case, Brown vs. Topeka Board of Education, which led to desegregation of schools nationwide.

Parks said schools may not be completely free of segregation, "but it is far better than it was in 1954."

Rose garden nation's best

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Rose lovers from as far away as New Zealand gathered Sunday in Loose Park to honor the Laura Conyers Smith Municipal Rose Garden as the nation's best public rose garden of 1989.

About a thousand people watched as the award was presented to the Kansas City Rose Society and the Kansas City Parks and Recreation Department from All-America Rose Selections Inc., a non-profit organization of rose growers and producers.

The garden in Loose Park, named for the first president of the local rose society, features about 4,000 rose bushes. Because of Kansas City's unreliable climate, the city can be a tough place to grow and maintain roses.

"A rose really shows its mettle by being a Kansas City rose," said Sarajane Aber, garden chairman of the Kansas City Rose Society, which was founded in 1931.

The event was part of the 1989 Spring National Convention and Rose Show of the American Rose Society, meeting at the Hilton Plaza Inn.

Waste site causes dispute

OMAHA, Neb. — Disputes over the proposed low-level radioactive waste site have prompted rifts in families, business boycotts, attempted recalls of elected officials and heated exchanges in the three Nebraska counties that are finalists for the facility.

Groups opposed to the waste site have attracted more attention but Citizens for the Future in Nemaha County, People for a Better Nuckolls County and People For Progress in Boyd County are organized groups in favor the facility for low-level nuclear waste from a five-state compact.

The organizations have bought advertisements in newspapers and written letters of support.

Few people know the Nemaha County group exists.

"Nobody has voiced their support," said Marv Sather, a retired extension agent from Nelson who is a member of the local monitoring committee. "Most of them don't want to be cut up by someone. Immediately, the protesters jump on them. They question everything from their religion right down to their (loyalty to their) country."

Dick Wilson, a retired Auburn banker and chairman of the 300-member Nemaha County group, said there is no need for supporters to make a fuss. He said the site-selection process is proceeding.

Biologists receive grant

A study being undertaken by K-State biologists will help alert public health official to potential problems and suggest agricultural management strategies to reduce the risk of waterborne diseases.

George Marchin, associate professor of biology, has received more than $15,000 from the U.S. Department of Interior to conduct a one-year study of the microbial contamination of surface and ground waters adjacent to agricultural enterprises in Kansas.

Marchin and Steve Upton, assistant professor of biology, will study documented outbreaks of contamination caused by two parasites, by bacteria of two genera and by intestinal viruses. His research will compare the levels of these pathogens found in relatively pure water sources, such as one at the Konza Prairie Research Natural Area, to water sources adjacent to farms.

The biologists are examining different water sources to see if agricultural practices in Kansas are putting these problem organisms in the water.

Faculty name president-elect

E. Wayne Nafziger, professor of economics, was named president-elect of the Faculty Senate.

A K-State faculty member since 1966, Nafziger is an internationally known economist specializing in Third World development. He has authored seven books and numerous articles on the subject.

Polish election freest in 42 years

By The Associated Press

WARSAW, Poland — Throngs of cheerful Poles crowded into polling stations around the country on Sunday to elect lawmakers in Eastern Europe's freest balloting in more than 40 years.

Among the first to vote were Solidarity chairman Lech Walesa, in his home city of Gdansk, and Communist Party leader Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski, near his house in southern Warsaw.

The elections for a new Senate and the Sejm, the existing one-chamber Parliament, were the first in Poland with opposition candidates since 1947, when the vote was widely denounced as fraudulent and the communists seized power.

Opposition representatives are on the commissions that conducted Sunday's elections, and Solidarity signed up more than 100,000 poll watchers to ensure an honest count.

"People are not acting like sheep and just dropping in their ballots," Malgorzata Ufnal said as she voted in Warsaw. "They sit down and think about the candidates."

Polls opened at 6 a.m. and government officials estimated that 80 percent of the country's 27.2 million eligible voters would cast ballots before they closed at 10 p.m.

Each voter was required to cross out dozens of names on up to seven paper ballots, and the count was not expected to be complete until Wednesday or Thursday, according to election officials.

Walesa was cheered by 50 people who crowded polling station No. 169 in the Baltic port city of Gdansk as he voted for only the second time in his life after years of boycotting.

"Poland has started on the road of progress, and you have to help her," he told onlookers.

Voters chose 100 people for a new Senate, the only freely elected legislative chamber in the Eastern bloc. It will have veto power over legislation passed by the 460-seat Sejm.

Opposition candidates were permitted to run for 161, or 35 percent, of the Sejm seats, under an agreement on political and economic reforms reached in April between the government and the Solidarity-led opposition.

The agreement also legalized the trade union, which had been banned for seven years after a martial law crackdown in December 1981.

Solidarity voiced confidence before the elections. But the government appeared nervous that some of its best-known figures, running unopposed for the Sejm on the so-called "national list," might nonethe-

Soviet trains derailed in explosion

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW — A gas pipeline alongside the Trans-Siberian Railroad exploded as two passenger trains passed Sunday, incinerating rail cars and killing "hundreds and hundreds" of people, Soviet television said.

At least 800 of the estimated 1,200 people aboard the trains were missing, according to Tass, which described the explosion as a "tornado of fire." Many of the passengers were seriously injured by burning liquefied gas, the TV said.

President Mikhail S. Gorbachev and other top officials rushed to the scene. It was the third serious train accident in the Soviet Union in a year.

The pipeline containing liquefied petroleum gas exploded at 1:14 a.m. as the trains passed each other on opposite tracks between the towns of Ufa and Asha, 745 miles southeast of Moscow, Tass said. The news agency said gas seeped from the conduit and caught fire, but it was not clear what caused the leak.

"The exact figure of those killed by the accident is not yet known, but their number is measured by hundreds and hundreds," a television correspondent said on the nightly news. He said the death toll was high because burning liquified gas from the pipeline spewed into the railroad cars.

TV film broadcast to millions of Soviets showed charred railroad cars without windows lying at odd angles amid twisted tracks and broken railroad ties. The area was blackened and barren as though it had been bulldozed, a stark contrast to the plush green of trees dominating the landscape.

Black smoke wafted from the wreckage as a somber-faced Gorbachev, along with Premier Nikolai I. Ryzhkov, was shown speaking to people at the scene.

The blast was so strong it shattered windows in a village seven miles away and incinerated dozens of acres of trees, a TV correspondent said in a report from Chelyabinsk, the biggest city near the site.

As graphic film of bloody and blackened faces of victims flashed on the screen, the correspondent said many of the injured suffered second- and third-degree burns, some over 80 percent of their bodies.

"Military units are searching the forest and mountains in the hope that some of the passengers managed to escape from the tornado of fire," Tass said.

Ufa Mayor Mikhail A. Zaitsev said many injured were transported to his city, 60 miles west of the remote accident site in the Ural Mountains.

"Helicopters are constantly arriving with more injured," he said in a telephone interview. "It's terrible. It's monstrous. The people are very shocked and are suffering about what happened."

Others who accompanied Gorbachev to the scene included Russian federation Premier Alexander V. Vlasov, Defense Minister Dmitri T. Yazov, and Health Minister Yevgeny I. Chazov.

The emergency trip by Gorbachev recalled his decision in December to cut short a New York visit so he could rush to Soviet Armenia, where about 25,000 people were killed in an earthquake.

Top ten list of ethics violators to clip and save

Commentary

Mark Schmeller
Collegian Columnist

Many not-so-insightful Washington observers and political hacks have declared the recent brouhaha over Congressional ethics to be the result of the latest machinations of the "ethics beast." This critter, designed to prey upon the Reagan administration sleaze of the last eight years, has now broken free of its reins and has turned upon its Democratic Party creators. Conservative cretins like Robert Novak and Pat Buchanan are swooning with delight as the hypocrite Democrats get their just desserts.

Just as I no longer believe in such metaphysical follies as the Tooth Fairy or Santa Claus, I have little use for this "ethics beast." The real cause behind the whole ethics unpleasantness is that after eight years of watching Reagan sleazoids get away with murder, everyone else is trying to get in on the act: If you can't lick 'em, join 'em.

Thus, the real cause of the ethics crisis is not some sort of ethical chimera that has begun to munch on all the unaccounted dirty laundry out there. Rather, it is simply the work of a bunch of amateurs who have yet to master the nuances of unethical behavior.

By now you all must be asking, "Hey, Mark, how can I be unethical without getting caught? If a real snake-oil salesman like Jim Wright can get the hook, what are my chances?" My advice to you is learn from the mistakes of others. That's why I've prepared this list of current ethics violators. Clip and save your favorites.

10. B. Stanley Pons and Martin Fleischman, the cold fusion guys. These two really blew it in the academic-professional ethics department. After grabbing national headlines by claiming to have accomplished nuclear fusion in a test tube with a couple of wires, it turned out that they couldn't really back it up. At the same time, Brigham Young University, Georgia Tech, Texas A&M, the Soviets, the Hungarians and the Indians claimed to have also invented cold fusion.

Coming soon from Fleischman and Pons: A perpetual motion machine, a better mousetrap and a noiseless toilet.

9. Morton Downey Jr., sleazy scream-show host. Downey claimed to have been attacked by neo-Nazi skinheads in an airport restroom. Nobody witnessed this attack. Nobody saw any skinheads in the airport. The swastika on Downey's face was painted on backwards, as if he had done it himself, and the swastika looked different in police pictures than it did in later press pictures, as if Mort had touched it up for the cameras. However, all this distracts us from the true question: Why would skinheads attack a xenophobic, homophobic, right-wing paranoiac like Downey instead of, say, Phil Donahue?

8. The Internal Revenue Service and Guess Jeans. From the people who brought you long forms, short forms and form-fitting jeans comes a truly zany ethical indiscretion. Ronald Saranow, an IRS administrator, went after Guess Jeans' competitors, such as Jordache, for tax violations in exchange for goodies from Guess. This scandal will lead to a big shakedown at the IRS. The effects it will have upon fashion trends remain to be seen.

7. Rob Lowe. The star of such cinematic milestones as "Oxford Blues" and "St. Elmo's Fire," Lowe made a home movie of his roll in the hay with a 16-year-old girl while he was in Atlanta for the Democratic National Convention.

The good news: The video of Lowe's sexual athletics proves that something interesting did happen at the Democratic Convention.

The bad news: If we are to believe the supermarket tabloids, Lowe also made a tape of his fling with Brigitte Nielsen, which we may be forced to watch on an upcoming episode of "A Current Affair" with Maury Povitch.

6. Gene Bicknell. Kansas businessman and former candidate for governor, Bicknell has much in common with Rob Lowe. Like Lowe, Bicknell is a part-time actor, part-time political activist who likes to make movies of himself sleeping with beautiful starlets. "A Current Affair" recently unearthed a film Bicknell financed and starred in with the then-unknown Vanna White, which, much to my disappointment, has never been given theatrical release. Vanna has taken action to stop any future release of the Bicknell flick, as the film's nude scenes would damage her reputation as a serious and committed actress.

5. Pete Rose. Charlie Hustle may well turn out to be Charlie the Hustler if the allegations that Rose bet on Major League games, including Reds games, prove true. Some even claim that Rose gave hand signals to his bookie from the dugout. On the other hand, baseball players touch themselves so much that it's often hard to tell.

4. Newt Gingrich. Fittingly named after a small, slimy amphibian, and bearing a striking physical resemblance to Pete Rose, Gingrich, the House Republican Whip, has risen to power through his attacks upon Jim Wright's acceptance of illegal gifts and an unethical book royalty. Nevertheless, Gingrich has some skeletons in his closet as well. He received more than $100,000 in contributions from business people, as well as a $10,000 salary for his wife, for promotion of his own book, "Window of Opportunity."

3. Tony Coelho. Coelho, Democratic Whip for the House, made $6,882 off a junk-bond deal with the help of his good friend and insider-trading convict Mike Milken. Coelho once defended Milken in a speech as a man who "is constantly thinking about what can be done to make this a better world." Naturally, this remark was not in any way influenced by the fact that Coelho received $2,000 for making this speech from Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc., Milken's firm.

2. Jim Wright. Accused of taking loads of money from businessmen in return for influencing legislation to their benefit. Left his post as Speaker of the House in disgrace.

1. Oliver North. Convicted by a trial court of taking money from the government and putting it to his own private use. Currently a national hero awaiting a pardon.

Chinese students deserve democracy

For more than a month, Chinese students have occupied Tiananmen Square in an effort to bring democratic reforms to their homeland. The students have peaceably assembled and demonstrated in a tense but peaceful standoff with the "people's army." They even gave the soldiers Popsicles and sang the national anthem and other communist songs.

The people of Beijing came out in support of the students. When martial law was declared, citizens moved trucks across the road, and even lay down across the road to stop the troops' approach.

But all the good feelings between the people's army and the students came to an abrupt end June 3, when soldiers stormed the square.

The bloody clash wasn't necessary to maintain law and order — the square didn't need to be cleared with violence. Chinese leaders acted in desperation to squelch the movement, an action that is probably a direct result of the power struggle occurring in the upper ranks of China's government. Hardliners have gained the upper hand in the power struggle, as opposed to the more liberal leaders who favored leniency toward the protesters.

China's leaders acted in a decidedly oppressive manner, hoping that if the symptom cleared up, so would the disease. But democracy is not so easy an idea to erase. Once the seed is planted, it takes root.

Unfortunately, this seed of democracy was watered with the blood of possibly more than 500 dead and thousands more wounded. Weeping students watched as more than 20,000 troops moved into the square, tanks crushing those who would not move, soldiers shooting and beating the rest.

The people's army is no more. Now it is the army of the government.

Students had placed a statue in the center of the square, modeled after the Statue of Liberty. It was called "Goddess of Democracy" by the students and an insult to the nation by the government. It is an ironic and telling point that the statue was removed and destroyed by the army.

The students in Beijing deserve a chance to voice their opinions without fear of reprisal or bloodshed.

Tuition unfair

Editor,

I have been complaining to K-State Administrators since spring 1988 about the outrageous tuition that non-traditional students pay. I will be pleased to provide you with the letter I sent them last semester and their response.

A student taking from three to 20 hours of classes will pay tuition per credit hour as follows: three hours cost per hour is $52.48; 7 hours cost per hour is $97.34; 12 hours cost per hour is $56.78; 15 hours cost per hour is $45.43; 18 hours cost per hour is $37.85; and 20 hours cost per hour is $34.07.

Of course, these figures will be higher for fall semester according to the increase printed in the April 11 issue of the Collegian.

For example, the student who cannot be classified as full-time because of other obligations, i.e. work, family, etc., could pay almost $100 per hour. This becomes evident when a student who takes six hours pays $314.88, but a student who takes seven hours pays $681.40. It is hard to imagine that extra hour is so enriching that it costs $366.52. Furthermore, this new cost will put the student taking seven hours in the same tuition category as the student who takes 12 hours or more. If one checks the figures, one will see that a student with seven hours is paying almost three times more per hour than a student with 18 or 20 hours!

On the other hand, to be eligible for grants and other financial aid, one must have 12 or more hours to be considered a full-time student. Also, for foreign students to renew their student visa, they must carry 12 hours or more to be considered full-time students. Why doesn't the administration take the above-mentioned ambiguities into consideration in determining a fair tuition for all, without penalizing the non-traditional student?

Teach science

Editor,

The issue of teaching creationism in our schools under the guise of science is the effort of a few fundamentalist Christians trying to force their specific beliefs on American children. Their efforts are cleverly aimed to take advantage of American views, but their goals are the exact opposite: everyone should be forced to think as they do.

They argue that creationism should be taught in science courses as an alternative to evolution. The problem is that creationism is not a science, but a religious belief. You may believe in creation, but there is no way to test it as a scientific theory. Indeed, most theologians consider it blasphemy to even suggest that the word of God might be a "theory" or need to be "tested." In a philosophy course, it might be reasonable to consider the relative merits of creation and evolution as theories of the origin of man, but there is no way that creationism can be made part of a science curriculum without gravely insulting both science and religion.

The timing of this fundamentalist onslaught on science education could hardly have been worse for America. At no time in our history has it been so important for our children to become scientifically literate, as future progress in agriculture and high technology will be intensely scientific. We have already lost our world leadership as a net exporter; we cannot afford to lose our place as a leader in new ideas.

Check vaccination

Editor,

Once again I am writing the editor to offer purple applause.

This time I'd like to commend the student body as a whole for their receptivity and response to the recent measles outbreak.

The Collegian and other media have done a very good job of spotlighting this important public health problem. The K-State community in turn has responded by checking records and getting vaccinated or re-vaccinated as necessary. In this day and age of delivering health care, there are bedpans full of paperwork. The lines have been long in our measles clinic. The attitudes and behavior of the K-State clients have been super.

I want to thank K-Staters for helping us help you. Good health, good spirits and check your shot records.

Popular antiques, classic cars featured

Staff/Christopher T. Assaf

Paul Nelson's 1934 Packard V-12 Limousine draws the attention of onlookers at the annual Antique/Classic Car Show Sunday in Pioneer Park. About 50 classic and antique cars were on display at the show.

Staff Writer

Nothing may be better than an antique and classic car show to bring younger and older generations together.

People of all ages from all over Kansas gathered Sunday afternoon at Pioneer Park for the annual Antique/Classic Car Show sponsored by the Riley County Historical Museum, the Goodnow House Museum and the Three Valley Antique Car Collectors Club.

The cars were on display because of their unique style, their popularity when they first emerged, and the fact that a somewhat limited amount was made, said Ralph Utermoehlen, president of the Three Valleys Antique Car Collectors Club.

"I guess who participates in these shows is just the American person who's fascinated with the automobile because it's a big part of the economy, and it's preserving a bit of history from another era," said Utermoehlen. "Some of these cars put America on wheels and replaced the horse."

About 50 classic and antique cars were displayed at the show.

"It brings people together of all ages," Utermoehlen said. "There's people from Lawrence, Clay Center, Salina, Wamego, Junction City, and Augusta."

One car displayed was a 1908 Model F Buick, owned by Elbert and Geraldine Macy of Manhattan. According to a sign on the car, it included several "modern features" such as bucket front seats, stick shift, tilt steering wheel and a transverse mounted engine. The Buick had a 22-horsepower engine as well as acetylene gas headlights that can be lit with a match.

"It's one of the oldest (in Manhattan), if not the oldest," Geraldine Macy said.

Another car displayed at the show was a 1958 Ford Retractable Hardtop, owned by Carolyn Murphy of Augusta.

"The retractable hardliner (hardtop convertible) was made for three years only: '57, '58 and '59," Murphy said.

The 1958 Ford was the only production model with a retractable hardtop, she said. Many prototypes were produced, but this was the only one produced for sale.

Gene and Shirley Bonnette, Manhattan, bought their 1955 Chevy Bel-Air from a man in Wamego and restored it themselves.

"It was unrestored (when we bought it). It was a mess," Shirley Bonnette said.

The two, as do many at the show, own several antique and classic cars, including a 1940 Chevy Coupe, a 1960 Chevy Two-Door Hardtop and a 1964 Comet Convertible. They are also restoring another Bel-Air.

The show also included a slide show presented by Delbert and Glenna Felts, Lawrence, on their trip to Alaska in a group of 14 model "A" Fords.

This is the 10th year that this event has been held.

PINATA HAS BECOME A DINOSAUR!

Pinata Mexican Restaurant in Aggieville closed for business as of May 14, 1989. Pinata opened in Manhattan on August 28, 1979. It evolved from a franchise chain named Taco Kid to become an independent restaurant. Pinata enjoyed success until the last few years when business began to slow.

Competition became increasingly strong, both in the numbers of competitors and in the quality of competition. The average customer eats Mexican food about every 30 days. There are ten Mexican restaurants in Manhattan. Many other restaurants serve Mexican food. There are 60 plus restaurants serving our 50,000 plus population community. Divided, that is a little over 800 people per restaurant. Most bars serve Mexican food as hors d'oeuvres, i.e. nachos. Some have Mexican food "special" nights, plus tacos are a popular and easy to fix item at home. When you examine this list, it is not hard to see how easy it is to satisfy your "Mexican" palate twelve times a year. To succeed and compete, Pinata had to be very good. It wasn't as good as it needed to be. In the last twelve months we revamped our recipes and redid our menu, retrained our employees, and increased our marketing to go with an already pleasant decor. But that was not good enough. We did not generate enough business to sustain ourselves.

Add to that an increasing lease obligation, reappraisal and classification that increased taxes, pending increase in minimum wage (which means increased cost of food as well as labor), plus changing traffic patterns in Aggieville caused by the drinking laws age change, and there is no light at the end of the tunnel. We could not envision increasing sales enough to cover increased costs.

On May 14, 1989, Pinata became the best Mexican dinosaur in Manhattan.

Pinata would like to thank all of its loyal, regular customers as well as its casual customers over the last ten years for their patronage. Thanks for eating at Pinata!

NCAA meet produces 3 track All-Americans

File/Greg Vogel

Senior Dan O'Mara took an eighth-place finish in the discus in the NCAA national track meet concluded this past weekend. Steve Fritz and Connie Teaberry joined O'Mara in gaining All-America status.

By David Svoboda
Sports Editor

Three K-State track athletes attained All-American status at the NCAA Outdoor Championships held this past weekend in Provo, Utah.

Senior Dan O'Mara, junior Steve Fritz and freshman Connie Teaberry gained All-American honors on the basis of their individual performances.

Fritz, who was a reserve for the K-State men's basketball team last season, led the pack, finishing sixth in the decathlon with a total of 7,548 points. He set personal records in the pole vault and the javelin in the process.

"He's really come a long way since basketball season," K-State coach John Capriotti said of Fritz. "He trained really hard, it's just that he really hasn't trained very long (because of basketball)."

O'Mara, though somewhat disappointed by his failure to reach the finals in the shot put, rebounded to finish eighth in the discus. O'Mara had a personal best throw in the shot put preliminaries, but it was the discus that allowed him to reach all three of his pre-meet goals: making the finals, finishing in the top eight, and gaining All-American honors.

"Dan O'Mara is a self-made athlete, and I'm really proud of him," Capriotti said. "He's just a small guy who stayed with it and had it pay off."

Freshman sensation Teaberry may have been the biggest surprise of all, finishing ninth in her first national meet.

"Basically what you do when you're that young is go for the experience," Capriotti said. "To gain an All-American certificate in your first year is icing on the cake."

Nine other K-State athletes made the trip to Utah.

Two competitors, Joy Jones and Markeya Jones, made the trip only to see their hopes for All-American status go down the drain early, with a disqualification in Wednesday's 400-meter relay preliminary.

Their teammates in the relay, Latricia Joyner and Kim Kilpatrick, also had early exits. Joyner was knocked out of contention in Thursday's 100-meter dash preliminaries, while Kilpatrick failed to qualify for the finals in either the 100- or 400-meter hurdles.

Kilpatrick's failure to qualify in the 400-meter hurdles came despite her third-fastest time in her career.

Women's throwers Angie Miller, in the discus, and Greta Semsroth, in the javelin, also failed to qualify for the finals.

Five Kansans among signees

By The Collegian Staff

K-State's track and field program added 11 new performers during the spring signing period, Coach John Capriotti announced.

"We're very happy with this group," Capriotti said. "All the people we've signed should come in and help us in their respective events.

"We signed some good sprinters and some good distance kids. These athletes have a lot of ability. Now all we have to do is coach them."

Five Kansans are among those signed.

The top signee of the group is Ernest Greene Jr., a sprinter from Schlagle High School in Kansas City. Greene has won state Class 6A championships in the 100 meters and 200 meters.

Two Wichita natives, a male and a female, will join the Wildcats as well. The first, Pat Goebel, will join the distance squad. Goebel was 1986 and 1988 state Class 5A cross country champion while at Bishop Carroll High School, and an all-city selection in Wichita.

Paulette Staats, a product of Wichita South, is a two-time AAU national champion in the 1,500 meters. She won Wichita city league titles in the 800 meters, 1,600 meters, 3,200 meters and in cross country.

Another new member of the men's distance squad will be Jared Storm of Scott City. Storm set the state Class 4A record in the mile during his junior year at Scott City Community High School, becoming the first athlete from that school to set a state record.

Another Wichitan, but one who comes to K-State via the junior college ranks, is Marcus Wright, a middle distance runner.

Wright was second last year at the national junior college indoor championships in the 800 meters, and is a product of Wichita West High School.

Three sprinters were also added to the women's squad, all from the high school ranks.

The first was Chris Williams, a native of Vallejo, Calif. Williams, who attended Vallejo Senior High School, has one of the top times in the nation in the 200 meters.

Tammy Leach comes to K-State from Beaumont High School in Cleveland, Ohio. Leach was the state champion in the 100 meters and was undefeated all season, including a win over current K-State sprinter Markeya Jones in the state championship race.

The third sprinter is a multiple-event performer. Verida Walter of David W. Carter High School in Dallas, Texas, participates in the hurdles and is a triple jumper. Walter has the best time in Texas and second best in the nation in the hurdles.

One out-of-state performer joins the men's sprint squad. Michael Sims of H. Grady Spruce High School in Dallas earned all-America honors in the 400 meters in 1986 and placed second in the 1988 Junior Olympics in that event.

K-State also signed two athletes to compete in field events, including one for each squad.

The men's squad will now include Scott Merrill of Brunswick (Ohio) High School. He is a pole vaulter and won the indoor championship in that event at the Ohio state meet.

Tina Hergott joins the women's squad. She is a thrower from Hebron, Neb., and is the defending Nebraska shot put champion and a four-time state qualifier. Hergott finished second in the discus at the state meet last season.

Men's golf team ends season with 'disaster' at Big 8 meet

By David Svoboda
Sports Editor

Though the 1989 season ended on a disappointing note for the K-State men's golf team, Coach Russ Bunker said some of the pain of a disastrous final round at the Big Eight Championships in mid-May is now beginning to wear off.

Bunker's Wildcats, following the first day of competition at the Big Eight meet in Tulsa, Okla., were in sixth place after 27 holes of play.

Their goal of finally escaping the conference cellar was firmly within reach. But then disaster, in the form of inexperience, struck.

"We went down there with high hopes of definitely moving out of the cellar," Bunker said. "I'd have been very proud of our kids if they could have done that, because they worked hard all year.

"But in the final day of competition, our youth and inexperience came out. It was just obvious that the inexperience showed."

It showed in the form of a final round, 18-hole team total of 340 — K-State's worst performance of the year.

In short, it took the Wildcats from sixth place — just eight shots out of third — back to the cellar, 10 strokes behind Iowa State.

K-State's chances to escape the basement for just the third time since 1975 had come and gone, and Bunker, watching his team blow a 12-stroke lead, was very hurt.

"Any time you see a 22-shot swing it's very, very disappointing to me and very disappointing to the kids," he said. "But you've got to go from there."

In Bunker's first year as coach, K-State finished 11th in the 20-team University of California-Santa Barbara Invitational and third at both the Wichita State and Missouri Intercollegiate meets as highlights of their season.

The team was led by junior Jeff Sedorcek, who had a stroke average of 77.1 over 14 rounds.

The team loses seniors Troy Keller and Daran Neuschafer. Players expected to return include seniors-to-be Sedorcek, T.A. Fowler and John Shields, junior-to-be Tim Jennings, and sophomores-to-be Brett Vuillemin and Brad Stephens.

Bunker has added four transfers and one high school signee to the team as well.

The transfers include Bobby Donnellan, Cameron (Okla.) University; Richard Laing, UC-Santa Barbara; Greg Roberts, Washburn University; and Chris Thompson, Old Dominion University. All four players originally hail from Kansas.

The high school signee is Basehor-Linwood product David Sedlock.

"We've really hit recruiting hard," Bunker said. "We're recruiting hard workers, the kind of kids that will give 1,000 percent to help us turn this program around.

"Golf is so much of an individual sport as it is. We have to have guys capable of pulling together and working together for us to improve."

And to possibly avoid another finish in the cellar.

Humphrey leaves Wildcats

By The Collegian Staff

Guard LaKeith Humphrey, who played in all 30 games for the K-State men's basketball team last season and averaged 12.6 points per game, has quit the squad for personal reasons, Coach Lon Kruger announced May 15.

Humphrey, who transferred to K-State from Barton County Community College last season, has returned to his home in Memphis, Tenn.

Kruger refused to elaborate on the matter, stating only in a press release: "For personal reasons, LaKeith will not be a member of our basketball team for the 1989-90 season. Obviously we wish him well in his future pursuits."

However, according to K-State Police, a female student filed a sexual misconduct complaint against Humphrey earlier this year.

The complaint was filed in early March and was forwarded to the Riley County prosecutor's office.

Riley County Attorney Bill Kennedy, who is out of his office until June 9 and unavailable for comment, told the Kansas City Times May 16 that his office had investigated and later decided against prosecuting because it was unlikely a conviction could be obtained.

"In early March, I received a police report from Kansas State University," Kennedy told the Times. "I reviewed the report, and I declined prosecution."

Kennedy also told the Times the case probably wouldn't be reopened.

"There are cases where time makes your case, and others where it hurts your case. This is a case where time has destroyed the case," he said. "It was not due to any delay in my office or any delay by the Kansas State University police."

Humphrey combined with Steve Henson to give K-State one of its best backcourt combinations since Mike Evans and Chuckie Williams starred for the Wildcats during the 1970s.

K-State signed five guards during the spring signing period, including point guards Jeff Wires and Marlon Shadd.

Summer brings greater variety of sports to enjoy

Svoboda on Sports

DAVID SVOBODA
Sports Editor

Summer is here again, and I, for one, am very happy to see its arrival.

Summer brings us baseball, golf, tennis, boating, fishing and myriad other activities that if listed could fill the rest of this page.

Hopefully, over the next few weeks, those activities will fill this page.

The summer Collegian is a bit different than the model you'll see during the regular school year.

For one, the 14 NCAA-recognized sports in which K-State participates all occur during the months of August through May.

Needless to say, except for wrap-up stories like the ones you'll find on this page in the next few issues, it will be very hard to find information on the wins and losses of these teams during the next few weeks because the teams won't even be competing.

Instead, we will attempt to dig a little deeper to show the readers something they may not have known about the people, places and things involved in putting those 14 teams on the court, track, course or field each season.

But suffice it to say that those 14 teams are not going to be the sole focus of this page during the next two months. They can't be. If they were, you'd likely see just one story a day.

The bulk of what you're likely to read here will be about the games and activities you and I are participating in this summer. You name the topic; we're likely to write about it.

A one-man sports staff is likely to miss a few of the activities taking place in the world outside of his own, so I encourage you to submit ideas to me at the Collegian newsroom during business hours Monday through Friday. In fact, the bulletin board above my desk will be devoted to those ideas.

We're not making any guarantees that all of what you suggest or want to see will make it into print, we're just saying that we're human and capable of missing something that just might be a good story. If it is, I'm likely to dive (figuratively and, possibly, literally) right in.

Finally, you will also see some Associated Press, or wire, copy on this page as well. I love the Royals, and I'll likely run a story on them in each issue. Look for the Major League Baseball Standings each Thursday. They'll be a weekly feature.

You can also bet that anything of nationwide significance that happens in the sporting world will appear here, too.

The first order of business we'll take up nationally is the NBA Championship Series, scheduled to open Tuesday night.

That's my job: to present you the information you need in a way you can enjoy. After all, that's what summer is all about.

Summer is here. Enjoy.

Agassi, Sabatini both lose in France

By The Associated Press

PARIS — Jim Courier played his way out of the shadow of Andre Agassi and Mary Joe Fernandez continued her mastery over Gabriela Sabatini in two major upsets Sunday at the French Open.

Courier beat the fifth-seeded Agassi, his fellow pupil at Nick Bollettieri's tennis academy in Florida, 7-6, 4-6, 6-3, 6-2 in a third-round match that had been suspended the night before by darkness.

Fernandez, the 15th seed among the women, defeated the second-seeded Sabatini 6-4, 6-4 for her fourth straight triumph over the Argentine. The victory gave the 17-year-old American a berth in the quarterfinals and established her as a threat to defending champion Steffi Graf, who advanced with a 6-2, 6-1 victory over Italian qualifier Silvia La Fratta.

Boris Becker, the men's No. 2 seed, barely averted another upset, staving off a match point in the fifth set and outlasting No. 15 Guillermo Perez-Roldan 3-6, 6-4, 6-2, 4-6, 7-5 in one of the most exciting matches of the tournament.

Becker's quarterfinal opponent will be the surprising unseeded Jay Berger of Plantation, Fla., who came from behind to beat Thierry Tulasne, the last Frenchman in the draw, 3-6, 6-2, 6-0, 6-3.

No. 3 Stefan Edberg, continuing to show that he is a threat on clay and not just on fast surfaces, moved into the quarters with a 7-5, 6-3, 6-3 victory over rising Yugoslavian star Goran Ivanisevic.

Alberto Mancini of Argentina, the 11th seed and newest clay-court sensation, ousted No. 6 Jakob Hlasek of Switzerland 6-4, 6-4, 4-6, 2-6, 6-4 to grab the last quarterfinal berth in the bottom half of the men's draw.

Lakers, Pistons prepare to begin final showdown

By The Associated Press

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. — The 1989 NBA Finals are just what Hollywood needs: another sequel.

The Detroit Pistons lost in seven games to Los Angeles last year when the Lakers became only the fifth team to rally from a 3-2 deficit in the finals and the first team in two decades to repeat.

Now the Lakers, a record 11-0 in the playoffs, are trying to become the first team to win three straight since Boston ended a run of eight straight 23 years ago.

"We thought we should have beaten them last year," said the Pistons' John Salley. "We still feel we had the better team. Now we'll get another chance to prove ourselves. We're determined not to let this one slip away from us."

The best-of-seven series begins Tuesday night at The Palace with Game 2 scheduled for Thursday. The series then shifts to the West Coast for three games and the final two, if necessary, would be back in the Detroit suburbs.

The Lakers are shooting for their third straight crown and their fourth in five years. Only three teams have won three consecutive NBA titles — the Minneapolis Lakers (1952 to 1954) and the Celtics (1959 to 1966).

"I really appreciate what those Celtic and Lakers teams have done for all those years," says Detroit's Isiah Thomas. "It says a lot about those people."

But Lakers coach Pat Riley says the Lakers will have to concentrate on playing the Pistons rather than a third straight title.

"It's a thought process more than anything," he says. "If you think that winning a championship is your main priority, you really miss out on the competition, the challenge."

The Pistons finished with an NBA-best 63-19 record to earn the home-court advantage. The Lakers were the best in the Western Conference with a 57-25 mark.

The Pistons beat the Lakers twice during the regular season, but both teams are different now. The Pistons beat the Lakers 102-99 on Nov. 26 at The Palace and 111-103 at the Forum on Feb. 14.

The next day, Adrian Dantley was traded to Dallas for Mark Aguirre.

Orlando Woolridge was ineffective in both regular-season meetings, but the Lakers have gotten better production out of the 6-foot-9 reserve in the past month. Riley has said Woolridge's contributions have been a key factor in the Lakers' 11-0 playoff record.

"This is the way it's supposed to be — the best in the West against the best in the East," Riley says. "It's going to be a great matchup."

The Lakers will be playing after an eight-day break since completing their sweep of Phoenix. The Pistons needed six games to finally put away Michael Jordan and the Chicago Bulls on Friday.

"We pretty much felt for a while it was going to be them and us," says the Lakers' Magic Johnson. "We've been waiting for them. They want us bad."

As Kareem Abdul-Jabbar winds down his great career, the Magic Man has shouldered an increasing share of the Lakers' offensive load — a point not lost on Detroit's Joe Dumars, who had to guard Jordan and who now will be faced with the problem of stopping Johnson.

"Yeah, this is something," Dumars says. "I've just gotten finished with the MVP runner-up and now I've got to go against the MVP. You don't get any breaks at this time."

In men's competition, Clifton Etheridge competed in the long jump, Pat Hessini in the 1,500-meter run, and Ray Hill in the 100-meter dash, but none was able to reach All-American status.

Capriotti was pleased with the way the year ended.

"I'm really proud of the effort of our coaches and our athletes this season," he said, "We gave tremendous effort both indoors and out."

Sports Briefly

From Collegian and Sports Information Reports

Assistant SID resigns

Leah Buckert, K-State assistant sports information director, announced her resignation from that position effective June 1.

Buckert is leaving the University to be married to former Wildcat assistant football coach Bill Singler, and then will be moving to Oregon, where Singler has accepted a coaching job in the collegiate ranks.

Sports Information Director Kenny Mossman said a search is underway for a replacement.

Academic honors announced

Six members of the K-State track team have been named first-team members of the Lee Jeans Academic All-Big Eight honor roll. Four other members of the team also appear on the honor roll.

Two members of the women's squad were named first team, including senior thrower Amy Dryer, who is currently carrying a 4.0 in education. The other was Angie Barry, a senior distance runner, who carries a 3.0 in psychology.

Among the four men named were distance runners Pat Hessini and David Warders. Hessini, a senior in industrial engineering, carries a 3.6, and Warders, a junior in park resources management, carries a 3.4.

The final two men on the first team were senior distance runner Sean Banks, who carries a 3.2 in journalism, and senior high jumper Brad Speer, who has a 3.0 in marketing.

The four other K-Staters who appeared on the honor roll but weren't named first-team performers were men's distance runners Jan Jonsson and Brian Zwahlen, and women's heptathlete Karen McGaughey and distance runner Becky Ives.

According to the rules of the competition, athletes must have a 3.0 grade point average and be a squad regular to be considered for the list. First-year athletes are not allowed.

Collins named All-Midwest

K-State centerfielder Sean Collins was named first-team All-Midwest Region by collegiate baseball coaches across the region in late May.

Collins was eligible for the honor because he had earlier been named first-team All-Big Eight along with fellow Wildcat David Hierholzer, a pitcher.

In being named to the All-Big Eight team, Collins and Hierholzer became the first Wildcat duo to be named first-team since 1978. K-State has had several single first-team performers over the last several years, but never more than one.

Wildcat outfielder Russ Ringgenberg and pitcher Bill Schafer were named honorable mention All-Big Eight.

Collins hit .361 for the year with seven homers and 33 stolen bases. Hierholzer finished the year with a record of 5-5, but had wins over two Top Twenty teams: San Jose State and Oklahoma.

Baseball team signs pitcher

A Kansas high school player has become the fourth member of K-State's baseball recruiting class.

Wichita South pitcher Dan Driskill, a 6-3, 195-pound right-hander, becomes the third pitcher to sign with the Wildcats this spring.

In his junior year at Wichita South, Driskill had 82 strikeouts in only 56 innings of work. He has also thrown three no-hitters.

Driskill joins pitchers Kent Hipp and Sean Pedersen and infielder Scott Stroth in signing with K-State.

Guard transfers to Washburn

Todd Stanfield, a backup to Steve Henson at guard on the K-State men's varsity basketball team for the past two seasons, will transfer to Washburn University in Topeka beginning with the 1989-90 school year.

Stanfield, a 6-1 sophomore from Springfield, Mo., played in 14 games last season, all as a reserve. He had 11 points, six assists, six steals and five rebounds.

In compliance with NCAA rules, Stanfield will have to sit out one year at Washburn before he becomes eligible to play for the Ichabods.

Basketball recruiting ends

The K-State men's basketball team brought its spring recruiting to a close over the break with the signing of three high school guards to national letters of intent.

The first of the new Wildcats is 6-4 Askia Jones of San Antonio, Texas. Jones averaged 33 points and 11 rebounds a game while leading Marshall High School to a berth in the Texas state tournament's final 16.

Another 6-4 performer signed was Patrick Sams of Florida's Bartow High School. Sams was a Street and Smith's magazine honorable mention all-American, and averaged 23 points and seven rebounds a game in leading his team to a 33-3 record.

The last guard signed in the final flurry was 6-3 Marlon Shadd of West Palm Beach, Fla. Shadd averaged 18 points, nine assists and five rebounds a game for Palm Beach Lakes High School.

The signing of the three guards brought the final K-State total to eight, including four high school players and four from the junior college ranks.

The other high school player was 6-6 forward Kent Bennett. The four juco transfers are 6-4 forward Keith Amerson, 6-5 guard Jean Derouillere, 6-6 forward Ryan Thornton and 6-0 point guard Jeff Wires.

Football program recognized

For the second straight year, the K-State football program has gained national recognition for its graduation rate.

K-State, with a graduation rate of 71.4 percent, was just one of 13 schools honored for a rate better than 70 percent. The College Football Association made the awards.

Other schools receiving recognition were Kentucky, Boston College, Colorado, Duke, North Carolina, Notre Dame, Penn State, Rice, Tennessee, Tulane, Vanderbilt and Virginia.

Volleyball team inks Mott

Manhattan High School product Alison Mott will join the K-State volleyball squad for the 1989 campaign, Coach Scott Nelson has announced.

Mott played volleyball, basketball and softball while at Manhattan High, and is the fourth new player to join the Wildcats for the 1989 season.

Denardo to Junior Olympics

K-State assistant volleyball coach Michael Denardo will serve as head coach of the Heart of America team in the United States Junior Olympics National Championships to be held July 3-8 in Toledo, Ohio.

Denardo's team will compete in the 16-and-under bracket, and will be composed of junior players from Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa and Missouri.

Diverse entertainment featured in city's summer arts program

By Nancy Downing
Editorial/Features Editor

Ah, Manhattan in the summer. College students might think of long, boring days and nights.

In reality, Manhattan in the summer means plays, movies and live music thanks to Arts in the Park 1989 and the Manhattan Parks and Recreation Department.

"Every show fell together on schedule and all these shows are great," Arts in the Park coordinator Don Cukjati said. "This year we have a well diversified program, with every type of group and discipline, from rock 'n' roll to country, reggae to jazz."

This year's schedule attempts to have something for everyone in Manhattan.

Every Tuesday night, the Manhattan Municipal Band will perform at City Park. Wednesday nights are for the younger generation, with Puppet Theatre at 7 p.m., followed by a movie.

Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights feature stage performances by various local and nationally known artists. Some of the locally based bands include New Vintage Jazz, Invisible Images and the Tommy Lee Band.

The season opened with a Municipal Band concert May 29, then Vince Vance and the Valiants kicked off June with a high-energy tribute to 50's and 60's rock 'n' roll. June 2 presented New Vintage Jazz, and with June 3 came Invisible Images, a fusion band.

If the first few concerts are any sign, the summer season is a diverse one. All concerts will start at 8 p.m. in the City Park. Other highlights of this season will include Bruce & Liz playing folk music June 9; Fairwarning, with its own brand of rock 'n' roll and dance music on June 17; Manhattan Jazz Orchestra on June 24; Trinidad Tripoli Steel Band on July 1. The season finishes with Hot

Center seeks volunteers

By Martha Kropf
Staff Writer

Anyone can help. Anyone can reach out to others in need and participate in the first response counseling system at the Fone Crisis Center.

The Fone Crisis Center is sponsoring a training session for summer volunteers on Saturday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. at the University for Man. Volunteers do not need to sign up for the session, said Mary Kipp, coordinator for the Fone Crisis Center.

Although the session is open to the public, Kipp said she prefers that volunteers be high school graduates. If they are not 18 years old, they must have parental permission, said Tony Jurich, faculty adviser for the center.

The session will teach new volunteers how to reflectively listen to callers and how to ask questions in order to find the callers' problems.

"You try to help them understand what they are feeling," said Charlene Nichols, former assistant coordinator for the center and part-time volunteer.

Jurich, who is a professor of Human Development and Family Studies, will attend the session to talk to the volunteers about loneliness, depression and suicide.

"The volunteers have an awful lot to learn in a short space," Kipp said.

Ideally, at least 49 people are needed weekly to run the Fone Crisis Center, Kipp said.

"Last (spring) semester we had 60 wonderful people, and next (semester), if we have it as good, we have it made."

The Fone Crisis Center operates three shifts during the night, seven days a week. The first shift runs from 5 to 8 p.m., the second from 8 to 12 a.m., and the third from 12 to 8 a.m. Kipp said she likes to have at least two people on each shift in case of a real crisis situation.

"We deal with everything from suicide to people having trouble with classes to battered women," Kipp said. "You name it. We deal with it."

If volunteers are unable to handle the problem, the center has names of people who are more likely to be able to.

The Fone Crisis Center number is 537-0999.

Standing in a fountain at the west entrance to the Manhattan Town Center, the bronze sculpture "Rotatation," by Jon Havener, a professor of art at the University of Kansas, is Manhattan's first public sculpture.

Mall sculpture dedicated

By Kevin Kramer
Staff Writer

Manhattan's first public sculpture was officially dedicated Saturday amid the celebration of the Downtown Fun Festival.

The sculpture, called "Rotation," is the work of artist Jon Havener, who is a professor of art at the University of Kansas. Constructed from sheet bronze, it stands more than 5 feet high and weighs about 1,000 pounds.

"The sculpture represents that portion of Manhattan that appreciates the arts," said John Biggs, director of the Manhattan Arts Council.

Havener said he hopes "the piece will stand the test of time and become part of the landscape in Manhattan, and that the sculpture will continue to be an important focal point and piece of interest as the years go by."

Biggs said the art is a gift from the Manhattan citizens of this century to the Manhattan citizens of the next century.

"It is my hope that this project is the first of a number of gifts we will leave for future generations of Manhattanites."

The sculpture is the result of cooperative work between the Manhattan Arts Council, city commissioners and a community development group, Biggs said. The community group consists of about 200 people who donated money to finance the sculpture project.

The sculpture was selected by five Manhattan Arts Council jurors from 25 entries in a six-state regional competition. The project was first considered nine years ago.

Havener received a $9,500 commission for the project, which was funded by private donations, Biggs said.

Mayor Kent Glasscock said the dedication recognizes the vibrant, creative and combative decade in Manhattan.

"The 1980s have been a time of great change for Manhattan — a great reawakening, a time of serious reassessment, redirection and a time of profound change," Glasscock said.

Glasscock said during an era when most of the communities of Kansas were working in terms of procrastination and half measures, the people of Manhattan were working together to build the partnerships and the visions that would literally change the face of the town and its collective future.

"This is not the same Manhattan that was here 10 years ago," he said. "We have created an enriched community that is more than streets and roads. We have created a community we can be proud of and believe in — a community that will take us into the 21st century."

"We are pleased to have the sculpture in place," said Chris Heavey, general manager of Manhattan Town Center. "There was a lot of hard work that went into bringing it here."

The sculpture symbolizes the interaction and acts as a conduit between the mall and downtown, Heavey said.

"Rotation" was put into its fountian base May 17 at the Manhattan Town Center's west entrance, facing Poyntz Avenue.

"The sculpture is a strong piece of art when the water is turned off through part of the year," Havener said. "But when water is added, sight and sound become an element of the piece.

"One of the things that intrigued me about the project was its location in the downtown area. It is a very handsome environment. ... I am very honored to have a piece of my work here in this location."

High student loan default rate may jeopardize loan funding

By Martha Kropf
Staff Writer

Universities and other institutions of higher education who cannot reduce their Guaranteed Student Loan default rate could face losing their federal funding for student loans.

Secretary of Education Lauro F. Cavazos announced a comprehensive new initiative to combat defaults on Guaranteed Student Loans (GSL). This measure is in response to high rates of default. According to the Department of Education, 37 cents out of every GSL dollar goes to loans not paid, and an estimated $1.8 billion in loans will be unpaid this year.

Larry Viterna, director of student financial assistance, said this program requires institutions with a default rate of 40 percent to 60 percent to develop a default reduction plan.

Schools with default rates above 60 percent will be subject to limitation, suspension or termination from the GSL program unless they can reduce their default rate at least five percent each year over five years.

Viterna said K-State is not in danger of losing its federal funds.

"We're in very good shape," he said.

A new method will be used to compute the default rates of institutions. Instead of averaging the default rates over several years, the new measure determines the default rate yearly.

The previous way of computing the default rate was "making the default rate higher than it really was," Viterna said.

He said K-State's default rate is 11.3 percent, based on students who were to begin to repay their loans in 1986 and defaulted in 1986 or 1987. The University of Kansas has a default rate of 12.3 percent, and K-State's College of Veterinary Medicine, which is separated from the University when figuring rates, had a 2.5 percent default rate.

them to already overflowing hospitals, according to news reports.

"It's really like a war, but the people have nothing, and the soldiers have machine guns," Lin Li said.

Junping Li, graduate in agricultural economics, believes the whole truth surrounding the massacre won't be known.

"Probably only some people in Beijing will know the truth about how many are casualties or dead," said Junping Li. "We are going to tell the truth to the families. It is the only thing we can do."

Junping Li said he was "shocked and saddened" and the news reports "were despairing."

He said students in America plan to try to contact relatives and friends in Beijing to relay the information. The demonstrators donated more than $900 at the Kansas City rally to send to families and students in China.

Yang said even though he does not know if K-State students have friends or relatives who participated in the demonstrations, "We are proud of them."

"As relatives in the United States, we worry about them. ... If they are wounded or dead, we do not know," Yang said.

Lin Li's family lives near the campus of Peking University in the area where troops and tanks are gathering for what may be another clash between the soldiers and students.

Lin Li is concerned about his parents, grandmother and younger sister who live near the University, and said he will try to contact them today.

Jie Yang, who was a teacher in China, said he thought he would "probably be in Tiananmen Square" if he was in Beijing at the time.

"I think I would have strongly suggested to my students to go to the square. It concerns the country's future," he said.

Yang said it is still early to talk about the future of China, but in the immediate future, the hard-line government will be in control.

"The people aren't armed or organized, but the confidence in the government has been greatly reduced," he said.

Chinese students agree that the United States should impose sanctions against the country, Yang said.

"A number of students here feel disappointed about the U.S. comments on the massacre in Tiananmen Square," he said.

It identified the protest leaders as advocates of "bourgeois liberalization," or Western political and social ideas, and followers of the ultra-leftist "Gang of Four" who sought to seize power during the final years of the 1966-76 Cultural Revolution.

Student leaders, meanwhile, called for a general strike. The response of workers was not immediately clear.

Areas of the capital were dominated by hundreds of thousands of angry citizens who bolstered barricades to restrict troop movements Sunday.

Tens of thousands of troops were stationed around the 100-acre Tiananmen Square. As many as 200,000 more were believed camped in the outskirts of the city.

Later, more than 100 tanks and armored personnel carriers moved into the city from the east.

Chinese students marched tearfully in Taipei, Paris, London, San Francisco, New York, Los Angeles, Oslo, Vancouver and other cities. In Hong Kong, which will revert to Chinese rule in 1997, about 200,000 people rallied to mourn the Beijing slaughter.

Western governments and some communist regimes expressed outrage over the violent crackdown. Some Western leaders called for diplomatic action or economic sanctions.

The military entered the city to enforce martial law, declared May 20 but not enforced then because of a government power struggle caused by the protest movement. The struggle pitted hardliners such as Deng and Premier Li Peng against moderates such as Communist Partv leader Zhao Ziyang, who reportedly lost his post.

Soldiers began shooting, beating and running over Beijing residents late Saturday as they finally started their deadly push to Tiananmen Square, where students were in the third week of a sit-in. Flames from burning military vehicles seized by protesters lit up the sky, and bodies were scattered in the streets.

Sunday evening, about 100 troops charged into a residential area just north of the square.

Foster said the summer enrollment total for last summer was 6,954.

"It appears that enrollment will be close to that of last summer. We expect no major increases or decreases," Foster said.

"Summer school enrollment is hard to calculate until the summer is actually over, due to the unknown number of public school teachers who take short classes throughout the summer because they need to be recertified, and the classes that the division of continuing education offers," he said.

Violence in Beijing escalates; locals react

Troops reinforce positions in capital city

By The Associated Press

BEIJING — Hundreds of troop trucks, many piled high with supplies, roared into the capital Thursday to reinforce the military occupation, and turmoil spread to more than a dozen cities.

The United States ordered embassy dependents to leave China on Thursday. Many embassies scrambled to evacuate their nationals a day after Chinese soldiers, saying they were looking for a sniper, sprayed a diplomatic compound with gunfire.

Trucks came into central Tiananmen Square for more than an hour Thursday. Many were filled with boxes of supplies, but a few carried troops with rifles aimed at people bicycling along the road. It was not immediately known whether these were the same troops, the 27th Army, that left the city in two large convoys Wednesday.

The 27th was responsible for killing and wounding thousands of people when it stormed the city Saturday to wrest control of Tiananmen from students demonstrating for democratic reforms. U.S. intelligence estimates put the death toll at 3,000.

Beijing is also surrounded by armies that reputedly oppose the harsh martial law crackdown, setting the stage for a possible major battle between rival military factions. There have been reports of skirmishes between soldiers, but no serious clashes.

In Washington, the State Department urged all Americans to leave China at once, calling the situation "volatile, uncertain and increasingly dangerous." It ordered the evacuation of 258 diplomatic dependents.

State television broadcast a statement from the Communist Party that any members found to have "plotted, organized and led the rebellion" would be expelled and punished severely.

The warning, broadcast on television, did not mention any names. But conservative party leaders who ordered the crackdown were said to have singled out party chief Zhao Ziyang as the instigator and ordered his ouster.

Another government announcement said soldiers were authorized to "forcibly dispose of, on the spot" anyone who resisted arrest.

In the provinces, crowds protesting the army's invasion of the capital blocked major roads and railways with barricades in anticipation of military assaults.

Roland Dumas, the French foreign minister, declared in Paris that China was "on the verge of civil war" and the French Embassy staff would be reduced "to the indispensable minimum."

Soldiers in Beijing sprayed bullets at a diplomatic compound and several other buildings in a foreign residential area. The U.S. Embassy ordered the evacuation of all dependents of staff members, and thousands of foreigners went to the airport hoping to get tickets out.

The Chinese Foreign Ministry said the U.S. decision to stop arms sales and military contacts in protest of the bloody crackdown was a "detriment to bilateral relations."

Many other nations also have imposed sanctions or frozen relations.

China condemned the United States for giving refuge to dissident Fang Lizhi, a well-known astrophysicist. It accused Fang, who fled to the U.S. Embassy, of attacking the Communist system and said Washington was interfering in China's internal affairs.

Chinese informants reported seeing the bodies of three people who were killed by soldiers and said seven people were killed or wounded near the railway station when a convoy of thousands of troops sped toward the eastern suburbs Wednesday morning.

A major battle has yet to materialize between the 27th Army and supposedly rival military units on the edges of the city, but a witness said the 27th and 38th armies, based in Hebei and Beijing respectively, fought each other with automatic weapons early Wednesday about 12 miles east of downtown.

The witness believed two bystanders were killed, but was not sure about military casualties.

State television showed Chinese reporters Wednesday on a tour of garbage-strewn Tiananmen Square. Soldiers appeared to be sparsely deployed and tanks could be seen on the side near the imperial palace.

"Not one person died on the square," a martial law official said. Students driven from the square after a three-week protest claimed hundreds were shot down or crushed by tanks during the invasion early Sunday.

Specific information is difficult to obtain because journalists cannot cover all parts of the city, and travel to the provinces is difficult. China's top leaders have not appeared since the crackdown began and official media report little about the violence.

In other cities:

- Six people were run over by a train while manning a barricade near the Shanghai railway station Tuesday night.
- Tens of thousands of people in the ancient capital of Xian blocked roads and held anti-government demonstrations.

Local students send money, information

By Chris Koger
Campus/City Editor

In an effort to inform those in Beijing and other major cities in China, a group of students has been using telephone lines to send information ignored or covered up by the media to China over telex and fax machines.

"They totally lie. They report that nobody died when Tiananmen Square was cleared," Chao Liang, graduate in food science, said about the Chinese television news reports. "We are really, really angry. We feel obligated to tell them the truth."

Jie Yang, a member of the Chinese Student and Scholar Association, said students sent pictures from American newspapers and magazines showing dead Chinese demonstrators totalling more than the 23 students reported dead by the government.

Ironically, the students found the phone numbers in newspaper ads in back issues of the People's Daily, the Communist Party newspaper that is sent to almost all Chinese students in America.

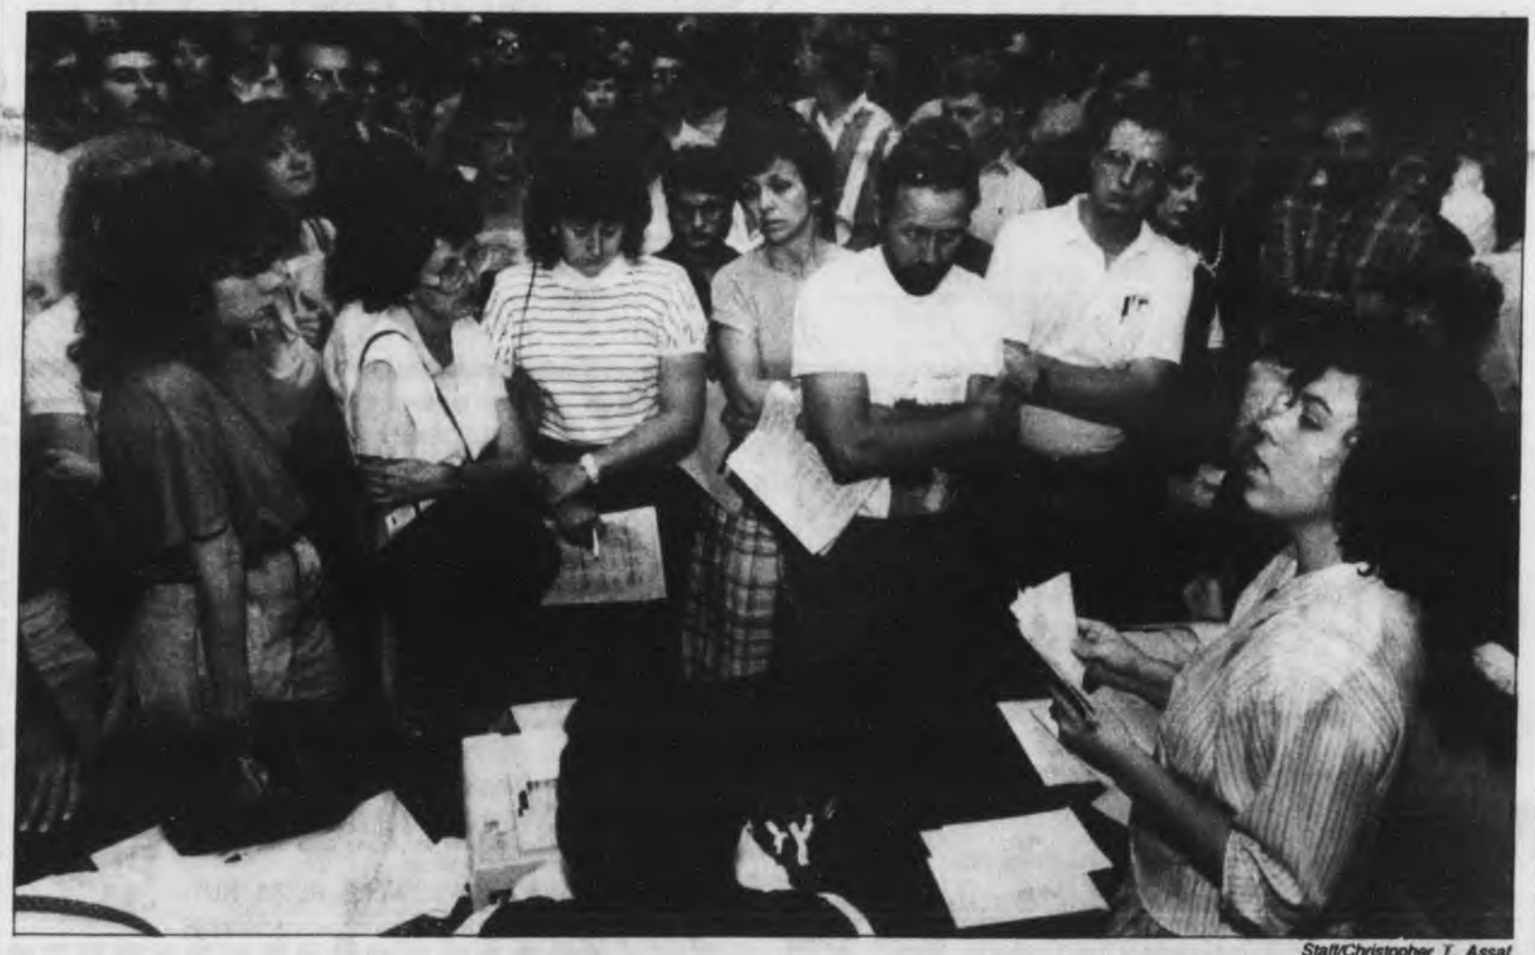
Information detailing events in Beijing has been sent through the lines, but until this morning when Liang is billed for the calls, he won't know if they are being received. If they haven't, the calls were free.

Liang said staff members in the Department of Grain Science have been helping by sending information through telex lines.

"This is not their obligation, but they feel we are helping. ... Everyone seems to be willing to help us," he said. "Students from Taiwan and China have worked with us."

Most of the numbers found in the ads were for large corporations in China, but Liang said he isn't certain if the government has taken over fax and telex lines. Liang said a friend told him the government has control of most fax machines.

Yang said at first, the government allowed fax use to continue despite students' sending information into the country, because cutting fax use would hurt business relations.



Now, he said he has heard rumors that the government has shut down a majority of the machines.

"It is clear the government is lying, and I hope the information gets out," Yang said. "If certain personnel are controlling the fax machines, I doubt it will get into students' hands. But most large corporations there have shown sympathy for the students, so it is possible."

Liang said communication with Beijing isn't as easy as with other cities.

"We need to emphasize (transmit-

Police seek rapist; series of assaults presumed related

By The Collegian Staff

Riley County Police are investigating a series of sexual attacks in Manhattan over the past month, and victims' reports have led police to believe they are looking for one suspect.

Capt. Allen Raynor said three of the four victims were K-State students, and it is possible the suspect is also a student. The attacks have occurred on Fridays: May 12, 19 and 26. On May 19, two females reported being attacked.

Raynor said there isn't a definite pattern linking the attacks, but the method used and description of the suspect were similar in the four cases. Two of the cases resulted in aggravated sexual assault, and two in battery.

At 1 a.m. on May 19, a female was attacked and battered in the 800 block of Kearney when she was grabbed from behind while trying to enter her apartment. At 4 a.m. that same morning a woman was battered in her residence after the suspect entered through an unlocked window. The residence was also burglarized.

In a similar incident that occurred on the 26th, a woman was raped in her residence after the suspect entered through a window.

Police have released a composite sketch drawn with the help of victims' descriptions. The suspect is described as being a white male with a thin build, a mustache, blond or brown hair with a receding hairline. The suspect stands five feet, six inches to five feet, 10 inches tall, and is about 25 years old.

Raynor said there has been "some hysteria over the attacks; maybe more than warranted, but it will create a public awareness of the attacks," thereby promoting safety measures to decrease the possibility of being attacked.

Police are asking for information in the cases, and anyone who knows about the attacks should call the police department at 539-2112 or Manhattan Crime Stoppers at 539-7777.

Computers delay enrollment

By Paige Gantz
Staff Writer

Despite attempts to create a faster, more efficient enrollment process, the computer system used for registration overloaded Monday, creating a backlog of students waiting to receive class schedule printouts.

"The overload situation was very similiar to what happened during last semester's spring enrollment," University Registrar Don Foster said. "The computer was simply trying to do too many jobs at one time and instead of accomplishing them, it wasn't getting any of them done."

Problems began with the computers in the morning, but the backlog didn't begin until a larger number of students attempted to enroll that afternoon.

Jason Coleman, a University of Kansas junior taking summer classes at K-state, didn't find the enrollment process too enjoyable.

"Besides myself, other people around me were having a hard time in figuring out the steps for enrolling," he said.

Foster said three problems contributed to the overload situation, the first of which was the overloading of internal system operations.

"The software of the computer program that does the enrollment and fee assessment procedure had errors that were hard to find," Foster said. "We tried to correct them as we found them, but with a lot of people enrolling in a short amount of time, it was difficult."

Improper printing capabilities also slowed down the process.

"Students who had enrolled and had their fees assessed had to wait for a printed fee receipt," he said. "The printer couldn't print fast enough, which caused a backlog for at least an hour, so the printer could get caught up."

During the computer foul-up, workers had to do the fee assessment by hand.

"Even though the fee receipts are done by hand, they are valid. They work just like a regular fee receipt, but if you feel the need to have a printed out receipt, go to the enrollment center," he said. "They will print one out for you, but we feel this would be unnecessary."

Foster said he attended a meeting Tuesday to find ways to help fall term enrollment.

"We know we need more computing power, which we won't have until spring, but we are looking into alternatives to help alleviate the computer's stress," he said.

Software used in the registration process will be tested in the next two months so the problems won't occur again, Foster said.

A smooth enrollment depends on whether or not students come to enroll at their scheduled times, Foster said.

Swiss ban violent recordings

BERN, Switzerland — Parliament on Wednesday banned videos and sound recordings that show excessive violence.

The National Council, the lower house, unanimously approved a revision of the penal code to set unspecified jail terms or fines for violators of the violence ban.

The article covers sound and visual recordings, as well as pictures that obviously feature violence against humans or animals without any artistic or scientific value.

Horses and deer found dead

ELY, Nev. — As many as 400 wild horses and 200 deer have been found shot to death and covered with dirt near here, authorities said.

Undersheriff Harry Collins said Tuesday the carcasses were found in a remote area, including a private ranch, over several months. The shootings apparently began in October and continued into March, authorities said.

No arrests have been made. A federal grand jury is investigating.

Last fall, more than 500 mustangs were found slaughtered in Nevada about 200 miles from here. Two men go on trial in federal court Tuesday in some of the deaths. Three others face trial in July.

Killing deer is a state offense, punishable by a year in jail. Killing wild horses is against federal law and carries up to a year in prison and a $2,000 fine.

Diver sucked through pipe

FORT PIERCE, Fla. — An offshore intake pipe sucked up a scuba diver and pulled him 1,650 feet, depositing him at a nuclear power plant.

"I thought I was dead," said William Lamm, 45, who was spearfishing when he was pulled into the 16-foot diameter, barnacle-studded pipe off Florida Power & Light's St. Lucie nuclear plant on the Atlantic coast.

"It was darker than any dark I've ever seen, and I tried to hold my arms in front of me for balance, but I tumbled and bounced all over the sides of the pipe."

Lamm's trip through the plant cooling-water system ended four minutes later in a canal at the power station, where a security guard saw him surface, FPL said. The scuba diver was shaken up and scraped but not seriously hurt.

Angry paperboy takes hike

NORWALK, Conn. — A 12-year-old paperboy got fed up when a customer gave him a hard time, so he walked off the job — about 10 miles off the job.

Anthony Hilton disappeared about 6:30 p.m. Monday while he was delivering The Hour of Norwalk newspaper.

A fisherman found him Tuesday afternoon while he walked along a highway in Wilton, about 10 miles from his home in Norwalk. The boy said he had hiked through the night, occasionally taking breaks on front porches when heavy rain fell.

He told police he didn't know where he was going, he just wanted to get out of Norwalk.

Anthony said a woman on his route quibbled over her payment and said service was better before he took over the route, said his mother, Elaine Fletcher.

Cher leaves former baker

BOSTON — Cher told a concert audience she has broken up with her boyfriend.

Making her first concert performance in eight years over the weekend at Great Woods, an outdoor center about 40 miles south of Boston, Cher told the audience she was alone again before launching into her recent hit, "We All Sleep Alone."

"She said, 'This next song has particular meaning for me because I just broke up with my boyfriend,'" said Bill Costa, spokesman for WXKS-FM, which put on the concert.

The radio station's 10th anniversary show also featured Hall & Oates, Was (Not Was) and Grammy winner DJ Jazzy Jeff and the Fresh Prince.

Cher had left the concert stage for Hollywood, where she won the 1988 best actress Oscar for "Moonstruck."

Her former boyfriend, Rob Camilletti, is an aspiring actor and former bagel baker who got into highly publicized confrontations with paparazzi.

Lowe denies wrongdoing

ATLANTA — Rob Lowe's lawyers filed letters and affidavits contending the parents of a teen-age girl the actor is accused of enticing into a videotaped sex session tried to extort $500,000.

The documents, filed Tuesday in Fulton County State Court, say Lena Arlene Wilson and her attorney, J. Hue Henry of Athens, used "extortionist tactics" to force Lowe to "pay a large sum of money to avoid adverse publicity." The motion says the woman sought as much as $500,000 in January.

Wilson's lawsuit contends Lowe enticed her daughter, Lena Jan Parsons, then 16, to have sex with another woman while Lowe videotaped them in his Atlanta hotel room last summer.

Authorities are investigating whether Lowe, 24, should be charged with sexual exploitation of a minor, which carries a 20-year prison sentence.

Lowe's attorneys denied any wrongdoing and asked the court to throw out the lawsuit and order Wilson and Henry to pay court costs.

Henry said Lowe's attorneys initiated the settlement negotiations and that the extortion allegations were a desperate tactic.

Biscuits have good timing

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — The biscuit timer went off at just the right time in a Mrs. Winner's Chicken & Biscuits restaurant.

A police report said that a man walked into the fast-food restaurant Monday night and demanded money from a cashier. Employees said they saw the handle of a revolver sticking out of the waistband of the man's trousers.

About that time the biscuit timer sounded. The man thought it was an alarm and ran away empty-handed.

The biscuits came out a golden brown.

Soldier found dead in van

FORT RILEY — Military authorities on Wednesday were investigating circumstances surrounding the death of a non-commissioned officer whose body was found at Camp Forsyth.

Maj. Lynn Pepperd said the name of the 40-year-old man and the cause of death would not be released until Thursday.

The soldier was found in his van by a co-worker at about 1 p.m. Tuesday and was pronounced dead at the scene by military medical authorities.

Officials said he was at Camp Forsyth, a section of Fort Riley, supporting the 1989 ROTC advanced Camp Warrior, which began Wednesday.

Enrollment figures increase

Figures released by the registrar's office Wednesday indicate an increase in undergraduate enrollment of 5 percent over last summer.

Undergraduate enrollment is 2,733, and graduate school and veterinary medicine enrollment is 1,588.

"Ten percent more freshmen are enrolled, which reflects a trend in increased freshman classes at the University in the last two years," University Registrar Don Foster said.

Bench study

Jeannette Fitzgerald, senior in pre-optometry, uses a bench Monday morning on the west side of Farrell Library as a desk for homework. "It's nice out here, and I'll do anything to get some sun. You can't get it in class and you can't get it at work," Fitzgerald said.

Report estimates drought losses at $1.61 billion

From Staff and Wire Reports

Drought conditions in Kansas in 1989 will do more than cause the dust to blow in the wind. According to a team of economists from the Department of Agricultural Economics, the state will lose an estimated $1.61 billion from its gross product of $48 billion.

The 26-page report, "The Effects of the Drought on the Kansas Economy," was written by William Tierney, associate professor of agricultural economics; David Darling, assistant professor of agricultural economics; and Mark Willard, a graduate student in economics.

The economists estimate a loss of $449 million in agriculture production — nearly 19 percent of the state's 1988 total gross farm product. They also predict additional losses of $186 million in the ag-related sector and a $515 million reduction in the commercial sectors. Losses in income for Kansas households is estimated at $456 million, bringing the total in losses to reach 3.3 percent of the state's total output.

"The bottom line is that Kansas farm income will be down next year and those farms in the weakest financial shape will have the most difficulty coping with this added burden," the report states.

The economists emphasize their conclusions are tentative and are based on incomplete data because the full impact of the drought cannot be determined. They said it is difficult to calculate how much money will be added back by proposed federal disaster payments, withdrawals from savings and by loans.

"We do not claim to have the definitive statement on the drought," the economists state in the report. "It does incorporate the most recent information available and provides for several contingencies."

Indications from the report estimate high losses in wheat and cattle dominated counties, primarily due to the loss in the production of wheat. The cattle industry is also expected to suffer because of high feed costs, poor pastures and low water levels in stock ponds.

The ripple effect of the drought will move beyond the farm, the report explains, causing grain elevators to lose business and sales of farm implements and vehicles to drop. The farm household will "tighten its belt," resulting in an indirect income loss and impact on main street businesses.

Rep. Dan Glickman, D-Kan., chairman of the House Agriculture Committee's subcommittee on wheat, feed grains and soybeans, said he plans to send copies of the report to Agriculture Secretary Clayton Yeutter and selected members of Congress to illustrate the profound impact the drought will have on Kansas.

"I think this will give us ammunition to accelerate our drought relief request," he said.

The report also indicates that farm income and assets values have been rising. The financial records of more

Grant to aid projects for rural areas

By The Collegian Staff

A training partnership with K-State, selected Kansas community colleges and rural towns is being established through a $936,000 grant from the W.K. Kellogg Foundation.

The project, which began June 1, is designed to help rural communities create community-based leadership in economic development.

The project is being administered through the University's Kansas Center for Rural Initiatives under the direction of Mark Lapping, former dean of the College of Architecture and Design.

The project involves the continuation and creation of several programs, Lapping said. The first is the Community Service Program, administered through the College of Arts and Sciences.

"It has helped us as a University to get faculty and students into rural communities to work on community projects," he said.

A second component of the project is called "operation bootstrap," Lapping said. It will be operated by the College of Architecture and Design, but will use faculty and students from the University's other colleges and schools.

"The emphasis of the program is to help communities develop a range of strategies for solving particular problems within the community," he said.

The project will develop rural leadership at the "grass roots" level, Lapping said, by working with the communities to nurture and develop rural leaders and helping them plug into local institutions such as community colleges.

The major thrust of the project is to come from the mutual partnership between the communities, the colleges and K-State, Lapping said.

"University faculty, community college personnel, and ultimately, community leaders themselves will teach other community leaders a decision-making approach based on the analysis of successful cases," he said.

President Jon Wefald said the grant "is an opportunity for Kansas State and its faculty to have a direct relationship with communities and contribute to their economic development by training leaders.

Solidarity victory encourages reform

It seems as if June has brought about unprecedented change and turmoil in the communist nations. However, change comes in different packages in different nations.

While Communist China is ripped apart by troops firing upon demonstrating students and civilians, Poland, for once, presents a much more peaceful picture of change.

After winning nearly every race in Sunday's vote in the national elections, the Solidarity candidates found themselves controlling the Senate, an elected chamber of Parliament with veto power over legislation. With the most democratic balloting in more than 40 years complete, the controlling Communist Party is listening to the voice of Solidarity.

While the Communist Party spokesman, Jan Bisztyga, conceded defeat on television, he also called for a "grand coalition" between victorious Solidarity and the Communist Party.

While this is a heartening victory for Solidarity, it remains to be seen how enduring a victory it will prove to be. Efforts must be made to keep the proposed "grand coalition" from turning into a chokehold on the Solidarity senators.

If that proves possible, then Solidarity's progress may prove to be a beacon to all countries where the struggle for reform continues.

With such a glaring example in China of how not to deal with a struggle for democracy, the Communist Party in Poland has put an end — for the time being at least — to the political clashes that have marred the country for years.

One can only hope that China will follow the peaceful example of Poland at some time in the near future; or at the very least, will find some peaceful solution to its problems without shedding the blood of dissenters.

Other Perspectives

Last week, two (Colorado University) football players were acquitted on charges of rape. Everyone seemed happy.

... With all of this rejoicing and all of this bravado, you'd think this were VJ Day.

But it isn't a happy occasion, and it isn't a simple matter.

Although the boosters, including (CU President E. Gordon) Gee, are rejoicing, there are still two women who felt wronged. The women felt so strongly that they pressed criminal charges. Should we rejoice that their complaints have been dismissed? Certainly not.

All through the discussion about the football team, the boosters have argued that the team's bad rap is the result of overzealous cops, biased media and racist Boulderites. But these rape cases did not show racism or disdain of the athletic department. Both accusers were black, and one is a CU athlete.

... These cases underscored unpleasant truths about rape trials. Women who want to press charges face many obstacles. During rape trials, they are painted as liars, airheads, connivers and sluts. They have difficulty persuading juries. Sometimes, women are sued for bringing charges. It might be easier, when all is said and done, to suffer in silence.

No one should be happy about that.

Summer brings out the child in every responsible grown-up

Commentary

Jana Leep
Collegian Columnist

It's summer, but it's not summer. I just moved into a new neighborhood where children, recently freed from school, are running, riding, reeling with energy. It's an energy with no boundaries or responsibilities, except that of the lunchtime hungries, a scraped knee now and then, a few chores around the house and the slipping away of sunlight.

I remember being one of those screaming, delirious youngsters. In one day's time, my imagination could create many personas for me to become: Naja, "007's" right-hand woman, who could scan the entire neighborhood by foot, searching out the bad guys and bad girls, ensuring their doom; Isis, saving all dying plants, shrubs, trees, flowers and lawns from the workings of the Late Afternoon Fire God, with the aid of my companionable hose, the Spitting Water Snake; or Jana of the Jungle, as clumsy as a monkey, yet as heroic as Joan of Arc.

I was so comfortable with my creativity, my energy, my body and my time. Each day seemed the perfect day.

The neighborhood kids have made me stop to remember that I still have a child inside; they have made me stop and feel summer. And yet I feel jealousy as I watch the kids romp next door. I wish I could be as carefree. I wish I could come home in the evening, exhausted not from all the daily hassles of the adult world, but from jumping, racing, swimming and sunning.

Being a kid sounds good right now as I dive into all the new responsibilities of living away from home during the summer for the first time. Yet it is ironic, for I can remember being horribly jealous of older kids who could earn money, go to a movie they paid for, buy candy when and if they wanted to and save up for a special purchase.

I thought money was a token of freedom. Now I know better. Sure, I can pay rent, buy my own clothing, purchase my adult toys, but the most valuable aspects of life I now know I cannot buy. And so now I am where I wanted to be as a child. Paying for it all ... working for it all ... not really liking it at all.

I was speaking to a close friend, trying to figure out all these confusing feelings, when the shocking words, "I feel grown-up," slipped out of my mouth.

I am not quite sure what it means to be "grown-up," but I definitely know I don't feel comfortable with such language. I have always told myself I would remain a child at heart, never to give in to the controlled, composed adult complexion. I desire the experiences of adulthood, and yet I fear I will be hardened by life. I wonder if many of us feel this ambivalence toward "growing up" at one time or another: how to gain maturity, responsibility and experience without losing the spontaneous, enthusiastic child inside.

Growing up has provided more than confusion. I feel a deep sadness, a longing for a lost part of myself. I have forgotten how to spend time alone, with my own thoughts and feelings and ideas. When I was a child, there was no concept of "lost time;" each moment was sacred. And yet I find myself in a constant rush of hurrying and worrying. If I am not working to earn money or my degree, I feel uncomfortable, even guilty for spending a moment that is not "productive." Summer was always that time of introspection and reacquainting myself with myself. But here I am, it is summer, and I am feeling lost.

I am sure this isn't too unusual an experience. Perhaps everyone has felt or is feeling this way, and perhaps the only cure is more time and more experience. But I do know I will be listening to the children next door perhaps while I write my rent check, while I clean the dishes, while I prepare a strange college student concoction for dinner or while I study for the next day's French lesson. And perhaps I will join the children when I am finished or perhaps I will let my responsibilities wait momentarily.

But for now, I am going to work and study like every other summer student and practice being a grown-up and a child at the same time. I am in the process of rearranging my priorities and it doesn't feel too good, but hopefully sometime soon a balance between working and playing will be acheived, and summer will feel more like summer again.

Evolution theory

Editor,

Sir, since it is apparent to all of us here at K-State that you are still in the unproved Darwinian era of evolution, how about a story from the other side of the coin? As a matter of proper scientific thought, how about looking at both sides of the coin at once?

I am a believer of the Bible. I am also a physics major. To say that creationistic thought would set back science by putting religious belief before science — true science — is ludicrous.

What do you think "The Theory of Evolution" is? Since neither of them can be proven beyond doubt, evolution is a belief in itself.

In the Dark Ages, it was believed piles of dirty laundry would spontaneously breed rats and mice. Isn't that along the lines of evolution?

In and of itself, matter does neither create nor destroy itself. The chances of an inorganic compound becoming a living, breathing, thinking human being are astronomical.

Just to think that our brain, composed of a trillion cells, happened by mere chance is not mathematically sound. It is not even reasonable. It cannot be proven either way!

To say that Christians are going to force your children to believe a certain way, and force their religious beliefs into your house, seems one-sided. How about your beliefs in evolution? Why are you and all of the evolutionists trying to force the children to believe that it could have only happened as Darwin proposed? That is biased. To have proper reasonable teaching of this subject, without religious bias, would have to include the other thories also.

My belief in creation can stand the stress of the theory of evolution. Are you afraid the stress would crack evolution?

Share the wealth

Editor,

If you have lived in Manhattan for any length of time, you will have noticed that some changes occur from time to time in our town. Old houses make way for low-rise people-boxes, parks become water treatment plants and abandoned railroad trestles disappear, leaving their piers jutting up like the last few teeth of a grinning skull. One who thinks about such things must ask "Why?"

A simple answer is that money talks, but no one listens. If one has the money to make a quick, speculative investment, there is little real restraint imposed on the potential damage that can be done to the community at large by short-sighted schemes launched under the guise of development.

Such "development" can often be characterized as "rape." (It is interesting to note that the overtly sexual connotation of the term is a relatively modern usage, as an examination of an old dictionary will illustrate.)

This is not simply a phenomenon of the Manhattan area. Lawrence has had its share of problems in this regard, as have cities and towns across the country. Nor can all of the blame be placed on the developers and profiteers. If no force in the community cares enough to speak out, who will?

The United States is often compared in various ways to ancient Rome. In some respects the comparison is apt, but not in this one. Certainly there were Roman opportunists, but they felt compelled to return some of their booty to the community in the form of public works such as paved roads, theaters and so forth. These actions acknowledged a social contract within their communities. Of course, it wasn't quite that simple, but what is?

That social contract still exists, but some of our fellows have not entered into it in good faith. Those who have gained the most from our society should feel some obligation to return a portion to those whose ship didn't come in but, rather, sank.

While Michael Milken and Carl Icahn count their holdings, millions of their fellow citizens are homeless. We would do well to remember that the sense of community that Reagan longed to bring back to this nation was born out of poverty and desperation in the "dirty thirties" and so it is today.

Now many of the wealthy — and the not-so-wealthy — have, and do, contribute of their time and other resources to help the less fortunate. Many of these same people also contribute to their communities, and these are the people who make them "kinder and gentler" places in which to live.

Their contributions should not go unacknowledged. Many of those who have the least to give contribute that much and more. My point is simply that their contributions do not release the rest of us from our responsibilities to the society at large.

Very soon many of us will begin "sliding down the razor blade of life" and hope to pay off the mountain of debt that we have accumulated over the past few years. While we do so, I hope that we will not lose sight of the fact that our parents and ancestors gave up a lot to ensure that our society would provide the opportunity for us to excel.

When we see things that just don't seem right, let's do something about them, whether it is insensitive development or child abuse. While I don't like sounding like my grandmother, the charge we made to each other back in my hippie days is as true now as it was then: "If you aren't part of the solution, then you're part of the problem." And somehow I can't help thinking that one could make a very good living being part of the solution.

Jim Fair is owner of Fields of Fair, the first commercial winery in Kansas in over 100 years. Fair recently introduced the first three wines from his vineyard; Vintage One, a sweet Chardonnay-like wine; Prairie Dew, a dry blush wine; and Apple Wine, made from apples.

Family tradition encourages Fair to open new winery in Flint Hills

The Kansas Flint Hills may not seem like typical wine country, but they are the home to a new winery. Fields of Fair, owned by Manhattan resident Jim Fair, recently became the first commercial winery in the state since 1880.

Wine-making is a tradition in Fair's family. Like his father before him, Fair had produced homemade wine for years. He said the Fields of Fair wine is a far cry from those early attempts.

"My father and I made wine at home in a crock with a cloth over it," Fair said. "It spoiled pretty quickly."

The Fields of Fair operation is more sophisticated than Fair's home crock. The vineyard and temperature-controlled storage facilities are set on 55 acres in St. George, about 10 miles east of Manhattan.

About 10 years ago, Fair and his wife, Tootie, entrusted their construction business to their two sons and went on vacation. Upon returning, Fair decided he wanted to pursue an old dream to open a winery.

"My sons were doing such a good job running the construction business, I just said, 'Why don't you keep running it?'" Fair said.

The Fairs formed a three-way partnership with their sons and their families to build the winery.

Starting a winery is a venture that requires patience. Fair and his wife visited wineries throughout the United States and Europe picking up pointers. They also took classes about wine production while they searched for the right piece of land.

"There was a lot of land available, but none was quite what we wanted," Fair said. "It had to be high, with a valley where cool air and water could drain. Grapes can't stand wet feet."

After two years the Fairs finally found the right land, then waited seven years for their grape crop to mature.

Twelve acres just south of the grape fields are used as a recreational area with a softball diamond, volleyball areas, horseshoe pits and a sheltered seating area. The area has been rented out for gatherings during the past four years while the grape harvests have matured. Last year 10,000 people used the area.

In mid-May, the recreation area was used for a Fields of Fair open house where the Fairs introduced three wines onto the market. They are Vintage One, a sweet Chardonnay-like wine; Prairie Dew, a dry blush wine; and Apple Wine, made from Kansas apples. They are sold at the vineyard and at area liquor stores. Fair said demand was much greater than he had expected.

"Just since May 15 we've sold 2,000 bottles of the 12,000 we've bottled," he said. "At this rate we're going to be out of wine by September or October. We've had a good year."

Next year Fair plans to double the winery's output, producing 10,000 gallons of wine.

A number of chemical tests can be conducted to spot problems in wine, but Fair said taste tests are the most reliable. To avoid gettting drunk while tasting wine, workers at the winery just swish the wine in their mouths, then spit it out.

"We may have to taste wine 15 or 20 times in one day," Fair said. "But we've got work to do. We can't be staggering around."

The winery consists of converted trailers and temporary buildings, but Fair said he plans to build a larger, permanent facility for

EPA investigates weapons plant's safety violations

By The Associated Press

DENVER — A criminal investigation of alleged environmental violations at the Rocky Flats nuclear weapons plant is the latest black mark on the plant's spotty record since it went on line 36 years ago.

About 75 agents from the FBI, the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency and the Department of Energy carried out search warrants at the plant for the second day in a row Wednesday.

The plant 16 miles northwest of Denver makes plutonium triggers for nuclear bombs. It is owned by the Energy Department and operated by Rockwell International Corp.

The Justice Department said its raid was part of an investigation into allegations that plant employees concealed contamination and illegally treated, stored and disposed of hazardous and radioactive waste.

The probe announced Tuesday also concerns allegations that plant employees may have faked documents on compliance with state and federal pollution laws.

It's not the first criminal investigation at a nuclear weapons complex. In 1986, the EPA probed Energy Department handling of hazardous waste at its Hanford, Wash., nuclear reservation. No criminal prosecution resulted.

The Colorado investigation "has to raise very serious questions about how forthcoming officials at Rockwell and the Department of Energy have been ... and whether the Department of Energy can be trusted to police itself," U.S. Rep. David Skaggs, D-Colo., said in a telephone interview from Washington.

Skaggs, whose district includes Rocky Flats, advocates independent oversight at the nation's nuclear weapons plants.

Both Rockwell and Energy Department employees are believed to be under investigation, Skaggs said.

Rocky Flats has been dogged by safety and environmental problems since it began operations in 1953, but particularly in recent years.

Last year, the Energy Department identified it as the most environmentally hazardous site in the nuclear weapons industry because toxic chemicals contaminate an underground reservoir and threaten nearby city water supplies.

The department considered closing the plant because of repeated safety violations and alleged laxity among Rockwell managers and employees.

In October, the agency closed Rocky Flats' main plutonium reprocessing building for safety violations. Two months later, the agency reported 32 new safety problems at the plant.

Rockwell officials maintain they give top priority to safety at Rocky Flats.

Late last year, the Energy Department announced plans to close Rocky Flats in the next 20 years in a consolidation of America's nuclear weapons plants.

Energy Secretary James D. Watkins said Rockwell could suspend plant operations that could be made hazardous by the presence of an investigative team. But plant spokesman Ed Heintz said it was business as usual at Rocky Flats Wednesday.

Heintz said the presence of federal agents was "more of a nuisance or inconvenience than anything else."

The investigation was hailed by environmentalists who have fought the plant for years, including the Sierra Club, which is suing Rocky Flats to prevent it from using an incinerator to burn harzardous or radioactive waste.

Surinamese jetliner crashes; 169 dead

By The Associated Press

PARAMARIBO, Suriname — A Surinamese jetliner trying to land in dense fog clipped treetops and broke apart near the airport on Wednesday, killing 169 of those aboard, the government-run news agency said. It listed 13 survivors.

At least three Americans, the cockpit crew, were reported dead.

The plane crashed after it hit a treetop on its third attempt to land in very bad weather, said airline spokesman Leo Marapin in Amsterdam, The Netherlands.

Three of Suriname's senior military leaders were aboard and presumed dead.

Also reported aboard were at least three top Dutch soccer players of Surinamese origin. Their fates were unknown.

The Suriname Airways DC-8 was completing an all-night flight from Amsterdam to the capital of this small nation on the northern shoulder of South America. Airline spokesman Glenn Jie in Amsterdam said most passengers were Surinamese living in the Netherlands.

Survivors were taken to a hospital.

Airline spokesman Robbi Lachmising told reporters in Amsterdam that the Surinamese airport has no radar.

Reporters at the crash site, an unpopulated tropical savannah, said it appeared the plane struck two trees and split into four parts. Heavy rain had turned the area into a near-swamp, slowing rescue vehicles.

The Suriname News Agency said the plane's cockpit recorder was recovered.

Doctor predicts cure, progress against AIDS

By The Associated Press

MONTREAL — Giving clean needles and syringes to drug addicts does not promote drug use and is essential for stopping the explosive spread of AIDS among narcotics abusers, a researcher said Wednesday.

And, in a strikingly upbeat assessment, a leading U.S. health official who pioneered the first anti-AIDS drugs predicted that a cure for AIDS will be found.

"In the early 50s and 60s, there were many people who predicted there would be no progress against childhood leukemia. They were as wrong then as they are about AIDS now," said Dr. Samuel Broder, director of the National Cancer Institute.

In an address at the Fifth International Conference on AIDS, Broder noted that AZT, the first approved anti-AIDS drug, has extended the lives of people with AIDS.

A study of homosexual men showed that they had a 30 percent chance of surviving for 18 months with AIDS in 1982, but a 60 percent chance by 1987.

"I believe the widespread introduction of AZT is one factor that contributed to this," Broder said. He directed the development of AZT, also known as zidovudine.

In another report Wednesday, researchers at Johns Hopkins University said they eliminated any trace of the AIDS virus in a single AIDS patient who was given AZT and a transplant of bone marrow from a sister whose bone marrow type matched his.

The experiment showed that bone marrow transplants could work in AIDS patients. Such treatment is unlikely ever to become widely available, however, because matching bone marrow can not always be found and because transplants are too expensive to be done on a large number of patients.

Despite being cleansed of the AIDS virus, the patient died of cancer six weeks after the transplant.

The study on drug addicts was reported by Dr. Roel Coutinho of the public health service in Amsterdam, The Netherlands.

Amsterdam has only about 8,000 intravenous drug abusers, Coutinho said, making it much different from New York City, for example, where there are about 200,000. It is not clear, therefore, whether the lessons learned in Amsterdam would apply in New York.

Preliminary results from a study of a recently begun needle exchange program in New York showed that drug abusers were less likely to share their needles and syringes and were more likely to clean them with bleach, which kills the AIDS virus.

Don Des Jarlais of the New York State Division of Substance Abuse Services concluded that the program was substantially reducing the risk of AIDS spread among addicts.

A study in London showed, however, that needle sharing fell when needles were provided, but that some addicts also stopped using condoms to prevent sexual spread of AIDS.

Museum sponsors family day events

By The Collegian Staff

After viewing the imposing, larger-than-life Thomas Hart Benton murals exhibited at the Nelson-Atkins Museum of Art in Kansas City, Mo., visitors Sunday will be able to participate in painting an original Benton-like mural on the walls of the Creative Arts Center in the ground floor of the museum.

Other activities scheduled for Sunday's Family Day include a mural painting demonstration by David Hunt, a student at the Kansas City Art Institute, and a hands-on sculpture workshop, using the abstract style of Benton, on the north lawn of the museum.

These activities will be from 1 to 4 p.m. as part of the "Thomas Hart Benton: An American Original" exhibit on display at the Nelson-Atkins from April 16 to June 18.

The Benton exhibit is the first major traveling exhibition organized by the Nelson-Atkins and includes 88 pieces of art. The show will also be exhibited in Detroit, New York and Los Angeles following the Kansas City exhibit. The exhibit is sponsored by the United Missouri Bank of Kansas City and the Enid and Crosby Kemper Foundation.

Lisa Massoth, public information officer for the museum, said Benton was selected for the Nelson-Atkins' first major traveling show because he was a famous artist of his time.

"He spent the last 40 years of his life in Kansas City and taught at the Kansas City Art Institute," Massoth said. "With the centennial of his birth, something needed to be done."

The exhibit took four years of planning and is displayed in five rooms specially painted to complement the exhibit, Massoth said. The walls borrow architectural elements lifted from the paintings, such as snow fences and corn stalks.

Program boosts tourism

By The Collegian Staff

A program designed to encourage tourists to spend more time and money in Kansas began Memorial Weekend.

The 1989 Linger Longer program will help tourists become familiar with various travel opportunities available in Kansas, said Bob Salmon, director of the Kansas Division of Travel and Tourism.

Out-of-state visitors stopping at the Visitor's Information Centers will receive the Linger Longer coupon directory. When they return, a coupon directory validating that they have spent one night in a lodging facility, made two meal or retail purchases and visited a participating attraction, they will receive a Coleman cooler.

According to a figure from Harlan Priddle, Secretary of the Kansas Department of Commerce, the impact of the 1988 Linger Longer program was estimated to exceed $3.8 million. The figure was based on the average number of days spent in Kansas, and visits to participating businesses.

Results from a survey indicate that the average Linger Longer participant spent three days in Kansas and visited approximately three additional businesses after receiving the required validation.

The Convention and Visitors Bureau Tourism Update published these results:

- More than 68 percent of the participants altered their travel plans to complete the program.
- Of the participants, 55 percent stopped at an attraction they had not planned to visit.
- About 86 percent stopped and ate a meal in a restaurant where they hadn't planned to eat.

Coupon directories may be obtained at the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce office.

State sponsors free fishing

Events target young anglers

By The Collegian Staff

Local fish beware: National Fishing Week begins Saturday.

Area anglers can try their luck this weekend at Kansas parks without paying admission fees or buying a fishing license.

The nationally recognized event is sponsored by the American Fishing Tackle Manufacturers, said Mike Miller, editor of Kansas Wildlife and Parks magazine.

"A lot of states jump in and promote it," he said. "The (Kansas) Department of Wildlife and Parks designated the 10th and 11th as free fishing and park entrance days. It's to introduce fishing to people who haven't fished."

Locally, the River Pond area at Tuttle Creek Reservoir will be holding a special event, said Ceal Riat of the Tuttle Creek State Park office. The River Pond area will be the site of free fishing for children 6 to 15 years of age on Saturday from 9 a.m. until noon. Children must bring their own equipment, but the worms are free, Riat said.

"Last year was the first year (Kansas) participated," Miller said. "We had a pretty good turnout but it's hard to say how much was due to the free entrance. The crowds are usually pretty good."

Job tables offer incoming students on-campus jobs

By Paige Gantz
Staff Writer

For the second summer in a row, students needing to enroll for fall classes can apply for fall on-campus employment when they visit "job tables" set up in the Union.

Early freshman enrollment begins Friday and continues June 13-17, 20-24 and 28-30.

"Students interested in on-campus employment for fall can visit job tables from 11:30 a.m. to 2 p.m.," said Marilyn Trotter, director of New Student Programs.

"We contact 25 areas on the K-State campus to see if they would be interested in interviewing and possibly employing students on the spot," she said. "If they are unable to be there at their table, then we have our own people on hand to represent the area and hand out information and application forms."

Mary Molt, director of Derby Food Center, is in charge of the food service application table.

"We take applications from students and then guarantee them hours of employment in the fall," she said.

At the time of early enrollment, most new students don't know where they will be living in the residence halls, but the majority of students get their first choice of living arrangements. Molt said the food center schedules the students to work in the food center adjacent to their residence hall choice.

"We give them some indication of the hours they will be working but will get their actual schedule to them later on in the summer, once we know for sure where they will live," she said.

Besides having their class schedule, leaving campus with a job may make a student's day.

"Students would feel more secure knowing that they have a job upon returning for fall classes and that they may be able to meet those housing payments or just have a little extra spending money," Molt said.

"Now they won't have to spend the rest of the summer searching around for other places of employment. We'll employ them for however many hours they like, although we don't like to load down first semester freshmen with too many hours until they have gotten use to college and are aware of what they can handle."

Molt said she and other food service employees enjoy participating in the orientation.

"Not only are we helping the students out, but we're filling our staff out so that we may serve the University," she said.

"No other university in this country works with this type of initiative," said Pat Bosco, vice president for institutional advancement. "The job tables are very important. Students who are employed on campus have a higher success rate with their grade point average and with graduation. (The tables) also make it easier to locate campus employment for those students who want to work on campus."

Students and their families attending summer enrollment and orientation can also learn about campus services, including career planning, academic assistance and financial aid. An orientation session will cover life in living units, student leadership, health services and general information about K-State student life.

A separate session is held for parents which includes the "dos and don'ts" of helping a student be successful at K-State.

Nicaragua denies aid to Panama

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — At the height of the Panama crisis last month, the Nicaraguan army was prepared to assist the Panamanian government in the event of U.S. military intervention there, administration officials said Wednesday.

A top Nicaraguan diplomat called the allegation false.

According to the U.S. officials, Nicaragua also sent to Panama a shipment of Soviet-made weapons as part of the Sandinista commitment to help Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega defend his government against possible use of U.S. military force.

Although the time frame of these alleged activities was not specified, they presumably occurred in the tumultuous post-election period when the Bush administration was shaping a response and insisting that no options had been ruled out, including the use of force.

In the end, President Bush decided to send about 2,000 combat troops to Panama but made it clear that the purpose was not to force out Noriega but to ensure the safety of Americans residing in Panama. Rather than act unilaterally, Bush felt that diplomatic pressure on Noriega was the surest means to a democratic outcome in Panama.

The officials, declining to be identified by name, made known their allegations about Nicaragua's activities to The Associated Press as Organization of American States foreign ministers concluded another round of talks about Panama's political crisis.

Nicaragua has emerged as Panama's strongest hemispheric ally in the wake of the failed election process in Panama last month. Both countries see themselves as victims of American military and economic pressures.

Asked about the U.S. allegations, Nicaraguan Vice Foreign Minister Victor Hugo Tinoco acknowledged that Nicaragua was concerned about the potential for U.S. intervention in Panama.

"We knew there was movement of troops by the U.S. toward Panama apart from what was announced," Tinoco said.

"In the face of that situation, Nicaragua felt that there was the possibility of an intervention in Panama," he said.

"This possibility, in turn, created the possibility of a regional conflict and for an intervention in other Central American countries. Based on an emergency situation, Nicaragua declared a state of alert for its forces. That's what happened."

He said that after a few days, when the U.S. military intervention did not materialize, the state of alert was withdrawn.

Tinoco specifically denied that Nicaragua sent arms to Panama and added that Sandinista authorities have not promised to send troops to Panama in the event of an American invasion.

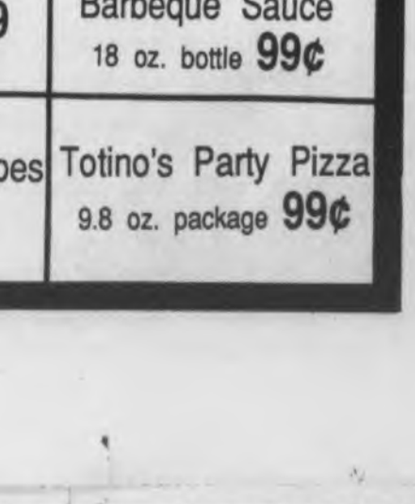
Nicaragua's relationship with Panama is limited to "moral and political support," he said.

Water tables decline; irrigation responsible

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Ground water tables in western and south-central Kansas declined an average of 19 times faster than they did in 1987, according to information released Wednesday by the State Board of Agriculture.

Water tables in those parts of the state dropped an average of 1.9 feet last year, compared to 0.1 feet the year before.



The water measurements were made in about 1,460 wells during January and February. The study was done by the Board of Agriculture's division of water resources, the U.S. Geological Survey and the Kansas Geological Survey.

Tom McClain, hydrologist for the Kansas Geological Survey, said the decline could be attributed to the drought. He said the lack of rainfall means the underground reservoirs are not being replenished.

At the same time, irrigators pump more water out the ground during dry periods than when rainfall is normal. The areas of greatest decline generally correspond with the areas of greatest irrigation, he said.

In western and south-central Kansas, precipitation was 2 inches below average in 1988, the report said.

Kubala keeps Texas/Kansas connection going

By David Svoboda
Sports Editor

The Kansas-to-Texas pipeline that has produced a variety of coaching and administrative changes in the K-State athletic department during the past several years has produced yet another — this one beneficial to the Wildcats.

Susan Kubala, a graduate assistant coach at Texas A&M University, is now an assistant coach for the Lady Cat basketball team, replacing Terri Lasswell, who resigned in April to accept a position as head coach at the University of Northern Iowa.

Kubala's move is but one example of how the two states separated only by Oklahoma have milked one another through the past few years for athletic coaching and administrative talent.

First, there was the move of K-State's then-athletic director, DeLoss Dodds, to the University of Texas at Austin. Then, after several seasons as a Wildcat player and assistant coach, Lon Kruger moved to Pan American University in Edinburg as head basketball coach in the early 1980s.

Kruger returned as the head coach at K-State prior to the 1986-87 season, only to find himself drawn to the head coaching position at the University of Texas — and a possible job under Dodds — following the 1987-88 campaign.

Kruger stayed, but a former Lady Cat head coach who didn't stay in Manhattan a few years back is a big reason the 25-year-old Kubala is in Manhattan right now.

That Lady Cat coach, Lynn Hickey, went to College Station and Texas A&M following a stint at K-State that may have defined the word "successful."

From 1979-1984, Hickey compiled a 125-39 record as Lady Cat coach, a winning average of .762.

During Hickey's first season at K-State, the Lady Cats' all-time leading scorer, Eileen Feeney, was playing her final season in the purple and white.

Feeney is now one of Hickey's assistants at Texas A&M.

It's not that Hickey, Feeney, Dodds, Kruger or anyone else from Texas got Kubala her job, however. It's just that with all those connections, the new K-State coach felt she'd been in Manhattan all along.

"Working for Lynn Hickey for as long as I had, and hearing her talk about Manhattan and K-State, I felt like it was a home away from home, really," Kubala said. "When I got here, it was like I was at home — and now I truly am."

NCAA regulations limit basketball programs to two full-time paid assistants, and Kubala had reached an impasse of sorts in her career at A&M. She had been a graduate assistant — one step from that elusive paid assistantship — for two seasons, and it was time for a change.

"I had been a GA for two years, and a student assistant before that at A&M, and I felt like it was time for me to see what I could do," she said. "I was looking to go to a solid Division I program, and the match with K-State was perfect."

Coach Matilda Mossman, Kubala's new boss, agreed that the match was a good one. Mossman said Kubala fit almost perfectly the job description she set before the search for Lasswell's replacement began.

"In the hiring of this position, we wanted someone with Division I experience, and it's obvious that Susan has that," Mossman said. "Susan has only been exposed to Division I basketball as a player and coach.

"In the back of my mind, we were looking for another Terri Lasswell — someone with great organizational skills, good people skills, someone young and with enthusiasm. I think we found her."

Kubala also had Hickey and Feeney in her corner, which Mossman admits didn't hurt, but wasn't the factor that made the decision final.

"We put a lot of emphasis on the recommendations of both Lynn and Eileen, but after a recommendation comes in, the candidate has to sell herself," Mossman said. "Susan sold herself beyond the point of any recommendation."

Mossman said she wasn't put off by Kubala's lack of experience as a Division I assistant, in that her job at Texas A&M wasn't the normal graduate assistantship that most envision — a former jock with a clipboard running errands for the head coach and the assistants.

"This will be a new experience for me, sure," Kubala said. "But at A&M I had the luxury of having a lot of responsibility in on-court coaching and in recruiting. That's a plus."

It's a plus that's likely to keep Kubala very busy until a brief reprieve in August.

"Between recruiting, camps and trying to get settled, June and July are basically shot," she said. "But in August I'll get to have a little breather. That will be a different, but very welcome, experience."

Kubala said she looks forward to recruiting at K-State for several reasons, including a chance to see different parts of the country, and the fact that K-State has what she considers a great deal to sell.

"At A&M, it was different. Texas was so big that we seldom left the state," she said. "This is going to be different in that we'll likely end up going out of our home state to recruit some athletes.

"But this team did well last year, and they didn't lose much, so recruiting this year won't be nearly as challenging as it will next year, when K-State loses its first big wave of kids in a while.

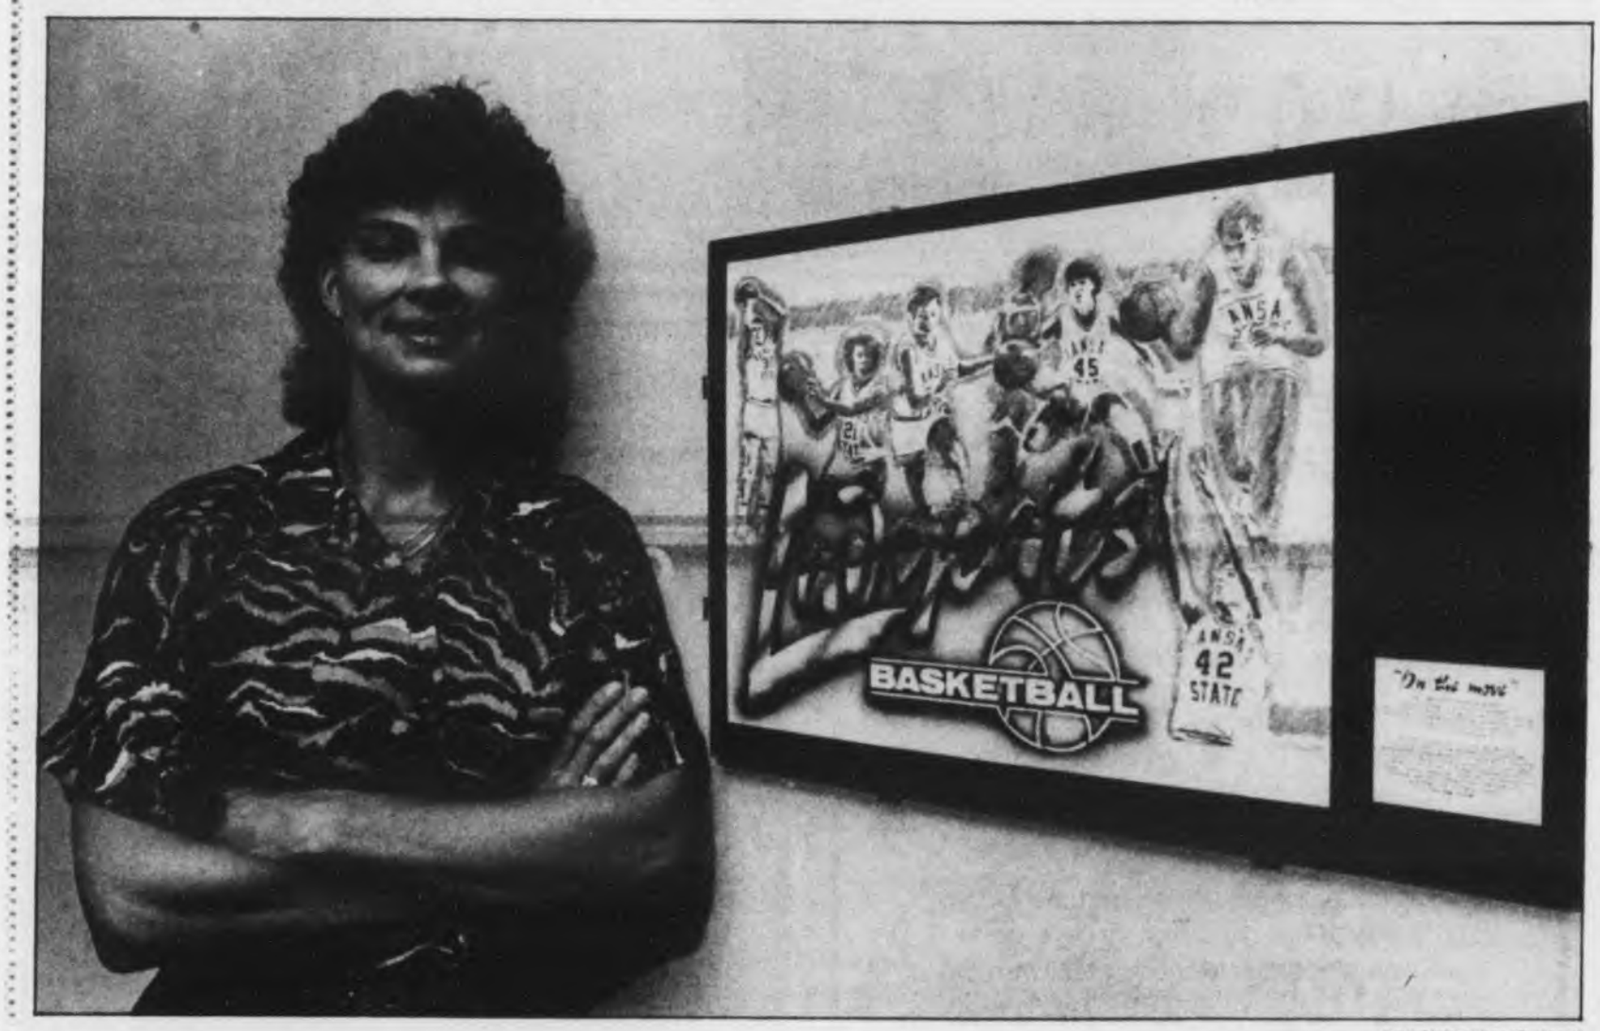
"But with the facilities and tradition we have here, we've got a lot to be proud of. You put that together with a strong academic emphasis, and it sells itself."

That sale is likely to be a bit different than the one Kubala used in luring athletes to A&M and College Station, which is quite a bit bigger than Manhattan.

"This community is a really friendly one, and the people are really personable," she said.

And in the Big Eight there is no University of Texas at Austin.

For those that don't follow women's basketball closely, the Longhorn women's program just happens to be one of the best in the country each season. And if Wildcats and Jayhawks have a healthy distaste for each other, Aggies and Longhorns have something that probably can't even be described by the word "hatred."



"In the Southwest Conference, your personal rival is always Texas," she said. "I guess that's the case in every sport, but even more so in basketball because of their tradition."

Kubala likens the SWC and Big Eight in level of competition, minus one rather obvious difference.

"If you were to take Texas out of the Southwest Conference, they (the two conferences) would be a lot closer," she said. "But in reality, it's really not 'just Texas and that's it' in the SWC anymore.

"But in the Big Eight, any one of the top three or four schools could become the conference champion every year. And we're one of those three or four."

And that's good enough for Kubala, who's anxious to see the Lady Cat program mentioned, dare it be said, in the same breath with Texas.

Staff/Christopher T. Assaf

Susan Kubala, a former graduate assistant at Texas A&M under former K-State head coach Lynn Hickey, is the new assistant women's basketball coach. She replaces Terri Lasswell, who resigned to become head coach at Northern Iowa.

Lady Cats announce 1989-90 schedule

By The Collegian Staff

An all-NCAA Division I lineup awaits the K-State Lady Cats for the 1989-90 season.

The season opens with what may be the most competitive early-season tournament in the nation — K-State's own McCall Pattern Classic.

The four-team tourney field includes K-State, Long Beach State, Maryland and Eastern Washington.

The Lady Cats' first-round foe will be Maryland, which was in the NCAA Women's Final Four last season. Long Beach State was a Final Four team in 1988 and a participant in the women's post-season tourney last season.

"Having Maryland, Long Beach State and Eastern Washington in the McCall Pattern Classic will provide the Manhattan community an opportunity to see Division I basketball at its finest," head coach Matilda Mossman said.

The Lady Cats will travel to the University of Montana for their second tourney of the year. Montana's Domino's Pizza Classic includes Montana, K-State, Bowling Green and Portland.

K-State downed Montana in last season's McCall Pattern Classic after trailing by as many as 20 late in the game. The loss was one of only four all season for Montana, also a participant in the NCAA tourney following the year.

The non-conference portion of the schedule, in addition to tournament action, includes a road swing through women's basketball-rich Louisiana.

K-State will face Louisiana State and Louisiana Tech. The Lady Techsters were NCAA Champions in 1988 and in the Final Four last season. LSU was also in the NCAA tourney last year. Both games in Louisiana will be played in early January 1990.

K-State's home non-conference slate includes Georgia State, Southwest Missouri State, Creighton and Minnesota.

The Big Eight portion of the schedule opens with a road game in Ames, Iowa, against Iowa State. The Lady Cats' first Big Eight home game will be against defending conference champion Colorado.

Track team signs 3

The K-State track team, already in double figures with regard to signees, signed three more performers earlier this week, bringing the total signed to 14.

Those joining the team include Rogel Nahum, Shannon Flanagan and Jason Meredith.

Nahum is a multi-jumper from Givatayime, Israel. He has been Israeli national champion in both the long and triple jumps, and has also cleared 7-2 in the high jump.

Flanagan is a native of Columbus, Kan. She is a thrower who was state champion in the discus in 1988, and was a first-team all-conference selection in basketball, as well.

Meredith is from Lewiston, Idaho, and will join the decathletes, including All-American Steve Fritz, who will return in 1989-90 for his senior year.

During his career, he set school records in the long jump and high jump, competed on the distance medley relay team, and was named the most valuable performer on the 1988-89 squad.

Crews compete at nationals

Three K-State crews competed this past weekend at the 87th National Rowing Championships in Syracuse, N.Y.

K-State's varsity pair of sophomores Mike Janzen and Eric Debuhr placed 10th out of 14 teams that competed in their race.

Princeton won the varsity pair competition with a time of 7:39.8. K-State's pair finished in 8:18.8.

In the varsity four competition, which was won by the Naval Academy in a time of 6:56, the K-State crew was 14th of 16 teams competing. Their time was 7:18.3.

Finally, in the open four competition — which is a race in which varsity and freshmen combine — the K-State crew finished ninth of nine teams.

Head coach Don Rose was pleased with the effort of the open four unit, however, because it was comprised of two freshmen, a sophomore and a lone varsity crew member.

The Naval Academy won the open four with a time of 6:53.3. K-State's time was 7:45.6.

Boone, Royals beat Mariners, 9-6

By The Associated Press

SEATTLE — Catching baseball games is still no problem for 41-year-old Bob Boone. But hitting triples?

Boone caught his 2,100st game Wednesday and tripled during a four-run fourth as the Kansas City Royals beat the Seattle Mariners 9-6.

"Numbers of games caught don't mean anything to me," Boone said. "I don't remember the last triple, but it just feels great to be playing and contributing."

Boone, who has won six Gold Gloves and caught more games than any major leaguer, has swung the hot bat lately, going 15-for-36 in his last 11 games.

"I've had a good feeling, a good approach at the plate the last couple of weeks," Boone said. "Hitting is feeling good at the plate. If you're feeling right, the hits will come," he said.

The hits were also coming for Kevin Seitzer, who had three hits and three RBIs.

Mark Gubicza, 6-4, allowed 12 hits, struck out five and walked two. Jeff Montgomery pitched the ninth for his first save.

"Gubicza pitched a 10-hit shutout his last time out in California. He can make tough pitches with men on base," Kansas City manager John Wathan said. "It was nice to see us break out offensively. We've been struggling a bit. We'll need to swing the bat well in our upcoming series."

The Royals, who had 18 hits off three pitchers, took a 7-0 lead after six innings and led 9-3 before Jay Buhner hit a three-run homer for Seattle in the eighth. It was Buhner's third homer in three games.

It was the first homer off Gubicza since Steve Balboni hit one in Seattle last Sept. 21. The homerless streak covered 134 innings.

"This is a tough park to work in, but the home runs they hit would have been out of any park," Gubicza said.

The Royals scored four runs in the fourth off starter Bill Swift, 2-2. With one out, the Royals stroked six straight hits off Swift and reliever Gene Harris, who made his American League debut.

Matt Winters singled, Boone tripled and Brad Wellman singled. After Kurt Stillwell singled, Swift replaced Harris and was greeted by Seitzer's RBI double and Jim Eisenreich's run-scoring single.

Bill Buckner then singled, stole second, went to third on an infield out and scored on Boone's single.

Wellman went 3-for-4 and scored three runs for Kansas City.

Harold Reynolds had three singles and Jeffrey Leonard two doubles for the Mariners.

"Hey, we hit the ball hard against one of the better pitchers in the league," Seattle manager Jim Lefebvre said. "We have eight rookies on this team and a lot of learning to do. But I like the potential I see out there. It's all a matter of confidence for this team."

Editor's Note: The Major League Baseball standings will appear in the Monday, not Thursday, issue of the Collegian throughout the summer. Other summary information will be included in the expanded Monday coverage.

Chang reaches French Open semifinals

By The Associated Press

PARIS — Seventeen-year-old Californian Michael Chang followed his stunning upset of Ivan Lendl with a victory over Ronald Agenor Wednesday and reached the semifinals of the French Open.

Chang, who beat Agenor 6-4, 2-6, 6-4, 7-6, became the youngest player ever to gain the last four in Paris as he advanced to a meeting with Andrei Chesnokov of the Soviet Union, another surprise winner.

Chesnokov eliminated defending champion Mats Wilander 6-4, 6-0, 7-5 and became the first Soviet since Alex Metreveli at Wimbledon in 1973 to reach the semifinals of a Grand Slam event.

In Friday's other semifinal, Boris Becker will face Stefan Edberg.

It will be the first time in six years that the French Open title will go to someone other than Wilander or Lendl.

At 17 years, 3½ months, Chang is the youngest male player in 56 years to reach a Grand Slam semifinal. He is also seeking to become the first American to win the French Open in 34 years.

Chang, who fought leg cramps throughout the fifth set to beat Lendl in more than 4½ hours, said he had trouble preparing himself for the Agenor match.

"I was really drained mentally because of all the emotion in the match against Lendl," he said.

Chang resorted to some of the same gamesmanship that flustered Lendl — and he got some back in return from Agenor.

At break point at 4-4 in the fourth set, Chang crept up to within a few feet of the service line in an attempt to rattle Agenor's concentration.

When Chang employed the tactic against Lendl, the Czech double faulted on match point. On Wednesday, Agenor also responded with a double fault and Chang had a 5-4 lead.

"I don't do it to try to insult anybody or make fun of anybody," Chang said. "When you're in a situation where you're desperate for the point, you do anything to bother concentration."

Agenor said it worked.

"It's bothersome," he said. "It's a mental attack. He makes you think. I'm sure he won't do it at 2-2 in the first set. He does it only at crucial moments. It's very intelligent and he's a very intelligent kid. But I don't know if he'll win the French Open this way."

Cycling popular with students

By Martha Kropf
Staff Writer

Bicycle riding has proven to be a popular recreational activity, and particularly for college students, "Biking is in," according to Steve Martini, associate director of K-State's Department of Recreational Services.

"Just incorporating the bicycle a little into your life can be helpful," Martini said. "A lot of people who have problems with running find that cycling is a little less strenuous than running."

Four different types of bicycle riders exist: those who commute with bikes, those who bike for exercise, bicycle racers and bicycle tourists, who take trips on their bikes. A person could fit into all four categories, Martini said.

Bicycle riding is "just like starting on an exercise program or diet," he said. "You just have to make the commitment."

Martini teaches Beginning Bicycle Touring, a class offered through the Division of Continuing Education. The five students presently enrolled are bicycle touring this weekend.

"We're going on a 200-mile ride that starts in Manhattan and ends in Manhattan," Martini said.

Joyce Halverson, assistant director of recreational services and a member of the class, said the members have learned things like roadside maintenance and how to ride safely in a group.

"I feel like I'm ready for the tour," she said.

People interested in other group bicycle activities can participate in group rides and competitions. The Bluemont Bicycle Club, for example, has existed for 15 to 20 years and has organized many rides, said Martini.

"The most common recreational ride is the Wednesday 6:30 (p.m.) ride that meets in front of the University for Man building," said Craig Raborn, junior in geography and president of the Bluemont Bicycle Club.

Raborn said anyone can join the rides and attend the club's meetings. The club's next meeting is July 10 in the K-State Union.

Cyclists can also compete in triathlons. In Manhattan, the rec services department sponsors the Little Apple Triathlon in September, and the Theta Xi fraternity sponsors the annual Taxi Triathlon in the spring.

Bicyclists must be aware of safety and obey the laws of the road because they must share the road with cars.

"Most of the riding we do is done on the highways," Raborn said. "We share the road with the cars."

"With the cost of gasoline, you see an increase of the number of bicycles on the street, and with that an increase in the number of injuries," said Sgt. Stanley Conkwright of the Riley County Police Department.

"People don't recognize the dangers that come with riding a bicycle," he said. "The rules of bicycling are the same as for a car."

Bicyclists should assume the car doesn't see them and make themselves as visible as possible, Conkwright said.

If one is going to do a lot of riding, Conkwright said, it's smart to wear a helmeut and something to protect the eyes against sand kicked up by cars and bugs that can fly into them.

"The thing that has become popular is the sunglasses that cover the eyes completely and that keep out bugs and have all the sun protection you need," said Stephen Salazar, employee of the Pathfinder.

Salazar said other safety equipment could include a helmet, gloves, a nightlight and a water bottle, espe-

Charles Stroh, professor of art, will be leaving for India in August to serve as an artist-in-residence on a Fulbright Lectureship. Stroh, who has visited India before, considers it a country of "inspiring richness."

Professor to teach in India

By The Collegian Staff

India was once at the top of the list of places Charles Stroh, professor of art, wished never to visit because of its impoverished conditions.

But the overwhelming experience of the culture, people and art changed his opinion of India to that of a country of "inspiring richness."

Stroh will be returning to India in August for six months as an artist-in-residence on a Fulbright Lectureship. His plans include informal teaching and demonstration of printmaking techniques to students and faculty in the hope of generating enthusiasm among Indian artists for lithography — a technique of printing from a flat piece of limestone or other material.

Stroh first visited India while he and his wife, Meredith, were in Afghanistan serving in the Peace Corps from 1969-71. He said the experience changed his opinion of the Indian subcontinent following travel throughout the region in Pakistan, Nepal and India.

"We had always heard about the extreme poverty of India and knew little about its grandeur," he said. "India has an inspiring richness of cultures, peoples and folk traditions in its arts.

"I'm delighted to have the opportunity to return to India," Stroh said. "I wanted to go back, and receiving a Fulbright Lectureship to work and interact with art students and faculty in India is double the excitement."

Stroh said the lectureship will give him the opportunity to work unimpeded.

"I have been working on woodcuts and painting for the past three years and hope to refocus on printmaking during this lectureship."

Stroh will be at the Delhi College of Art, a part of the University of Delhi in north central India, when he first arrives in August. In November, he will move to Visva Bharati University in Santineketan, West Bengal, in northeast India.

Very little lithography is being done in India, he said, because of the enormous influence of Krishna Reddy, a master of intaglio, a method of printing with carved stone. For many years, Reddy had a studio in Paris, and Indian artists flocked to study with him, causing lithography techniques to fall from popularity, Stroh said.

"I hope to be able to bring the facilities up to speed at the two universities and encourage students to work again in this technique," he said.

In 1985, Stroh traveled throughout India for six months studying the history of printmaking and contacting artists active in that field.

Gorbachev says Soviet troops unable to halt ethnic violence

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW — More than 9,000 soldiers have been unable to halt the bloody ethnic violence in Uzbekistan, President Mikhail S. Gorbachev reported Wednesday.

He told the Soviet congress that arson and slayings are still going on in the Central Asian republic. Soviet media reports said the death toll had reached 67 and that authorities had lost control.

Accounts in state-run media on the strife in the Fergana Valley 1,500 miles southeast of Moscow said some people had been stoned to death, and others "perished under the burning debris of houses."

"One thing is clear: the local authorities have lost control of the situation, failed to cope with it on their own," the official Tass news agency reported from Uzbekistan.

To protect them from marauding Uzbeks, several thousand members of the Meskhi Turk ethnic minority have been removed to a temporary camp outside the city of Fergana "in the steppe under the scorching sun," Tass said.

Helicopters and armored personnel carriers are patrolling Fergana, a city of more than 200,000 people, Tass said, and the Communist Party daily Pravda said 9,000 Interior Ministry troops were in the eastern Uzbekistan valley trying to maintain order.

Violence in the grape- and cotton-growing region began May 23-24 after a dispute in a bazaar, when a Meskhi Turk spoke rudely to a fruit vendor because he thought her prices were too high and knocked over her plate of strawberries, Uzbekistan Communist Party chief Rafik Nishanov said.

That incident triggered a marketplace brawl, and in later paryoxyms of ethnic violence that reached a crescendo last weekend, more than 400 houses, 116 cars, eight industrial enterprises and some schools and government offices were torched or wrecked, Tass said.

"Youths aged from 16 to 20, drunk or on drugs, performed barbarous, reckless actions," Tass said. It said 56 people had been killed, including many women and children, but the Communist youth daily Komsomolskaya Pravda said the death toll had climbed to 67.

Most of those who lost their homes were Meskhi Turks, the newspaper said. The entire population of 300,000 Meskhi were uprooted from their homeland in Soviet Georgia by dictator Josef Stalin in 1944 and shipped to the Soviet East for forced resettlement.

In Moscow, a somber Gorbachev told the Congress of People's Deputies that authorities had the situation in the Fergana Valley under control, but that there were still incidents of arson and killings.

"It has not changed for the better," Gorbachev said. "It concerns us very much."

ting) to the other cities. In Beijing they already know — they have heard the gunfire."

In support of their counterparts in Beijing, Chinese students at K-State are arranging activities other than the pro-democracy rallies.

■ A charity bazaar has been planned to raise money to send to families and students in Beijing. More than $1,500 has already been collected from a May 23 demonstration on campus, some from Chinese professors on campus, Yang said.

The bazaar will be in front of the International Student Center from 9 a.m. to 10 p.m. Saturday, and students will sell crafts and items from China.

■ A table will be set up to take donations from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Friday in the Union. Students will also be passing out information on the situation in China.

That same gunfire has prompted President Bush to extend Chinese students' American visas, but several students at K-State said the measure won't affect them.

Yang said out of the nearly 200 Chinese students and their relatives at K-State, 90 percent have visas that allow them to remain in the United States regardless of Bush's decision.

Wei Zhang, graduate in plant pathology, said most visas allow a student to stay here until a degree has been earned. Zhang was one of five K-State students who participated in a demonstration Saturday at the Chinese consulate in Chicago.

"We did add an extra day to fall enrollment but the success of this will depend on students' arriving at their scheduled time," he said.

Towards the end of the day, fewer students were enrolling and "The computer system performed perfectly," Foster said.

Coleman said K-State needs to have large signs that state clearly where a person needs to go, to avoid confusion.

cially in summer.

Martini said a helmet and a well-maintained bike are important safety factors along with safe riding habits.

Conkwright said to promote safety, the Riley County Police Department has a seminar on safety called the Bicycle Rodeo Program.

Another factor in safe biking is keeping the bike safe while it's not being ridden. Conkwright said one should use a real chain or cable and a padlock and put the lock through the wheel and the frame when locking up a bicycle.

the production and storage of his wine as soon as the winery turns a profit. Presently, however, money is not a primary concern.

"We've done well enough in our construction business that we don't have to show a profit right away," he said. "If we don't think it's good wine, we'll pour it down the drain before we'd put it on the market."

Fair said there are good reasons to drink wine.

"I'm dead set against drunkenness, but wine should be enjoyed," he said. "Taken right, it will do great things for your body. It lowers cholesterol and it's good for the heart. Two glasses of wine a day are better for you than those two aspirins doctors are recommending now, and a lot more fun."

than 2,000 members of the Kansas Farm Management Association indicate that members' average net farm income had increased by $43,000 since 1985 and land prices had risen about $56 per acre.

Government programs and other factors, such as forced liquidation of cattle herds — which would result in higher cash receipts this year, but will reduce asset values and income earning potential later — can alter the projected picture of effects of the drought by the report.

Local woman witnesses Chinese clash

By Chris Koger
Campus/City Editor

Sherry Wright, Manhattan, knows what it's like to be shot at.

She and a friend were in Beijing's Tiananmen Square June 4.

"We were a part of a crowd, thousands upon thousands of Chinese who were almost completely silent except for some shocked whispers every now and then," she said.

"And there they were — 10 huge tanks with their guns pointed right at the crowd. In front of each of those tanks was a squad of about 20 to 30 soldiers."

"Behind the tanks there was this sea of green, where more soldiers were, and they were doing just what the people were doing — just sitting there," Wright said. "It was eerie."

None of the civilians had any weapons and weren't even shouting at the soldiers, she said.

"I almost feel that we were lulling ourselves into a weird sense of security. People just weren't afraid."

With no warning at all, the soldiers fired on the crowd.

"I hit the ground. ... " Wright said. "I dived behind a canvas construction barrier. I wasn't thinking at all."

Her friend landed near her, and covered her head with his arms. When the shooting stopped, they ran.

"My glasses had fallen and broken when I hit the ground, but he went back and got them and put them together while we were running," she said.

After they had run about 100 yards, the soldiers fired, and the two hit the ground again, Wright said. The cycle began a third time, but lasted longer.

Not all of the gunfire was directed at the crowd, she said.

"I can't tell you what the orders were or what they were supposed to be shooting at, because they were shooting at buildings and into the air, but people were falling. There were bullets going everywhere," Wright said.

She lost her friend in the confusion, but the people around her wouldn't let her go back to look for him.

Before the fourth volley started, she found him. As the group turned the corner to a smaller road, the fifth and last volley sounded.

"I knew I was covered from head to foot with dirt; that I was just black," she said. "What I didn't know was that I was also covered in blood, and most of it was not mine."

Alumna flees China after experiencing military crackdown

By Chris Koger
Campus/City Editor

Imagine troops and tanks from Fort Riley suddenly rolling into Manhattan and firing upon the residents.

The pro-democracy demonstrators in Tiananmen Square and other parts of Beijing had just such an experience when their People's Liberation Army enforced martial law, said Sherry Wright, who returned to Manhattan Thursday morning after spending 10 months in Beijing as an editor of the China Daily newspaper.

"The overriding reaction was grief — just a deep, deep sorrow. I talked with old party supporters who have devoted their lives to supporting the government who are just outraged. They cannot believe their government has ordered its soldiers to kill people. They're ashamed," said Wright, who received a master's degree in journalism at K-State in 1987 and worked as a media coordinator for KSU Cooperative Extension Service.

Wright said although the students began the pro-democracy movement, it turned into a people's movement.

"I can remember going downtown and watching the marchers. You could hardly see the students through the other people — chefs, street sweepers, hard hat construction workers and government employees of all kinds," she said. "I even saw one of the soldiers ... demonstrating with the students."

Since the crackdown began June 3, news reports have varied on the number of deaths in Beijing, but Wright said the number has been underreported.

"There was incredible devastation. It could have been almost the aftermath of a natural catastrophe if not for the turned over armored personnel carriers, bullet holes and pools of blood where people had died," she said.

On Sunday night, June 4, Wright saw soldiers shoot at a school next to the China Daily's offices.

"It hurt to stand with Chinese friends, knowing that in the next building, Chinese people were dying," she said. "It was a horrible situation, but there was nothing we could do about it."

As a journalist, Wright said it was hard to work for the government paper. At a news meeting the night of the shootings, the national news editor had three proposed stories for the paper: a cold fusion project, environmental protection and a reserve for monkeys.

"The Chinese editors, one by one, set down their pencils, sat back, and said, 'No way,'" she said.

Instead of ignoring the massacre, Wright said the paper printed "some gutsy things for which they're probably suffering now."

But a paper from Tuesday, June 6, brought back by Wright echoes the hard-line leaders' sentiments. A front-page story on a statement issued by the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee called the demonstrations a "shocking counter-revolutionary riot."

The statement said under the circumstances, the soldiers were compelled to take action and "tried their best to avoid bloodshed, but some casualties, nevertheless, occurred, mostly involving military personnel."

Wright said most people in China see through the propaganda, and rely on gossip for the truth.

"It's the only place I've ever lived where I

Gorbachev visit marred by U.S.S.R. unrest

By The Associated Press

BONN, West Germany — Mikhail S. Gorbachev's first state visit to West Germany is overshadowed by tragedy and unrest in the Soviet Union and an accelerating threat worldwide to the socialist ideology that guides his leadership.

But the Soviet president's advance men have been deftly deflecting the distractions, hinting that major initiatives may be in the making during the much-publicized summit.

Gorbachev's four-day visit, which begins Monday, comes with high expectations on both sides. Each speaks of a new era in relations and a historic chance for closing the gap between East and West.

Both nations are focusing on the opportunities presented by Gorbachev's reforms, relegating to the sidelines the reform-related crises in China, Eastern Europe and among ethnic groups within the Soviet Union.

"We consider this an extremely important meeting, perhaps the most important one we've had in Europe," Gennady I. Gerasimov, the Soviet government spokesman, said in an interview on Friday.

Acknowledging West Germans' enthusiasm for the Kremlin leader and his reform program, Gerasimov said Gorbachev wanted a close look at West Germany and would go out and "press the flesh."

Asked if Gorbachev planned to respond to President Bush's arms control initiative announced May 29 during the NATO summit in Brussels, Gerasimov said: "There is no ground for a quick reply."

He said the conventional weapons reduction plan outlined by Bush and endorsed by the Western allies has not been formally presented to negotiators at superpower talks in Vienna, so an official Kremlin response was unlikely.

But he said another Soviet step in the disarmament volley was possible during the summit that opens Monday.

Another member of the Soviet advance delegation, political observer Lev A. Bezymensky of the magazine New Times, told reporters Friday that "We should let ourselves be surprised" by what takes place during the summit.

Hans Klein, a West German government spokesman, sees the visit as a chance to reach a goal of "peace with ever fewer weapons." Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher predicted "a milestone in German-Soviet relations."

The atmosphere of hope, however, has been tainted by numerous domestic troubles likely to continue boiling while the Soviet leader is abroad.

Money donated at Chinese fair to help wounded demonstrators

By Chris Koger
Staff Writer

Chinese students have formed the Chinese Democratization Foundation of KSU, and have already collected about $2,500 to support wounded civilians in China and to fund future projects on campus.

Jie Yang, a member of the Chinese Student and Scholar Association, said $1,200 was donated Friday and Saturday at a table in the Union and Chinese Fair at the International Student Center. The rest of the money had already been collected through demonstrations and events sponsored by the Association.

See related stories/ Pages 5 and 9

Yang, a graduate student in sociology, said the group is uncertain about the possibility of someone receiving the money in China.

"We don't know yet about some of the channels to China, including the student organizations over there," Yang said. "The hard-liners have been taking actions against demonstrators."

According to news reports, hundreds of students and workers thought to have contributed to the demonstrations in Beijing and other cities in China have been arrested by the government.

"This kind of campaign has started all over the world, and we are happy people are supporting us."

— Chao Liang, graduate in food science

Yang said the Taiwanese Student Association has sent money to the Red Cross, which has been taking donations for those wounded in the crackdown.

"We might have to send money that way, but we're not sure," he said.

Chao Liang, graduate in food science, has been sending information to China through fax and telex machines. Out of 46 messages sent, 26 have been received, Liang said.

"Hopefully they will get to the students, but I doubt if they will if the government has control of the machines," Liang said.

Liang said many students in the United States and abroad have been sending information through phone lines with the help of fax and telex machines.

"This kind of campaign has started all over the world, and we are happy people are supporting us," he said.

The students sold donated Chinese crafts and food Saturday at the fair. Yang said several Manhattan businesses and restaurants also contributed to the event.

Lin Li, graduate in biochemistry, donated a few items Saturday.

"(The fair) did pretty well; it shows the people in Manhattan really care, and we appreciate the support," Li said.

Mandela wins Gadhafi prize

ROME — The first Gadhafi international human rights prize was awarded Sunday to Nelson Mandela, the jailed South African anti-apartheid leader, the Libyan news agency JANA reported.

The award was presented in Tripoli to Mandela's daughter, Zenani, JANA said in a report monitored in Rome. A ceremony celebrating the event was also held Saturday night, the agency said.

Zenani was quoted as telling Libyan radio that the prize was "a further impetus for all freedom fighters."

Her 70-year-old father, leader of the outlawed African National Congress, has been in jail for more than two decades for leading the fight against South African's racial segregation system.

The winner of the prize, named after Libyan leader Moammar Gadhafi, was chosen by an "international people's committee," JANA said, without identifying its members.

France tests nuclear bomb

WELLINGTON, New Zealand — France detonated its fourth underground nuclear bomb this year in the South Pacific, New Zealand government scientists said Sunday.

The explosion of about 70 kilotons occurred Saturday at Fangatau atoll in French Polynesia, said Warwick Smith of the Department of Industrial and Scientific Research.

It brings to 107 the number of underground tests Paris has conducted since it began nuclear tests in the region in 1975, Smith said.

This year the French exploded an 11-kiloton bomb on May 11, a two-kiloton bomb on May 20 and one of 20 kilotons on June 4. One kiloton is equivalent to blasting 1,000 tons of TNT.

Buses collide; kill 20 guests

ESKISEHIR, Turkey — Two minibuses carrying wedding guests crashed on Sunday as they raced along a highway in central Turkey, killing 20 people and injuring 33, the Anatolia news agency reported.

Anatolia said the vehicles both were carrying guests to a wedding and began to race each other along the Eskisehir-Bozuyuk highway, about 200 miles southeast of Istanbul.

One of the minibuses hit the other, apparently from the rear, the agency said.

Nine passengers were declared dead at the scene and 11 died at the hospital, the dispatch said.

Thirty-three injured passengers were taken to hospitals for treatment, Anatolia added.

Moral majority disbanded

LAS VEGAS — The Moral Majority, the religious right's political lobbying group, is being disbanded after a decade in which it helped elect two Republican presidents, founder Jerry Falwell said Sunday.

"Ten years later, we've come here to announce — mission accomplished," Falwell told a meeting Sunday of the Religion Newswriters Association. "While the work of Moral Majority will go on forever, the Moral Majority organization is no longer needed."

The prominent television evangelist said the organization, which raised $69 million since he started it in June 1979 as a political forum for religious conservatives, will close up shop Aug. 31.

Snake stops plane takeoff

BALTIMORE — Piedmont Flight 1253 to New York City was delayed for more than an hour, but the reason wasn't a mechanical problem, bad weather or labor strife — it was a 4-foot snake.

The plane was taxiing out to take off from Baltimore-Washington International Airport when a passenger saw the serpent slithering down the aisle and alerted a flight attendant, said Larry Pickett, spokesman for USAir, Piedmont's parent company.

"The pilot pulled back to the gate and all the passengers deplaned, the maintenance people did their thing and the plane took off about an hour later," Pickett said.

Workers had to remove three seats in order to capture the critter, a harmless gopher snake, Pickett said. Airline officials did not know how it got into the plane, he said.

The reptile was sent to a pet store.

Bee swarm invades house

NASHUA, N.H. — Nancy Brehm said she and her daughter and grandson were upstairs in their house one recent afternoon when they heard an odd noise in the living room.

About 12,000 bees, apparently swarming or looking for a new hive, had flown down the chimney and tried to take up residence in the Brehm house.

Brehm made a beeline for the upstairs telephone and called her husband, Bruce, at work.

"I know my wife and daughter don't like insects, so I thought they were exaggerating," Bruce said. "I expected 10 or 20 bees. I couldn't believe what I saw when I got there."

Nancy said she called various agencies, including police and exterminators, but no one would help. She finally persuaded Peterborough beekeeper John Camp to come to her aid.

Camp arrived with a beehive about the same time the fire department showed up to help the family out a second-floor window.

Camp coaxed most of the bees into the hive, but a few were left over.

"We were vacuuming bees til 1:30 in the morning and dead ones are still turning up," Nancy said.

Woman dies in flash flood

Thunderstorms raced across portions of Kansas on Sunday, claiming the life of an Ellinwood woman and forcing about 30 families from their homes, authorities said.

Ruby Irene Carlisle, 62, apparently was getting out of her car about 6 p.m. Saturday after it stalled in a flooded low-water bridge about four miles northeast of Larned, said Pawnee County Sheriff Leon Shearer. A wall of water swept by, dragging Carlisle a half-mile and moving the car 300 feet.

The National Weather Service issued a flash flood watch for southeast and south-central Kansas Sunday night for the second night in a row.

Ray McDaniel, a patrolman for the Coffeyville Police Department, said Coffeyville had some some flash flooding Saturday night and Sunday and that about 30 families were evacuated from their homes early Sunday after waist-high water swept through the west part of town.

"A lot of the families are back at the houses cleaning up now," McDaniel said late Sunday evening. "But nobody has moved back in."

McDaniel said in addition to street flooding and cars being submerged, several power outages were reported throughout the area. Most of the power had been restored late Sunday, he said.

Several wheat fields around Coffeyville were also underwater, McDaniel said.

Billy Richards, 10, of Manhattan, attempts a back handspring with the help of Russ Ward, Manhattan, as other children wait their turn. They are enrolled in Community Education's Summer Adventure program.

Program enriches children

By Paige Gantz
Staff Writer

Community Education's Summer Adventure program is intended to do more than keep rambunctious children out of their mothers' hair.

It broadens their horizons.

"The object of Summer Adventure is to bring kids from kindergarten to eighth grade into learning situations unique from what they are exposed to in a school system," said Scott Langton, program coordinator of the K-State Community Education summer program.

According to a promotional brochure, Summer Adventure is designed to stimulate children to be more involved in physical activity and personal and educational enrichment as well as being exposed to a variety of cultural influences.

Session I, which began June 5 and continues through June 16, has 80 children participating.

"This is the largest session in our four-year history," Langton said. "We are definitely a growing program, so we've set up our program to handle the growth. We currently have six grade lines which can easily be expanded."

Grade lines are used to separate the different ages of the children. The children are grouped into kindergarten, first, second, third, fourth-fifth and sixth-seventh-eighth grade groups. If there are 16 or more youngsters within the grade line, the extra children can easily be placed in another grade group, Langton said.

Summer Adventure is composed of three basic subdivisions: physical activities, enrichment programs and extravaganza/production.

The physical activites section exposes children to activities such as swimming, gymnastics, golf, bowling, judo, racket games and aerobics. They also include educational games where children experience problem solving, inventiveness and nutrition and first aid education.

Tony Luginbill, senior in biology who teaches judo classes through continuing education, also teaches judo to children enrolled in Summer Adventure.

"Kids think that judo involves kicking, which would make it more like karate," he said. "Judo is using throwing, choking, pinning and arm barring. These techniques are simply for self defense, not for offense, which many people can't understand."

Luginbill, who is a first degree-black belt, started judo at age 12 and has participated in it ever since.

"During Summer Adventure I teach kids how to fall, stretching exercises and basic pins and throws," he said. "The kids are very excited to learn judo.

"I teach kids to get interested in nationals once they hit the green belt level, which means they have ability to show skills in tournaments. These regional tournaments are held in Arkansas, Oklahoma, Missouri, Nebraska and Kansas."

The enrichment program focuses on the areas of art, science, drama, computers, communications, math, journalism and creative writing. Projects such as building rockets or volcanoes are encouraged.

Extravaganza/production hopes to expose children to topics that may be new to them. This may include laser shows by the Department of Physics; tours of the Collegian to see news production and reporting; live presentations with birds of prey, pythons, tarantulas and other unique specimens by the Sunset Zoo; or a tour of local businesses such as Pizza Hut where the children are allowed to create their own pizza and watch the baking process.

Sarah Vestweber of Manhattan is a second-grade leader for summer adventure.

"The kids are fun to be around," she said.

Research incentives increase

By The Collegian Staff

Researchers at K-State will receive a 10 percent increase in royalties as an incentive for developing more patentable inventions. The KSU Research Foundation approved the increase, along with a 5 percent royalty increase for the department responsible for the research.

John Walters, executive vice president of the Foundation, said the change was made as the result of analysis of other research programs throughout the area.

"We need to get more people interested in submitting disclosures which might be patentable and licensable," Walters said.

Robert Kruh, chairman of the Patent Advisory Committee, said raising the royalties would affect faculty, inventors and the University.

"The inventors will stimulate more patent activity which should eventually allow the Research Foundation to underwrite additional University research," Kruh said.

"We take the product and put it out into a commercial development, which returns money to the inventor," he said. "Any money we get, we pay the inventor that share."

Kruh said the process is like a cycle.

"More response will result in more money going into the University," he said.

Foundation board members agreed to increase the amount paid to the researcher from 15 percent of gross income to 25 percent. The department reward will increase from 5 percent to 10 percent of the gross royalty income.

Bush foreign policy needs consistency

In matters of foreign affairs, President Theodore Roosevelt said America should speak softly and carry a big stick.

Many years later, America has made it a point to speak loudly and carry a toothpick.

This decade's rhetoric on foreign policy, courtesy of Ronald Reagan and George Bush, has taken the high road on issues of freedom and democracy and a distrustful and aggressive stance against communism. But like most Reagan/Bush rhetoric, it's all show and no substance, and serves to obscure self-serving, realpolitik policies with hearty, high-minded platitudes.

For example, Reagan and Bush have refused to enact any economic sanctions against an inherently repressive regime such as the South African government because such measures would hurt the general population of blacks, not the ruling elite.

At the same time, our government has denounced the Sandinista government in Nicaragua for its violations of human rights. That talk has been backed up with full economic sanctions and funding of revolutionary forces in an effort to weaken the Sandinistas by creating domestic turmoil, regardless of the fact that it hurts the very same people that America seeks to liberate.

Such discrepancies can be understood only when we examine U.S. interests: Nicaragua is a backward, powerless country of very little economic value to the United States, while South Africa is home to many U.S. corporations and an important source of strategic metals.

Such hypocritical tendencies are once again evident in U.S. policy regarding the recent tragedy in China. While George Bush "deplores" the repressive and bloody actions of the communist party rulers, his strong talk has been backed up with little substance.

Indeed, he even refused to hold Chinese leader Deng Xiaoping responsible for the murders in Tiananmen Square because Bush was not sure he was in on the decision — an argument strikingly similar to the one Bush used in refusing to hold Ronald Reagan responsible for the Iran-Contra dealings.

More importantly, Bush refuses to threaten any sanctions against China, besides a cutoff in military aid, because it would damage Sino-American relations as well as the status of strategic American listening posts on the Chinese-Soviet border and growing American business involvement in China.

This is not to say the United States should enact complete economic and diplomatic sanctions against China. But if George Bush wishes to portray America as an unbending advocate of freedom and democracy that seeks to act on moral principles and not economic or political motives, he must create a more consistent and moral foreign policy.

Other Perspectives

In a continued attempt to wage a war on crime, President Bush announced his Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1989, which proposes an overall $1.2 billion increase in spending for federal prisons.

The funding will be used to construct 24,000 new prison beds, hire 1,600 more assistant U.S. attorneys and authorize 825 new federal law enforcement agents.

By increasing the punishment and enforcement measures, Bush intends to deter citizens from breaking the law. But the implementation of these proposals will do little to reduce the crime rate. In fact, they may actually cause additional problems.

... The U.S. prison population is already at an all-time high. ... Bush's plan to build new prisons ... won't prevent crimes from being committed.

According to criminal experts' estimates, 50 to 70 percent of the inmate population does not need to be jailed, and there is evidence that those who recieve creative sentences are more likely to be rehabilitated than those who only serve jail time.

Instead of continuing to fight the war on crime with conventional policy that doesn't work, Bush should try a new strategic approach to deterring crime.

Plotless porno movies banished

Commentary

Mark Schmeller
Collegian Columnist

Last week, 15 Johnson County citizens good and true emerged from a grand jury with a set of obscenity guidelines restricting X-rated videocassette rental.

According to the guidelines, Johnson County stores will no longer be allowed to stock movies that show incestuous relationships, sexual conduct with minors (curtains for the Rob Lowe tape!), bondage for sexual gratification, violence for sexual gratification, bestiality, or (and this one's the kicker) that lack a significant story line or plot.

All I can say is thanks. Not only are the Johnson County porn-fighters, led by a group called the Coalition Against Pornography, ready to defend our morality, they also seek to protect our literary sensibilities. Next time I rent a video in Johnson County, I'll be safe in the knowledge that all the plotless porn has been weeded out. Now I'll be able to focus on the story, and appreciate classics like "Blue Voodoo" and "Cagney and Stacey" solely on the basis of their artistic merit.

Moreover, the presence of a plot in a porn movie, if I am to believe the Johnson County grand jury's reasoning, will lessen, perhaps eliminate, the debasing effect that the graphic displays of sex will have upon me. Instead of entertaining impure thoughts about Traci Lords next time I watch a dirty movie, my mind will be busy sorting out the meaning of her actions in relation to the grand scheme of the story.

Nevertheless, I am curious as to how Johnson County will carry out this quite honorable task of artistically fine-tuning the local porn parlors. In order to enforce the guidelines, local authorities will have to figure out exactly which pornos are plotless. That won't be easy. Somebody, either policeman, judges or grand juries, will have to screen every dirty movie available, paying close and careful attention to plot developments. And that's the easy part.

It seems to me that the most trying task that awaits the members of future porn review boards will be the defense of their own morality. After all, obscenity laws are built upon the assumption that pornography degrades the moral character of the viewer or reader. But in the course of reviewing thousands of hours of porn, the best and most influential citizens and officals of Johnson County will be bombarded with enough degradation to turn Mother Teresa into a shameless hussy. How will they be able to cope? Will they all become snared in the demonic tentacles of smut, possessed by the evil influence of peepshow perversity, transformed into rapists and drooling debauchees?

Perhaps porn fighters are made of stronger moral stuff than the rest of us, and won't succumb to the subliminally debasing influence of Big John Holmes, Linda Lovelace, Harry Reems and Georgina Spelvin. Perhaps it is best that this moral elite has shouldered the heavy responsibility of acting as society's guardian. Good for them.

Fortunately, Johnson County officals will have some help in sorting through the stacks of smut that await them. The famous Meese Commision Report on Pornography, published during the do-gooding days of the Reagan administration, has examined a number of the most prominent porn titles for their literary merit and redeeming social value. The two-volume report devotes more than 26 pages to carefully recreating the story line of "Forgive Me, I Have Sinned" and 17 pages to a summary of "Debbie Does Dallas," written in stark but stirring minimalist prose:

"A number of females dressed as cheerleaders are shown giving a cheer. The cast is listed with the presumed names of the characters. A couple of cheerleaders are shown bending over. One is not wearing pants. A number of males dressed in football uniforms are shown running in front of the cheerleaders ... "

The Meese Commision Report is filled with such deadpan seriousness. Most porn fighters suffer from this sort of unrelenting sobriety, and it prevents them from seeing pornography for what it is: sophomoric garbage that only perverts, loonies and the chronically humorless could look at without breaking out in full-blown laughter.

Just check out this list of porn-movie titles from the Meese Commission report and tell me if you don't snigger at something: "Handy Randy Guys," "Bisexual Solo," "She-Male Encounters #5," "Der Perverse Onkel," "Der Lang Finger," "Frat House Frolics," "Toilet Orgy," "Trisexual Encounters #3," "Tons of Buns #2," "Bodacious Tatas," "Viva Vanessa the Undresser," "Vixens of Kung Fu," "Yank My Doodle," and the very honest and straightfoward "Ladies with Big Boobs."

This leads me to the conclusion that if porn dealers and addicts are a threat to society, porn fighters may be nearly as dangerous. After all, they also exhibit the common fault of taking smut seriously. Because of this, porn fighters run the danger of crossing that fine line between arousal and disgust and becoming sex fiends themselves.

My answer to those who fear the piles of porn and stacks of skank that are suffocating our local video stores? Let it be and learn to laugh at it. A society that teaches people to fear pornography teaches them to take it seriously. There will always be lonely and sick people who seek out perverted sexual outlets. Taking away pornography can only lead to the development of outlets far more harmful and degrading than something like "Tons of Buns #2."

Letters

Religions diverse

Editor,

I would like to speak to the incredible arrogance of those Christians such as John Wolfram (Letters, Collegian, June 8) who speak of "scientific" creationism as the "other side of the coin" from evolution, and say it should be taught alongside evolution or instead of it. Wolfram says that the "chances of an inorganic compound becoming a ... human being are astronomical."

If I answer his argument by responding that we do live in an astronomical universe and that incremental jumps to stable and metastable intermediate states are how evolution progresses, I am taking the bait. Instead I will respond to this presupposition that if anything is to be taught along with evolution, it is, of course, Christianity. This thinking is pure bigotry.

In fact, this world is alive with a vast rainbow of stories about the beginning of time, of the universe and of the world. Of the religions that have the largest number of adherents today — Buddhism, Judaism, Islam, Christianity, Shinto, Jainism, Zoroastrianism, Taoism, Confucianism and Hinduism — I think the latter may come closest to the term "scientific" because of thousands of years of study of the effects of physiology on consciousness. The ancient Hindu Vedas even spoke of the elemental atom and of a cycle of epochs of the universe that resembles the oscillating solutions to Einsteinian cosmology.

Shall we then teach "scientific epochalism" alongside "scientific creationism" and evolution?

What abou the Hua Yen (Zen) Buddhist teaching of the Totality of Emptiness; that the universes are continually springing into existence each second, and immediately becoming empty of existence so that there is room for a new springing into being. This has some features in common with the Many Worlds interpretation of Quantum Mechanics. Shall we teach "scientific insubstantialism" along with "scientific epochalism," "scientific creationism" and evolution?

What about the 90 million adherents of the old religion of western Europe, witchcraft, who were murdered by Christians between 1400 and 1750? If Christians wished so badly to wipe out witchcraft, perhaps we should pay attention to what modern witches would teach us about the nature of being.

Since their story begins with the Goddess giving birth to the universe, perhaps we should study "scientifuic parturition" along with "scientific insubstantialism," "scientific epochalism," "scientific creationism" and evolution.

What we find after adding the other major and minor "scientific" theories of being/becoming is that we may have to teach a class that includes up to 5 billion scientific BYOR-isms. Christians would have achieved a victory in essentially excluding evolution from being taught. But since the underlying reason for Christians' wanting to exclude evolution from the curriculum is to prevent children from being exposed to ideas that might shake their faith in their parents' prejudices, this class, which would essentially be one on comparative religion, would seem to be a cure worse than the disease.

Rebecca Rene, of the Community AIDS Project in Joplin, Mo., where she is a college student, wants to spread the message that AIDS does not discriminate. Rene tested positive for the AIDS virus in July 1988.

Victim lives with AIDS

By Robin Wessels
Collegian Reporter

Rebecca Rene had several strikes against her from the beginning: her parents were alcoholics and she was moved from one foster home to another.

"As a kid you are immortal. You think you have the rest of your life," said Rene, 20.

But last summer, all that "went down the tubes," she said.

In July, 1988, she tested positive for the acquired immune deficiency syndrome virus.

Rene was at the K-State Union Friday and Saturday for the Manhattan Regional Conference on Independent Living, sponsored by the Manhattan Area Social and Rehabilitation Services Office and the Family Center at K-State. Foster children, foster parents and social workers from Emporia, Hiawatha, Manhattan, Salina and Topeka attended the conference.

Rene said she wasn't there to teach them how AIDS is contracted, but how to live with it. Rene finished high school, got a job and now attends college in Joplin, Mo. She said nothing was standing in the way of her "hopes and dreams."

"I don't feel comfortable talking about the virus and how to get it," she said. "It's not relative how I got it. The problem is that I have it."

AIDS symptoms include fatigue, night sweats, chills or low-grade fever, sore throat, coughs, diarrhea, weight loss and shortness of breath. Rene suffers from all of these.

"I was tested six times before I really believed it," Rene said. "Believe it. Nice people get AIDS. It's an indiscriminate disease."

She said this realization drove her to take an overdose of pills.

"When I woke up, which wasn't planned, I had a new outlook," she said. "I had a purpose."

Since then, Rene has been helping others understand AIDS and supporting those who have it.

Friends are few and far between for Rene, and she said the ones she did have wanted her to keep her situation a secret.

"No one wants to talk about AIDS," she said.

Rene has gained one friend through all of this — Deanne Ashly, director of the Four State Community AIDS Project in Joplin. The project, a non-profit organization established to educate about AIDS, provides direct services to people with AIDS and gives support to friends and families of people with the disease.

Since being diagnosed as having the disease, Rene has been to numerous doctors and has called endless hotlines.

"No one will help," she said.

Doctors won't talk to her, because they don't know what to do for her, Rene said.

"I have found one doctor that will anonymously prescribe some medication," she said, adding that she believes she knows more than the medical profession about AIDS because she lives with it.

Rene plans to get a degree in art, "if I live long enough to finish."

But at this point she's not sure she'll even be able to keep a job. She has already been fired from two jobs because of AIDS.

"It's a hurtful disease; sometimes all I can do is cry and pray," she said. "I do a lot of both."

Refugees flee ethnic rioting; troops fail to maintain order

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW — Ethnic rioting that has killed 100 people in the Uzbekistan republic has driven nearly 15,000 refugees into a camp where living conditions are so primitive that women give birth on the ground, Soviet media said Sunday.

The military newspaper Krasnaya Avezda said mobs of intoxicated residents continue to direct violence at minority Turks in the republic's Fergana valley region.

"The green colors of Fergana do not cover the remains of burned-out homes which belonged to Turks not so long ago," the newspaper said. "In some places of the region, clouds of smoke are visible. Numerous are the crowds made up of drunks and people high on drugs."

Most of the violence in the cotton- and grape-growing region, about 1,500 miles southeast of Moscow, has been directed at the Meshki Turks, a minority uprooted by dictator Josef Stalin in 1944 from its homeland in Soviet Georgia and forcibly resettled in the Soviet east.

Krasnaya Zvezda said about 100 people had been killed in the first days of the week-long rioting, and approximately 1,000 other people wounded. Official media previously reported 80 deaths.

From Sunday's Soviet press, it was clear the violence was continuing despite the presence of 9,000 Interior Ministry troops sent to restore order. But the reasons for the outburst, which officials said began as an ethnic dispute between Turks and the dominant native population, the Uzbeks, were still unclear.

Krasnaya Zvezda quoted Col. E. Nechaeyv, deputy chief of the political department of Interior Ministry troops, as saying: "We think that the extremists' actions are guided by interested leaders with mercenary goals."

China rounds up protestors

By The Associated Press

BEIJING — China on Sunday ordered the arrest of a prominent dissident hiding in the U.S. Embassy, and authorities rounded up more workers and students nationwide who helped lead pro-democracy protests.

The official Xinhua News Agency said warrants were issued for dissident Fang Lizhi and his wife, Li Shuxian, who were charged with "committing crimes of counterrevolutionary propaganda and instigation."

The State Department said Tuesday that Fang and Li took shelter at the U.S. Embassy after the army rolled into central Beijing and opened fire on demonstrators June 3-4.

Military attacks that left hundreds dead ended seven weeks of protests that spawned demonstrations nationwide and caused a power struggle from which hardliners emerged in charge.

Proposed improvements to preserve Marlatt Park

By Paige Gantz
Staff Writer

When the heirs of the Rev. Washington Marlatt donated 140 acres to K-State in 1940, "they intended it to be solely for recreation and to be kept in a prairie condition," said Mark Taussig, University landscape architect.

Taussig remembered those intentions when he designed proposed improvements for Washington Marlatt Park, commonly known as "Top of the World." The park is on Kansas Highway 113 about a mile north of Manhattan.

The improvements are to be completed in three phases, the first of which consists of improving accessibility by providing a parking lot, picnic tables and an interpretive trail system. The second and third phases include expanding the park to adjacent areas, Taussig said.

"We intend for this park to be like a mini-Konza prairie, except this one will be accessible to the public," he said. "The twofold goal of this project is first to improve access, and, second, use the park while preserving the prairie condition."

To preserve the park, Taussig said it will be fenced to keep vehicles out.

"We're also hiring a part-time caretaker to maintain the property by using prairie management (techniques) to keep it in condition," he said. "Due to the limited resources available, we can't do a lot at one time. We'd like to add restroom facilities soon, so we will be seeking contributions to complete that project."

K-State is working from an endowment specifically for the project.

"It's pretty limited, but we have received cooperative participation from other people," Taussig said. "The county, city, township, The Northern Flint Hills Audubon Society and the Boy Scouts have all actively helped in this project."

The township will maintain the roads and the city will collect trash if it becomes a problem.

The Boy Scouts will build the trails and construct stone retaining walls on both sides of the entrance.

Taussig said the interpretive trail will be similiar to one in a zoo, except it is an upland prairie.

Duane Kerr, former president and current member of the Flint Hills Audubon Society, believes the park has potential.

"The Audubon Society is trying to raise a little bit of money to help with the signs for the interpretative trail," said Kerr, also a microbiologist in the department of pathology. "The signs will describe biological and geographical features such as telling how the landforms were made, types of plants and their features or the birds and animals that live in the prairie."

Kerr said his group will help with putting up the signs and any maintenance that needs to be done later.

"To raise money for these signs we planned on having a garage sale last Saturday, but it was postponed due to the rain," he said.

The sale will be Saturday from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. at Unit 207 of Sunflower Storage, located on McCall Road at Hayes Drive. Items will be donated by Audubon Society members and will range from kitchenware to refrigerators, Kerr said.

"This park is definitely a community asset," Taussig said. "This will be a great place for people to walk, have picnics and will be handicapped accessible in parts."

Bush overhauls air legislation

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Bush worked on the final details Sunday of a package of proposals aimed at cleaning up the nation's air by imposing sharp cuts in acid rain pollutants and reducing the smog that plagues most cities.

The proposals, to be unveiled at the White House today, represent the first time in nearly a decade that the White House has joined in an effort to overhaul federal air quality laws.

President Reagan refused to send clean air legislation to Congress during his eight years in office.

Bush told a conservation group last week his proposals would represent "sweeping changes" in federal air pollution laws and "significantly improve every North American's quality of life" whether they live near industrial plants or in the woodland countryside.

Environmentalists say Bush's clean air package is his severest test so far on whether he plans to make good on campaign promises to take environmental issues seriously.

While details of the president's proposals are not yet clear, government and congressional sources said the plan is expected to include:

■ Requirements for cutting sulfur dioxide emissions, mostly from older coal-burning electric power plants, by 10 million tons by the year 2000 to combat acid rain, which has been blamed for destroying lakes, streams and forests.

■ A requirement for industry to install control technology to curb the release of cancer-causing and other toxic chemicals from such facilities as chemical plants and oil refineries. It also is likely to streamline the way the Environmental Protection Agency regulates such chemicals, allowing them to set standards by broad category rather than chemical by chemical.

■ Reductions in smog-causing pollutants from automobiles through a combination of pollution controls and a limited shift to alternative, cleaner fuels instead of gasoline.

The urban smog problem, largely caused by automobile pollutants, has been among the thorniest issues facing the administration. Some members of the administration have favored requiring specific curbs to reduce ozone-causing pollutants, while others have favored broader flexibility that would allow the oil and automobile industries to work out how best to meet government-imposed targets.

Even though the president's proposals were expected to fall short of what some environmentalists sought, they welcomed his administration's willingness to get involved.

Chang ends French jinx

By The Associated Press

PARIS — For 34 years, the red clay of Roland Garros has been quicksand for American tennis hopes.

The jinx ended Sunday as 17-year-old Michael Chang beat Stefan Edberg to win the French Open, fighting off 10 break points in the fourth set for a come-from-behind 6-1, 2-6, 4-6, 6-4, 6-2 victory.

He is the first American to win the French Open men's title since Tony Trabert in 1955. He is also the youngest male player ever to win a Grand Slam singles title.

Chang's victory capped a historic weekend at Roland Garros. On Saturday, 17-year-old Arantxa Sanchez beat top-seeded Steffi Graf to become the youngest French Open women's champion and the first Spanish woman to win a Grand Slam event.

Chang said his accomplishment hadn't sunk in yet.

"It's hard to think about it, it just doesn't click in my head," said the 15th-seeded Chang, of Placentia, Calif. "It's definitely a great honor and achievement. At the moment, it's definitely the highest achievement I could ever have in tennis."

The victory came as a relief to Trabert, who won't have to answer any more questions about why Americans can't win in Paris.

"I haven't had anything to do with it, but every year I get calls from friends around the French Open asking me if anyone will do it," Trabert said. "I didn't think Michael would win it at the beginning of the tournament. It's amazing how he went out there and handled the pressure the way he did."

When Edberg hit a forehand into the net to end the 3-hour, 41-minute match, Chang threw up his arms, smiled broadly and turned to his family and coach sitting in the stands.

"These two weeks, regardless of what happened today, are going to stay with me throughout my whole life," Chang told the crowd after accepting the winner's trophy.

But Chang said he doesn't want to rest on his laurels yet.

"Maybe some day I'll be able to achieve something greater," he said. "I don't want to dwell on this victory. I don't want to limit myself. I want to be able to keep on going and do even better."

"He's played a lot of tough matches and he kept coming back all the time," said Edberg, who was playing in his first French Open final. "You have to admire him for that. He's young. Maybe he doesn't think about it that much."

Chang showed his tenacity and coolness under pressure in the fourth set when he was down a break and struggling to hold his serve. He faced 10 break points in three games but never buckled. He repeatedly scored with passing shots, drop shots, volleys and incredible gets.

"I thought the match was gone," Chang said. "A few points probably inspired me to try even harder and to believe there was a chance I could come back."

Pistons beat Lakers, take 3-0 series lead

By The Associated Press

INGLEWOOD, Calif. — The Detroit Pistons, with guards Joe Dumars, Isiah Thomas and Vinnie Johnson again virtually unstoppable, took a 3-0 lead in the NBA Finals Sunday with a 114-110 victory over the injury-ravaged Los Angeles Lakers.

The two-time defending champions led for much of the game, but they couldn't overcome the hamstring injuries that sidelined starting guards Magic Johnson and Byron Scott.

Johnson had one assist and no points in five minutes while Scott didn't play, but their teammates showed the heart that has taken them to the Finals eight times in this decade, winning five titles.

Dumars, Thomas and Vinnie Johnson, who combined for an average of 23 points apiece in the first two games, were magnificent again for the Pistons. Dumars scored 31 points, 21 in the third quarter, Thomas had 26 and Johnson scored 13 of his 17 in the fourth quarter, including a three-point play with 6:11 left that broke a 98-98 tie and put Detroit ahead to stay.

James Worthy had 26 points and 42-year-old Kareem Abdul-Jabbar 24 points for the Lakers.

Collins, Haller get chance to continue chasing dreams

By David Svoboda
Sports Editor

None of the glamour of the National Football League's yearly draft of probable future stars surrounds major league baseball's annual selection of collegiate and high school talent.

But to the men who get drafted — even if it is in round No. 60 — it's a chance, if ever so slight, at fulfilling a dream.

Two former K-State baseball players were given that chance this past week, and the process of possibly turning dreams into reality is about to start for both of them.

Sean Collins and Jim Haller, both two-year members of the Wildcat program after transferring from junior colleges, were the former K-Staters selected in last week's baseball draft.

Collins, a center fielder for Coach Mike Clark's team last season after playing second base in his first season at K-State, was drafted by the Kansas City Royals in the 13th round. He is projected by the Royals to return to second base upon his arrival at Eugene, Ore., the home of one of Kansas City's Class A teams.

"I talked to the assistant general manager (Dean Taylor) on Friday, and he said with Sean, it's a situation where the organization is weak at second base," Clark said. "It's just a situation where he has experience playing the middle infield, and he fills a need.

"Though he's probably a better outfielder than a second baseman right now, there's a feeling he can do it. And the fact he's not a home-run hitter and is more of a singles-type hitter is more indicative of a second baseman than an outfielder."

Collins was honorable mention All-Big Eight at second base following his junior season, and was a first-team All-Big Eight and All-Midwest Region selection as a center fielder following the season just concluded.

Collins was second on the K-State squad in hitting in 1989 with a .361 average, and he led the team with seven home runs. Collins stole 33 bases on the year, and is the K-State career leader in stolen bases with 54.

The Royals have drafted three former K-Staters in the past two years in addition to Collins: catcher Jeff Hulse and pitcher Zach Kimbell. Kimbell has since been released, but Hulse remains in the organization with another of Kansas City's Class A teams, this one in Appleton, Wis.

For Haller, who was born in Topeka and now resides in Shawnee, his phone call came from an unlikely source — the New York Yankees.

The Yankees, who are as hated by many in these parts as strongly as the Soviet Union is by the most devout flag-waving American, selected Haller in the 24th round.

And despite having the Royals in his own backyard for most of his life, Haller said he never really hated his new employers, and now he most assuredly doesn't.

"I had no idea that they were even looking at me, really," Haller said. "They called me up last weekend and told me they had seen me throw and they were thinking of drafting me, but that was it until the call finally came. At that point, you don't really care who's on the other end of the line."

Once the call came from Yankee scout and former big league pitcher Dick Tidrow, Haller began preparing to get his career underway.

Tidrow visited Manhattan late last week to watch Haller throw, and Haller returned home to Shawnee this weekend to prepare for the flight this morning to Sarasota, Fla., to begin the process of climbing the

Royals complete sweep

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Bob Boone usually gets Sundays off. But he got the benefit of Manager John Wathan's intuition and made the most of it.

Boone, who left California last season as a free agent, hit a three-run homer Sunday that lifted the Kansas City Royals over the Angels 5-3 for a three-game sweep.

"I think it's fun to play against your old teammates," he said. "To me, it's kind of a playoff atmosphere. You want to beat them just like any other team, but especially them, considering where they were in the standings.

"And I never want to get cheated with a fastball."

Wathan credited a hunch for playing Boone, but said there were two other reasons — his hot bat and his familiarity with the Angels. Boone is hitting .284 overall and is 7-for-18 (.389) against California in six games this year.

"He's really played well against us. He's responded very well," Angels manager Doug Rader said.

Boone's home run — his first since August 1988 — capped a four-run rally in the sixth and made a winner of Terry Leach in his American League debut.

"I got my feet wet, in more ways than one," Leach said jokingly, referring to the steady soaking drizzle that started in the sixth inning. "It was OK out there. It was a little shaky at first. I never really did get in the groove. I just didn't want to choke up out there."

Bo Jackson led off Kansas City's big inning with a triple against Jim Abbott, who dropped to 5-4 with his first loss on the road. Jackson scored on Pat Tabler's groundout, then Danny Tartabull and Jim Eisenreich singled to chase Abbott.

Boone, who signed with Kansas City for $1 more than the Angels offered their seven-year catcher, hit a 3-1 pitch from Rich Monteleone into the left-field seats.

Wichita State wins national title

By The Associated Press

OMAHA, Neb. — Wichita State put some ghosts to rest with a miracle NCAA College World Series baseball championship that left Coach Gene Stephenson numb, Most Valuable Player Greg Brummett limp and first baseman Bryant Winslow in pain.

The Shockers overcame every hurdle this season after losing twice in the semifinals a year ago to Arizona State when one strike could have put Wichita State into the 1988 championship game. Saturday, they erased those nightmares of a year ago with a 5-3 win over Texas on Brummett's six-hitter.

"We were determined to win the tournament," Brummett said. "I was tired. I just had to suck it up. I was pitching on guts out there. I've pitched on three days' rest before this season but the results haven't been this good."

Brummett and relief ace Jim Newlin each gained a share of a CWS record with three wins and three saves, respectively, in the tournament.

"I'm numb. It's a marvelous feeling just to be part of it," Stephenson said. "To be a part of these guys and see what they've done in the last six weeks, to overcome the things they've had to overcome. You didn't see the best team we had this year but you saw a team with a big heart, a very strong-willed team that wouldn't quit no matter what."

Stephenson said the Shockers were determined to return to the College World Series this season after the disappointment of a year ago. But shortstop Mike Lansing was injured and lost for the season. Right fielder Jeff Bonacquista was injured and lost for the season.

First baseman Winslow suffered a stress fracture in his right leg in regionals, but refused to sit on the bench until a collision with Texas' Lance Jones on a bunt single finally demanded the rest in the fifth inning of the championship game.

As Winslow hobbled off the field one pitch after having refused to come out just after the accident, he received an ovation from the 13,701 fans in attendance. There were few dry eyes for those who knew the story of his efforts to play.

"He wouldn't come out," Stephenson said. "I told him to just stand on the base, don't move, but after one pitch he put some weight on it and realized he couldn't do anything."

"Personally it was hard for us to control our emotions," Brummett and catcher Eric Wedge said when coaches and teammates helped Winslow from the field. "He was a tremendous inspiration to the whole club."

"I know I had a lump in my throat," Brummett said.

"He had tears in his eyes," Wedge said. "What he said was, 'You guys have got to win this thing. Don't you dare lose this game.'"

Wichita State was ahead 3-2 at the time. Then Winslow's sub, Joey Wilson, singled with one out in the bottom half of the inning. He scored on Pat Meares' second homer of the tournament for a 5-2 difference and the eventual winning runs.

Easy Goer prevents Triple Crown victory

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Easy Goer and Sunday Silence part ways now — not ending one of horse racing's hottest rivalries, just letting it cool off a bit.

And, in the cool of autumn, they will almost surely meet again.

"I would think we'd hook up again in the Breeders' Cup," Easy Goer's trainer, Shug McGaughey, said. "I would just as soon it was in the Breeders' Cup as in the Travers.

"You separate these two, and they can have a lot of fun for a while fooling around with the other horses."

Easy Goer kept the rivalry from getting too one-sided on Saturday when he charged past Sunday Silence at the quarter pole and won the Belmont Stakes by eight lengths, stopping the latter's bid to become the 12th Triple Crown winner.

Sunday Silence's 76-year-old trainer, Charlie Whittingham, brushed aside the disappointment of becoming the 12th trainer to bring a horse to the Belmont with a Triple Crown chance and fail.

"Just get in line," he said. "It's not easy to win a Triple Crown. He won one, and I won two. We'll meet again."

Now, Easy Goer will probably run in the Haskell Invitational on July 29 at Monmouth Park before going to the $1 million Travers at Saratoga Aug. 19.

Whittingham said Sunday that he wasn't sure where he would race Sunday Silence next. He said he would ship his horse back to California Monday, probably give him a month or more off, then decide.

"There are million-dollar races all over the place," Whittingham said, noting the Travers is just one of them

Leonard, Hearns ready for second meeting to be tough contest

By The Associated Press

LAS VEGAS — Thomas Hearns is guaranteed the biggest pot of gold of his rich career, but it is glory he is seeking.

Sugar Ray Leonard will put another astronomical paycheck in the bank and his golden boxing image on the line.

The "Hit Man" and Sugar Ray will be together again for the first time since they fought as young men in a young man's game.

The scheduled 12-round rematch Monday night outdoors at Caesars Palace comes almost seven years and nine months after Leonard stopped Hearns in the 14th round for the undisputed welterweight championship.

The weigh-in will be held Monday morning.

Hearns is guaranteed $11 million and Leonard $13 million. Both also have percentage deals. The last time Leonard made $11.9 million to $5.1 million for Hearns.

The bout, which will start about 9:45 p.m. CDT and will be shown on pay-per-view television, will be the last hurrah for one of the fighters, possibly both.

"If I lost the fight, it would be tough for me to go home because of all the things they've done for me," Hearns, the 30-year-old "Hit Man" from Detroit, said.

Asked what he would do if he lost, Leonard, 33, said, "I can't answer that question."

Renovations underway at zoo

Plans include exhibits, repairs, admission fees

By Craig Hamrick
Staff Writer

A Bengal tiger lies stretched out in a grassy field by a tree, lazily pawing at a fly on his nose. Nearby, a waterfall softly spills into a small pond.

A man with a small child standing next to him aims a video camera at the big striped cat. The child watches quietly for a few moments, then calls out a greeting to the animal.

The camera operator doesn't make a move to quiet the child, and the tiger responds with a distracted yawn. The tiger has seen it all before, because he's not living in the wild jungles of Africa. His home is in the Manhattan Sunset Zoo.

The tiger's habitat, surrounded by a chain link fence, seems to be quite like his native land. But the trees have metal plates wired to them to prevent him from climbing to freedom and the pond is fed by a plastic pipe.

The tiger's neighbors include sloth bears, chimpanzees, eagles, a bobcat and a camel named Charlie. Recent additions to the zoo are meercats and Clydesdale horses, which arrived earlier this month.

Near the Bengal's small slice of jungle, construction workers in hardhats are moving earth with a tractor.

Steven Matthews, who has been director of the 21-acre zoo for four years, said extensive renovations are underway. A long-range plan for the zoo includes new exhibits and expanded advertising designed to attract even more than the 90,000 people Matthews estimates visit the zoo each year.

The project, which will cost between $3 million and $6 million, includes turning the existing parking lot into a prairie for bison and pronghorned antelope. A new parking lot will be built outside the perimeter of the zoo, as will a new entrance with an admission gate. Admission is not currently charged, but Matthews said it is one way to raise funds for the renovation project.

"With the limited funding we've received so far, all we've really been able to do is maintain the zoo," he said. "Some of the exhibits haven't been renovated in the 60 years the zoo has been here."

Matthews said part of his job includes obtaining money through fund-raising activities and applying for government grants.

Operating expenses for the zoo come from local taxpayers, but a recent poll conducted by the zoo staff showed that most of the zoo visitors were not from Manhattan.

"Those (out-of-town) visitors were getting a free ride," Matthews said. "But that will change when we start charging admission."

The admission charge, $1.75 for adults and 75 cents for children, will be effective in July.

Carla Schmidt, from Long Beach Peninsula, Wash., said she was surprised there was no admission charge when she visited the zoo.

"We would have gladly paid," Schmidt said, keeping an eye on the small group of children she was accompanying. "The zoo is very nice and clean, and I think it will be well worth paying for. They need to charge. They need to have some way of paying for it."

Nancy Randall, Manhattan, brought two of her children to the zoo Wednesday. She said she will continue to bring her children to the zoo after the new admission charge takes effect, although probably not as often.

Randall turned to her daughter, Betsy, a 5-year-old with short, black hair, dressed in bright green shorts and a t-shirt.

"What's your favorite animal?" Nancy asked.

Betsy scrunched up her freckle-covered face and glanced at the nearest cage, where a bobcat slept on a boulder.

"Ummm ... the bobcat!" she yelled and started to giggle.

Betsy's 2-year-old sister, Molly, turned from her stroller and quietly agreed.

"The bobcat," Molly said, nodding solemnly.

"The zoo is a great place to bring kids," Nancy said.

Stunted wheat crop hurts custom crews

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — This year will be tough for Bob Gattis and other custom wheat harvesters.

Recurrent thunderstorms and sodden fields have mired the harvest south of Kansas, costing the crews precious time and money.

And the harvesters' financial plight is bound to worsen as they migrate north into the drought-stunted wheat fields of Kansas.

"This may be a year when you see a lot of cutters dropping out," said Gattis, of Pottsboro, Texas, president of the U.S. Custom Harvesters Association.

Custom harvesting is a sophisticated business on wheels. Typically, skilled crews of at least eight people operate several combines and trucks. They travel from southern Texas north to Canada, moving with the harvest and cutting wheat for a fee.

Kansas, the nation's premier wheat state, is the linchpin of the custom-harvesting business.

"You gotta do Kansas if you are going to make it work," said Melvin Eyster, a custom harvester from Thomas, Okla.

But the 1989 Kansas harvest is projected at only 200 million bushels, the smallest crop in 25 years.

Education bill innovative

By The Associated Press

BOSTON — An unprecedented experiment in public education is about to begin with Gov. Michael S. Dukakis expected to sign a bill Monday that will let Boston University take over the troubled school system in the city of Chelsea.

The plan, approved by the Legislature after months of sometimes bitter discussion, will link a public school system with one of the highest dropout rates in the state — 17 percent — to a world-class university with all its financial and educational resources.

Boston University will get the prestige of conducting an educational experiment never before tried in the United States, one that will be watched closely and possibly duplicated by universities around the country.

"Some of the things I think we'd like to encourage in this state are innovation and experimentation," Dukakis said at a news conference. "And there's no question this is innovative and experimental."

"We have a bill which I think has real promise for the future of the schoolchildren in Chelsea," Dukakis said. "It's an experiment, and like most experiments, it is one that has to be tried before we know whether it will succeed."

Under the plan, BU will run the 3,600-student system for 10 years and pump in money from private donors and foundations for a variety of new programs, including early childhood education, counseling and nutritional services.

Chelsea schools have been woefully underfunded, according to officials in the largely Hispanic, working-class city of 25,000 outside Boston. Chelsea has seen its tax base shrink and faces cuts of about $2.8 million in next year's school budget because of a state budget crunch.

BU's refusal to agree to any language guaranteeing open meetings while orally promising to abide by state open-meeting laws had held up the bill and had put Dukakis in a difficult position once the measure reached his desk.

Local teachers unions and the American Federation of Teachers, which endorsed Dukakis in his bid for president last year, had complained that the pact would allow BU to make decisions behind closed doors. But a veto would have set up Dukakis for an embarrassment, since the Legislature had passed the bill with enough votes to override.

On Friday, however, the governor said he would sign the bill — and also direct the state Board of Education to set up a monitoring panel to make sure BU abides.

Beijing propaganda campaign prompts diplomat defections

By The Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — Hundreds of protesters and even some police officers wept as two Chinese diplomats made a surprise and emotional public appeal for political asylum, and rally organizers Sunday predicted more defections.

"Many of my friends have lost their lives and we wanted to do something to show we support what they stood for," said one of the diplomats during a rally Saturday night against China's repression of the pro-democracy movement.

"Compared to them, I am not brave at all," added the man, who was not immediately identified. "They are brave for standing up for democracy in the face of death or imprisonment."

The two men, identified as a vice consul for cultural affairs and an overseas affairs officer, told the crowd of 5,000 they decided to defect after Beijing leaders launched a propaganda campaign claiming no citizens died in the clash.

Chinese troops opened fire on tens of thousands of students and Beijing residents June 4 to put an end to the seven-week pro-democracy movement and the sit-in at the city's Tiananmen Square. U.S. intelligence estimates put the number of people slain in the hundreds and possibly the thousands.

"We are supposed to tell you that no one was injured or killed. Why? Because we are diplomats. But we won't fake it here. Before we are diplomats, we are Chinese and we are human beings," one of the men told the crowd.

"We are public servants, we are not slaves," he added.

The whereabouts of the diplomats Sunday were not immediately known.

The FBI would not release their names but confirmed the two requested political asylum. A bureau spokeswoman Sunday said only that their case would be handled by the Immigration and Naturalization Service.

minor league ladder.

Tidrow's visit, Haller said, was beneficial. Haller's 1989 statistics — a 6-6 record with a 6.63 earned run average — weren't much to write home about.

"He worked with me on a few mechanical things — getting a higher leg kick, slowing down my motion, those kind of fundamentals," Haller said. "He also worked with me on a different kind of changeup than the one I'd been throwing.

"The kind of things we worked on will hopefully help me when I get to Sarasota."

When Haller does arrive in Sarasota, his work will differ from that of Collins. Whereas Collins is projected by the Royals as their starting second baseman at the Class A Eugene club, Haller's work for Sarasota is in a rookie league, one step below Class A ball.

"I just want to go down there, be successful, and try to make the climb to 'A' ball," Haller said. "I'm really excited to get down there and get going."

Haller said the drafting of the four K-State players over the past two years says something about the Wildcat program.

"I think we're finally getting a little recognition here," he said of K-State. "Coach Clark has really worked hard in that respect, and it's paying off for us."

could believe the gossip," she said. "People are going to find out what is going on because there were so many witnesses."

Wright decided to leave the city soon after the violence began, but like many Americans, found it difficult to find a flight out of the country.

"There was no help at all from the (U.S.) Embassy, other than statements strongly suggesting that we stay inside," Wright said. "I later got a call (Sunday night) from the embassy, and the man said they would try to get me out in the morning.

"I pinned every hope I had on that phone call."

At 11 a.m. the next day, the embassy called Wright back, and suggested she walk to the nearest hotel because the streets seemed safe enough.

"That's the only choice I had left, so I put a knapsack on my back and started walking," she said. The nearest hotel was an hour's walk away.

Fortunately, Wright said she saw no military presence during the walk.

"For that, I thank God, not the U.S. Embassy," she said.

More complications arose while trying to get to the airport, and she had to pay a taxi driver 10 times the normal rate to go to the airport. After she had booked a flight to Hong Kong for herself and some American friends, the flight was cancelled. Finally, Wright was placed on a flight to Tokyo. From there, she flew to San Francisco.

Wright said she plans to return China in the future, after it is safe again.

"I don't know how long this will go on, but in the immediate future of China there will be more repression," she said. "This time I think the long-term effects will be more freedom."

of Uzbekistan reportedly prompted some last-minute schedule changes to allow Gorbachev to stay in close contact with the Kremlin throughout his visit.

The Congress of People's Deputies finally ended its stormy inaugural session Friday. The lawmakers' struggle to redefine the nation's course for democracy and their sharp criticism of the Communist Party amazed the Soviet people, who watched on television, and preoccupied the Kremlin leadership.

Soviets are in mourning over the hundreds of deaths resulting from a train disaster in the Ural Mountains June 3, and the advance delegation indicated Gorbachev would not be attending a gala concert in Bonn on Wednesday so as to maintain an appropriately somber atmosphere. But the hosts' eagerness to give the summit the highest profile appears to have won out.

Rape workshop stresses safety, prevention tips

By Martha Kropf
Staff Writer

Concerns about rape prompted 70 people to gather last night in the city auditorium for a workshop on home safety and security for women sponsored by the Riley County Police Department.

Four people spoke, including Sgt. Stanley Conkwright of the RCPD. He spoke about home security and travel safety.

Conkwright addressed the myths associated with rape, rape prevention and other safety tips. He also discussed the current situation in Manhattan.

Two incidences of sexual battery occurred in the first part of May, but no more have been reported, Conkwright said.

"We have had a lot of rumors," he said. "Others may not have been turned in."

Conkwright said that during the time of an emergency, people are very concerned about their safety. However, he is concerned that once the current crisis is over, people will lapse back into their old lifestyles.

Conkwright told the audience that they should take several precautions when walking. For example, people should be able to see and hear what is going on around them. At night, it is a good idea to carry a flashlight, and not wear a Walkman.

"The most important thing is to keep your head about you," he said. He also said that people should remember that if they use a weapon, it could be taken away from them and turned against them.

"Your best weapon for protection is never to get yourself in a position where you need a weapon," he said.

However, a person who decides to fight against an attacker should fight to win, he said. "Don't play games with him."

Conkwright also showed the audience several ways to secure doors and windows and said that the RCPD does home safety checkups for anyone who wants one.

Sue Jones, a registered nurse and night supervisor at Memorial Hospital, spoke about what a woman should do if she is raped.

"Come (to the hospital) as you are, as soon as possible," she said.

She also told the audience about the physical exam that a rape victim undergoes. She said that an exam can take from 1.5 to three hours.

The victim should not worry about the cost of the exam.

Kris Johnson, victim assistance coordinator for the Riley County Community Corrections Office, said that there are about 50 services available for the victims of crime.

"Victim assistance begins with the onset of victimization and continues as long as it is needed," she said.

She also said that for a victim to get help, it is not necessary for the criminal to be convicted.

Kim Blubaugh, director of the Crisis Center, explained to the audience what a victim of rape experiences after the rape.

"Any reaction to a rape is a normal reaction," she said.

Blubaugh said a victim could be hysterical or could be ecstatic to be alive.

The Crisis Center has a 24-hour hotline with staff and trained volunteers answering the calls. They have also just started a rape survivors support group that meets weekly.

"Overall, we're (Manhattan) not that bad. But we need your help so that we can stay that way," concluded Conkwright.

Before the "Take Back The Night" march around City Park the marchers gather in a circle to hear and express words on the problem of rape. The march, sponsored by Manhattan Men Against Rape, occurred after a safety workshop for women at City Auditorium.

Marchers protest against rape

By Martha Kropf
Staff Writer

Brandishing posters with statements like "Rape is a Violent Crime" and "Rape Happens in Your Hometown," a group of about 40 people participated in an anti-rape, candlelight march around City Park sponsored by the Manhattan Men Against Rape.

The group convened for the march after the Home Safety and Security for Women workshop held at the city auditorium last night.

The evening's activities were a reaction to the sexual assaults that have been reported in Manhattan, said Jack Straton, a member of Manhattan Men Against Rape. The assaults illustrate men's violence toward women, he said.

"The root of the problem is not lights or locks. It's that men need to change their behavior," Straton said.

A theme for the evening was women being able to empower themselves or control their lives. "Take Back the Night" implies a woman's ability to control her environment, Straton said.

This march was "to voice that women want freedom to be out at night," said Margaret Lloyd, a member of Manhattan Men Against Rape.

The group marched around the Changes made to improve ID cards

By Ellen Dayton
Collegian Reporter

Changes in K-State's identification card system are designed to make IDs issued to students, faculty and staff one of the most useful things they carry on campus.

Starting this fall, ID cards will function as account cards in the K-State Union, replace residence hall meal tickets and allow students to access the residence halls after the doors have been locked for the night.

By next spring, the system, called Vali-Dine, will be expanded to include other areas of campus such as Lafene Student Health Center and Recreational Services. The goal is to have a campus-wide system by spring, said Don Foster, University registrar.

"We're going to get as much of it going as we can by spring term," said Foster, who is coordinating the switch to the new system.

The system will use the magnetic strip on the back of the K-State ID card. The strip can be encoded with the student's ID number, a school code and a lost card code, Foster said. When the strip is run through a card reader, the information is transmitted to a central computer.

"In the computer, the ID number has all the information about that individual," said Michael L. Hatch, computer and electronics coordinator for the Union.

"The school code is to protect K-State and other institutions," Foster said. "For instance, a K-State student could go to another school that has a Vali-Dine card system and try to use his card. If there wasn't a school code, he could use those facilities. With the code, our system will be identified to K-State."

The lost card code protects students who have to replace their original card. The original ID card would be encoded with the number zero, the first replacement card would be encoded with the number one and the second replacement card would be encoded with the number two.

"The system will recognize only the most recent card as valid," Foster said.

The registrar's office planned to begin the process of encoding student ID cards this summer, Foster said. Incoming freshmen and transfer students were supposed to receive encoded IDs when they enrolled in June and July but problems in encoding the magnetic strips on some of the cards delayed the distribution of the new cards.

"Instead, we're taking their picture and keeping it and giving them a Wildcat Card, which will become their temporary ID card," Foster said.

The new cards will be prepared and distributed to these students at fee payment in August.

In the Union, students, faculty and staff will be able to establish declining balance accounts, currently known as Wildcat Card accounts. Money in these accounts can be used to purchase goods and services available in the Union.

Conversion of motel into residence hall might be solution

By The Collegian Staff

A decision may not be reached until next week concerning the possibility of converting the University Inn into a residence hall, University officials said.

"Long-term housing is a need that we need to find a solution to," said Bob Krause, vice president for institutional advancement. "Our first priority is to ensure every student wanting to attend K-State will have the best possible accommodations available."

K-State has residence hall space for about 4,000 students. The University Inn has 116 rooms.

"Our contracts for this fall are already 400 ahead, when compared to the number of contracts that we had at this time last year," said Thomas Frith, director of housing.

If the increase in contracts continues, there will be more people than K-State can accommodate, he said.

Last fall, rising enrollment numbers caused an overflow of students who requested residence hall housing, and some students were placed in non-living areas of the halls until space was made available.

Krause said the impact of converting the motel into a residence hall needs to be thoroughly examined, especially considering the effect it could have on other programs at K-State. The Department of Hotel, Restaurant, Institutional Management and Dietetics has a training program with the motel.

"Nothing was finalized, but we found that if we were wanting to purchase, everyone involved would be willing to work with us," Krause said.

To combat the space problem, officials have already been considering other options.

"We're looking into temporary rental units and meeting with local householders to see about expanding on housing units," Krause said.

He stressed that the proposal to buy the motel would not be an easy decision.

"We're not sure we can structure a lease with an option to buy, which is what it would take to take over the motel," Krause said. "We should know by the beginning of next week whether or not negotiations will materialize."

Gephardt, Grey to finish up terms

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — House Democrats on Wednesday elected Richard Gephardt of Missouri as majority leader, embracing a "no problems" former presidential candidate in an effort to push beyond the ethics furor that felled two top party leaders.

The Democrats then chose Rep. William H. Gray III, D-Pa., to be majority whip, making him the No. 3 Democrat in the House, behind Speaker Thomas S. Foley and Gephardt, and the highest-ranking black in Congress.

Gephardt defeated Georgia conservative Ed Jenkins, 181-76, and Gray won with 134 votes to 97 votes for David Bonior of Michigan and 30 for Beryl Anthony of Arkansas.

The two victors, both considered liberals, fill out the new leadership team Democrats have had to install in midterm because of the resignations of Speaker Jim Wright of Texas, and Whip Tony Coelho of California, both following ethics allegations. Foley, of Washington, was elected speaker last week.

Gephardt accepted the No. 2 post with a call to Democrats to push aside what he said were Republican attempts to slander the party. A top GOP official was forced to resign last week after sending out a statement comparing Foley's voting record to that of a homosexual congressman — an episode Democrats contend was an example of typical Republican tactics.

"Some on the other side are committed to the dark side of politics, smear, innuendo, rumors, cynical media management, the politics of character assassination," Gephardt said. "But let us say ... that we will win at the ballot box not by the force of our slurs but the force of our ideas."

In the secret ballot, Gray won the whip's post over two rivals despite news reports that personnel practices in his office were under investigation by the Justice Department.

After Wednesday's vote, Gray said he was helped by a statement from the department that he was not the subject of the federal probe, and he was grateful for the vote of confidence from his colleagues.

Bonior will continue in his role as chief deputy whip and Anthony as chairman of the Democratic Con-

Gas leak affects vacationers

MOSCOW — A chlorine gas container exploded at a water supply station near the Siberian city of Khabarovsk, releasing a cloud of toxic gas that forced scores of people to seek treatment, Tass said Wednesday. At least 27 were hospitalized.

Civil defense teams, firefighters and army specialists managed to halt the gas leak, which occurred Tuesday, the official news agency said.

A large number of vacationers, mostly children, were near the site on the Amur River at the time, and 70 were brought to the hospital, Tass said. Of those, 27 were admitted and four were in serious condition, it added.

The complex provides water to Khabarovsk, a city of about 500,000 people located 3,600 miles east of Moscow, Tass said.

Authorities set up a commission to investigate the accident, Tass said.

Reagan knighted by queen

LONDON — Queen Elizabeth II made Ronald Reagan a knight Wednesday, but without the kneeling and dubbing because the knighthood is an honorary one given foreigners, who cannot be called "Sir."

The Buckingham Palace announcement ended days of speculation about whether the former president, whose easy manner and conservative ardor made him a firm friend of Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, would receive the highest honor for non-Britons. Honors to foreigners are recommended by the government.

Reagan told reporters outside the palace: "I feel greatly honored."

He emerged from lunch with the queen with a box containing the insignia of an honorary Knight Grand Cross of the Most Honorable Order of the Bath, one of the highest orders of chivalry.

"Sir" is a title reserved for Britons, but at dinner parties Reagan can sit closer to the queen than unknighted former presidents. He also can use the initials "G.C.B." after his name.

Unlike Britons receiving knighthoods, Reagan did not have to kneel and be tapped on the shoulder by the royal sword. Instead, the queen handed him the order's insignia: a star, badge and broad ribbon of crimson silk.

Gorbachev's book successful

FRANKFURT, West Germany — With 10 million copies sold worldwide, Mikhail S. Gorbachev's book "Perestroika" is a runaway hit — and a source of revenue for the communist nation.

The West German publishers of the Soviet president's book said Wednesday they alone have sold 700,000 copies, grossing $1.5 million thus far.

"Gorbachev gets about 10 percent of that," said Peter Schaper, business manager of Droemer-Knauer Publishers, which published the book in West Germany.

Gorbachev has said that part of the proceeds from the book is to be given to the Communist Party in the Soviet Union, with the rest used for social projects, such as aid to the victims of the earthquake in Armenia.

Chicks hatch in warm office

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. — It wasn't that Dave Brosman was counting his chickens before they hatched — he wasn't counting on any chickens hatching at all.

Brosman, assistant director of Albuquerque's Public Works Department, bought two dozen eggs from a co-worker last Thursday, then forgot them and left them on his desk in his warm office over a four-day weekend.

Brosman's secretary, Marian Peterson, discovered that two of the eggs had hatched.

"I came in Monday and heard this chirping, and guess what? There they were," she said.

"I'm not into chickens," Brosman said after he returned to work Tuesday. "I just bought these eggs because they're usually pretty fresh."

Another city worker adopted the hatchlings.

DNA fingerprints unreliable

NEW YORK — Courtroom evidence based on genetic analysis called DNA fingerprinting is unreliable in some cases because no standards have been established for the technique, a genetics researcher says.

Scientists should develop standards to resolve issues about proper laboratory procedure and interpretation of results, said Eric Lander.

DNA fingerprinting is used in determining whether biological samples such as blood or semen recovered from a crime came from a particular suspect. It is also used in paternity cases.

Drug abuse center proposed

TOPEKA — Gov. Mike Hayden announced Wednesday the creation of the Governor's Center for Teen Leadership as part of a state effort to combat drug and alcohol abuse.

The center, which will be operated out of the Kansas Safety Action Project in Lawrence, will provide drug abuse prevention training for teen-agers at leadership workshops across the state.

The center will be funded through a $228,000 grant from the Kansas Department of Transportation's office of traffic safety.

Explosives prompt charges

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The federal government has charged a company, its president and a project foreman with improperly storing explosives at a site where six Kansas City firefighters died in an explosion.

The four-count complaint was filed Wednesday against Mountain Plains Construction Inc.; company president Norman W. Collins; and James M. McReynolds, a project foreman.

The complaint charges the defendants with knowingly storing the explosives in a manner that did not conform to federal regulations. It also alleges that the defendants did not notify the U.S. Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms about the type of explosives stored on the site.

Professors receive awards

Two K-State associate professors of agricultural engineering received national teaching awards at the annual National Association of Colleges and Teachers of Agriculture Conference in Knoxville, Tenn.

Earl Baugher received the NACTA-John Deere Award and John Slocombe received the NACTA Teacher Fellow Award at the conference Tuesday.

Plant research to be topic

K-State will host the meeting of the north central division of the American Phytopathological Society from June 19-21. The meeting will include paper presentations and poster sessions about new research in plant disease resistance and plant breeding toward improved resistances.

Student awards and a distinguished service award will be presented at a banquet on Tuesday. The featured speaker will be Clenton Owensby, K-State agronomist. The plant scientists will also tour the Konza Prairie on Wednesday from seven to 10 a.m.

Sessions will be in Throckmorton Hall.

'Dirty Dancing' craze popularizes ballroom dancing classes at UFM

By Craig Hamrick
Staff Writer

If you would like to learn to move like Patrick Swayze and Jennifer Grey, the stars of the film "Dirty Dancing," University for Man is offering classes in ballroom dancing this summer.

Dance instructor Mike Bennett said classes, which will meet for the next seven weeks, will focus on a variety of dance forms, including waltzes, the fox trot, the jitterbug and Latin rhythms.

Bennett credits the success of "Dirty Dancing," a 1987 sleeper hit, with the resurgence of ballroom dancing's popularity. The film features ballroom dancing and a soundtrack of music from the 1950s and '60s.

"I think what 'Dirty Dancing' pointed out to younger folks is that you can have fun on the dance floor and it looks good," he said. "It looks very nice to be able to lead your partner around the dance floor."

Ballroom dancing is not difficult to learn, Bennett said.

"It doesn't take a lot of skill, just basic instruction, which we can provide," he said.

Bennett set up the dance lessons after moving to Manhattan from San Francisco, where ballroom dancing had been more widespread.

"I started the lessons because it was frustrating not to have anyplace in Manhattan where ballroom dancing was possible," Bennett said. "There were lots of places for ballroom dancing in the San Francisco area."

In the five years that Bennett has lived in Manhattan, several places where '50s and '60s music is played have opened. However, finding good dance floors is still a problem, he said.

"There are some places where they just throw down some plywood and call it a dance floor," he said.

Tammy Francka, senior in dance, is Bennett's dancing partner and fellow instructor. She said there are many reasons to dance.

"Ballroom dancing is very aerobic, and it teaches body control," she said. "It's a way to have fun and loosen up."

Bennett said participants range from K-State students to local farmers, and they do not need to bring partners.

"We've had a good cross section of people turn out for the classes," he said. "There are a lot of people who come, who want to learn, but don't have partners, so we encourage singles to show up. It's a good way to meet new people."

The UFM classes will be offered every Monday through July 31 in Fairchild Hall. Workshops concentrating on specific dances will be held in Ahearn Field House, Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays through the end of June. There is a $24 per person charge for the UFM class and a $25 per person charge for the workshops.

UFM classes are offered for no college credit and have no prerequisites.

Sixty-four-year-old Manhattan resident Betty Kleiner said she is participating in the class because she wants to learn some of the modern styles of dancing.

"It's been 40 years since I danced in high school," Kleiner said. "Dancing has changed a lot since then."

Agriculture research criticized

By Martha Kropf
Staff Writer

University officials met with members of the Kansas Citizens' Sustainable Agriculture Committee to discuss charges made by the committee that K-State is lagging behind other land grant universities in sustainable farming research.

Monday afternoon's meeting established communication between the committee and the University.

"We are communicating on this issue," said Fred Bentley, director of the Kansas Rural Center and member of the committee.

"The primary thing that was accomplished was the opportunity for further communication to occur," said Walter Woods, dean of the College of Agriculture.

"We get input from many organizations," said Woods. "This input is helpful to guide the future of educational programs (at K-State)."

The Citizens' Sustainable Agriculture Committee was formed by the Kansas Rural Center in April, 1988. The mainstream of agriculture is represented on the committee, said Bentley.

The committee has met several times to establish a consensus definition of sustainable agriculture and to evaluate the research being done at K-State.

According to a report put together by the committee, K-State is not doing all it could to make sure agricultural practices are sustainable.

The report includes a critique of K-State's definition of sustainable agriculture, evaluation of 16 research projects identified by the University as its sustainable farming research, and committee recommendations for a K-State approach to sustainable agricultural issues.

"There is a concern on the part of many farmers in the state the University is not providing enough assistance to help farmers lower costs and move toward a less resource-consuming way of farming," Bentley said.

Woods said that K-State has done much research to benefit Kansas farmers.

"There have been many benefits from agricultural research in Kansas with the development of such things as new wheat varieties, feeding and management programs for livestock, new agricultural products from basic agricultural commodities and a host of other developments," he said.

"We've tried to have a research extension program that deals with cutting research of today," he said.

According to the report, K-State's programs in sustainable agriculture do not measure up to the research programs of other land grant universities.

The report stated, "While other land grant universities are making concerted attempts to seriously evaluate their research programs in terms of sustainability it is important that KSU officials stop denying that there are fundamental problems in agriculture."

Bentley said in terms of programs, other universities have set up centers for sustainable agriculture. The University of Nebraska has comprehensive resources on sustainable agriculture, he said.

Woods said he believes K-State compares favorably with other land grant institutions, although the University has not established a center for sustainable agriculture.

The committee claims many of the 16 research projects do not make positive contributions to sustainability and fail to provide meaningful assistance to farmers seeking a transition to low-input or organic production systems.

"The vast majority of the research (done by K-State) is directed toward the sustainability of agriculture in the broadest sense, but does not necessarily fit the definition of sustainability that is being used today by this group and others," Woods said.

He said that K-State has over 600 projects at the Kansas Experiment Station, many of which have more than one objective.

"One or more of them (the objectives) may tie in with sustainability," he said.

The committee recommends K-State:

- Create a permanent University committee to develop research, instruction and extension programs on sustainability issues.
- Fund agriculture graduate assistantships in sustainable agriculture.
- Create an organic practices experiment station and develop organic plots on existing experiment stations.
- Raise special funds for cooperative on-farm projects.
- Fund research in a number of specific areas.

Woods said that K-State is doing a number of things to increase research in the area of sustainable agriculture, including increasing research on water quality and starting an internal grants program which allows professors to compete for funds in four different areas, one of which is

Faculty gains control of KU radio station

By The Associated Press

LAWRENCE — The journalism faculty at the University of Kansas now has control of campus radio station KJHK, apparently ending a two-year battle over the station's structure and programming.

Mike Kautsch, dean of the William Allen White School of Journalism and Mass Communications, surprised students at a KJHK board of directors meeting Tuesday night by announcing that the faculty will require changes at the station.

The 100-watt FM station had developed a reputation for playing music not heard on mainstream, pop music stations. It was operated almost solely by students.

"In recent years, turmoil over KJHK has jeopardized its function as an academic laboratory and its ability to comply with federal licensing requirements," said Kautsch, who also serves as chairman of the station's board.

The station is financed primarily by the Student Senate, licensed to KU and administered by the journalism school.

Kautsch said the board's constitution gives the journalism faculty the authority to alter KJHK policy in response to broadcasting curriculum demands and changes in the industry.

The new guidelines include:

- Creation of a new programming advisory board to review proposals for programs at the station.
- The student manager job will revert to an unpaid position and appointments will be limited to one term.

Mike Mader, a KU graduate student and former KJHK staff member said he was surprised by the faculty's action.

"I expected more from professors, more from educators, more from our mentors," Mader said. "So many times students waltz through class, take everything an instructor says as the word on the subject and take a grade. At KJHK, students want a say in the way they're educated," he said.

Gephardt's election brings relief, hope

When U.S. Rep. Richard "Dick" Gephardt, D-Mo., was elected Wednesday as House majority leader, Midwesterners of both major party affiliations breathed a quiet — if not typically conservative — sigh of relief.

Not since Bob Dole left his post as Senate majority leader when the Republicans lost control of the Senate in 1986 had the Midwest seen one of its own in such a position to help shape national policy.

Gephardt was elected in the aftermath of an ugly series of events that saw two of the top three officials of the Democratic party in the House forced from their posts after charges of ethics violations.

That Gephardt, noted for being a good listener and one who is quick to seek a consensus, was elected is an indication that those whose control in Washington had been questioned for the past several weeks were searching for quiet, yet effective, leadership.

They found it in a man who failed last year in his bid for the party's presidential nomination, yet impressed many with his populist message and relative ease while in the public eye. Suffice it to say that, following the fiasco of the last several weeks, Gephardt's closet was carefully checked and no skeletons emerged.

Gephardt, while rumors swirled prior to former-Speaker Jim Wright's resignation, told supporters that if the shake-ups foreseen in the party were to occur, he would put aside his presidential ambitions and put himself into the long-term track to be speaker.

If Gephardt does just that, the Midwest is likely to be well-served. Fellow Democrat Jim Slattery of Kansas' 2nd Congressional District heralded the selection of his colleague as visionary, and one that would help those living in the drought-stricken region in ways few would notice in the short term but would likely pay great dividends in the future.

One can only hope the same can be said about how Gephardt will operate when dealing with Americans with concerns outside of his own.

If he can, the House will be well on its way back to achieving respectability. If he fails, it will likely be for lack of support rather than lack of effort.

The Midwestern work ethic lives, and Dick Gephardt has a rare opportunity to prove it.

Funding of artwork should be unbiased

The National Endowment for the Arts is an agency that gives grants to artists across the nation, but has now found itself in the middle of a moral controversy.

NEA acting head Hugh Southern found out that Congress does not take kindly to what one congressman termed "morally repugnant trash."

Rep. Dick Armey circulated a petition that protested the use of taxpayers' money for art that he deemed objectionable because of sexual or moral content, and threatened to seek budget cuts to prove his point.

Armey had threatened the NEA once before with objections about the content of poetry written by grant-sponsored poets. Armey claims to have succeeded in cutting $10 million from the NEA budget because of his protests.

Under the threat of possible budget cuts, the NEA caved in and promised to attempt to weed out grant recipients who create "objectionable" art.

Since the NEA budget is $170 million, it isn't hard to see why Southern backed down.

But Southern's backing down is tantamount to giving in to a bully, or worse, a blackmailer.

So, will it come to be that any artist who offends Congress faces funding cuts? Any artist who paints anything other than government-approved material can be cut off? Has freedom of expression been thrown out the window?

Art is something that cannot be dictated or edited. Without freedom of expression, art cannot be art. Not all people agree on what is good art; some cannot even agree if some pieces are art at all.

The NEA cannot guarantee that their grants will not go to an exhibit or artist that might offend someone.

The actions of Armey and his pals only show their ignorance of art and the meaning behind it. If Armey thinks modern art is sinful, let him cast the first brushstroke, and leave the judging to the public.

Baptists convene in 'Sin City' to eat ice cream, drink Coke

Commentary

Jana Leep
Collegian Columnist

Approximately 16,000 Southern Baptists have descended upon "Sin City" — Las Vegas — for their annual convention. Baptists claim they will ignore the city's offerings. The Rev. Rex Lindsay, executive director of the Kansas-Nebraska Convention of Southern Baptists, defended Baptist motivations, claiming most Baptists have said, "Let's go and eat ice cream, drink Coke and just go on and do our business."

But it seems to me a Southern Baptist convention in Las Vegas is as incongruous as Abraham homesteading in Sodom or Gomorrah. And yet, perhaps the Baptists chose Las Vegas because of their position of influence, because of good intentions.

However, Rev. John Click of Immanuel Baptist Church in Wichita hints at the possibility that some Baptists may give in to temptation: "Where you have 18,000 Baptists assembled, there could be somebody that will (partake). I just hope and pray there's no photographer there ready to snap a picture and discredit our witness."

Their witness? Witness to what? God? I don't think so. If anything, it would be another chance for the public to witness the hypocrisy so integral to the fundamentalist belief.

And too, if all Click can pray and hope for is an absent photographer, his conscience must be bothering him; such a weak show of faith in his fellow Southern Baptists surely indicates that they may partake of more than ice cream and Cokes.

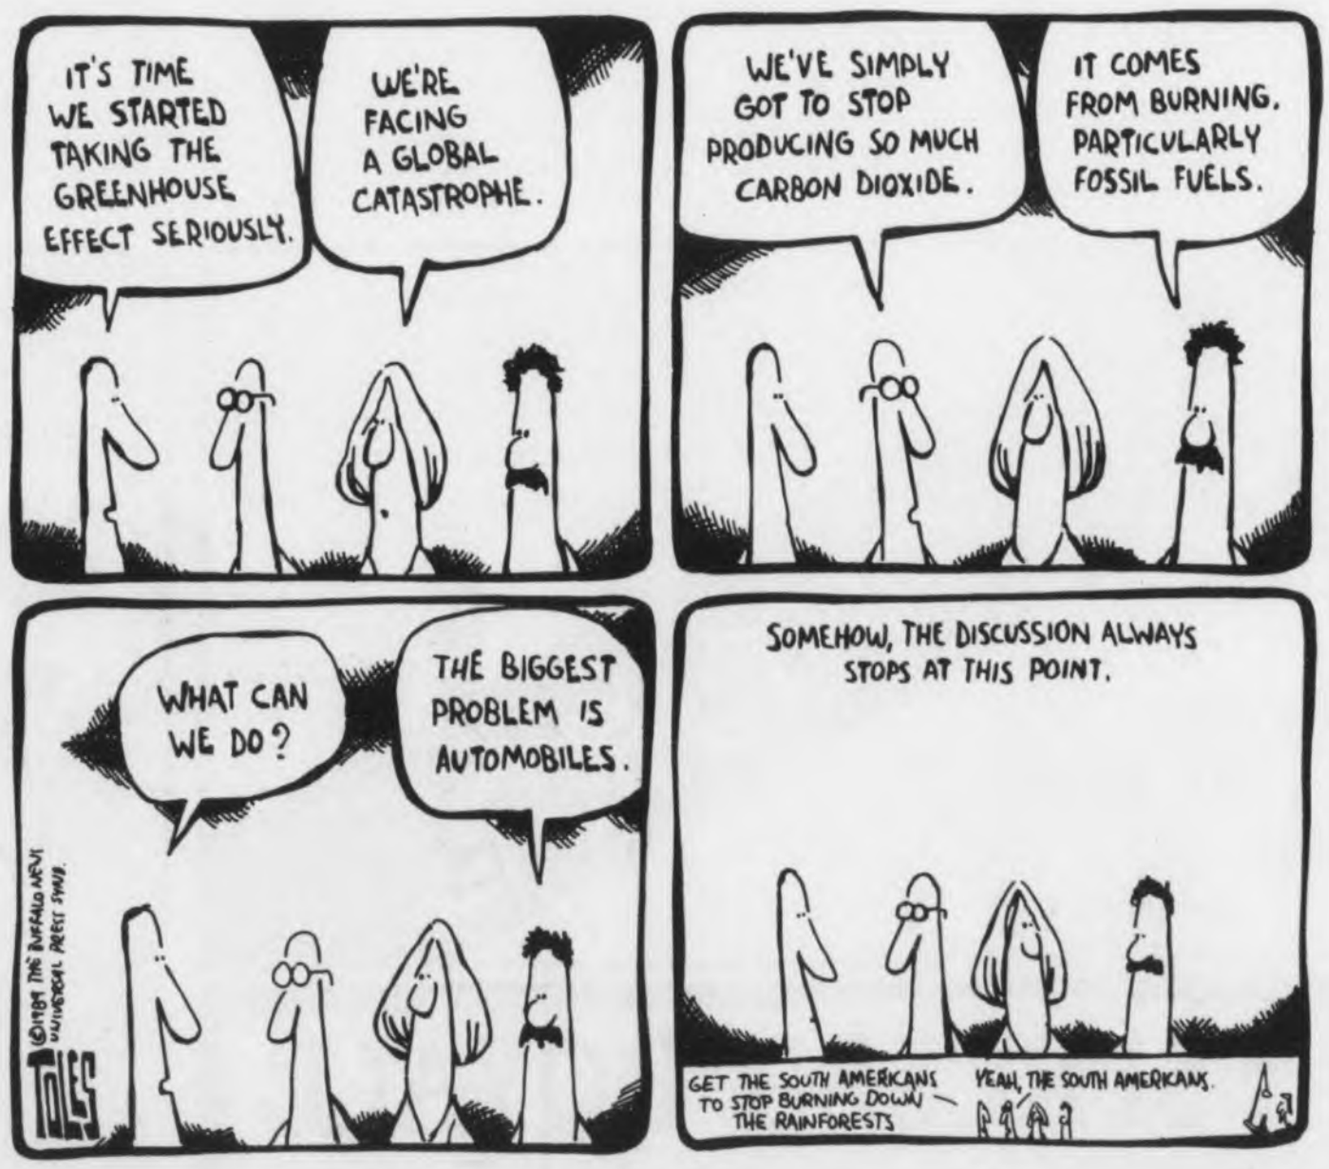
Click could at least have pretended to show a little more trust in his fellow Baptists. But with the disbanding of the Moral Majority, perhaps Click is aware that the moral structure of the fundamental right may falter slightly. It wasn't just coincidence that the Moral Majority disentegrated just in time for the annual convention in Sin City. What an opportunity for the fundamentalists, and how appropriate, for as I have always believed, the Moral Majority is neither moral nor a majority.

But now that the Baptists are at their annual slumber party in Sin City and the Moral Majority has lost its morality — if they hadn't already — I have been wondering what activities may be in store for us. The fundamental right will have to spread the Word somehow in order to ensure they don't become the fundamentally wrong.

I've come up with some ideas on how they might do this and I thought I'd share them with you.

In order to remain in Las Vegas for one more week of ice cream and inspiration, the Southern Baptists will declare June 19-25 National Brotherhood Week. During next week, events will be coordinated from the Sin City itself. Two contests will be held locally, but sponsored nationally by the Southern Baptists.

First, the "The Hunt" will consist of the following criteria: all fundamentalists will compete against each other in hopes of converting the greatest number of people to the faith. (Note: all women, Negroes, Chinese, Filipinos, Israelites, etc. will be excluded from hunting but not from being hunted.) The national winner will receive the grand prize of eternity in heaven with the included luxuries of a painless death, a crowded funeral ceremony and the companionship of any soul along his journey through eternity.



The second contest will be "Name That Sinner," promoting brotherhood and fellowship. Each contestant is presented with a specific set of sins of a family member, a friend or a fellow church member. He is then to correctly identify the corresponding sinner. If correctly identified, the sinner will be punished accordingly while the winner carries on in the competition until he either fails to "name that sinner," is found to be a sinner himself, or wins the last round of the contest. (Note: all evangelists and current clergymen are exempt from competition and moral judgment.)

Local winners are honored with a promotion to a pastorial position. Along with this promotion comes a full-sized congregation of always listening, never-questioning laymen, a local television show called "Who's Sinning," and a good wife — if not already in possession of one.

Also part of National Brotherhood Week will be an Oral Roberts Telethon. Roberts is immortally ill and he needs money in order to continue to live. He will host the show from his deathbed, but the performances will be live from Caesar's Palace. Money should be sent in proportion to one's magnitude of sinful thoughts and actions.

Highlights of the Telethon will be: Tammy Bakker taking it off — her makeup, of course; Jimmy Swaggert as Jerry Lee Lewis; excerpts of the movie "The Last Temptation of Christ," juxtaposed with readings of the true story directly from the King James Version; and Jerry Lewis with his moving proclamation that next year's Telethon will be devoted to purposes of God. (Purposes of God may indirectly benefit Muscular Dystrophy, but there are no promises.)

Once National Brotherhood Week is over, the fundamental right will have to continue executing its influence and spreading the Word. They'll probably attempt to tackle social/political/moral issues such as pornography. And, as for Johnson County Southern Baptists, I hear they are first in line to assume the responsibility for reviewing and censoring all pornographic movies.

Letters

Porno not funny

Editor,

Mark Schmeller missed an important point in his commentary criticizing the Johnson County obscenity guidelines (Collegian, June 12). His discussion centered on the users or potential users of pornography. Schmeller's view was that pornographic materials should be seen as "sophomoric garbage" that should not be taken seriously. He says society should "learn to laugh at" pornography.

The point he missed was the harm that pornography does to the participants in the material. Children are tricked, coerced or raped to include them in kiddie porn films. Is "taking (this) smut seriously " really a "common fault" of society?

Women and men are abused and victimized in bondage and sadomasochistic films. This degradation should not be laughed at.

No, pornography fighters are not "threats to society," but rather they are trying to restore some human dignity to society.

Theory needs facts

Editor,

I continue to be amazed at scientists who show such a reckless disregard for the scientific method when hypothesizing the origins of the earth.

I happen to believe the biblical account of the origins of the earth and have found much scientific evidence to support this and none to indicate otherwise.¡Does this mean that I can claim that my belief is a "scientific fact" as most evolutionists do with their beliefs? Of course not.

Without proper experimentation and testing, nothing in science can be labeled as a fact. This is especially true with something which spans the entire history of the universe.

Yet, Jack Straton, a research associate in physics, used the words "incredible arrogance" and "pure bigotry" against a man who simply wanted true scientific facts and theories taught in our schools. Perhaps Straton used such strong language because he really doesn't believe in evolution either.

Director devoted to children

By Sarah Kobs
Staff Writer

One of Diane Howard's favorite quotes is by C.S. Lewis, who says if a story isn't worthy of an adult in view of universal themes, it's not worthy of a child, either.

Howard is directing this summer's Children's Theatre production of "The Velveteen Rabbit," which will be performed at 8 p.m. July 21-23 in the City Park.

"'The Velveteen Rabbit' shows such wisdom for life through the characters," Howard said.

Howard's has had a lot of experience working with children. She received her master's degree in gifted education and performing arts from the University of Washington. She began teaching gifted children six years ago, but realized the children were being recognized for their intellectual talent rather than their artistic talent.

"Oftentimes children who are intellectually gifted are also artistically talented," Howard said.

Howard and several other educators helped form a performing arts group that used a creative approach to introduce children to the arts. When directing children's plays, Howard functions as a facilitator to encourage rather than dominate the children.

Howard's repertoire revolves around children. She chooses children's literature that is sophisticated in the sense that it challenges children to understand and identify with the characters they play.

"It is important that kids don't try to play adult roles," she said.

In 1987 and 1988, Howard and her family lived in Manhattan while her husband, David, attended K-State to get a master's degree in family life and therapy. He is a chaplain in the military and trains other military chaplains at Ft. Hood in Texas.

While in Manhattan, she taught drama at Manhattan Middle School. Howard met Don Cukjati, director of Arts in the Park, and shared her ideas about children's drama with him. Cukjati asked her to direct last summer's Children's Theatre production of "Narnia."

Although Howard now resides in Texas, where she is head of the drama department at the University of Mary Hardin-Baylor in Belton, she said was happy to return to Manhattan this summer to direct "The Velveteen Rabbit."

"I've had a great deal of experience with children, and the Manhattan children are truly exceptional," she said. "They are more prepared for this type of performance because they've had exposure to the arts."

Parents of children in last summer's production of "Narnia" supported bringing Howard back to Manhattan to direct this summer's production. Four of the parents formed Friends of Children's Theatre, a civic organization. The group asked for donations to help pay for Howard's housing and utilities for the summer, and the response was overwhelming.

"We had $523 of pledges within two weeks," said Esther Gray, who helped start Friends of Children's Theatre.

The Manhattan Pilot Club made a donation to cover the utilities and extra money for the production which made it possible to furnish Howard with an apartment for the summer, Gray said.

"Diane works very well with the children and fosters a spirit of cooperation among the children rather than competition," Gray said. "The parents thought it could mean so much for the City of Manhattan to bring her back."

Howard said involving parents in the production is integral. Last summer, 24 parents were trained to be make-up artists and others helped with other aspects of the production, she said.

In choosing children's plays, Howard looks for children's literature that has a universal theme, complex characterization, characters that grow or develop in a positive way and the usage of artistic language such as poetic devices or plays on words.

"I look for plays where each child has his own identity," she said. "There are no generic choruses. Instead, we work on individuality."

For example, in "The Velveteen Rabbit," each toy in the toy closet is different and has a unique personality, she said.

There are 100 children from 5 years old to high school seniors in the cast. More than 60 of the characters have speaking parts, she said.

Sharron Washington is choreographing and Vicki Bieber is directing the music for the production.

"The three of us worked together for last year's production and we work well together as well as have a good time," Howard said.

The children in the production must make a serious committment because it takes a lot of time, she said.

"Diane is a wonderful leader because she cares more for the people than the production itself," said Heather Ballew, who is 15 and plays the skin horse in "The Velveteen Rabbit." "When we were practicing last summer and everyone was getting hot and tired, Diane had us take a 10 minute break to hug each other and show that we cared about each other."

North's motions fail; sentencing next week

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Oliver L. North's motion to set aside his three Iran-Contra convictions was denied Wednesday by the trial judge, clearing the way for the former White House aide's sentencing next week.

U.S. District Judge Gerhard A. Gesell, who presided over eight weeks of testimony in the case, rejected North's last post-trial motions, including a request for an acquittal judgment or a new trial on each of the three felony convictions.

North, scheduled to be sentenced June 23, could face a 10-year prison term and $750,000 in fines if given the maximum sentences for his convictions of unlawfully destroying government documents, aiding and abetting in obstructing Congress and illegally accepting a gratuity from arms dealer Richard V. Secord.

Gesell ruled there was "sufficient proof for the jury to find ... that North was aiding and abetting" a Reagan administration effort to conceal from Congress details of the sale of U.S. arms to Iran.

The judge also rejected North's contention that prosecutors had not proven that he was the legal custodian of records he was convicted of mutilating after the Iran-Contra affair became public in November, 1986.

"There was ample proof that North engaged in a deliberate effort to rewrite what had occurred by attempting to falsify the official record of the National Security Council," the judge said in his 13-page opinion.

Gesell also rejected North's arguments that he was unfairly convicted of illegally accepting the installation of a $13,800 security system paid for by Secord outside North's Great Falls, Va., home.

Probe helped Gingrich raise funds

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Newt Gingrich, the conservative congressman who sparked the investigation of Jim Wright, used the probe as a GOP fund-raising tool aiming for "major gains" in the next two elections.

He wrote four letters to lists of potential contributors over the past year, asking them to put pressure on the House ethics committee in the Wright case as well as give money. The latest letter, dated the day after Wright announced his resignation as House speaker, sought a new contribution, declaring the Texan was "not the only corrupt Democrat."

Gingrich, now the House Republican whip, made the fund-raising appeals as general chairman of GOPAC, a tax-paying organization that tries to elect Republicans to state legislatures and sometimes aids local GOP candidates.

The organization said it raised $1.9 million last year, up $500,000 from 1987, but could not say immediately how much of that was due to the letters Gingrich pegged to the Wright investigation.

Only days after he filed a formal ethics complaint against the Democratic House speaker, Gingrich began sending out the letters, some telling contributors they could have great influence on the investigation that eventually toppled Wright.

Early on, prospective contributors were thanked for "helping me force" the bipartisan ethics panel to deal with the Wright case.

By this spring, Gingrich's renewed thanks for forcing the ethics panel's hand were accompanied by a new request for money to help GOP candidates. The Democrats, Gingrich wrote, were putting "a great deal of political heat on me" because of the case and hoped to use him as an issue to defeat Republicans.

The Democrats replaced Wright last week and filled out their top three House leadership positions Wednesday amid much talk of toning down the personal attacks on Capitol Hill. But the talk of conciliation was accompanied by suggestions, in private if not in public, that an exception might be made for Gingrich, who also faces a possible ethics committee investigation.

Kay Riddle, executive director of GOPAC, said Wright's ethics were made a fund-raising theme because "our fund-raising people try to be timely. They try to talk about whatever is in the headlines. It's just that Wright was hot and Newt was so tied to that."

In his initial letter June 1, 1988, Gingrich informed 18,910 people on GOPAC's active contributor list he had just filed a complaint against Wright, and he asked people to send the enclosed post cards to ethics committee chairman Julian Dixon, D-Calif., demanding an investigation.

"We need tremendous public pressure, plus major media coverage, to force the committee's Democratic majority to take action," Gingrich wrote. The committee has six members from each party.

"Second, will you make a contribution of $50 to GOPAC today?"

By June 30, 1988, Gingrich was able to thank 1,500 respondents to the earlier mailing for "helping me force" the ethics panel to probe Wright. "It was due in no small part to pressure from GOPAC members like you. ..."

But Gingrich told the givers that a situation had arisen that "could result in the investigation ... turning into a charade and a whitewash."

A Democratic committee member, Vic Fazio of California, had cohosted a $500-a-plate luncheon in which the "drawing card ... was none other than Jim Wright," Gingrich wrote. "In plain political terms, Rep. Fazio now 'owes' the speaker," Gingrich said, and asked contributors to mail postcards urging Fazio to remove himself from the investigation.

Fazio, who did not bow out of the investigation, received 12 postcards from the mailing, according to spokeswoman Laura Nichols. She said Wright was in Sacramento for a previously scheduled appearance and added to his schedule the Democratic fund-raiser with Fazio.

On April 19, two days after the ethics committee publicly released its report detailing 69 charges against Wright, Gingrich thanked 19,822 on GOPAC's active donor list for helping in "forcing the House ethics committee to undertake its investigation."

ABCs OF FIRST AID
JOGGING
Jogging can be beneficial to your health, yet if done incorrectly can become very painful. Before jogging always stretch your muscles thoroughly, including the upper body as well. Go through a 5-8 minute warm up period, by slowly running in place or riding an exercise bike. Some common injuries to joggers include: Shin splints, sprains and pulled muscles. Applying ice to the injured area and elevating the leg will keep the swelling down and ease the pain. If the pain persists see your doctor for medical attention.
The ABCs of First Aid is brought to you as a community service of the emergency room at Memorial Hospital. Be looking for the entire alphabet and always remember to clip and save this announcement for your own emergency care.

Ticks transmit crippling disease

By Lisa Bieberly
Collegian Reporter

Lyme Disease, an infection carried by ticks, can cause crippling complications, and it is striking a growing number of people.

Many ticks carry a type of bacterium known as a spirochete. When transmitted to humans, the spirochete causes Lyme Disease.

K-State's Cooperative Extension Service is asking people to send any ticks found to county Extension agents, who will then send them to the University for examination.

Extension asks that ticks be sealed in a pill bottle with a label giving the date caught, name and address, and where the tick was found.

If you find a tick, it is important to remove it as soon as possible by steadily pulling on it with tweezers, said Dr. Thomas Ryan of Lafene Student Health Center.

"It is important that you do not want to squeeze or kill the tick while removing it from your skin," Ryan said.

Early symptoms of the disease include a red circular rash. Dr. Robert Cathey, a Manhattan dermatologist, said Lyme differs from other tick-related diseases such as Rocky Mountain spotted fever in that a rash develops around the area of the bite.

Fever, headache, fatigue, stiff neck and muscle or joint pain are other early warnings. Within weeks to months of the rash, the nervous system may be affected, causing meningitis or encephalitis and heart abnormalities, Ryan said.

Symptons of Lyme Disease are treatable with antibiotics. The earlier treatment begins, the easier it will be to prevent the effects. Cathey said it is hard to diagnose Lyme Disease after the early symptoms are gone, and it is important to tell a doctor after hiking, camping or working in a wooded or grassy area where ticks might be found.

"Preventions would be to use insect repellents and also trying to prevent exposing the skin by tucking the pants in," Cathey said. "You also should avoid going to places where ticks would be present."

There is evidence that the disease is spreading. Nationwide, Lyme Disease has been reported in at least 33 states. Earlier this week, a Johnson County woman was reported to have the disease.

According to the Riley County/ Manhattan Health Department, Lyme Disease is not a reportable disease so there are no statistics.

Cathey and Ryan said they have never diagnosed a person as having the disease, but they have prescribed antibiotics to a few patients who have developed a rash, being aware of Lyme Disease symptoms.

Ryan said the disease will probably spread.

"It will become a problem in this area, so prevention is the important thing. We just need to let the people be aware of the disease, and (the need) to come in to see a doctor if they have any questions," he said.

Spending on AIDS research increasing

By The Associated Press

BOSTON — The federal government will spend about as much this year on AIDS research and prevention as it does for cancer or heart disease and far more than it devotes to other major killers, an analysis shows.

And if current trends continue, such spending on AIDS will surpass that of all other diseases for the first time next year, researchers said.

The researchers said they believe their work is the first to total up the entire federal commitment to stopping the AIDS epidemic.

"We were surprised to learn the extent to which so many different individuals and agencies were involved in AIDS efforts," said Dr. William Winkenwerder. "The breadth of the effort of the federal government was greater than we thought it might be."

The analysis shows that AIDS spending — more than $2 billion this year — makes up nearly 10 percent of the total budget of the U.S. Public Health Service, which oversees government medical research, and by 1992 it will account for nearly 13 percent.

Spending on AIDS research, education and prevention is comparable to other diseases that "will continue to have a far greater effect on U.S. mortality," the report concludes.

Some health experts have argued that the United States is not spending enough to prevent new AIDS cases or to find treatments for those who are already infected with the AIDS virus.

"We were surprised to learn the extent to which so many different individuals and agencies were involved in AIDS efforts." — Dr. Wm. Winkenwerder

The new report neither agrees with this contention nor disputes it and does not try to assess whether the federal money is being spent properly.

The analysis was directed by Winkenwerder, former AIDS coordinator of the Health Care Financing Administration and now with the Southeast Permanente Medical Group in Atlanta. It was published in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine.

Dr. Sheldon Wolff of Tufts Medical School, co-chairman of a National Academy of Sciences review of federal AIDS efforts three years ago, said he believes the government should be spending more on all diseases, AIDS included.

"We are not doing enough," he said. "Are we doing more? Hell yes. The federal government has responded, but belatedly, to AIDS."

Puppets entertain audience of all ages

By Sarah Kobs

One way to bring out the kid in a person is to watch a puppet show on a warm summer evening.

Wednesday evenings at 7 p.m., the crowds at the Manhattan City Park range from pre-schoolers to grandparents as the Park Puppet Players present an hour-long show of puppetry and singing.

The Manhattan Parks and Recreation Department sponsors the puppet theater, which is directed by Peter Kahler, sophomore in secondary music. Kahler founded the Park Puppet Players in 1981 after he played Kermit the Frog in a puppet show at Manhattan High School.

The group consists of eight puppeteers ranging from 5th grade to high school age, Kahler said. Nanette Pelletier, assistant director, wrote several of the skits used.

"The shows are taken from storybooks, such as Snow White or Sesame Street, and some of them are originals written by Nanette," Kahler said.

Kahler chooses the puppeteers by watching children at tryouts for summer theater productions and asking certain children to participate. Usually the children feel honored and are happy to participate, he said.

The first show was June 7 and they will continue through July 19 for a total of seven shows. Kahler said the group will also perform at the Flinthills Festival in the fall.

"It's a challenge to find a skit that appeals to the older kids in the audience as well as the younger kids," he said.

Kahler incorporates popular themes such as dinosaurs and Egyptians into the productions. Children recognize these characters and the group is able to use popular songs with these themes, he said. One of the most popular productions is Munsterpiece Theatre, which is taken from the Sesame Street TV show.

"The kids love the Sesame Street characters and react to them like teenagers react to rock bands," he said.

When using the Sesame Street characters, Kahler usually does all of the voices. The children do the voices of the other puppets and sometimes the children act in the performances, he said.

The scripts aren't memorized because the scripts can be posted behind the backdrop. The puppeteers read the script as they operate the puppets. Each week the group practices four times, including a dress rehearsal on Wednesday afternoon.

Manhattan Parks and Recreation provides funding for the puppet theater to buy new puppets and to pay Kahler and Pelletier. The park owns 30 puppets and Kahler has 50 Sesame Street and Muppet characters.

The shows are usually performed in the old concession stand east of the swimming pool in City Park. However, the Manhattan Pilot Club recently gave money to the parks and recreation department to purchase a portable, multi-purpose trailer. Mike Huff and Jim Colley of Manhattan Parks and Recreation decided that the trailer would be the most efficient if it were used as a portable stage, concession stand and puppet facility.

Agreement to aid minorities

By The Collegian Staff

A new University agreement with Donnelly College in Kansas City, Kan., will provide minority students easier access to a college education.

The agreement, announced Monday, will encourage minority students in metropolitan Kansas City to begin their first two years of college at Donnelly and then transfer to K-State to complete their undergraduate degrees, said Frank Gardner, director of public relations at Donnelly.

Gardner said minority enrollment at Donnelly is about 75 percent.

The new partnership will allow minority students to begin college in a familiar environment, live at home and keep their jobs, Gardner said.

"The flexibility involved in the new partnership will help improve the number of minority students enrolled at K-State," President Jon Wefald said. "At the same time, we stand ready to make certain that this program will encourage more minority high school students from the Kansas City area to consider college."

Stephan Coggs, a 1988 K-State graduate in business management, will join the K-State College Relations staff at Donnelly as coordinator for the program.

Coggs will be working with students at Donnelly to ensure they are taking the proper classes to prepare them for K-State and the classes will meet the requirements for their field of study at K-State, said John Fairman, assistant vice president for institutional advancement.

"Donnelly College has long provided an access to the first two years of college education to minority students," said Donnelly President John Murry. "This transfer program will help break down some of the barriers to the opportunities a university might offer."

Parking lots receive facelifts

By Sarah Kobs
Staff Writer

University officials said a $2.6 million construction project renovating and landscaping campus parking lots will be completed by the start of the fall semester.

"Last summer we created 1,200 additional parking spaces and now we're paving and improving them," said John Lambert, director of public safety on campus.

The lots under construction will be paved and landscaped with bushes, shrubs and grass. Drainage ditches are being added to the lots being paved, Lambert said.

K-State Police Capt. Charles Beckom said safety features are being added to the lots. Lighting will be added in the West Stadium lot and the Weber Hall lot, allowing for better visual observation and the opportunity to use other safety features such as video equipment.

New emergency phones will be installed in the Union, West Stadium and Weber Hall lots, he said. The phones, lacking handsets, are similar to an intercom system and will allow people to directly call the campus police.

The new phones will bring the total number of emergency phones on campus to 13. Beckom said all emergency phones will be replaced by the new system.

The proposed cost of the improvements was issued through a state bond, said Larry Garvin, director of facilities planning. The bond will be paid off with revenues from campus parking fees and fines, he said.

"The $2.6 million includes funding for irrigation, drainage, curb and gutter paving, landscaping and lighting," Garvin said.

Parking meters will be installed in the north Union lot, which will be open for general parking. The south Union lot will be reserved for students and faculty/staff. Lambert said the parking ratio in the south lot will be 50 percent student parking and 50 percent faculty/staff parking.

The information booth will be moved to the north entrance on 17th Street to create more parking spaces and alleviate traffic congestion in the Union parking lot, Beckom said.

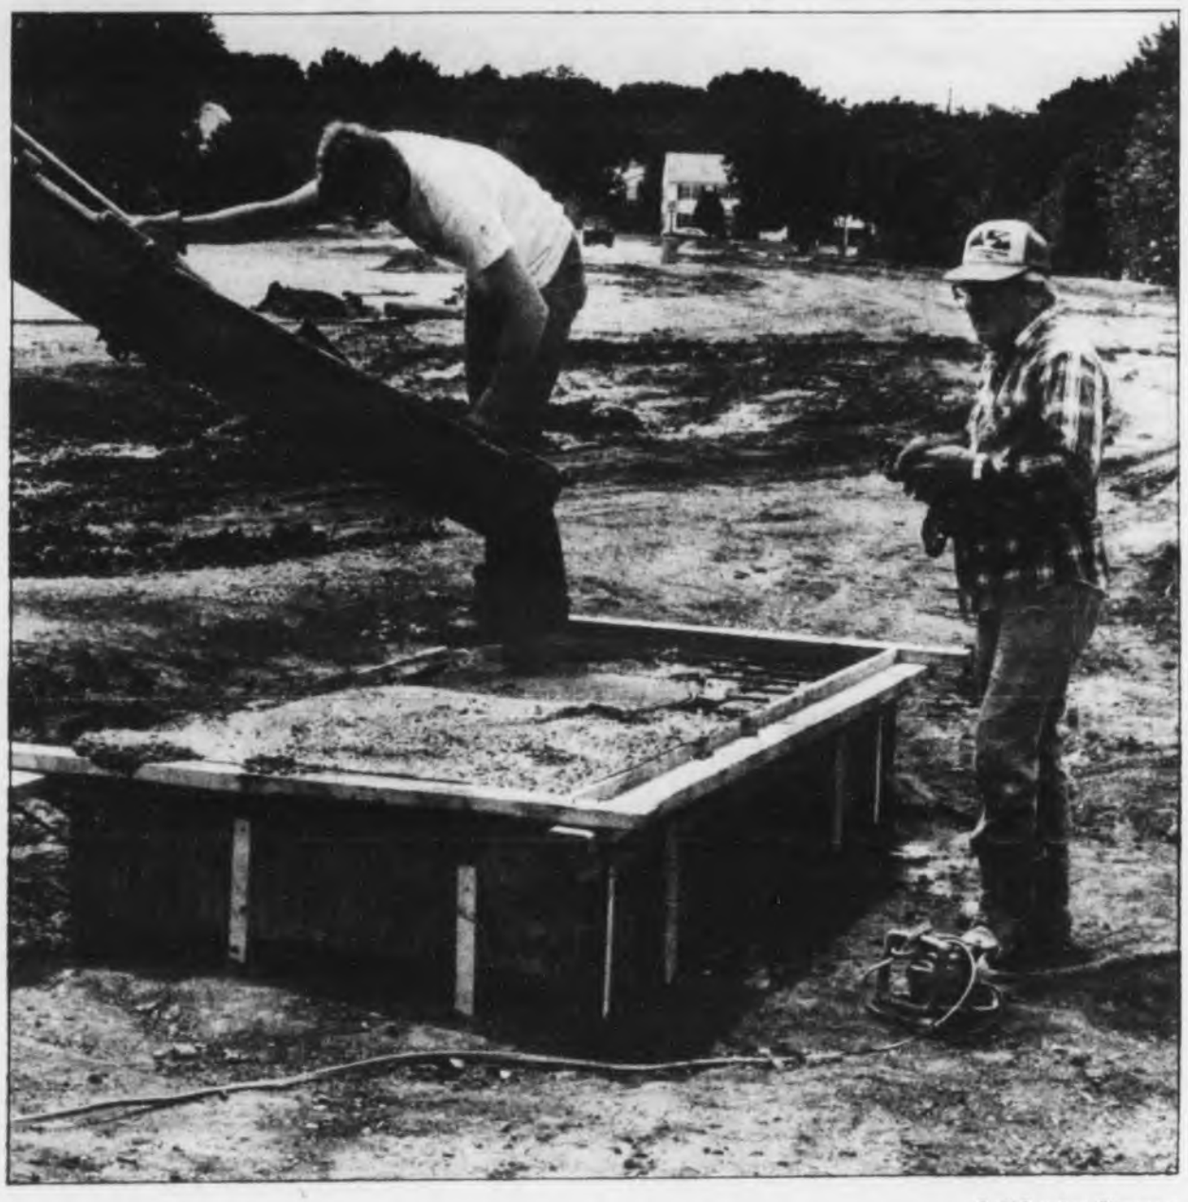
The lot north of Dickens Hall is being reconstructed to create 55 to 75 new parking spaces for general use. Parking wasn't available in the lot due to the construction of the biochemistry building last year, Lambert said.

The lot north of Weber Hall has 600 to 700 student parking spaces, but in the past not all of the spaces have been paved, he said. The West Stadium lot will have 1,000 paved parking spaces available to anyone with a permit.

Lambert said the project will be completed by the beginning of the fall semester, and the contract deadline is Aug. 1.

"I hope the students realize that this is the only time of year to do this project," he said.

During the school year, it would be difficult to make such extensive changes in the lots due to the larger number of students driving to campus, Lambert said.



Lt. Bob Mellgren of the University police said so far there hasn't been an increase of tickets issued due to lack of parking spaces on campus, and police have been lenient in issuing parking tickets, he said.

"However, we'll have to start ticketing those parking on the streets because there are parking spaces available on campus that they're not utilizing," he said.

For students enrolled in summer school, about 450 parking spaces are available in the Goodnow and Marlatt residence hall lots.

Also, anyone with a campus parking permit may park in the east parking lot by McCain whether the lot is reserved for faculty/staff or students. The only restrictions are the reserved and handicapped slots and those with time limits, Lambert said. Student parking is also available at Edwards Hall located on Denison Avenue.

"People will find the lots more attractive, more accessible and more beneficial," Beckom said.

Democrats desire unity

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — With their new leadership team in place, House Democrats are searching for a legislative agenda to unify their party and provide a counterpoint to the policies of President Bush.

"This is our time to make a difference and move this House away from the partisan wrangling and the rancor and the bitterness, and to reassert an agenda for progress for this country," said Rep. Richard Gephardt of Missouri, elected Wednesday as his party's new No. 2 House leadership official.

But despite Gephardt's campaign-style speech to his colleagues, the new leadership team still has much work to do to assume the reins of power in the House and convert stylistic ability into substance.

While Bush has made much of advocating bipartisan cooperation with Congress, his political team has shown a heightened aggressiveness in attacking Democrats. The House GOP minority, meanwhile, has grown increasingly combative.

"I think you still are going to have tremendous problems between the two parties here, for at least another year," said Rep. Tony Coelho, D-Calif., the former whip who is leaving Congress after today because of questions about his personal finances.

The new speaker, Thomas S. Foley of Washington, is an acknowledged statesman and thinker, but some Democrats wonder whether he will have the toughness to define and fight for the party's agenda.

And after a season of fighting ethics charges, Democrats remain nervous about whether Rep. William Gray of Pennsylvania — the new No. 3 party official as majority whip — will ultimately be damaged by an FBI probe into alleged payroll padding in his office.

Rep. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., said members of the new leadership team "are extremely adept at selling the message to the American people — our challenge now is to come up with the message."

The new leaders will work this summer on developing a party legislative agenda, then announce sometime this fall "where we're going," said Rep. David Bonior, D-Mich., who lost the whip's race to Gray but will remain in his post as chief deputy whip.

Foley already has said ethics and campaign reform will be his top priorities. Democrats also are eager to pass a clean air bill and complete work on a savings and loan rescue package, and are promising to pass another bill raising the minimum wage after President Bush's veto this week.

Gephardt, in his acceptance speech before the House Democratic caucus after defeating Rep. Ed Jenkins, D-Ga., for majority leader, echoed some of the themes of his 1988 presidential campaign.

"America is beginning to be in a state of decline, and we as Democrats have to lead," he said, "even though there is not a crisis, even though the presidency is held by a different party and even though getting our consensus together on the Democratic side is always difficult to do."

The midterm leadership turnover came because of the resignation of Jim Wright of Texas as speaker and of Coelho as whip. Foley moved up last week to be speaker.

House fails to override Bush veto

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Democratic-controlled House failed Wednesday to override President Bush's veto of legislation to raise the minimum wage, giving the White House a win in its first legislative clash with Congress.

House members voted 247-178 to override, but that was well shy of the two-thirds needed, so Bush's veto stands. The bill would have increased the hourly minimum wage from $3.35 to $4.55 by October 1991.

Defeated but defiant, Democrats moved immediately to renew the fight, which has taken on political symbolism beyond the partisan differences over the minimum wage.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy introduced a bill identical to the one Bush vetoed, and a leading House Democrat was preparing a revised bill as well, still out of line with Bush's demands.

"The president should understand that this is an issue on which Congress has just begun to fight," said Kennedy.

Republicans quickly countered the Democrats, introducing a new minimum-wage proposal of their own that also included a modest expansion of the Earned Income Tax Credit available to families with young children.

Bush, the first veto of his administration sustained, said his offer to raise the minimum to $4.25 an hour by 1992 remained on the table, provided employers could pay new workers a lower wage for six months.

park chanting "Yes means yes, no means no, whatever we wear, wherever we go" and "Women are angry, women are strong, women have been battered much too long."

Before the group marched, a speak-out allowed participants to voice their opinions about rape. One woman talked about myths and facts of rape, and others spoke of their concern.

Steve Tichenor admitted to the group he was a former abuser.

"It's no fun to live with the feeling of being an abusive person. It's no fun to be the friend or lover of someone who has been raped," Tichenor said.

He said he would try to educate and inform other men about his new attitudes.

People attended the march for a variety of reasons. One woman who refused to be identified because of her fears of rape said she and her husband saw an advertisement for the march and felt very strongly about the issue.

"We want to be able to use the park without being afraid," she said.

A realistic view compelled Kim Logan, Manhattan, to attend the march.

"You never know when it could happen to you," she said.

Linda Fleming, an employee of the Crisis Center, brought her children to the march.

"I wanted all my kids to be exposed to (the problem)," she said. She also wanted to show her children that people are trying to do something about the problem.

Many said they just wanted attitudes about rape to change.

"While lots of lights are a part of it, attitudes are very important. It's going to take the whole community to do that," said a woman who identified herself only as a rape victim.

The group ended the march by singing "We Shall Overcome."

installed last year, uses the same system as the new campus-wide ID. A student, faculty member or staff member who establishes an account is given a Wildcat Card with an encoded magnetic strip. With the new ID card system, they will be able to use their ID cards to make transactions.

"The declining balance account should be a convenience for students, faculty and staff, particularly now that it is part of the campus-wide ID card system," said Vera Carr, associate director of the Union.

Returning students who establish declining balance accounts in the Union or who live in the residence halls will also have their ID cards encoded during fall fee payment, Foster said. Faculty and staff members who establish declining balance accounts and staff members who work in Housing and Food Service will have their cards encoded as well, he said.

"Other students will have their ID cards encoded at early enrollment in November. At that time we expect to have most of the student ID cards and faculty and staff cards encoded," Foster said.

Testing of current K-State ID cards has shown that some will not encode because of damage to the magnetic strip, such as scratches on its surface, or because of production defects in the strip. Hatch said about 15 percent of the cards that had been tested would not work in the system.

"The ones that do not work will be replaced with ones that can be encoded," said Foster.

Students living in residence halls will be able to use their ID cards as meal tickets in the Derby and Kramer food centers. As students enter the food centers, their cards will be run through a card reader. The reader relays information to the main computer to determine whether the student is eligible for meals and if the student has already eaten that meal on that day, Foster said.

"The housing department plans to have the meal system in place by August," said John Pence, associate director of housing.

Later in the fall semester, students in residence halls will also use their cards to gain access after hours using the same reader as the meal system, Foster said.

"We're interested right now in making the buildings more secure," said Thomas J. Frith, director of housing.

The ID center will be moving from the basement of Farrell Library to Willard Hall in the fall. The new center will house the main computer which will store the information for the new ID system, Foster said.

The changes will cost the University about $100,000, Foster said. This figure includes the costs of the functions that will be available this fall as well as the costs of installing the Wildcat Card system in the Union last year, he said.

The proposal, made by Griffin Technologies Inc., outlines other possible applications for the Vali-Dine system at K-State, including uses at Farrell, Lafene, Recreational Services and the Office of Student Financial Assistance.

Adding these functions to the ID system requires that the University purchase more memory for the main computer and other equipment.

"Our ability to purchase memory will determine how rapidly we're able to put the whole campus on the new system," Foster said.

sustainability.

The University already has started a Task Force in Extension on Sustainable Agriculture to gather information that will contribute to best management practices.

The meeting enabled the parties to better understand each other, said Bentley.

"The University people recognized that there are problems," he said.

Woods said the faculty continues to formulate new projects to conform to changing needs of the state.

"It takes a long time to build up a research base on this information and that is why it is important to get the University oriented on these needs now," Bentley said.

gressional Campaign Committee.

Jenkins said in his campaign it was time for the Democratic leadership to include a representative of the more conservative wing of the party, and although he didn't win there were assurances that a Southerner would be installed in an appointed leadership post.

"The party has to do more ... to expand to include the one-third of its party that is in the more conservative ranks," especially if it expects to win the White House, he said.

Wednesday's election left a vacancy in Gray's former position as chairman of the House Democratic Caucus, the No. 4 position. The Democrats will meet later to fill that post which is being contested by two candidates, Reps. Steny Hoyer, D-Md., and Barbara Kennelly, D-Conn.

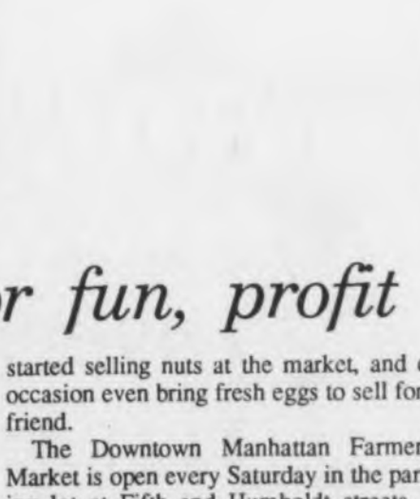
Downtown Manhattan Farmers' Market



BOTTOM: Erin Borchardt, Oldsberg, looks expectantly at two shoppers at the market. She has been coming to the market for three years, and during that time has only missed two Saturdays. RIGHT: Bob Burk, Manhattan, surveys the market from behind his display of homegrown vegetable.

R.C. Lind, Manhattan, gets a laugh from Bob Burk, Manhattan, after a purchase at the Downtown Manhattan Farmers' Market. Lind buys at the market every Saturday.

Lynn Thomas, associate professor of accounting, takes a few minutes to talk with Chuck Marr, professor of horticulture, who intends to sell produce at the market later in the season.

Malley Sisson, director of the K-State Union Food Service, attends the market regularly to find out what "interesting stuff" is for sale.

Homegrown produce sold for fun, profit

At the Downtown Manhattan Farmers' Market, Louis Weber of Wamego sells German spinach.

A friend gave Weber the seeds, which were brought over from Germany and date back to the 1800s. Weber said he has been growing the spinach for about 10 years, and has to save seeds each year because they can't be bought in the United States.

The spinach is part of what attracts Malley Sisson, director of the K-State Union Food Service, to the Farmers' Market on a regular basis. Sisson said she likes to go to the market because "you always see some really interesting stuff."

Jana Fallin, associate professor of music, is a regular at the market as well, and called it "a testimony to the quality of life that Manhattan strives for."

"There's something really neat about it. Just talking with the people and seeing how they are doing kind of reminds me of growing up," she said.

For some people the Farmers' Market is a hobby, but for most, it's a business.

Susan Schardein, of Homestead Produce, started selling produce at the market because it allowed her to stay home with her children. Before she started the business, Schardein said she worked 40 hours a week at a job that didn't allow her to spend the time she wanted to with her children.

Her daughter Marci, then 7, suggested that they "set up a picnic table" and sell things from their garden. That picnic table has grown into a business that involves the entire family.

Marci, who is now a sophomore at Riley High School, specializes in the cut and dried flowers she sells at the market.

On Saturday mornings, young and old alike sell their homegrown produce at the market. Melanie Thomas, 11, grows a garden as a 4-H Club project, and it was recently featured in Grass & Grain. Thomas grows everything from corn and cabbage to potatoes and pumpkins.

Thomas doesn't sell much from her garden, but she and her sisters Stephanie, 9, and Natalie, 6, help their father, Lynn Thomas, associate professor of accounting, sell his produce at the market.

Another familiar face at the market is Ruth Burk, Manhattan. She and her husband first brought produce to the market about five years ago when they grew too many red onions.

"We knew they wouldn't keep. My husband's uncle had sold apples here, so we brought a bushel basket of them and sold them in no time," Burk said.

Since then, the Burks have been selling their homegrown vegetables almost every Saturday during the summer. They recently started selling nuts at the market, and on occasion even bring fresh eggs to sell for a friend.

The Downtown Manhattan Farmers' Market is open every Saturday in the parking lot at Fifth and Humboldt streets. It starts the last week in May and runs through the last Saturday in October.

Usually at least six vendors open for business each Saturday, and as many as 20 open during the height of the season when people start selling corn, cantaloupe and watermelon.

No restrictions are placed on who can bring produce to the market, but each vendor is asked to pay a stall fee to help pay for advertising and insurance. The vendors also have to collect sales tax on the produce they sell.

The produce sold at the market is all grown locally, and customers seem to like knowing where the produce comes from. Several customers said they shop at the market every week because they like knowing that what they buy hasn't been shipped all over the country.

Burk said the prices at the market are lower than grocery store prices. She said she would like to have more K-State students take advantage of the savings because she knows a lot of them are on tight budgets.

Students practice vocal skills

By The Collegian Staff

There's music in the air as 46 Kansas high school students warm up for the 11th summer choral institute and Kansas honor choir concert in McCain Auditorium.

"This year's students are of very high quality. It should be an excellent group. There was some outstanding talent that auditioned," said Rod Walker, professor of music and director of choral activities.

More than 290 students auditioned to be in the choir. "We listened to the quality of the voice, the musicianship and soloistic skills," Walker said.

"The students were sent music to learn for the audition," said Andrea Lauber, junior in interior design and a member of the choral institute staff. "(Walker) listened to all of the 290 himself."

"The students have voice classes in which they work with a voice instructor," Lauber said. "It's a classroom situation, and the instructor will call on each student to work on each piece individually."

There are also four piano students here for the institute, Lauber said.

Walker said that the students return to their schools and share the skills and techniques they learn at the institute.

The choral institute is underwritten by K-State and the Master Teacher Institute for the Arts. Master Teacher has helped to fund the institute since it began.

"(Master Teacher) has been involved from the very beginning concept. (The Institue is) interested in furthering music and in K-State," Walker said.

The choral institute began June 13 and will conclude with an hour-long concert at 2 p.m. June 17 at All Faiths Chapel. The concert is free and the public is invited to attend.

Off-campus tuition awards offered

By Martha Kropf
Staff Writer

A new program offering tuition awards to students taking courses off campus is designed to encourage work on graduate degrees at K-State, said Ed McAleer, director of Academic Outreach in continuing education.

McAleer said there hasn't "been a lot of attention given to using the off-campus arena to attract students to campus." He said a small number of students exists who would otherwise enter K-State's graduate programs, but can't because of family and work responsibilities.

Traditionally, around 4,000 students enroll in the courses offered by continuing education each semester, but McAleer said he doesn't know how many students might participate in the program, or how many new students the program would attract.

As a result of the program "there are certain (students) who will be able to go back to school without as much (financial) struggle," said Cheryl Polson, assistant professor of Adult and Continuing Education, and K-State's Kansas City advisor in the Adult and Continuing Education Degree Program.

McAleer said most people enrolled in continuing education now have been enrolled for the sake of course work, merit increases and step improvement in professional settings, but not necessarily for graduate work.

"Some students who have not seen graduate studies as an option may now see it as an option," Polson said.

The awards amount to half a course's tuition or $100, whichever is less, according to a pamphlet about the new program.

Polson said the program is long overdue.

"In general, limited resources have been allocated (in the past) to assist the adult learner enrolled in higher education," she said.

"It's a way to serve part-time, off-campus learners who have family and work responsibilities and who cannot leave their home communities for extended study on campus," said Sue Maes, Associate Director of the Division of Continuing Education.

McAleer expects about $20,000 will be spent on tuition awards. The money will come from the KSU Foundation Scholarship Fund.

"If we had more requests than we have money, we simply do not have the power to go beyond $25,000," he said.

Students could do some of their graduate work off-campus, but most will eventually have to come to Manhattan to earn their graduate degrees, McAleer said.

However, without leaving their communities, students in Salina could finish a master's of business administration or an educational leadership master's degree, he said. Students in Topeka could finish a civil engineering master's degree or an educational leadership master's degree.

McAleer said three categories of students could be eligible for the money: individuals taking their first graduate course in a degree program, individuals re-entering a degree program by enrolling in a graduate course after a lapse of two years or longer, or indiviuals enrolling in a graduate course who can demonstrate financial need.

"The students (who apply for reasons of financial need) would not have to go through the ACT or the federal process to eligible for the money," said Larry Viterna, director of the Office of Student Financial Assistance.

Students could be financially eligible for as long as they are working towards a degree and have financial need, he said.

Viterna's office will serve the program in an advisory capacity. He said the office would provide the continuing education with charts that could be used as a basis to determine financial need.

Extra time granted for preservationists to save opera house

By The Associated Press

McPHERSON — A judge has given preservationists additional time to try to save the McPherson Opera House from the wrecking ball.

District Judge Richard Walker of Newton, who heard testimony at McPherson May 22 on the fate of the 101-year-old building, issued a seven-page ruling Wednesday.

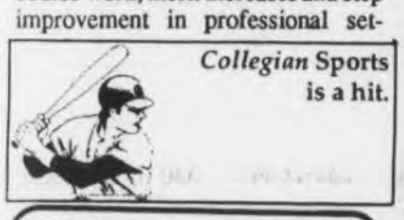
Walker gave the McPherson Opera House Preservation Co. until Sept. 8 to repair the building to the extent that steel support beams and fencing can be removed.

As an alternative, he said the group could try to find investors to pay for actual restoration of the building, and said he would hold a hearing Sept. 18 to find out what progress might have been made over the summer.

The building hasn't been used since the last business moved out in the mid-1970s, and its condition has deteriorated markedly in recent years. A windstorm in March of 1988 ripped off the sheet metal facing that had been placed across the west end of the building and damaged the roof.

The city health board issued an order that the building be repaired, and later the city filed suit against the preservation company, seeking to proceed with demolition.

"While there does not appear to be a currently available alternative to the demolition of the structure, and while the public interest in the prompt and final abatement of the nuisance must be given great weight, it is reasonable to permit a short period of additional time to allow the current feasibility study as to a possible commercial restoration of the structure to be completed," Walker said in his order.



Walker noted that the city had tried to find alternatives to demolition, including spending $50,000 to help alleviate hazardous conditions and working with engineers to see if renovation is possible.

In a non-binding referendum, voters opposed spending additional tax money on the project.

Faculty artist's show appears at Washburn

By Kris Porter
Collegian Reporter

Margo Kren, associate professor of art, "paints to know."

"I perceive painting as an experimental procedure," she said. "Surrealistic automatism is the organizing principle of my work. Each work has its own way of evolving. One may start with a few colored areas, another with spiraling lines. Each suggests something. The suggestion becomes a phantom which must be caught and made real."

For her perceptions, Kren was given the Governor's Art Award and the Distinguished Graduate Faculty Member Award. She has also received a Visual Artist Fellowship Grant from the National Endowment for the Arts and three faculty research grants from K-State.

Kren has been painting all her life but said she didn't start painting seriously until 20 years ago.

"I just always liked to draw," she said. "It came easily for me."

Kren received a bachelor's degree from the University of Wisconsin, a master's from K-State and a master of fine arts from the University of Iowa. Kren's work has become nationally known. Her paintings and prints have appeared in many selected invitational shows and juried and competitive exhibitions.

Her work has gained even more exposure through newspapers, magazines, book reviews, reviews of her artwork and public collections. Kren's latest public collection is at the Mulvane Art Museum on the Washburn University campus in Topeka through June 16.

Kren said she is a surrealist abstract painter. She said her style of painting has changed from an impersonal one to a private style.

"My most recent works are a personal translation of my vision of the interconnectedness found in a world of moving particles, thoughts and sensations," she said.

Kren's paintings, which she does on the floor of her studio, use acrylics and colored pencils on a French-made black paper.

"Black is most important to me. Black represents female. White signifies male. Black is very mysterious. It's infinite. White is finite."

A piece of Kren's work can cost anywhere from $75 up to $1,000. Kren doesn't rely on the sale of her paintings, though.

"Teaching gives me a salary, so I don't have to rely on the sale of my works," she said. "If I had to rely on the sale of my paintings, I would have to paint what the public wants to buy, but I wouldn't be painting for me. I could paint that way, but it would interfere with my serious work. Your values get confused."

The main thing Kren, who has been teaching at K-State since 1971, wants to express to her students is that they find individuality.

"They have to find out who they are. This can be the time that goes beyond their years at the university to how they solve problems that are unique to them. They have to come up with their own visual vocabulary. I encourage them not to give up. Things take time to evolve," she said.

Recently, Kren has been collaborating with a poet, Miriam Sagan, Santa Fe, on a book of poems and drawings.

Group promotes homosexual rights

By Diane Beaman
Collegian Reporter

Students who are harrassed because of their sexual preference are protected by the University's misconduct code, said Susan Scott, associate dean of student life.

Scott said the University does not have a policy that deals directly with harrassment concerning sexual preference, but such cases would be dealt with because the misconduct code prohibits "any 'hazing' or bias toward students."

"To my knowledge, there have been no cases of this type brought to the (K-State) judicial board, but that doesn't mean it doesn't happen," Scott said. "The University does not condone any harrassment of students."

Eunice Dorst, treasurer of the Gay and Lesbian Resource Center, said students may be reluctant to report harrassments.

"Even if there was a conduct policy, there's still that 'catch-22' present," Dorst said. "To complain means exposing yourself and perhaps putting a job or friendship in jeopardy.

"Students don't want to risk it, and this is where GLRC can help."

Dorst said lack of knowledge about homosexuality creates homophobia, the fear of homosexuality.

"I believe a lot of problems with homophobia are simply because people don't understand what homosexuality is about," she said. "If you don't understand, you're afraid. Criticisms come out of fear — a fear of what's unkown."

Scott said some students "are trying to come to terms with who they are and how they operate with a world that's not been very receptive of them."

The Gay and Lesbian Resource Center, a self-funded organization, provides a "safe place where people can meet to express themselves openly," Dorst said.

"Educating others is an object of GLRC, but the main purpose is to educate and support ourselves to feel the strength needed to handle what society might throw at us," she said.

The organization lost its central office on campus in 1988 due to the renovation of Holton Hall and lack of funds. Since then, GLRC has relocated off campus.

Despite difficulties with office location, the group continued meeting through planned activities such as dances, potluck dinners, discussion groups and structured workshops.

GLRC first registered with the Union Activities Board as a campus organization in 1973 and now has about 25 active members.

"By sharing ourselves with others in GLRC, we find our experiences are not so different and we gain strength," Dorst said. "We realize we're individuals and not different."

Unmanned rocket passes first test

Delivers costly satellite

By The Associated Press

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — The Titan 4 made a dazzling debut as America's newest, most powerful and most costly unmanned rocket Wednesday when it roared into space carrying a satellite to provide instant alert of a missile attack.

It was the most expensive unmanned space mission ever by the United States, with the $220 million rocket, the $180 million satellite, a $45 million payload booster stage and other costs raising the total to close to half a billion dollars.

Ten minutes after the 20-story-tall booster roared spectacularly off its launch pad, the Air Force reported it had successfully passed its first trial and had placed its military satellite in space.

"This is an important milestone for the Air Force because it's the first Titan 4, our new heavy lift launch booster which will give us assured access to space for our critical heavy national security payloads," Lt. Col. Ron Rand, an Air Force spokesman, said.

Defense Department officials decided after the space shuttle Challenger exploded in 1986 that they were relying too much on the manned shuttle for critical military payloads.

The post-Challenger hiatus in shuttle flights left about 40 vital reconnaissance and other national security payloads languishing in storage for want of a launch vehicle.

So the Defense Department more than doubled the number of Titan 4s on order and authorized development of two new smaller rockets, the Delta 2 and Atlas 2.

The Titan 4 can boost 39,000-pound payloads to an orbit 150 to 300 miles high or propel 10,000-pound packages to so-called stationary orbits 23,000 miles up. It replaces the Titan 34D booster, only one of which remains to be launched.

The United States once had a more powerful rocket, the Saturn 5 that launched Apollo astronauts to the moon, but it was discontinued after the lunar program. The new Soviet Energia rocket, the world's largest rocket, has nearly the power.

The first of the new Titans had waited a long time for its maiden flight.

SUMMER ON THE WATER

Michelle Poulin and Hilary Clark, both of Manhattan, help carry the shell "Purple Pioneer" to the cove where the crew begins its practice runs.

Crew Commodore Erin Rogers, senior in park resources management, and Paula Vale, second year student in veterinary medicine, sand down the "Flint Hills Warrior."

K-State Crew uses season for training, equipment work

Summertime activities on the water often include skiing, rafting, canoeing, speed boating or — if you're one of the "rich and famous" — a ride on a luxury liner or yacht.

Summertime on the water can also provide exercise, relaxation and the thrill of athletic competition.

If some of the activities in the first list are beyond reach because of lack of equipment or finances, take heart. The advantages in the second list can be attained by any K-State student with the K-State crew.

Though the bulk of the actual competition for the crew is during the fall and spring semesters, summer crew is alive and well at K-State, said William Buek, one of the coaches of the K-State team.

"Summer is a time for us on the crew to relax, have a good time, enjoy ourselves, work on the equipment and to try to get the community more involved in crew," he said.

The crew practices four days a week during the summer, with workouts on Monday, Wednesday, Thursday and Saturday. The Monday, Wednesday and Thursday workouts begin at 6 p.m. and usually last 2 to 2½ hours. The Saturday workouts, Buek said, are also combined with work on the equipment and last up to three hours. They begin at 9 a.m.

Beginning in early July, the crew begins to toughen its training regimen to prepare its individual teams for competition.

The K-State Crew will travel to Chicago July 15 for the Lincoln Park Boat Club Regatta on a 1,000-meter lagoon sprint course.

All racing in the regatta in Chicago is "heads-up," meaning the two boats in the water race head-to-head. Buek expects eight crews to make the trip to Chicago, and hopes K-State will be able to field eight full boats on the trip.

Races in Chicago will be in the following categories: varsity men's eight, open men's eight, open women's eight, novice eight, varsity men's four, open men's four, open women's four and novice four, Buek said.

"This regatta is a good chance to travel and maintain that competitive edge," he said. "Most summer regattas are small, and this is no exception. The summer doesn't really heat up until St. Louis."

The St. Louis competition is Aug. 12. Buek expects 12 crews from across the Midwest to compete in the Gateway Regatta in St. Louis.

The cream of the crop of crew teams, Buek admitted, compete on the East Coast and in Canada during the summer months, but that doesn't deter the K-State team, he said.

According to team president Jeff Proffitt, sophomore in agricultural economics, one thing that keeps crew team members interested in the sport during the summer when the competition may not be as strong is the love of the sport.

"It's really kind of a thrill to sit in an eight," he said. "You've got eight competitors — on time, hopefully — working as a unit, and it's kind of addicting, really.

"It's really one of the ultimate team sports. Everyone has to be together, because if one person fails to pull his own weight, the unit suffers. And one of the worst feelings is knowing you're that one person."

However, Proffitt stressed that togetherness and skill on the water are things that are built through time and experience. A novice can become a varsity team member with a little hard work and a little help from his friends.

"We're in the process of trying to get people out in the summer to teach them how to compete," Proffitt said.

"It's really a crash course," Buek added. "It's an intersession course of sorts in how to row."

K-State boasts the oldest crew in the Midwest "from Texas to Minnesota," Buek said. At age 26, K-State's crew is far from hitting its stride nationally, he said.

Crew as a sport is well-supported on the East Coast, but suffers from a lack of interest in most places in the Midwest.

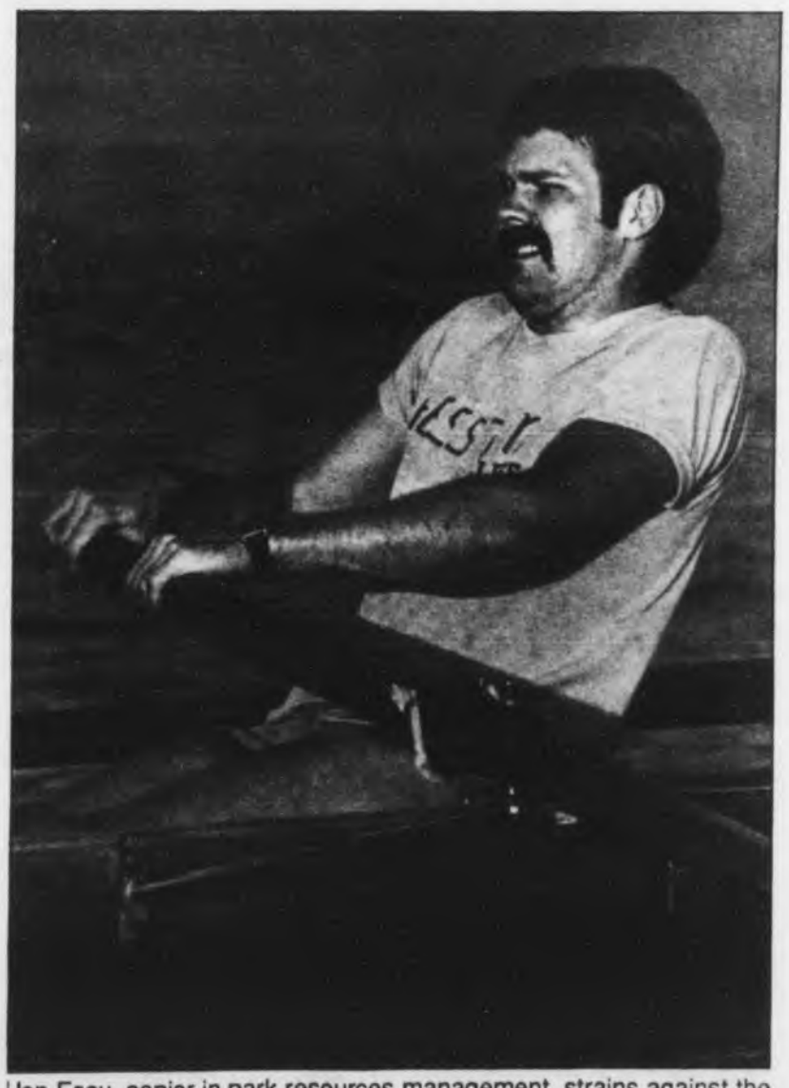
"Harvard has a waiting list to donate shells and has a $1 million boat house," Buek said. "Even at the University of Wisconsin at Madison, the budget is $250,000 to $300,000, and the school provides half of that."

The budget K-State would need in the coming year to be "truly competitive," Buek said, is between $65,000 and $80,000. That funding, except for a $1,000 addition from the K-State athletic department, comes solely from alumni support, fund raisers and team members' pockets.

K-State crew also fights the problem of logistics and visibility.

The crew practices and competes at Tuttle, which means there isn't the campus visibility here that there is at a school such as Wisconsin, where the team rows on campus.

K-State currently has 11 ergometers — or indoor rowing machines — for use in training and recently purchased a new eight-person shell.



And as laid-back as the summer might be, the fall and spring promise to be busy from the beginning.

Proffitt said the crew practices five days a week during the fall for two hours each day. Saturday practices can last three hours or more, bringing the minimum total commitment to just under 15 hours. That number is closer to 10 during the summer.

Some varsity team members spend up to 40 hours a week on the water during the school year, Proffitt said.

"The thing about rowing on the varsity level is you're looking at getting in shape and improving your speed," he said. "And that takes dedication."

If interested in joining the K-State Crew for its summer or fall programs, Buek said a prospective team member should call Mike Lockas at 537-1969 or Kirstin Wood at 776-5572 for more information.

Bad Boys new champs, but 'what ifs?' abound

Svoboda on Sports

DAVID SVOBODA
Sports Editor

The Bad Boys are champions of the NBA, and I'm glad it happened.

I just wish it hadn't happened this way.

When the Detroit Pistons downed the Los Angeles Lakers Tuesday night to win their first NBA crown and end the Lakers' two-year reign as champions, they made up for the disappointment of their disheartening loss in last year's finals.

They did it, notably, on the Lakers' home court in Los Angeles, hardly friendly confines for visiting teams. And they did it in four straight games.

But as Detroit rebounds from one of the sweetest hangovers it has had in recent history, I can't help but ask the same two-word question — "what if?" — three times and wonder if the fans in Detroit might soon be asking themselves the same question(s).

Michigan now sits firmly atop the basketball world (the University of Michigan won the NCAA crown in April), but "What if" ...

■ ... Byron Scott, the Laker guard who partially tore his hamstring before the series even started, had played in even one game? If he had, I'll bet the series would still be playing. A four-game sweep of the Lakers with Scott on the floor is highly unlikely.

Though Magic Johnson is the inspirational leader of the team, Scott has become its most consistent scorer and is one of the most feared clutch performers in the league.

■ ... Scott had decided to take more than one suit along on the road trip to Detroit? Scott looked so tacky sitting there on the Laker bench for two consecutive games in the same duds. Come on Byron, you're rich and from LA. Make a fashion statement. Or, at least, bring a change of clothes next time you hit the road.

OK, so this might not have been a serious question. But enquiring minds do want to know.

■ ... Johnson, the other half of the Lakers' explosive guard tandem, had not re-aggravated his hamstring injury in Game Two of the series?

To take Scott out of the Laker lineup is the same as taking a brand new tire from a car and replacing it with a spare. The spare might not look as flashy or have as much treadwear, but it will allow the car to run at near peak performance, if fine tuning is done.

Laker coach Pat Riley would have done that fine tuning, and appeared to have done so, before Johnson left Game Two in Detroit with his injury.

But to take Johnson out of the Laker lineup is like taking the other three tires from the car and expecting it to run like a dream with four spares instead of just one.

Earvin Johnson (Magic's real name) is the best player in the NBA today.

I'll concede that Michael Jordan may be more spectacular, but he doesn't wear any rings that say "World Champion."

To have Magic on the bench as the Lakers watched it slip away was truly unfortunate.

He makes the rest of his teammates so much better. Just ask James Worthy.

Year in and year out, Worthy is steady and solid during the regular season and seems to absolutely erupt at playoff time.

Is it that Worthy is such a great clutch performer? Yes and no.

Worthy's 40 points, a career playoff high, in Game Four prove he can score without Magic on the floor, but he had to. Remember, he was about the only scoring punch L.A. had on the floor.

But with Magic out there, Worthy gets so many easy baskets because of Johnson's creativity and knack for spotting a player who's hot and then getting him shots that it raises the player's game to different levels.

Magic is so special because he makes others around him better.

Enough about the Lakers already. Well, maybe I should say one more thing: Goodbye, Kareem Abdul-Jabbar. There, enough of feeling sorry for the team I couldn't stand until its players started getting hurt and it became an underdog.

The Pistons played the best defense in more than 30 years of playoff basketball en route to the title, and players like Isiah Thomas, Joe Dumars and Vinnie Johnson couldn't be more deserving of an NBA championship ring.

Even Dennis Rodman, Rick Mahorn and Bill Laimbeer — the Bad Boys themselves — deserve the gold they're about to be wearing.

I don't like the Pistons much, either, but I was stuck with a matchup with about as much appeal to me as East Germany vs. the Soviet Union.

At least the right Communist team won.

But what if Larry Bird had been with the Boston Celtics all year?

Think about it, Detroit. And enjoy your championship while you can.

You've earned it.

Pistons take first NBA crown

By The Associated Press

INGLEWOOD, Calif. — Having vanquished the team of the '80s, the Detroit Pistons can set their sights on becoming the team of the '90s.

"In the Eastern Conference, we have Cleveland, Atlanta, New York and the Celtics, so it will be hard to dominate," General Manager Jack McCloskey said after the Pistons won their first title in 41 years Tuesday night. "I don't understand how anybody thought we wouldn't win this final because of who we play and where we play in the East."

Joe Dumars, the unanimous choice for Most Valuable Player with a 27.3 average in the finals, scored 23 points in the Pistons' 105-97 victory, completing a 4-0 sweep of the Los Angeles Lakers, who won five championships in this decade.

It was the 15th time in 17 playoff games that the Pistons held the opposition under 100 points. They set a postseason record by holding opponents to 92.9 points per game.

"I watch all pro sports and it's defense that wins big-time," Coach Chuck Daly said. "The defensive style that we play is the style the Eastern Conference plays and I think you are going to see that style in the '90s."

Daly said it is difficult to say if the Pistons can dominate the next decade the way Los Angeles did the '80s.

"I can't count on anything from year to year," he said. "Attrition — injuries — is a big part of the future of pro ball. But we're a great defensive team and as a coach, that's the way you want to win."

The Lakers, who were going for their third consecutive championship and sixth in the 1980s, won with a fastbreak, showtime style.

Why did the Pistons win?

"We won because we've been an unselfish team all year, we won because we've been together four or five years through some tough times," Isiah Thomas said. "We won because we were dedicated to each other and disciplined enough as athletes to go home every summer and learn from our experience."

The Lakers went into the finals with an 11-0 record and a chance to become the first team to make it through the postseason with a perfect record.

Instead, it was Detroit that dominated, giving the Pistons their first title since the franchise started in 1948 in Fort Wayne, Ind.

"It's special because it's the first one Detroit has ever had," said Thomas, who was drafted in the first round in 1981 after the Pistons won a total of 37 games the previous two years.

A's win final game of series

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Dave Parker doubled home Tony Phillips with two out in the eighth inning Wednesday night, lifting Dave Stewart and the Oakland Athletics to a 2-1 victory over the Kansas City Royals.

The victory prevented the Athletics from losing three games in a row for the first time since last August and ended the Royals' six-game winning streak.

Loser Charlie Leibrandt, 4-7, had retired the leadoff batter in every inning until Phillips singled to start the eighth and continued to second when center fielder Jim Eisenreich bobbled the ball. Phillips took third on a fly ball by Luis Polonia but remained there as Mike Gallego grounded out and Dave Henderson walked. Parker then grounded his double over first base.

Stewart, 11-2, allowed seven hits in 7⅓ innings and tied San Francisco's Rick Reuschel for the major-league lead in victories. Rick Honeycutt retired the last four batters for his fifth save.

Kansas City's George Brett, still not fully recovered from the knee injury that sidelined him the entire month of May, doubled with two out in the third, advanced on Stewart's wild pitch and scored on Bo Jackson's single to give the Royals a 1-0 lead.

Parker doubled with one out in the Oakland fourth and went to third on Mark McGwire's double. Terry Steinbach walked but the fourth ball was a wild pitch.

Abdul-Jabbar makes final curtain call in Laker loss

By The Associated Press

INGLEWOOD, Calif. — It seemed like Kareem would never leave.

Out of the game with 5:18 left, but back in with 3:23 left.

Out of the game with 47 seconds left, but back in again with 28 seconds left.

Out one more time with 19 seconds left. And, this time, never to return.

Out, finally, after 20 years. Presidents are allowed to serve only eight years.

Now the fans could let loose. They cheered him, his teammates hugged him and his enemies — the Pistons — applauded him. Detroit's Isiah Thomas shook the hand that launched thousands of skyhooks.

Kareem, the 7-foot-2 center, stood by his bench, head up, neither smiling nor scowling. He listened and looked and tried to absorb the final ovation of a 20-year career filled with hundreds of them. He waved.

"I just tried to enjoy the moment and take it all in," he said.

The crowd chanted his name, "Kareem," over and over again. That single name (add the Abdul-Jabbar for the record and the record books) is enough. He never will be mistaken for anyone else.

Kareem's career ended Tuesday night in a strange way. He lost and he played poorly. He had only seven points and three rebounds. That was far too little to keep Detroit from a 105-97 victory and a 4-0 sweep over the two-time defending champion Los Angeles Lakers in the NBA Finals.

"I just wish we could have lasted longer," he said.

Some critics had said he already had stayed too long, that he was over the hill, a drag on the dynasty of the decade.

But he sank the two winning free throws that kept the Pistons from winning the NBA title in Game 6 last year. And he had a season-high 24 points and matched his season-high of 13 rebounds in a 114-110 loss in Game 3 last Sunday.

"A couple of years ago, I decided to keep playing because I thought I could help contribute," Kareem said. "I was right and the skeptics were wrong."

At 42, he was the oldest player in NBA history. Nobody played more years (20) or scored more points (44,149 including playoffs). His deeds made him a public figure in spite of his private nature.

He was in the spotlight as a college and pro player for 24 years, more than half his life.

Yet, he seemed concerned about how he will be remembered by the fans.

"I hope they will see that I played a pretty good game for a long time. I think that's evident. I'd be pleased with that," he said.

The public watched him change his name from Lew Alcindor and his religion to Muslim. The Afro-style hair gave way to a clean-shaven skull as the balding process progressed. He began wearing goggles as he aged.

Through most of the changes, his gracefulness endured. The skyhook was unstoppable.

"His shot was poetry in motion," teammate James Worthy said.

But as the years wore on, even his trademark shot changed. It didn't go in as much. And in the last of his 1,797 regular season and playoff games in the NBA, he took six skyhooks. He missed them all.

Union Copy Center to change floors

By Sandy Payne
Collegian Reporter

In order to attract more customers, the Union Copy Center will be moved to the first floor of the Union.

The center was located on the third floor where visibility has been a problem, said Jack Connaughton, assistant director of the Union.

"We've always heard comments that the Copy Center was 'out of the way,' 'too far to go' or that people didn't know it was there," Connaughton said.

The new location on the first floor is near a high traffic area, and should make the Copy Center more visible and accessible to students, he said.

Union management has been considering the move for about 1½ years, Connaughton said, but plans had been on hold because the Academic Assistance Center was occupying Room 108, where the management intended to move the Copy Center.

Academic Assistance offices have been moved back to Holton Hall, and the Copy Center will begin moving June 22.

Anna Buckland, supervisor of the Copy Center, said employees have been packing what they can to prepare for the move. The new blueprint machine has already been moved, but the biggest job — moving the Xerox machine — will be done June 22.

The Copy Center will be on the third floor until 3 p.m. on June 23. The new location will open the morning of June 26, Connaughton said.

Buckland said it will take a while to get the "bugs worked out. We will have to see how the set-up works out for us to move around, and make sure it's appealing to the eye."

Buckland anticipates the move will increase the Copy Center's business because she said a lot of people aren't aware the Copy Center exists.

"Numerous times when I first started working here people would say, 'Where's the Copy Center?'" Buckland said.

"People just need to know we are here," she said.

With the center on the first floor "It will be so much easier for people — they won't have to climb stairs, and they can wait in the lounge and watch TV while they wait if they want to," she said.

"I'm excited — I'm anticipating a positive step forward for our business and for customer satisfaction," Buckland said.

The new location will have less space than the previous location, so there will probably only be room for five or six typewriters and the computer, Buckland said.

Connaughton said the Union hopes to add another computer and laser printer in addition to the printer already available to students.

The space the Copy Center occupied on third floor is tentatively planned as the new location for the business office.

Other changes at the Union include moving the student job board to a position next to the check cashing window, and expanding the information center to include pamphlets and a suggestion box. Connaughton said both of these projects should be completed by the end of the summer, and plans to open a new snack bar in the recreation area should be completed in August.

Prison's zoning disputed in lawsuit

Quick settlement desired

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — A district judge Wednesday set a series of hearings for next month in a zoning lawsuit that state officials say threatens to delay the construction of a new prison.

Judge John W. White, an Iola judge assigned to hear the case in El Dorado, scheduled a hearing for July 7 on the state's request to have the lawsuit dismissed.

If White does not approve that motion, a pre-trial hearing is set for July 13, with the trial beginning July 25. White set aside three days for the trial.

Two Butler County residents have sued the state, contending that the Butler County Commission improperly issued a zoning permit to the state, which plans to build a $51 million, 640-cell prison about 1.5 miles east of El Dorado, 25 miles northeast of Wichita.

State officials have said they hoped to have the case resolved in district court by the end of the month, so they could prepare the site for construction by October and open the prison by July 1, 1991. They say the prison must be open by then to meet a federal judge's order requiring the elimination of prison overcrowding.

Assistant Attorney General Carl Gallagher, representing the state, said the schedule is "the best we could do under the circumstances." He said he's pleased the judge will hear the motion for a quick judgment.

"What we really were interested in was a hearing on a motion for summary judgment," Gallagher said. "I'll take it. It's better than having to wait until the end of July."

The Department of Corrections' chief spokesman, Bill Miskell, had little to say about how the schedule would affect his agency's construction schedule.

"I'm not sure even the secretary (of corrections) has been apprised of this," Miskell said. "At this point, I don't think we have a response. Obviously any delay is going to cause us concern."

Robert Myers, a Newton attorney representing county residents Charles Oursler and Eugene Herrmann, said he also could live with the schedule.

"It's going to be hectic to adhere to the schedule," he said.

Herrmann and Oursler have helped lead opposition to the prison among Butler County residents. In their lawsuit, they contend the site, zoned "agriculture-transition," cannot be used for a prison. They claim the Butler County Board didn't conduct a public hearing before issuing the zoning permit.

Attorney General Robert T. Stephan and other officials have argued the state isn't subject to local zoning laws and has an overriding interest in seeing construction begin quickly.

Concordia, in north-central Kansas, and Russell, in western Kansas, are the state's designated secondary prison sites.

Measles scare over; shots still encouraged

By Jill McMahan
Collegian Reporter

K-State seems to have been given a clean bill of health concerning the outbreak of measles that swept across campus last semester, but officials at Lafene Student Health Center are still encouraging all students to keep their immunization records up-to-date.

Dr. Larry Moeller, chief of staff of Lafene, said no cases of the measles virus have been reported since mid-May. However, with students traveling over the summer break and new students coming to campus, the possiblity of another outbreak still exists, he said.

"Currently in the state of Kansas there has been 84 cases of measles which have been confirmed by serology (blood testing) and an estimated 100 suspected cases that have to be evaluated," said Dave Miller, director of immunology at the Kansas Department of Health and Environment.

Miller said many of the suspected cases will probably test positive for the measles virus.

"We are definitely looking at well over 100 cases in the state," Miller said.

Moeller said K-State has had 12 confirmed cases of the virus and Lafene has given over 1,300 vaccinations.

Kathy Dickey, nursing supervisor at the Riley County Health Department, said no cases have been reported to their office, but they have heard of three possible cases in the community.

Moeller said people who received the vaccine from 1963 to 1967 should be revaccinated becuase the vaccines during that period were ineffective. Also, those who received the vaccine before 15 months of age need to be revaccinated, Moeller said.

"Even if someone has received the vaccination before, but is unsure (whether it was effective or not), being revaccinated won't hurt," Moeller said.

Moeller said the vaccines are always available at Lafene in the Allergy Immunization Clinic. Lafene requires a 20-minute wait after the shot before leaving. The vaccine costs $2.

According to the General Catalog, K-State requires a complete medical history, including an up-to-date immunization record, on all new students and transfer students.

"The problem is, the policy isn't enforced," Moeller said. "We are working with Anderson Hall to try and develop a new policy to make it mandatory to have up-to-date immunization records before entrance to K-State," Moeller said.

Kansas has had seven different colleges report at least one case of the measles, Miller said. Texas is the only state with more reported cases than Kansas, with 10 colleges having reported at least one case.

"It is in everyone's best interest — administrators, students and the community — to implement a new policy," Miller said.

Restored schoolhouse to open

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The Stach School, a one-room schoolhouse moved from Delia to the grounds of the Kansas Museum of History, opens on the Fourth of July, complete with original slate boards, a coal stove, about 10 desks and a 1917 copy of "The Kansas Speller."

The school will give museum-goers a glimpse of what eduation was like between 1910 and 1920, Museum Education Director James Powers said Wednesday.

"These one-room schoolhouses were successful at accomplishing widespread literacy throughout the country," Powers said. The school had students from 6 to 14 and sometimes older in a single room.

The schoolhouse was moved from a farm near Delia to Topeka in 1984. Delia, a farming community of about 180 people, is about 25 miles to the northwest, and workers had to remove the building's roof to make the journey. The school took in its first students in about 1877 and shut its doors in 1956.

The Woman's Kansas Day Club and Bernice Stach Douglas of Topeka donated the money to move it to the grounds of the history museum. Douglas' grandfather built the school, and she was educated inside.

"We learned a lot," said Douglas, 79. "We had good teachers. By the time we went to high school, we were well-learned."

She went to high school in nearby Hoyt.

"The teachers taught us everything," Douglas said. "It was just a regular school. It was wonderful."

The school has been restored to its condition between 1910 and 1920. Attitudes toward rural education became more progressive then, and the state became more involved in curriculum, Powers said.

"The state was starting to take an active role in curriculum and what books should be used," he said.

About half the students in Kansas during that decade went to a one-room schoolhouse, Powers said. There were about 8,700 school districts in the state then, compared to 304 now.

The one-room schoolhouse in American began to fade from the landscape in the 1950s, and disappeared in most parts of the country in the 1960s.

Value of pilot program questioned by educators

By The Associated Press

CINCINNATI — City education administrators are still trying to determine if students at a city high school benefited from a pilot television current-events program tailored for students.

Withrow High School was one of six schools nationwide to participate in the Channel One test program during the past academic year. The program's creator, Whittle Communications LP of Knoxville, Tenn., hopes to expand the show's use next year if the pilot proves to have been successful.

But a group evaluating Channel One for the Cincinnati Board of Education has questioned whether a study detailing improved test scores among students who watch the show is as impressive as Whittle Communications claims.

"Basically, we're dealing with only superficial data right now," said Bernard Barbadora, director of the school administration's planning, research and evaluation branch. "Until we start turning over some rocks, we'd better be careful with our conclusions."

Channel One has two minutes of teen-oriented commercials in each program, and several educational organizations have voiced concern about whether the show is too commercial for the classroom.

Earlier this month, a consulting firm hired by Whittle released a report that indicated students who viewed Channel One performed significantly better on current-events quizzes than students who did not watch the program.

The study showed that students at the six pilot schools answered an average of 53 percent of the questions correctly.

Chinese government arrests more students

By The Associated Press

BEIJING — The government Wednesday arrested more student leaders and supporters of the pro-democracy movement, and it warned the United States to stop interfering in China's internal affairs.

It also issued orders to expel two American reporters — John Pomfret of The Associated Press and Alan Pessin of the U.S. government-run Voice of America — for violating martial-law regulations that banned most news gathering.

State-run television announced the arrests of two of 21 student leaders named in a wanted list released Tuesday, and issued a new circular calling for the arrests of three leaders of an independent labor union.

Dozens of people nationwide were shown being led into police stations, some with their arms wrenched in the air in a posture called by Chinese "the airplane position."

While the mass arrests continued, the People's Liberation Army reduced its presence in Beijing and Tiananmen Square was unguarded by tanks for the first time since the military began cracking down on the democracy movement 11 days ago.

Authorities ordered Pomfret and Pessin to leave China within 72 hours.

The order against Pessin followed a barrage of criticism of VOA by the official Chinese media as a rumormonger.

Pomfret also was accused of having contacts with student leaders and of obtaining unspecified state secrets.

Louis D. Boccardi, president and general manager of the AP, said in New York that he "protested in the strongest terms to the Chinese government this unwarranted assault on fair and factual reporting."

In Washington, White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said the government will file protests with Chinese officials about Pomfret and Pessin, who were only "trying to print the truth."

Richard Carlson, VOA director, said the action was "a step backward for the media in China, which over the past couple of years have demonstrated some steps forward."

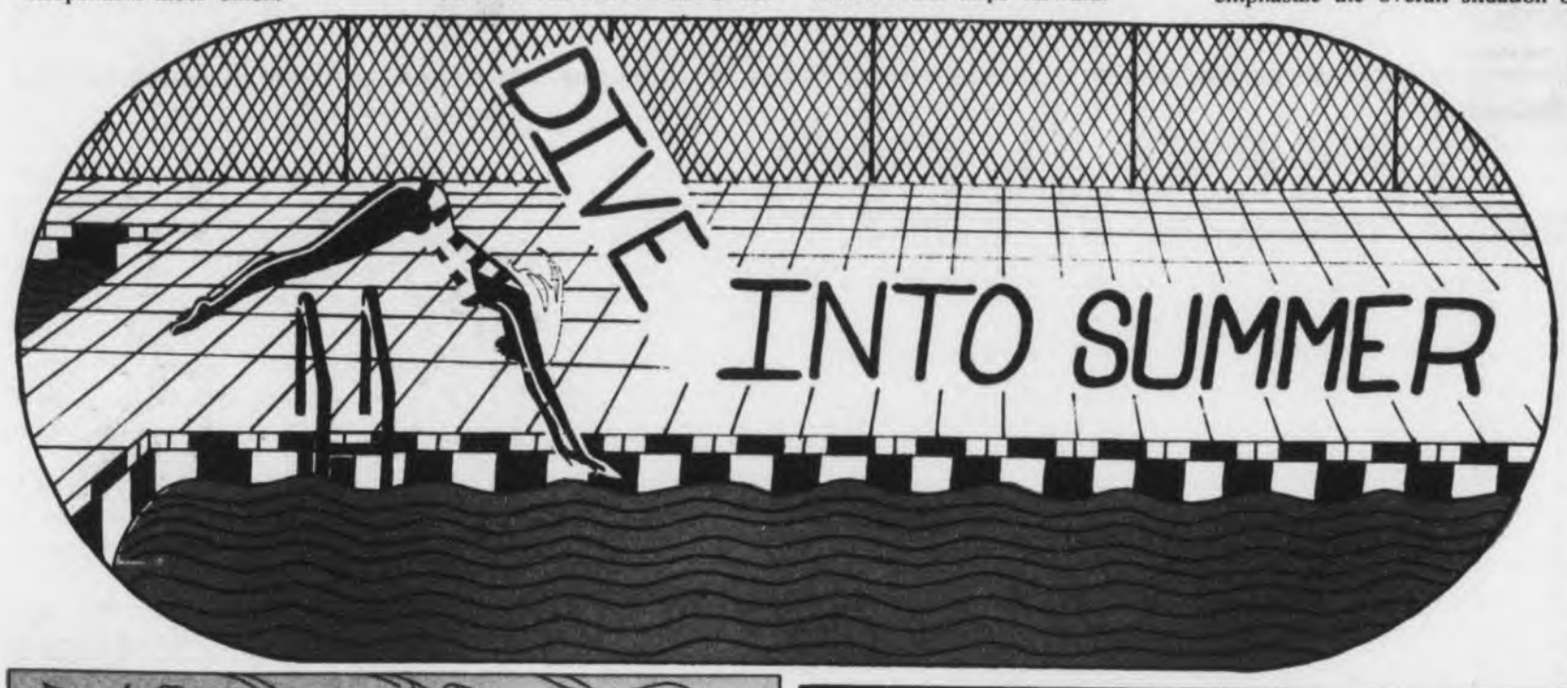
The expulsion orders appeared to be part of China's campaign against the United States for sheltering leading dissident Fang Lizhi and his wife at the U.S. Embassy after the army opened fire on pro-democracy protesters June 3-4.

The military action ended seven weeks of demonstrations by students and their supporters for a freer society. More than 1,000 people have been arrested since the crackdown began.

The Communist Party newspaper, the People's Daily, said in a front-page editorial: "What kind of people these so-called 'democracy fighters' are and the role that some Americans played is now all too clear."

"We hope the U.S. side will emphasize the overall situation of Chinese-American relations ... stop interfering in China's internal affairs and not do anything to hurt bilateral relations," it said.

Television reports said two student leaders, Zhou Fengsuo and Xiong Yan, were arrested. They were among 21 leaders accused of "inciting and organizing counterrevolutionary rebellion" whose names and pictures were flashed repeatedly on TV on Tuesday.



The reports said Zhou was turned in in Xian by his sister and her husband, who works at an air force academy there. Zhou, 22, was a physics student at Qinhua University in Beijing. No details were given of the arrest of Xiong, 24, a graduate student of law at Beijing University.

A Beijing student leader not on the circular, Fang Ke, turned himself in to police in the central city of Wuhan, the TV report said. A leader of an independent worker union set up to support the students was arrested after fleeing to nearby Hebei province, the report said.

Beijing Radio said 32 protesters were arrested at the railway station as they tried to flee Beijing.

The dozens of tanks that had been in Tiananmen Square disappeared overnight, and 20 remaining armored personnel carriers were covered.

Tiananmen remained closed to pedestrians and guarded by a perimeter of martial law soldiers, but traffic now flows on the streets that surround the 100-yard square.

At dawn on the Konza Prairie, Nigel Tucker, a sound librarian for the British Broadcasting Corporation, heads out to record background noises to accompany the film "The Land of the Eagle," a BBC documentary about North America to air next year.

Prairie sounds recorded for film

By Craig Hamrick
Staff Writer

Nigel Tucker, a sound librarian for the British Broadcasting Corporation, has traveled to exotic places like Madagascar and Kenya to record sounds made by the native wildlife.

Last week, Tucker spent four days on the Konza Prairie outside Manhattan to add the sounds of bison to his library in England. The collection includes more than 70,000 sounds ranging from those made by exploding seed pods to the ones cod make while mating.

Tucker's recordings will be used as background noise for a film shot earlier this year, "The Land of the Eagle," an eight-part BBC documentary about North America that will air on U.S. public television early next year.

The sound and film were recorded separately because the requirements for each medium are different.

"I can only work between the noise of aircraft and traffic, while they can film where it is very noisy," Tucker said.

Before he entered the Konza Prairie, Tucker said he was warned to be careful.

"They said, 'Don't go and annoy the bison,'" he said.

Tucker records mostly background noises, such as wind blowing through grass, a sound which cannot be precisely imitated in a studio.

Tucker records in stereo, using digital audio tape, a technology he said is widely available in Europe but not the United States. The cassette tapes resemble small VHS videotapes and provide clarity similar to compact discs.

"A year ago we were lugging around big reel-to-reel machines that weigh a ton," he said. "The DAT units are less expensive and more lightweight. But I just bought the machines three months ago and there is already an updated version on the market. With the changing technology, you don't know what to buy now."

He said DATs may be superceded by the end of the year, when CDs that can be recorded on are due on the market.

Before working for the BBC, Tucker was a tour guide for bird watchers around the world.

"I sort of fell into the job with the BBC," Tucker said. "The man who was running the sound library about four years ago was falling behind with processing and identifying sounds that they had collected. In between tours I used to go into the studio and identify them. There was so much work to do at the library that I decided there were enough people guiding tours, and the library was where I was needed."

The man who was running the library retired and Tucker assumed the job. His experience as a tour guide and bird watcher helps him identify sounds, but it is still a difficult job.

"Sound is one of those things you can easily forget," he said. "A song has a melody you can retain, but wildlife sounds don't seem to have any particular structure you can easily recognize."

During his years of world travel, Tucker has been to Pakistan, Tunisia, Israel and Turkey. He said he never felt he was in danger from foreign governments or wild animals, but that doesn't mean he has never been at risk.

"The threat of danger depends on which airline you travel on," he said, laughing. "I think there's

Civil rights leaders say court decisions to cause setbacks

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Twenty-five years after Congress tore down the trappings of racial segregation in America, civil rights leaders are reeling from setbacks in the Supreme Court and calling for urgent measures to save protections they say are endangered by the latest decisions.

"What is required is legislative action to address every single point the court made and sooner rather than later," U.S. Civil Rights Commission member Mary Frances Berry said following the court's latest decision last week.

Failure of Congress to act, she said, could cause "a bottomless pit of agitation" similar to the turmoil that gave rise to the landmark Civil Rights Act of 1964. The measure, signed into law by President Lyndon B. Johnson 25 years ago next month, banned segregation in public accommodations and its Title VII paved the way for court action to end to bias in hiring and promotions.

"The court is essentially saying, hey, Title VII, let me give you a good birthday present," Berry said. "And the birthday present is that we could care less about civil rights or history or any of it. We are the Reagan Court and take that."

Her bitter tone was echoed by numerous civil rights leaders.

"Redneck justice meted out with country club manners is no less painful than the real thing," Molly Yard, president of the National Organization for Women, declared in a statement.

In a 5-4 decision, the court on Thursday barred use of an 1866 civil rights law to fight racial harassment, although it did unanimously uphold the law itself, originally passed to help freed slaves.

It was only the latest in a stream of 1989 decisions that alarm civil rights leaders.

On Jan. 23, the court in a 6-3 decision put limits on what state and local governments may do to implement affirmative action plans, striking down a Richmond, Va., program that set aside a portion of public works projects for minority-owned contracting companies.

On June 5, the justices in a 5-4 decision made it more difficult for workers to prove job bias through the use of statistical data.

On June 12, in a 5-4 decision, the court expanded the possibility for white men to challenge longstanding, court-approved plans providing preferential treatment for minorities and women in government jobs.

The court's new turn has been welcomed by conservatives as a long overdue change in direction. Conservative legal analyst Bruce Fein said "legions" of lawsuits could be expected, challenging longstanding consent agreements in government hiring cases. The wave of litigation will mean progress, he said, because much of the time white males were not party to the initial agreements.

University eliminates conversion of motel

By Sarah Kobs
Staff Writer

University administrators and KSU Foundation members have decided not to convert the University Inn into a residence hall, said Pat Bosco, associate vice president for institutional advancement.

Bosco said the main reason for eliminating the possibility was the limited time until the start of the next semester.

"K-State needed (the University Inn) for immediate use this fall," he said.

The community thought it was important to have the University Inn as a hotel and convention center, he said.

The University had considered acquiring the motel for a long time, although it was a remote possibility, Bosco said.

Currently, housing at K-State consists of 4,077 residence hall beds and 550 apartments for married couples. Fraternities can accommodate 1,504 men and sororities have space for 783 women.

"We still have space within the residence halls, and we're still accepting dorm contracts," Bosco said.

K-State is continuing to aggressively recruit students for the fall semester, he said. Application numbers are approximately 13 percent higher than last year, said Barbara Dawes, associate director of admissions.

Freshmen are no longer required to live on campus although University officials encourage new students to live on campus, Bosco said.

An aggressive coordinated campaign for off-campus housing would be used if a need for additional student housing arises, Bosco said. The University will have a listing of apartment vacancies in Manhattan and will encourage Manhattan homeowners to offer extra rooms to K-State students, he said.

Student imbalances prompt program revisions

By Diane Beaman
Collegian Reporter

Reciprocal programs between K-State and the University of Kansas and universities in Missouri are being revised to counter an imbalance in the number of students from each state in the programs.

The programs, offered since 1964, allow students from Missouri to pursue degrees in Kansas in programs that aren't offered in Missouri, but pay in-state fees.

Problems arose when the number of Missouri students seeking degrees at K-State and KU outweighed the number of Kansas students seeking degrees in the three participating Missouri colleges, causing an economic loss to the state of Kansas.

The Kansas Board of Regents and Missouri Coordinating Board of Higher Education are negotiating a plan that will balance the revenue between the two states.

Although K-State has 10 reciprocal programs, a majority of students from Missouri are majoring in architecture, said Mark Lapping, dean of architecture and design.

Architecture students from Missouri are essential, Lapping said, and the agreement has caused a 60 percent increase in the department's enrollment over the last four years.

"We need their numbers because they give us the critical mass to run our classes effectively and efficiently," Lapping said. "If we didn't have the large number of Missourians at K-State, I think it's fair to say the enriched depth and diversity may not be here."

Paul Duffendack, a professional architect in Kansas City, Mo., and a 1968 K-State architecture graduate, helped revise the agreement between the two states.

"The program before had been an open-door policy until the number of students utilizing it became too great and actions had to be made to accommodate all interested students," said Duffendack, who was recognized at the spring commencement for his contribution to the new policy.

The new enrollment policy between the states is based on the number of students in the program, costs incurred during degree completion and university fee differences. The new reciprocal policy will have state quotas. If quotas are met and additional students still are interested, the students' resident colleges can pay the difference between the fees.

"It is estimated that the cost to educate one dental student equals what it costs to educate 5.56 architects, so a change based on numbers alone was crucial," Lapping said.

Students eligible for the exchange program will be ranked on high school performance, academics, ACT scores, class rank and financial need.

"I think the attitude of both states is to look for opportunities each state can supply, and then venture trade programs offered in other areas of the country to make education complete," Duffendack said.

"As a taxpayer, now if I take my dean's hat off, I think this is a smart plan. Why must everyone duplicate when each state can develop centers of excellence?" Lapping said.

Other reciprocal programs offered at K-State include bachelor's degrees in bakery science and management, architectural engineering and grain science and industry.

Dr. Charles Deyoe, professor in grain science and industry, said the reciprocal agreement is a positive benefit, considering two of the largest baking industries, Continental Bakery Company and Ralston Feed Company, are based in St. Louis, Mo.

The Department of Grain Science and Industry at K-State is the only program in the nation offering bachelor of science degrees in three areas: milling science, bakery science and feed science.

China arrests more students

BEIJING — A member of the ruling Politburo was quoted Sunday as making conciliatory remarks about dissent, but official media reported more arrests of student activists and demanded that the United States give up dissident Fang Lizhi.

State-run media also said Sunday the government will require people who are granted travel visas by foreign countries to obtain two exit permits from the Chinese government instead of one.

The move, apparently aimed at keeping dissidents from fleeing, requires citizens to obtain exit permits before and after they apply for visas. In recent days, large crowds seeking visas have formed outside foreign embassies.

Qiao Shi, a standing member of the Politburo, told a meeting of non-party officials Saturday that "it is very natural that people have different views and doubts" under the current "complicated" situation.

The comments, reported Sunday by the official newspaper People's Daily, were more conciliatory than past remarks by hardliners who now control the Communist Party.

Since the suppression of pro-democracy demonstrations this month, the government has been waging a nationwide campaign to produce greater loyalty to the party.

Ivory seized in Hong Kong

HONG KONG — Customs officers on Sunday seized 448 tusks and other ivory products worth $2.6 million that were to have been smuggled to Japan, the Customs and Excise Department reported.

Customs officers found the material during an inspection at the cargo terminal at Hong Kong's airport, the department said in a statement.

On Friday, the Hong Kong government banned the import of raw ivory in an effort to protect the African elephant.

This month, the Customs Department formed a task force to stop any illegal ivory imports or exports.

The 10,874 pounds of ivory products were packed into eight consignments that had been declared as watches for export, the statement said.

Voter turnout low in Poland

WARSAW, Poland — Barely 25 percent of the voters cast ballots in Sunday's runoff elections, in another rebuff to the Communist Paty following Solidarity's triumph in the first round.

The nationwide turnout was 25.31 percent, the lowest in post-war Poland, according to State Electoral Commission spokesman Bogdan Szczesniak.

It appeared the turnout would be higher than 25 percent only in six provinces where Solidarity candidates were in the contests.

Initial reports showed Solidarity candidates leading in five of the six provinces, according to local Solidarity Citizens Committees. They had no figures from the sixth province.

Most of the parliamentary seats being contested in the runoff were reserved for candidates of the Communist Party and its allies. The communists had hoped for a good turnout but most voters stayed home in areas where there was no opposition challenge.

Plant safety hurt by secrecy

WASHINGTON — Widely publicized breakdowns of safety at the government's nuclear weapons plants are rooted in a perverse devotion to secrecy and poor management, congressional investigators said in a report issued Sunday.

The safety problems, most of which came to light over the past two years, were aggravated by a lack of outside scrutiny and effective oversight from the Energy Department, which pays private companies to run the facilities, the report said.

A variety of congressional committees and independent panels have been studying problems in the weapons complex, which includes 16 major facilities in 12 states. Some of the key facilities are closed for repairs and improvements.

The latest blow to the weapons program was struck at the Rocky Flats plutonium fabrication plant, near Boulder, Colo., where FBI agents swooped in June 6 to check allegations of a cover-up of illegal storage and waste disposal practices.

Police use tear gas on party

WICHITA — Police dropped tear gas on a crowd at a block party Saturday night after rocks and bottles were thrown at officers.

Col. Paul Goward said that police went to the scene in northeast Wichita about 11 p.m., looking for a reported shooting victim.

He said while police were working their way through a crowd, some people began throwing rocks and bottles at officers.

The officers backed away and called in reinforcements, Goward said. Eventually, tear gas was dropped from a police helicopter, dispersing the crowd by 1 a.m., he said.

Goward said a few officers received minor injuries from bottles and rocks. Six people were arrested for disturbing the peace, he said.

Capt. Haden Henderson said he would investigate the disturbance today.

The reported shooting victim was never found, police said.

Drought affects Army exercise

FORT RILEY — The Kansas drought has claimed yet another victim: the Army's "slide for life" at Fort Riley.

For years, the exercise has been one of the main events at Camp Warrior, a training session for ROTC cadets held each summer at the post near Junction City.

Under usual conditions, the cadets climb a 200-foot tower near a lake, grab a pulley at the top and speed across the lake on a rope before dropping into the water.

But this year, Maj. Robert Shepherd said, low water levels made the exercise too dangerous. The water level has dropped from its normal 6 feet to 18 inches.

"Anything below 5 feet is considered too dangerous by our staff," Shepherd said.

He said the Army would substitute a canoe exercise.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Campus organizations are encouraged to use Campus Bulletin. All announcements must be submitted by 11 a.m. one day prior to publication. Announcements for Monday's bulletin must be in by 11 a.m. Friday. However, publication is determined by the amount of space available on a first-come, first-served basis and is not ensured. Information forms are available on the shelf outside Kedzie 118. Forms should be left in the box after being filled out. All submissions must be signed and are subject to verification. Questions should be directed to the Collegian's campus editor in Kedzie 116.

THE GRADUATE SCHOOL has scheduled the final oral defense of the doctoral dissertation of Pongchan Na-Lampang at 2 p.m. on Friday in the Call Hall Seminar Room. The dissertation topic is "Cage- and Floor-Rearing Effects on Behavior, Productivity, Feather Condition and Livability of White Leghorn Pullets During the First Year of Production."

Music symposium begins

Today marks the beginning of the first Kansas State University Summer Music Symposium, a week-long workshop that is open to all music educators.

Topics will include creativity, right brain/left brain, aesthetic education and the master teacher's role as a music educator. Special guest Jack Kreitzer, a nationally known aesthetic educator, will teach some of the sessions on creativity along with K-State music faculty and visiting clinicians who will teach various interest sessions.

Sequel offers nothing new

By Mark Schmeller

The secret to the success of "Ghostbusters" was that it could appeal to two different types of audiences. Kids were thrilled by the slick special effects and "grossed out" by the icky, gooey, ectoplasmic slime, while older moviegoers could laugh as Bill Murray coyly wisecracked and guffawed in the face of Armageddon.

Tellingly, "Ghostbusters II" opens with ghostbusters Ray Stantz (Dan Aykroyd) and Winston Zeddemore

Review

(Ernie Hudson) working as entertainers at a children's birthday party. In this case, art imitates life, for "Ghostbusters II" has more neato ghosts and plenty more slime (indeed, a whole river of pink slime) for the kids, but the novelty and sly, offbeat humor of the original "Ghostbusters" aren't quite there.

The plot of "Ghostbusters II," or what I could make of it over the screams of a theater full of excitable yard apes, comes off as a Shirley MacLaine book gone haywire.

Apparently, all the negativity and bad vibes of New Yorkers have metamorphosed into a river of pink slime under the city. Vigo of Carpathia, a demonic spirit from medieval times hiding in the Manhattan Museum of Art, hopes to engulf New York in the slime, inhabit the body of Dana Barrett's (the everlovely Sigourney Weaver) baby and thereby gain world hegemony.

Of course, the plot is not all that important, except that it manages to lead to all sorts of wacky, zany situations in which cast members get "slimed" or "slime" others. Slime seeps from the sidewalks, pours out of water faucets, and belches forth from walls. Kids will love it.

For the rest of us, "Ghostbusters II" does have a few good moments, most of which are provided by minor characters like the nerdy accountant Louis Tully (Rick Moranis) and a goofy museum curator named Janosz Poha (Peter MacNicol).

Bill Murray's talent for snide tomfoolery is squandered. He spends too much time playing Mr. Goodbar for Sigourney Weaver in the romantic scenes and not enough time poking fun at the egghead mumbo-jumbo and new-age theorizing of ghostbusters Dan Aykroyd and Harold Ramis. Without Murray, Ramis and Aykroyd are simply not funny.

"Ghostbusters II" fits the typical sequel mold. Unable to do anything new with a movie that was essentially an overgrown "Saturday Night Live" skit, the producers of "Ghostbusters II" have simply rehashed the most popular elements of the original.

Apparently Aykroyd and Ramis, who wrote the screenplay, think audiences will laugh at the sequel out of a feeling of nostalgia for the original. I didn't.

So if you are under the age of 12, I recommend this movie. Otherwise, don't bother. On a scale of zero to five dollars, I'd only pay two dollars to see "Ghostbusters II."

Rare books an important gift for Farrell Library collection

By Catharine McSwegin
Collegian Reporter

A former associate director of Farrell Library has donated a rare collection of books that may be the most important collection given to the library this decade, said John Vander Velde, Farrell special collections librarian.

Gerald and Donna Keyse Rudolph donated the collection, which is named after Donna Rudolph's father, D.C. Keyse. Gerald Rudolph was the K-State associate director of libraries from 1963 to 1970.

The collection consists mainly of philosophy books, but also includes literature and scientific works, Vander Velde said.

The collection consists of about 500 books with more than 300 titles that range in date from the 15th to 20th centuries.

"The oldest book has yet to be determined, but there is a document from King Henry VII's reign about real estate dated February 1490," he said.

"The primary reason to understand and appreciate the books was that (Gerald) Rudolph had chosen them with the purpose in mind to represent the art of printing."
— John Vander Velde, Farrell special collections librarian

Many donations are received by the Special Collections Department, Vander Velde said, but the Keyse collection is unusual because the "care the books were assembled with and knowledge of the book collector make it significant for us to have the collection here."

"The primary reason to understand and appreciate the books was that (Gerald) Rudolph had chosen them with the purpose in mind to represent the art of printing," he said.

The books, from all over the world, were bought from book sellers and at library book sales. Others were given to the Rudolphs, Vander Velde said.

ID card system to help simplify students' lives

Students today live amid a swarm of plastic and paper cards. The variety found in the average K-Stater's wallet usually includes a driver's license, a meal ticket, a Wildcat card, a K-State ID card, a fee card and a few credit cards, as well as a mixture of additional cards from various places with various uses.

Soon, however, the number of cards needed by the average K-Stater will be reduced as the new Vali-Dine card system is expanded for use on the entire campus.

The Vali-Dine system, which is already used in the Wildcat Card program in the Union, will enable students, faculty and staff to use K-State ID cards for meal tickets in residence halls, Wildcat cards and access cards for the residence halls when they have been locked for the night.

In the future, plans for the card system include use in Lafene Student Health Center and Recreational Services. While those possibilities won't materialize until next spring, the other benefits will be available this fall.

The new system should make things easier for all card users. By using an established system such as Vali-Dine, which is already used on this campus and others, the University is taking steps to streamline the basic day-to-day activities on campus.

The card system includes several important safeguards which will prove to be valuable additions to the campus community. These include the use of a school code on the card which will prevent a person from using his ID card at another school using the Vali-Dine system.

Another feature is the lost card code that will prevent a person from finding or stealing an ID card and then using it. The newest, most current ID card will be the only card the computer will accept.

Another safety benefit of the card is its use in residence hall security. Having card-operated locks on residence halls for after-hours entry will encourage residents to quit doing things such as propping open side doors of the residence halls. These activities, while they may seem convenient at the time, actually leave doors wide open to the danger of intruders.

The new ID system proves to be more convenient, despite early problems encountered in encoding some of the ID cards. With a little patience, it should not only increase the benefits offered by the K-State ID card, but should also eliminate some of the clutter in the average student's wallet.

Other Perspectives

In May, the American College Health Association released results of its yearlong study of AIDS on college campuses. The University of Kansas was one of 19 schools nationwide that participated in the study. Student health centers provided blood samples from students who had sought medical attention. The study found that two out of every 1,000 students tested HIV positive.

Each school was to provide 1,000 blood samples for the study. However, not all schools met the quota. So the study was conducted from 16,861 blood samples.

The study indicates that AIDS is a problem on college campuses. KU students should realize that they could be affected.

Ten of the 19 schools participating in the survey had no HIV-positive cases. But five institutions had rates of infection ranging from four students per thousand to nine students per thousand.

The 0.2 percent rate of infection is higher than was expected and indicates that more preventive measures, such as education, need to be taken on campuses. There is no question that the AIDS virus is widespread.

Precautions needed for STDs

Commentary

Dolly Wittman
Guest Columnist

Editor's note: Dolly Whitman is a junior in radio-television.

When people make the decision to become sexually active, they must not only think about whether they are mentally prepared but also whether they are physically safe from contracting sexually transmitted diseases.

STDs are known to many but only talked about by few. At Lafene Student Health Center, students and faculty can learn about STDs and how to protect themselves from contracting an unwanted disease.

"When in doubt, check it out," said Larry Moeller, director of Lafene. Moeller is trying to get the point across to sexually active poeple that they must be informed about their partners and about their risk of contracting STDs.

Health educators at Lafene give presentations with films and discussions about STDs to living groups. Moeller also talks to a sexuality class about STDs. There is literature available in the waiting areas at Lafene.

The possibility of contracting an unwanted disease should be enough incentive to make anyone want to know all they could. But most people feel it could never happen to them.

It can and has happened to many.

Thomas F. Ryan, a physician at Lafene, said, "Most women don't have symptoms of STDs. Men are much more symptomatic." This means that everyone should have regular examinations, to be fully protected.

Chlamydia is a disease that infects both men and women. Chlamydia can cause damage to the reproductive organs and sterility. Symptoms of the disease are discharge or burning from the genitals and low-grade fever. The disease is transmitted by sexual contact and can be transmitted to infants during birth. Chlamydia is treated with antibiotics.

Genital herpes is a very contagious, recurrent infection, caused by a virus. At present, there is no cure for the disease.

Two types of herpes are known. Type one is most common and causes cold sores in and around the mouth. Type two causes genital sores associated with sexual contact. Symptoms of herpes are itching or pain in the genital area. Blisters will appear in the genital area. The virus can lie dormant for a while but the infection does not disappear.

There is no scientific evidence that condoms can prevent herpes, so abstinence is the only way to be sure of not spreading or contracting the disease. If a woman gives birth while infected, it could cause serious damage to the child. A new drug, acyclovir, has offered some hope for herpes patients.

Genital warts are caused by the Human Papilloma Virus. There are 50 types of the virus, and thirteen can cause genital infections. The disease is practically invisible. Only 30 percent of infected persons develop visible lesions. There are usually no symptoms. The warts can spread to other areas of the body. Treatment is available but the disease is not necessarily curable because of the long incubation period and absence of symptoms.

AIDS, Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome, is caused by a virus that is spread through bodily fluids such as semen and blood. The virus is very fragile and cannot live long outside the body.

About 66 percent of AIDS sufferers are men who have had sex with other men. Seventeen percent are intravenous drug users who share needles. Eight percent are people who fit into both categories. Four percent acquired it through heterosexual contact.

AIDS is also a risk for hemophiliacs and other people who receive blood transfusions. Infected women can transmit the AIDS virus to their children during birth or through breast feeding. There is no evidence that AIDS can be transmitted by saliva or casual contact. Symptoms of AIDS include excessive tiredness, unexplained weight loss of more than 10 pounds, sore throat and a persistent cough.

Gonorrhea is detected by burning and discharge for males, but women often have no symptoms until the disease has developed into Pelvic Inflammatory Disease. Women can have fertility problems and men can have infection of the prostate or epididymis. Both can have infection of the joints, skin and bloodstream. Antibiotics are used to treat gonorrhea.

Syphilis causes a painless ulcer at the point of contact, usually the genital area. Later symptoms include a rash and swollen lymph nodes. If left untreated, the disease can affect the brain and heart and can even be fatal.

The fact that STDs exist is unfortunate, but there are ways to help protect yourself. The following list offers some suggestions.

- Do not engage in high-risk sexual activities.
- Use condoms.
- Do not have multiple sex partners.
- Don't have sex at all.

An individual who is possibly infected with an STD should see a doctor immediately. The partners of any infected person should also be treated.

Don't be embarrassed if you think you have an STD. Lafene is to serve and help you be healthy. Moeller sums it up best when he said, "Date and relate before you mate."

Mark Schmeller
Collegian Columnist

Having recently acquired a cable hook-up for my television, I now spend countless hours "channel-grazing," which is what happens when a person with a chronically short attention span — such as myself — meets up with a remote control.

The moment I get bored with the lukewarm sitcom re-run on CBS, I go to CNN and, the moment I get offended by the umpteenth feature on the maturation of Dan Quayle, I flip over to MTV, where what radio programmers call "summer hits" and "power ballads" and what I refer to as "Styx-inspired banality" is being played with sickening regularity, then over to ABC, then to ESPN, and so on and so on. ...

Thus, the remote control only reinforces the behavior of the individual with a short attention span. Needless to say, channel grazers soon become incapable of any prolonged or insightful thought. Political, social, cultural and philosophical issues fly by like cable channels.

This, of course, is all a very elaborate excuse for why I don't have a real column this week. My mind wanders, and what it notices is not particularly relevant, but it is mildly amusing.

For example, what ever happened to the so-called "carefree days of summer?" As I graze channels and magazines, I come across numerous warnings about Lyme disease — this summer's big scare. Last summer's big scares, skin cancer and that big hole in the ozone layer, have apparently joined herpes, swine flu, Chilean grapes and communists in the panic-button hall of fame.

But Lyme disease? Lock up your daughters, America. The deer tick, though only a quarter the size of your regular tick, packs a mean wallop. It carries a bacterium known as a spirochete, which leads to a small rash, which then leads to fever and finally to meningitis, encephalitis, paralysis and other nasty things.

But don't panic. Most cases are expected to occur up north, and only 5,000 cases of Lyme disease were reported nationwide last year. Percentage-wise, out of a population of more than 250 million, that's ... well, you figure it out for yourself.

Nevertheless, it's best to be cautious. One doctor on television advised us to watch out for the deer tick by checking for any freckles that move suddenly. Sounds like a great way to spend a summer, doesn't it? I've been wondering how I'm going to watch the ones on my back. If I can't see the ones on my back, "freckle-grazing" might get real boring real fast.

I've also noticed that the new promotional campaign for the Kansas Lottery is "License to Win," which is a tie-in to the new James Bond flick "License to Kill."

I've got nothing against the Kansas Lottery, but doesn't it seem like it could have found a movie which is a little more thematically related to the scratch and win action of the lottery experience? It's hard for me to see how the lottery could be an integral part of the globetrotting James Bond lifestyle. Does it seem plausible that 007 would, after a night of Kansas derring-do, stop by the Mini Mart for a six-pack and a crack at an instant cash prize?

But, never being one to criticize, I can see potential in the James Bond promotion. After all, there have been more James Bond movies than all the Rocky, Rambo, Indiana Jones and Karate Kid sequels combined, thereby giving the Kansas Lottery Commission a richer promotional motif. Future lottery advertisements could implore customers to "'Never Say Never Again' to the lottery," or to "rake in the cash with 'Moonraker,'" or to "scratch a lottery ticket with your 'Goldfinger' and win."

In other news, the National Rifle Association has decided to start fighting for the rights of Chinese students. Recent NRA advertisements have made the none-too-subtle suggestion that had the Chinese government not had such strict gun-control laws, the brutal crackdown in Tiananmen Square would have never occurred. Had the students been armed with semi-automatic assault rifles and hollow-point bullets, there wouldn't have been any violence.

You know, I'm going to have to change my mind about the NRA. I always thought its members were a bunch of reactionary boobs and closet fascists, but I was wrong. Instead, they are avid supporters of human rights movements and non-violent protests. I haven't looked into this, but I'd be willing to wager that Martin Luther King Jr. and Mohandas Gandhi had NRA memberships. In the future, I expect the NRA to pass out guns and ammo at all civil rights and gay rights marches.

But like all revolutionary organizations caught up in the day-to-day struggle for basic human freedoms and decency, the NRA lacks true vision. After all, what good will AK-47s and UZIs do against tanks and armored personnel carriers? The people of the world need more than basic armaments, they need the latest in high-tech weaponry. Otherwise, non-violent protest will become impossible.

Or, to paraphrase Chairman Mao, political power is wielded with rifles. I'm sure the NRA would agree.

Strange wins 2nd straight U.S. Open title

By The Associated Press

ROCHESTER, N.Y. — Curtis Strange rode a string of pars through the opening provided by Tom Kite's collapse on Sunday and became the first man in 38 years to make a successful defense of his U.S. Open golf championship.

Strange, the first repeat winner since Ben Hogan in 1951, made 15 consecutive pars before taking command with a 12-foot birdie putt on the 16th hole.

That gave him a two-shot lead with two holes to go and, for the first time in the long day's play, a smile broke across his face.

Strange, who beat England's Nick Faldo in a playoff for this title a year ago, won his second American National Championship with a closing 70 and a 278 total, two under par on Oak Hill's weather-ravaged east course.

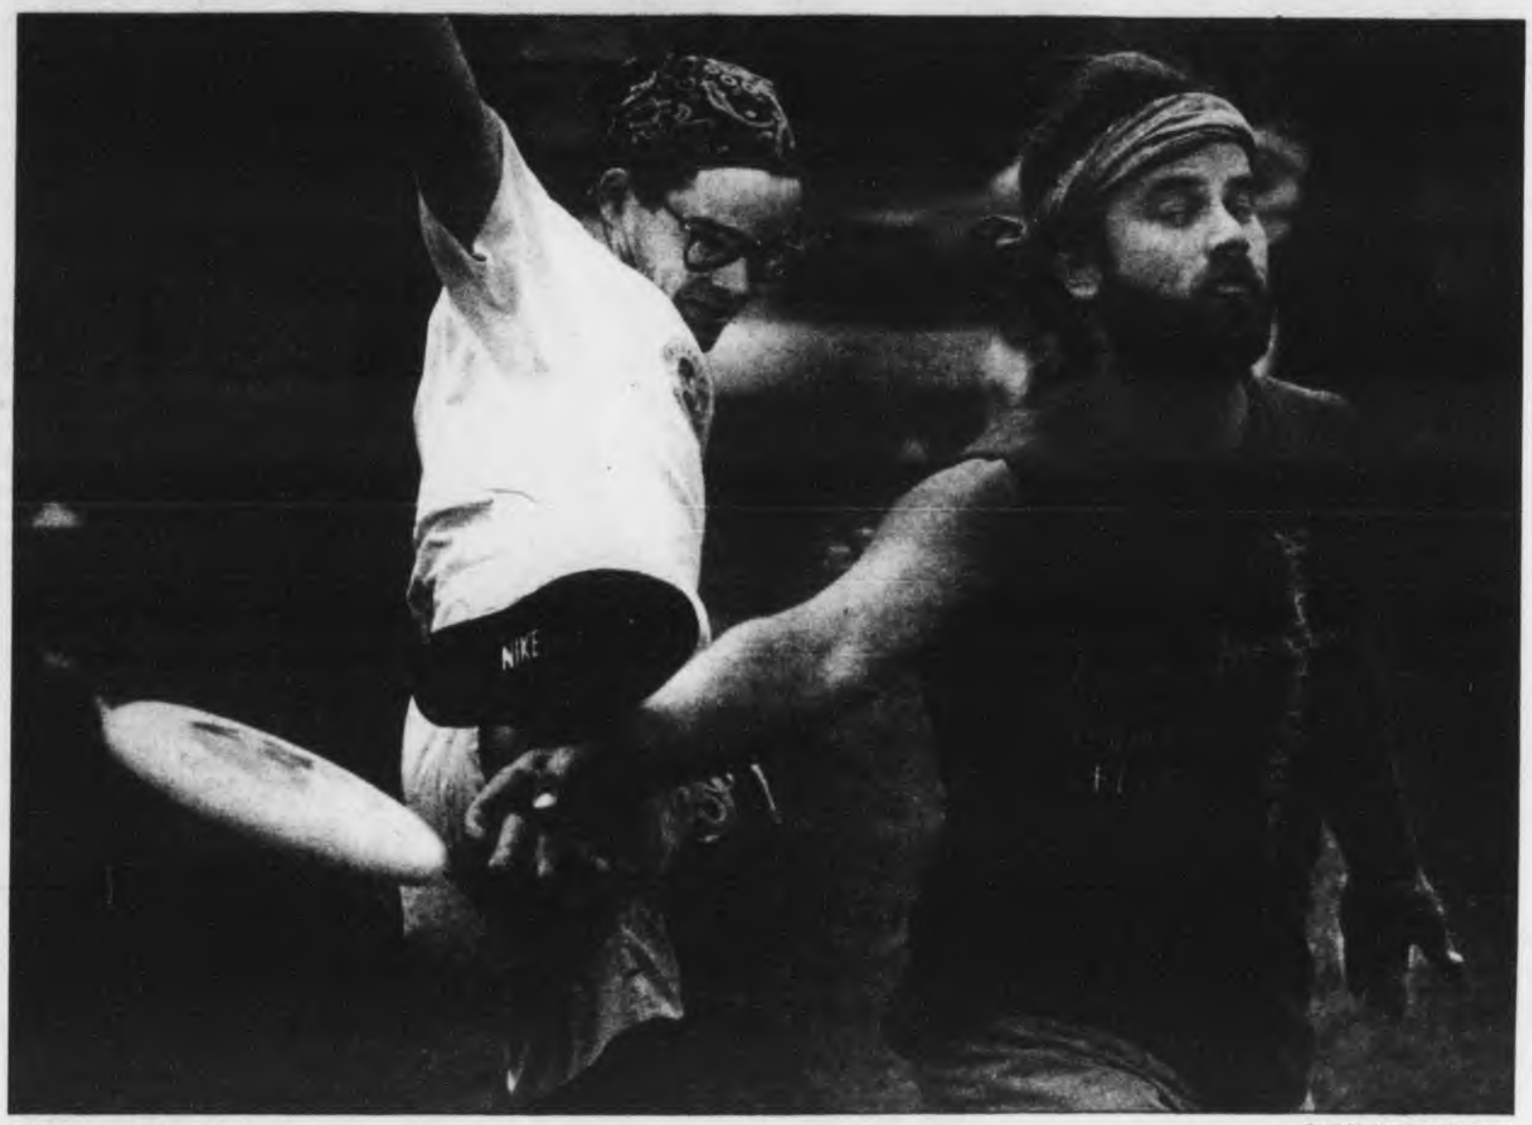
His only lapse of the day came on the final hole when he made a meaningless three-putt bogey.

Although his wife, Sarah, agonized with rolling eyes in the gallery, it merely cut Strange's victory margin from two shots to one.

Chip Beck, stumpy Ian Woosnam of Wales and Mark McCumber tied for second at 279, one under par.

Woosnam got close only with a last-hole birdie that finished off a 2-under-par 68.

Beck and McCumber each reached the 18th green with a chance to tie. Both had a shot at it as they got their approach shots on the green.



Beck left his long birdie attempt short and finished with a 68. He could only sit and wait and hope for a Strange collapse.

McCumber followed Beck to the 18th and had a slightly shorter putt to tie. It curled away and he dropped into a crouch and ducked his head. He finished with a 69.

Brian Claar, never in the title hunt, was next with a final-round 69 and 280 total.

But it was the collapse of Kite that turned the tournament around.

"A freaky round," said Kite, who has come close often in golf's majors and has yet to win one.

Cleveland beats KC, 4-1

CLEVELAND — Greg Swindell won his fifth straight game, helped by Mark Salas' tie-breaking two-run homer in the sixth inning as the Cleveland Indians beat the Kansas City Royals 4-1 Sunday.

Swindell, 9-1, allowed nine hits, struck out six and walked two while pitching his fourth complete game. Swindell, who gave up a sixth-inning home run to Bo Jackson, has a 2.47 earned run average.

Rookie Kevin Appier, 1-2, allowed three runs on eight hits in six innings as Kansas City lost its third straight game here after winning the series opener.

With the score 1-1, Appier walked Pete O'Brien, leading off the sixth. After Cory Snyder flied out, Salas hit his second home run into the right-field seats.

Joel Skinner's run-scoring single in the eighth made it 4-1.

Wildcat baseball team successful in 1989

By David Svoboda
Sports Editor

As Wichita State won the NCAA College World Series June 10 in Omaha, a few baseball fans in Lawrence and Manhattan were no doubt shaking their heads and wondering, "If they can do it, why can't we?"

The answer to that question is far too complex for even the most devout Jayhawk or Wildcat fan, coach or administrator to answer unless the person asking the question has got a few hours to listen to the reply.

But K-State's program, under Coach Mike Clark, inched ever closer to making a possible trip to Omaha more than a pipe dream with its performance on the field during the 1989 season.

K-State went 32-23 on the year, the second straight 30-win season under Clark, marking the first time in the school's history the team won more than 30 games in consecutive years. It was also the first time since 1981 and 1982 K-State finished above the .500 mark in back-to-back years.

Included in the season were wins against World Series participants Arkansas and North Carolina, and victories against three major collegiate baseball powers in the state of Oklahoma.

K-State's season opened with four wins against foes the Wildcats were expected to defeat. Then came a trip to California during spring break.

It was a trip that Clark looked forward to prior to its beginning, even though he had two freshmen in the starting lineup on the infield and an untested pitching staff.

Eight games later, the Wildcats had compiled a 5-3 trip and had knocked off two Top 25 foes along the way.

The first stop on the trip was San Jose, where the Wildcats beat the then 12th-ranked team from San Jose State 4-3 in the first of two games.

Fresno State's Pepsi/Me and Ed's Classic tournament was the final portion of the western swing, and it ended with K-State finishing fourth.

Included in the tourney was a 7-6 victory over North Carolina's Tar Heels, who would later join Wichita State in Omaha as one of the NCAA's elite eight teams.

The Big Eight season opened with a trip to Norman, Okla., to face the Sooners. Oklahoma took the series, 3 games to 1, but the Wildcat win was K-State's first in Norman since 1981.

The second weekend of Big Eight play might have been the one that cost K-State its chance at an upper division conference finish.

Kansas came to Manhattan for a series that saw K-State take the opener 11-8. K-State, however, lost both starting center fielder Sean Collins and starting right fielder Bill Barnard in that opening game, and went on to lose the final three games of the series.

Collins, who would eventually be named All-Midwest region, missed a total of 10 games due to his injury, and Barnard's kept him from participating in 13.

The third conference series was a weekend set at Columbia, Mo., against the Missouri Tigers. The lone highlight in Missouri's 3-1 series win was K-State's lone victory, a 13-1 triumph in which David Hierholzer went the distance.

The fourth Big Eight series saw K-State hit rock bottom. The Cyclones of Iowa State swept the four-game series in Ames, as K-State scored but one run each in three games of the series.

It was unlikely the Wildcats were going to get well on a trip to play Top 25 foes Oral Roberts and Arkansas, but that's just what they did, splitting two-game sets with both schools.

The highlight was pitcher Jeff Peterson's 7-2 win over Arkansas, another College World Series participant, in the trip's finale.

Home stands against Nebraska and Oklahoma State closed the Big Eight year, with a win over the Cowboys in the final game of the regular season that ended the campaign on an "up" note.

Besides Collins, who was voted first-team All-Big Eight and All-Midwest, and Hierholzer, who was voted first-team All-Big Eight, outfielder Russ Ringgenberg and pitcher Bill Schafer were named honorable mention All-Big Eight as well.

Mary Jane Finn, Manhattan, stands with Austin the llama after receiving a birthday Llama-gram from some of her fellow workers. The Llama-gram is the idea of Lisa Bailey, owner of Flint Hills Llama.

New business uses live llama to deliver Llama-grams, gifts

By Kevin Kramer
Staff Writer

For $25, Austin will appear at your door with two baskets strapped to his sides that carry various gifts, cards and flowers. One gift in his baskets, a small sack, has the greeting, "A special gift from me to you/ a bag of llama doo-doo/ for gardens and flowerbeds."

Austin is part of a business endeavor of Lisa Bailey, owner of Flint Hills Llama, who began "Llama-grams" as a way to meet people and educate them about llamas.

Advertised as a unique way to deliver a message, "Llama-grams," use a llama to surprise young and old for birthdays, anniversaries, graduations and even Father's Day.

Only Austin is used for the Llama-grams, Bailey said.

"I dress him up with a hat or appropriate costume for the occasion — like a tie for Father's Day," she said.

Bailey charges $25 for an in-town delivery and an extra fee for mileage for out-of-town delivery. She caters to what people want by offering to deliver gifts, cards, balloons or flowers.

"It was a very unique birthday and Father's Day surprise," said David Mickey, assistant superintendent of Manhattan Schools, who received a Llama-gram. "I thought I was going to get a belly dancer. I enjoyed the llama much more. The dancer would have probably embarrassed me to death."

Bailey got the idea of doing Llama-grams from a woman in California who has a similar service called "Llama Limo." Bailey placed a newspaper ad advertising her service about a month ago and received seven calls the first day.

"Most of the calls were people who were curious about what a 'Llama-gram' was and whether it was a real llama or a couple of people dressed up in a costume," she said. "But since then I have been averaging about one Llama-gram a day."

Most of the Llama-grams have been for adult birthdays, but Bailey said she has delivered a number of other messages for different occasions.

"We were fairly busy around graduation time sending out congratulations," she said.

Most of the Llama-grams are delivered outside, Bailey said, but she has made deliveries to offices.

"If I take my llama inside, I have the people ordering the Llama-gram find out if it's OK," Bailey said. "There has never been a major problem with an inside delivery and Austin has never had a 'bathroom accident.'

"When there is an inside delivery, there is usually someone there to help out. Generally, it's the person ordering the Llama-gram hiding in the background," she said.

Bailey will do Llama-grams for most any occasion, provided the environment is safe.

"Sometimes Austin has a bit of trouble on tile floors and around a lot of children, but after a moment or two he adjusts to the situation," she said.

Llamas are very personable animals, very much like most house pets, Bailey said. She said they make great pets and are easy to keep. One acre of land is enough for three or four llamas.

"One llama can be kept in an area the size of a backyard and have hay supplemented for feed," Bailey said. "Llamas keep quite clean and are mostly odor-free."

When full grown, llamas can weigh 200 to 500 pounds, depending on the breed and sex of the animal, she said. Newborn cria, or young llamas, weigh about 28 to 30 pounds.

Dr. Bill Able, associate director of animal sciences and industry, said llamas are becoming another enter-

Skin cancer curable, preventable

By Kris Porter
Staff Writer

Students have long had a love affair with the sun, but the sun is one of the major contributors to one of the most prevalent of all cancers, skin cancer.

It is estimated that 500,000 Americans will develop skin cancer this year alone, but skin cancer is preventable and curable.

Skin cancer is caused by excessive and long-term exposure to the sun. The face, neck, ears, forearms, chest and hands are the most common areas because of their exposure to the sun.

Studies show that during the summer, people are more likely to have a skin cancer treated than any other time during the year.

"Males are more likely to develop skin cancer than females," said Dr. Robert Cathey, a Manhattan dermatologist. "This is primarily because of their outdoor occupations."

Women, however, are more likely than men to be checked for skin cancer.

There are warning signs of skin cancer. If any growth, mole, sore or discoloration persists or appears suddenly, medical attention should be sought.

"Skin cancer is rarely painful. People are surprised when they have it because it doesn't hurt. It rarely will hurt," Cathey said.

Three types of skin cancer exist: basal cell, squamous cell and melanoma.

Basal cell is the most common cancer found in Caucasians.

"We see one or two cases of basal cell a year," said Dr. Paula Davis of Lafene Student Health Center. Blacks develop the cancer on the palms of the hands, soles of the feet, under nails and in the mouth.

Basal cell appears as a small fleshy lump on the head, neck and hands. It will not spread quickly, but if left untreated, it will bleed, scab over and repeat the same cycle.

Squamous cells appear as red scaly patches or nodules. They develop on the ears, face, lips and mouth of fair-skinned people. Squamous cell cancers will increase in size if left

"We attract students from across the country and the program we have set up is a very attractive one," Deyoe said.

Doug Olsen, senior in milling science management, said the origin of students is very diversified, and the small class sizes allow students to share what it's like in other parts of the country and world.

"The country uses K-State as a teacher and as the students come here, we help educate each other even more," Olsen said.

Deyoe said although many students are educated in Kansas, the large job market in grain science is outside the Kansas borders.

"It used to be in the milling industry that mills were built where the wheat was, but now they're being built where populations are growing," Deyoe said. "Jobs are where the mills are, near the big cities."

untreated. The cure rate for both basal cells and squamous cells is 95 percent.

Melanoma is the most dangerous of the skin cancers, and can be fatal. The most common areas are the upper back of men and women and the chest and lower legs of women. Melanoma can appear suddenly or begin in or near a mole. The cancer will appear in mixed shades of tan, brown, and black. Melanoma is difficult to treat because of its tendency to spread.

prise among livestock breeders. They are still lucrative in the livestock industry's exotic classification, but are growing as a breeding animal because of the growing number of people who want to have one.

Bailey said Kansas has 13 breeders who have begun their own state organization.

"We plan to have our own display of animals at the State Fair this year and 4-H is starting to recognize llamas as a livestock project, especially in the rural areas," she said. "Raising llamas may seem to be a bit of a fadist thing, but with the high demand it's a good business investment because they are becoming very much in demand."

Llamas range in price from $10,000 to $130,000 for a good breeding female and $2,000 to $164,000 for a sire, she said.

"Do not let the high prices discourage buying one," Bailey said. "Llamas as backyard pets can be purchased for around $400 to $500 and as large pack animals for about $2,000."

Also, the llamas provide wool as another source of income. The wool collected from Bailey's five llamas is sold in the Manhattan area for $2 to $3 an ounce.

"I really do not look for Llamagrams to be a booming business," Bailey said. "I haven't decided if I'm going to continue with it during the winter with a lot of indoor work. But I'm still open to the idea of deliveries around Christmas, New Year's and Valentine's Day."

"This is my own project and I'm having fun with it for now."

without Czechoslovakia at the negotiating table," he said. "Czechoslovakia didn't fare very well. It wasn't a very glorious result."

Civil rights forces scorn such comparisons, saying there were ample chances for white men to become parties to the initial agreements and that in many cases they did participate in fairness hearings.

"I don't think most of the consent decrees were entered into in a star chamber with everybody else excluded," said Patricia Ireland of NOW.

probably more danger from flying in aircraft than most wildlife."

In one instance, his flight plans were delayed 36 hours when the tires on his plane exploded during takeoff.

"When I boarded I noticed that the flight was incredibly full, and on takeoff 15 of the plane's 16 tires blew, just before we were to leave the ground," he said. "Later, when the flight finally took off, it was noticeably lacking a few people from before."

During his trips abroad, Tucker takes music tapes of groups such as Genesis and Fleetwood Mac to remind him of home. He said American television seems familiar, because programs such as "Dallas," "Cheers" and "Moonlighting" are among the most popular in England.

Tucker said American driving habits are different from those in Europe. He has no trouble staying in the right lane, but speed limits get annoying, he said.

"On our motorways, the speed limit is 70 miles per hour, so it's not unusual to see people driving 80 or 90," he said. "It appears very slow here, especially with the nice, wide-open roads."

Tucker is content with his job's combination of office and field work.

"Sometimes I can be stuck in the studio five or six days a week processing sound, so it has its tedious side," he said. "But I get to go out and do recording, too, so it's a nice balance."

One of the animals Tucker would like to see is the Komodo dragon, a lizard native to the Indonesian islands of Komodo and Flores, but he doesn't know if it will be possible to see one as part of his job.

"Someone just came back from filming them," he said. "Apart from a few hisses, I don't think they make much noise."

China executes protesters; more condemned to death

By The Associated Press

BEIJING — China executed three men Wednesday and up to 17 others were condemned to die for their roles in student-led protests that challenged the power of the Communist Party.

The executions in Shanghai were carried out despite appeals for clemency by President Bush and other Western leaders.

Premier Li Peng denounced the foreign criticism.

He told visiting Foreign Secretary Humayun Khan of Pakistan that most of the millions of Chinese who took part nationwide in marches, sit-ins and hunger strikes for a freer society would be treated leniently "even if they had extremist opinions."

But Li said, "The tiny minority of criminals will be punished according to the law."

The meeting was the first top-level contact with a foreign delegation since the crackdown began June 3-4, when the army fired on students and supporters in Beijing to end their pro-democracy demonstrations.

More than 1,600 arrests have been reported nationwide since, and the nation's highest court has urged lower courts to deal swiftly and severely with protest-related cases.

In addition to the those sentenced to death Wednesday, 11 — including the three executed — were condemned previously.

The Shanghai men were convicted of setting a train on fire on June 6 after it plowed into a barricade set up by protesters, killing six people.

They were shot to death in front of a crowd Wednesday after Shanghai's highest court rejected their appeals, a spokesman at the city's Foreign Affairs Office said. He said he did not know other details and refused to give his name.

The national television news reported the executions but did not show them carried out. The men were Xu Guoming, a brewery worker; Yan Xuerong, a radio factory worker; and Bian Hanwu, who was unemployed.

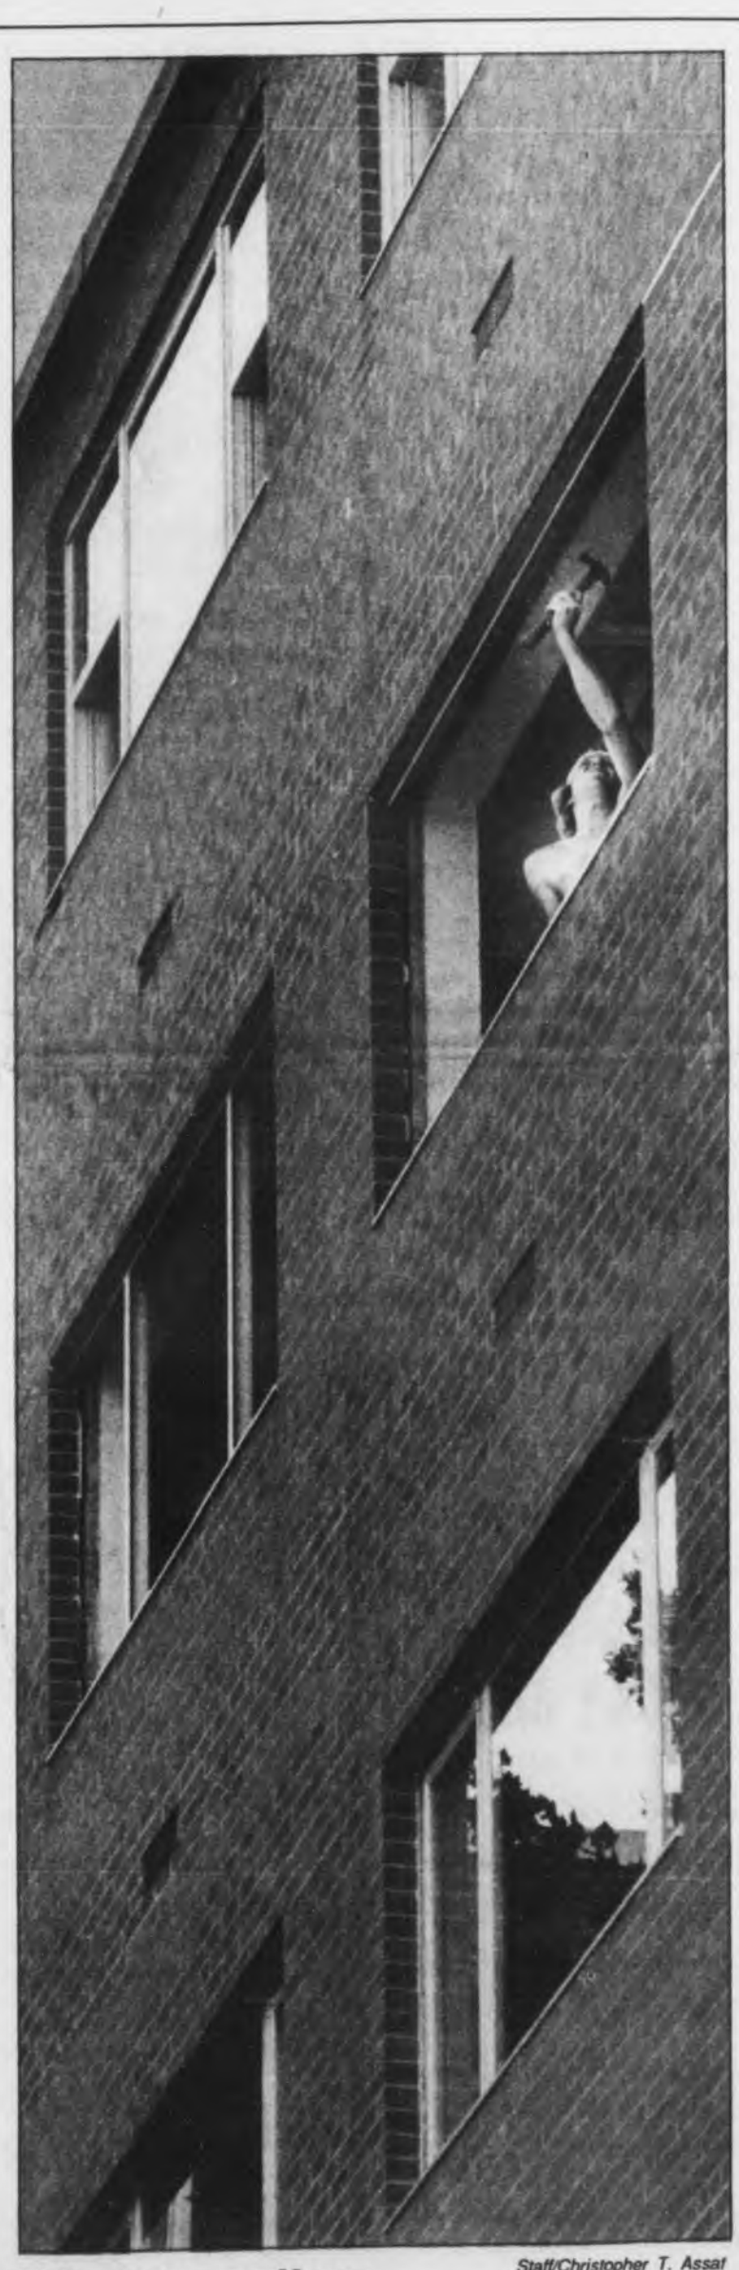
Beijing radio said 45 people who "seriously endangered public order" were tried in front of an audience of 10,000 people in Jinan in eastern China's Shandong province.

It did not give details of their alleged crimes, but said some were given the death penalty. Others were given death sentences suspended for two years with the possibility of being commuted to life in prison, the radio reported.

An editor at the state-run Jinan Daily said 17 of the 45 were given death sentences, but said he did not know if the figure included those given two-year reprieves.

The public trial in Jinan and public executions in Shanghai underscored China's emphasis on using the death penalty as a deterrent.

China does not release figures on executions and not all are reported in the official media. By Western count, more than 10,000 people were executed in a period of several years after an anti-crime drive began in 1983.



Death sentences usually are carried out by a bullet to the back of the head. In recent years, relatively few have been carried out in public, a practice reserved for especially heinous or political cases in which the government wants to send a message to the public.

Death sentences sometimes are commuted to life in prison but there is no record of a sentence being overturned on appeal in Communist China.

Li defended China's actions as necessary to put down a "counterrevolutionary rebellion."

"When China is in difficulties for the time being it sees clearly who are

Foreclosure may close inn's doors

By Paige Gantz
Staff Writer

A foreclosure action against the University Inn may close the motel's doors Aug. 1 unless the owners resolve a $2.6 million mortgage to FirstBank.

Until last week, the University had been considering using the motel as a residence hall to solve possible housing shortages next sememster.

"For almost two years the owners, (Kansas State Partners, in Atlanta) have been up to their ears in back payments," said Charles Hostetler, chairman and chief executive officer of FirstBank.

Hostetler claims that two options — either finding a private buyer or selling to the KSU Foundation, which owns the land on which the University Inn is located — could prevent the hotel from closing Aug. 1.

He said the Foundation was "anything but cooperative," and did little in trying to work with the bank to solve the problem.

David Weaver, property manager for the Foundation, said it is not obligated to the bank to ensure that Kansas State Partners makes payments.

"We cannot waive the rent payments for the land," Weaver said. "I can understand where (Hostetler) is coming from, but our hands are pretty much tied."

If the motel does close, Manhattan will not only lose the motel, but K-State may lose the Hotel and Restaurant Management program that allows students to train in a working environment, said Charles Partlow, director of the program. The program is offered by the Department of Hotel, Restaurant, Institution Management and Dietetics.

"We feel the shutdown of the University Inn would definitely be detrimental to our program," Partlow said.

However, the department restructured its programs in the spring, and phased out the agreement with University Inn. Students are now sent to the Holiday Inn & Holidome for the program training.

"We felt the University Inn was no longer a learning environment," Partlow said. "Despite the great management that the inn was and is currently under, the hotel is in need of refurbishing. Too many things need upgraded before the inn would again be an ideal learning environment and prepare proper practice in the hospitality industry."

Donald MacLaurin, instructor of hotel operations, said although the program isn't currently offered, the department may need the facilities for training again.

"Our program is growing so rapidly," MacLaurin said. "The number enrolled in hotel operations has already increased 300 percent in the Recent KJHK format changes won't effect KSDB operations

By Martha Kropf
Staff Writer

The recent changes in the structure and format of KJHK radio at the University of Kansas will have little or no effect on the policies and operations of K-State's KSDB radio, said Lee Buller, adviser for KSDB radio and assistant professor of journalism and mass communications.

The changes initiated at KJHK June 14 include a music performance policy that requires KJHK announcers to attain approval of written playlists before they are aired, according to the June 14 issue of the University Daily Kansan.

Also, staff members who are not journalism students will be required to sign a participation contract affirming KJHK's role as an academic laboratory and listing certain standards of professionalism. These standards include Federal Communication Commission rules, said Max Utsler, chair of the radio and television sequence in the William Allen White School of Journalism and Mass Communications.

Buller said although KSDB has different policies than KJHK, KSDB also follows the FCC rules.

"This is a federally-licensed operation. We have to follow the rules of the Federal Communications Commission and the courts," he said.

Students dictate what goes on the air within the criteria of the FCC rules, Buller said. According to the rules, music must not be obscene, it must meet standards of decency and must not demonstrate any overt violence toward men or women.

Formerly, announcers at KJHK could play anything they wanted.

A student music committee at KSDB listens to the records to ensure they meet FCC rules, and can be played on the air.

"(They) have to be reasonable in choosing music," Buller said.

Chris Collins, music director of KSDB and junior in radio and television, said he makes a playlist of songs on his computer. The list gives announcers 30-45 minutes of music to play during a given hour, and the disc jockeys are allowed to play what they want the remaining time, Collins said.

Students hold executive positions on KSDB, but are chosen by faculty, said Collins.

"It was a pretty tough screening deal," said Collins. "(Faculty members) made it clear what they wanted."

Collins said the faculty has never censored the music he has chosen to play.

Utsler said that students at KJHK requested that the constitution of the station state that one of the purposes of the radio station should be to promote new music. However, Utsler said they turned them down because they felt the purpose of the station was only to be a lab.

"It performs a very valuable role in our academic program here," said Utsler.

Buller said that KSDB faculty try to encourage new ideas. "Our idea is if you want to do something special, all you have to do is explain the idea (to the faculty and the executive staff,)" he said. If it is a good idea about a new format or program, it can be on the air, he said.

Buller is the general manager of KSDB, but the operations manager takes care of the day-to-day operations, Buller said.

"A lot of what I do is to carry (the policies and procedures) out," said Joe Montgomery, operations manager and graduate student in journalism and mass communications.

Montgomery said he does not make policies, but he has some say in appointing music committee members.

"In any organization, there have to be rules and guidelines," Buller said. "We do have those. You can move anywhere within the boundaries."

The new policies of KJHK do not take "a single bit of decision-making out of the hands of the students," said Utsler.

Republicans start inquiry of Lukens

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — House Republicans, seeking to defuse a political problem, took the unprecedented step Wednesday of triggering an investigation of one of their own: Rep. Donald E. Lukens of Ohio.

The action on Lukens, who was convicted last month on charges involving sex with a 16-year-old girl, came on a show of hands in a closed-door meeting of the Republican Conference, the organization of all GOP House members.

Minority Leader Robert Michel, R-Ill., sought in a statement to portray the move as part of a Republican "total commitment to standards of behavior for members of Congress which

Enrollment center leaves Farrell

By Kevin Kramer
Staff Writer

The Enrollment and ID Center is being relocated to the second floor of Willard Hall this week to create space for a University mainframe computer system in the basement of Farrell Library.

Donald Foster, Registrar, said the move is only temporary; the center will remain in Willard only until renovation begins there. It is undetermined when renovations will begin.

The move will be completed in two steps, Foster said. The ID center and offices are scheduled to be moved to Willard 209-210 first. The remaining enrollment processing area will be moved later this summer.

Because most enrollment occurs at the departmental level and other areas instead of at the enrollment center, the move won't interfere with student enrollment this summer, Foster said.

The location in Willard will be slightly smaller. It will include a processing area with a permanent bank of computer terminals, Foster said. When not being used for enrollment, the terminals will be used to train individuals who work with registration and pre-enrollment, dean's office personnel and departmental users of the computerized student information system.

Operations will not be interrupted at the enrollment center, which will open in Willard Hall on Monday, said Sharon Hauck, director of the center.

"The move from Farrell Library to Willard has to be very smooth and without any major problems or interruption of services," she said.

"The only thing leaving the basement of Farrell Library is the Enrollment Center. The library is retaining its serial operations, gifts, and a conference room in the basement," Brice Hobrock, dean of libraries, said.

University Facilities remodeled and renovated Willard to make the new location more accessible for handicapped. The building now has a loading area on the east side plus two elevators inside that provide access to the center.

"By moving to Willard, facilities renovated and made improvements to the building's doors, restrooms, and drinking fountains to meet the specifications for handicap access,"

Iran, USSR warm relations

MOSCOW — Iran and the Soviet Union ended nearly a decade of icy relations Wednesday when Iran's Parliament speaker invited Mikhail S. Gorbachev to visit Iran and the two leaders agreed on wide economic cooperation.

Speaker Hashemi Rafsanjani told the Soviet president that Iranians hold him in high esteem and look forward to meeting him, the official Tass news agency reported.

It said Gorbachev thanked Rafsanjani for the invitation and said frequent high-level contacts are appropraite as relations warm. No date was set.

Only a handful of Third World leaders have visited Tehran since the 1979 Islamic Revolution transformed the Iranian capital into a city known for mobs of religious fanatics shouting, "Death to America! Death to Russia!"

U.S. soldier guilty of spying

FULDA, West Germany — A U.S. serviceman who once had been described as a model soldier pleaded guilty Wednesday to charges he gave defense secrets to East Germany.

Spec. 4 Michael A. Peri changed his earlier plea of innocent just as his court-martial began, said Army spokesman Maj. Samuel Taylor.

Peri, 21, of Laguna Niguel, Calif., could be sentenced to life in prison on the espionage charge.

The charges were filed against Peri after he disappeared from the 11th Armored Cavalry Regiment in Fulda in February.

At the time, military officials said they were baffled because Peri had a reputation as a model soldier and at one point had been recommended for a "Soldier of the Month" award for his superior performance. Peri returned voluntarily 11 days later.

He was charged on March 16 with espionage. Officials said he had given communist East Germany secrets on U.S. plans for the defense of West Germany.

Judge restores driving rights

CHARLESTON, W.Va. — A judge temporarily restored driving privileges Wednesday to a married teen-ager whose license was suspended under a law aimed at curbing a high rate of school dropouts.

Kanawha County Circuit Judge Paul Zakaib Jr. set aside Michael Mean's license suspension for 30 days to allow attorneys to file briefs in the case.

Means, 17, of Charleston, who dropped out of the ninth grade last year, appealed a Department of Motor Vehicles decision to suspend his license under a first-of-its-kind law aimed at reducing the state's dropout rate, now about 17 percent.

Under education reform law passed by the Legislature last summer, students under 18 who miss more than 10 consecutive days of school or have 15 unexcused absences must give up their driving privileges.

Means' attorney, Christopher Butch, argued that the law was in conflict with another state law permitting students to drop out of school at age 16. The law, he said, was condemning Means and his family to poverty because he was unable to earn the money he needed to support his family without a driver's license.

"The law is not only draconian, it's unreasonable in this case," Butch told the court Wednesday.

Means' 16-year-old wife, Tonya, who is expecting a child in August, said the state was preventing her husband from caring for her and their unborn child.

New venture to make chips

SANTA CLARA, Calif. — Seven semiconductor companies announced Wednesday they plan to join forces in an unprecedented venture to produce computer memory chips and ease the chokehold Japan has on that vital market.

The firms contributed "seed money" for the establishment of U.S. Memories Inc., a corporation that will make the memory chips known as DRAMs that are crucial to the U.S. electronic and defense industries.

"It is clear that the time is right for a collective memory manufacturing venture in the United States to improve America's market position in what is truly a critical technology," said Sanford L. Kane, president and chief executive officer of the new company.

If approved, the venture would break new ground in the federal government's attitude toward cooperation between competing companies. The government has been getting steadily more permissive toward deals that once would have run afoul of antitrust laws on the theory that concerted action is necessary to meet foreign competition.

Student wins Batmobile

RICHMOND, Va. — Patrick McLynn's new car is a cream puff, but when fully armed, it has retractable armor, concealed machine guns and explosive charges.

McLynn, an engineering student whose goal is to become a toy designer, won an MTV giveaway of the Batmobile used in the movie "Batman." He is to collect his prize at a theater Friday from actor Robert Wuhl, who plays a reporter in the movie.

McLynn is working his way through Virginia Commonwealth University by tending bar part time and doesn't own a car, but he's not sure what he'll do with the Batmobile.

It's 20 feet long and more than 11 feet wide, and the engine has been removed for safety reasons.

"The car was the real prop used in the picture. But its motor was too heavy, the ratio wasn't according to regulations. It has only been driven by stunt men," said Greg Drebin, an MTV publicist.

Luckily for McLynn, the prize also includes $25,000 for batgas. He said he will invest the money in certificates of deposit and use the interest to buy a motorcycle.

Court prevents executions

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. — George Gilmore and Leonard Laws were returned to their normal cells Wednesday after it became apparent it could be weeks or even months before courts give state officials another chance to execute them.

Gilmore and Laws, partners in a 1980 crime spree, were both scheduled to die early Wednesday but courts issued last-minute stays of execution, giving their lawyers more time to appeal.

Prison spokesman Dale Riley said the two were removed from isolation cells at the Potosi Correctional Center and returned to their normal cells near the other 67 men awaiting execution in Missouri.

Riley said Gilmore "was smiling from ear to ear" when he was told his execution had been stopped.

"He had remained so confident, he wouldn't even talk about who his witnesses would be," Riley said.

Laws, who had asked that appeals be dropped and had already decided which relatives would get his TV and radio, was inititally disappointed with the news of the stay, Riley said.

"His demeanor changed. I think anybody would be happy to have 90 more days," Riley said of the U.S. Supreme Court's decision to give attorneys three months to file further appeals in Laws' case.

Union promotes Connaughton

After nine years as assistant director of operations for the K-State Union, Jack Connaughton has been promoted to associate director of building service and operations.

Jack Sills, Union director, said Connaughton's commitment to excellence has helped the Union achieve its national recognition. The New York Times listed the Union as one of the top five student unions in the nation.

Before coming to K-State, Connaughton was the general manager of bowling centers and worked at student unions at the University of Wisconsin's Milwaukee and LaCrosse campuses. He toured full-time as a member of the Professional Bowlers' Association.

Connaughton was a recipient of the Governor's Special Award in Wisconsin for dedicated service in the promotion of the state, and a 1968 winner of the Association of College Unions' International Achievement Award.

Gerald Kolsky, Poway, Calif., a 1946 graduate of K-State, looks up from a book to listen. Beside him his wife Audrey takes notes in their Living Latin class. The class is part of Elderhostel, a week-long program for people of retirement age wanting to experience college life.

Senior citizens learn with Elderhostel

By Jill McMahan
Collegian Reporter

Imagine a class without educational requirements, textbooks to buy, reading assignments or tests.

It's the life of a college student at retirement age.

The ninth annual Elderhostel at K-State began Sunday and ends Saturday. The educational program, with 23 participants, consists of three classes, tours around the campus and Riley County, slide shows and time to get to meet new friends.

"Each summer individuals over 60 years old come from across the United States to K-State to live in a residence hall, eat meals in the cafeteria and visit with other students when they are not in class," said Pam Evans, Elderhostel Coordinator at K-State's Center for Aging.

"Elderhostel is for people on the move — in the sense of reaching out to new experiences — and provides an informal atmosphere where the individual is important and making new friends is easy," she said.

The three courses — Canada: Portrait of our Northern Neighbor; Home Landscape Design: Enhancing Your Home's Outdoor Environment; and Living Latin — are the main focus that draws the individuals to Elderhostel, she said.

"The courses are not offered for credit hours," Evans said. "The hostelers are here to broaden their scope of learning; to expand their horizons."

"It is so rewarding to see people who haven't had an opportunity to attend college be able to come here and experience a taste of college life," said Shea Boothe, student in apparel and textile marketing with a secondary major in gerontology.

Boothe was awarded an endowed assistantship last year and a partial assistantship this year from the Center for Aging to work specifically with the Elderhostel program. She spent the entire week with the participants last year, and will be helping with the extracurricular activities this year.

The hostelers come from different backgrounds, Boothe said, but "They all have something in common — they're here to learn and have a good time."

The program costs $250 for the week, and includes room, board, classes and extracurricular activities.

"Hostelships, like scholarships, are available for those who need financial assistance to attend," Evans said.

Elderhostel has grown during its short history, she said. In 1975, five colleges and universities in New Hampshire offered the first Elderhostel to 200 hostelers. By 1980, all 50 states had Elderhostel programs, and more than 2,000 hostelers participated. In 1981, the first program was offered overseas, in Great Britain and Scandinavia.

Evans said more than 37,000 participants were enrolled in 1981, when Elderhostel began to encourage the participation of a wide variety of educational institutions.

By 1988, hostelers attended more than 165,000 weeks of programs year-round in every state and province in the United States and Canada and 38 countries abroad, she said.

"In a very brief period of time, Elderhostel has become an international program of major significance," Evans said.

Mobile units, school to solve crowding problems in district

By Kyleen Kersenbrock
Collegian Reporter

The problem of overcrowded Manhattan public schools has prompted the USD 383 Board of Education to purchase three mobile units as a short-term solution. The board is also reviewing recommendations for building a new school.

Superintendent Hal Rowe said although no state guidelines exist on the maximum number of students in a classroom, "Right now the schools are full and we need more space for next year."

Rowe said the board has bid on the mobile units, which should be ready to use by Aug. 20. Each unit costs about $50,000, including installation. Two classrooms will be housed in each unit and each classroom will accommodate 25 students. The units will be used for the kindergarten level, allowing more room for other grade levels in the schools, Rowe said.

Mobile units will be installed at Amanda Arnold Elementary School, Bluemont School and Theodore Roosevelt School. Kindergartners from Woodrow Wilson School will share the unit at Bluemont and students from Eugene Field School might share the unit at Theodore Roosevelt.

Even though some schools will be sharing mobile units, busing students will not be a part of the plan, Rowe said.

"Students from any other schools who need to get to the mobile units should be within walking distance," he said.

The board considered busing sixth graders to the former Manhattan Mutual building at 801 Poyntz, which was recently purchased by the school district for renovations to house four classrooms. The renovation would have cost about $125,000. Rowe said the board instead decided to purchase the mobile units, and the future of the Mutual building is uncertain.

While mobile units will solve the problem for the next school year, the board is still looking for a long-term solution to overcrowding. Last year the board hired Planning Advocates Inc., a consulting firm, to determine the need for additional space and equipment based on program needs and projected population trends.

At the same time, a Core committee was formed to study options and make recommendations to the board. The committee consists of 30 members from a cross section of Manhattan, including parents of students, non-parents, school employees, retired persons and community leaders.

Committee recommendations included building a middle school. The new building would cost about $8.4 million and would accomodate 1,000 sixth and seventh graders, said Terry Arthur, chairman of the Core Committee.

"Students from any other schools who need to get to the mobile units should be within walking distance."

— Hal Rowe, superintendent

Taking the sixth grade out of the elementary schools and placing eighth and ninth graders in the existing junior high would transfer students to allow for more space, Rowe said.

On May 17, the committee recommended adding on to existing elementary schools or remodeling to add space for computers and programs in art, music, physical education and special education. More space is needed at the middle school for art and science and the physical education facility needs to be replaced, the committee said.

Rowe said the board will begin considerations at either the June 28 or July 5 meeting. The board will have to hire an architectural firm, set dates for a bond election in either fall 1989 or winter 1990 and decide whether to hire a consultant firm to develop educational specifications for the projects.

Court gives news media increased protection

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court gave the news media added protection Wednesday, ruling that a Florida newspaper doesn't have to pay $97,500 to a rape victim whose name it published.

The court, by a 6-3 vote, limited states' power to punish the reporting of truthful information that is lawfully obtained. The three dissenting justices criticized the court in a strongly worded opinion for hampering efforts to protect the privacy of sex-crime victims.

Florida law makes it a crime to "print, publish or broadcast" the names of victims of sexual crime.

The Florida Star, a weekly newspaper in Jacksonville, published a rape victim's name in its Oct. 29, 1983, police report.

The name had been obtained from a report posted, apparently by mistake, in the press room of the Duval County Sheriff's Department.

Most news organizations, including The Florida Star, have policies against publication of rape victim's names. The name of the woman, identified in court records as B.J.F., was published inadvertently, the newspaper's lawyers said.

Relying on the state law, the rape victim sued and won the $97,500 award, which threatened to put the 18,000-circulation paper out of business. Her suit also named the sheriff's department as a defendant, but she was paid $2,500 in a pre-trial settlement.

Justice Thurgood Marshall, writing for the court, said the award violated free-press rights protected by the Constitution's First Amendment.

However, the ruling did not preclude the possibility that states may punish those who publish the name of a sex-crime victim.

"We do not hold that truthful publication is automatically constitutionally protected, or that there is no zone of privacy within which the state may protect the individual from intrusion by the press," Marshall wrote.

"We hold only that where a newspaper publishes truthful information which it has lawfully obtained, punishment may lawfully be imposed, if at all, only when narrowly tailored to a state interest of the highest order."

That interest was not present in the Florida case, Marshall said.

Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist and Justices Sandra Day O'Connor and Byron R. White dissented.

"I would find a place to draw the line higher on the hillside: a spot high enough to protect B.J.F.'s desire for privacy and peace of mind in the wake of a horrible personal tragedy," said White, writing for the three.

"There is no public interest in publishing the names, addresses and phone numbers of persons who are the victims of crime — and no public interest in immunizing the press from liability in the rare cases where a state's efforts to protect a victim's privacy have failed," he said.

White noted that the woman's name was published a week after the assault, before her assailant had been arrested.

Questions on abortion vs. adoption hard to resolve

I am struggling with questions not too distant from most women's minds, not too distant from most people's minds. Is abortion a choice I would make? And if I wouldn't choose that option myself, is it a choice that should be restricted for women by federal and state intervention?

To discover an answer, I have had to put myself in the shoes of other women: if I was unprepared economically and psychologically to mother a child, would I have an abortion, instead of the options of adoption and motherhood?

A few years ago, I would have answered "no" to such a question, for I felt that abortion was a means of escape for a woman refusing to deal with the consequences of her actions. I thought as does Pat Turner, president of the Wichita Chapter of the organization Right to Life, when he said, "(women's) choices were before they were pregnant. If they want to control their bodies, they better think a little earlier."

But as I have become more aware, I see that many women are lacking the resources to control their own bodies, and are not lacking the ability to think and reason, nor the ability to distinguish right from wrong. Resources such as health care education and advising as well as methods of birth control should be made more accessible and should be allocated freely without the stigma of promoting promiscuity.

If Pat Turner must contend that women's choices lie before pregnancy, then he should be in support of the allocation of such resources. The use of birth control can obviously deter the demand for abortions. And yet many times, the most livid anti-abortionists are also doing battle against sex education and the distribution of contraceptives.

Even with birth control, unwanted pregnancies do occur, and Pat Turner and his fellow Right to Life advocates need to recognize that choices do exist even after a woman is pregnant.

But setting aside the tendency to haggle with the anti-abortion ideology, I look to my own mother's experience in hopes of an answer. My mother

Commentary

Jana Leep

Collegian Columnist

was 18 years old when she gave birth to me. She left her small hometown in Colorado, traveling all the way to Wichita to make Booth Memorial her home in order to finish high school and have her baby. (Booth Memorial is a residence, school and hospital for young women with unexpected pregnancies).

My father was not present, of course, but had resumed his life in Colorado, not knowing then that he was the father of a baby girl. Adopted a month after I was born, I have lived and been supported by another mother and father for 21 years.

Three years ago, I decided to search for my biological parents. The adoption agency that I was working with was able to contact my father, but not my mother. My father called one afternoon in May three years ago. We talked, promised to send pictures and have been in touch ever since. He has become my father, not just a man who gave me his genes.

I have yet to meet and befriend my mother, though. I think of her each day. I thank her for having the courage to bring me into the world. It must have taken tremendous strength to leave home, carry a child for nine months and then abandon it in a strange city to a strange couple.

She could have gotten an abortion; she could have kept me as her own child. Both options would have taken just as much courage and strength as giving me up for adoption. But of course, I am thankful she chose to carry me, and, too, I doubt if abortions were accessible to such a young girl from a small town. I am glad she had the resources and support system available to give me a life and yet allow herself one as well.

And yet, I cannot reject that abortions are a necessary option for women. Even though I could be non-existent, it is important that women have this choice; that women can choose consequences they can live with. Peggy Jarman, spokeswoman for Women Health Care Services, accurately defines the nature of abortion: "Abortion really for most people is about the rest of their lives, about their dreams, about their future."

Jarman's comment is true not only for women who have abortions, but it is true of every woman who chooses either to have the child or give it up for adoption. Choices have consequences, and all women do not live within the same environment or context from which to make these choices. All options should be available to all women.

For some women, such as my biological mother, adoption was feasible, a choice she could live with. For other women, however, abortion may be the only option they can live with.

Radio station control teaches lesson to all

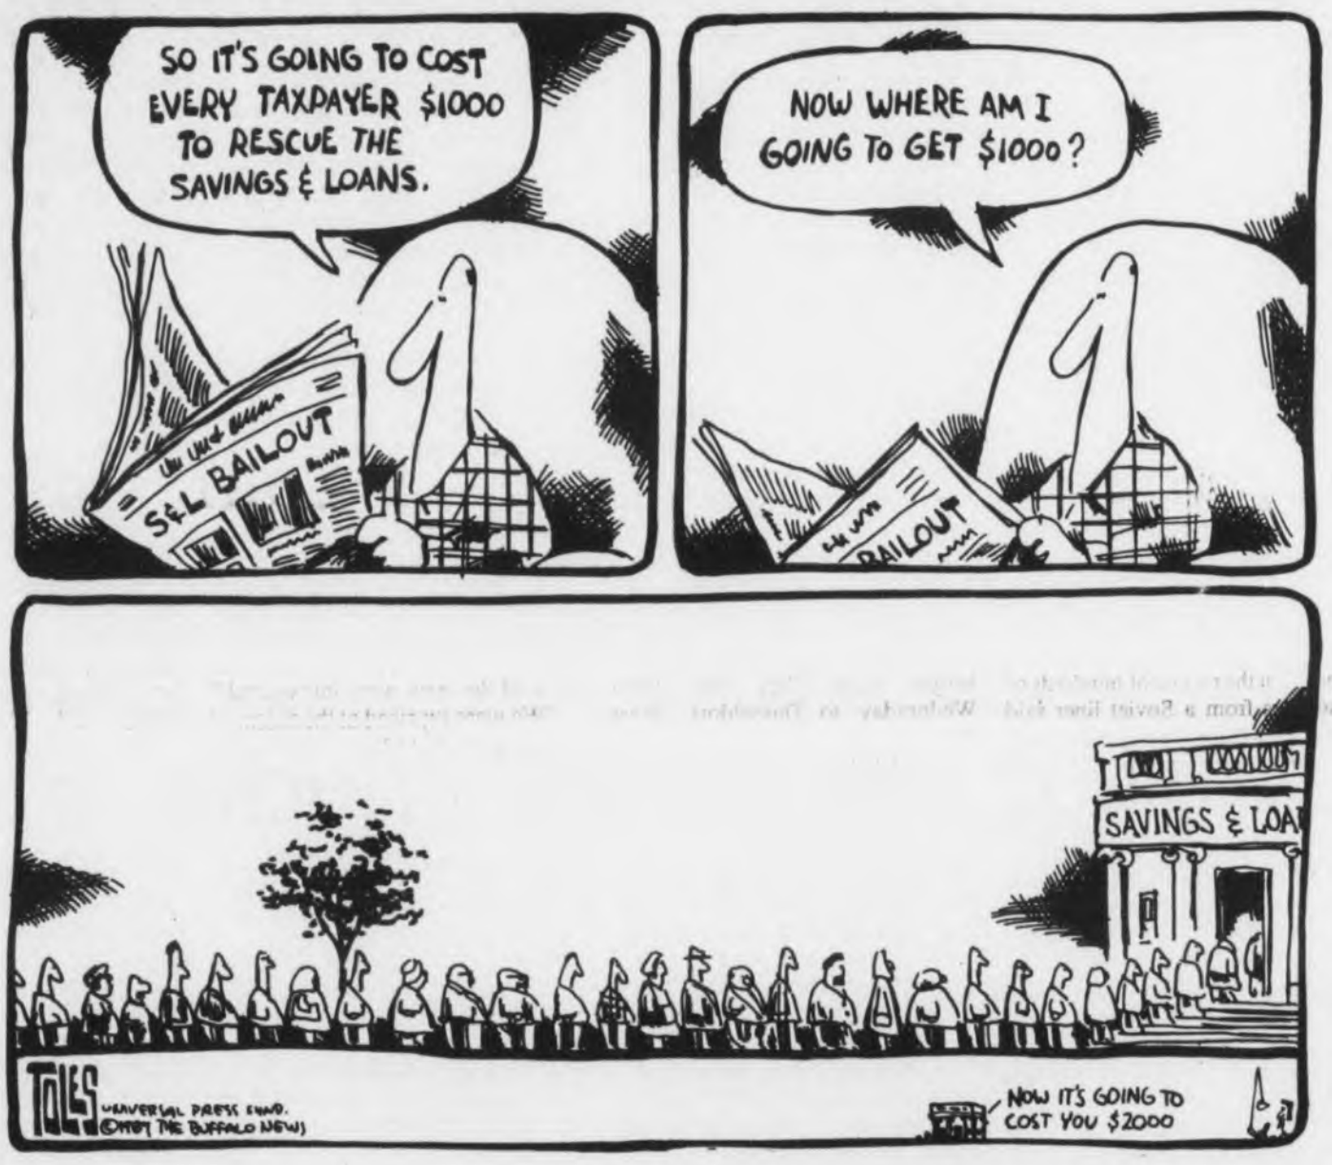
For some time the William Allen White School of Journalism and Mass Communications let the students run the campus radio station, KJHK. And after hearing that the faculty had "taken over" KJHK, questions were raised about freedom of speech and expression and creativity on the radio.

The KU radio station had earned a reputation for playing alternative music not heard on mainstream stations, partly the cause for the running feud between faculty and students over KJHK's structure and programming.

Faculty were concerned the turmoil jeopardized the station's function as an academic laboratory and its ability to comply with federal licensing requirements.

KJHK was so totally student-run that the students lost sight of the fact that the radio station, though a forum for "alternative" music, had responsibilities to the community and FCC regulations. The announcers had complete control over what was played. No music committees listened to the music to see if it met with the FCC standards.

Ironically, Max Utsler, the chair of the Radio-Television sequence in the William Allen White School of Journalism, said he didn't know if the music announcers on the radio station were informed about Federal Communications Commission rules about radio, indicating a breakdown on the part of the educators.



Because students had control over the station, certain students had developed what Utsler called "squatter's rights." Those students, he said, had been a part of the station so long that they considered it their right, not privilege, to be music announcers.

All of this demonstrates a lack of responsibility on the part of not only the student managers, but the faculty of the Radio and Television Sequence.

It is not OK to play just anything on the radio because of the limited amount of broadcast frequencies. If the song contains obscenities, it should not be played on the radio.

The recent moves of the KJHK faculty were intended to stress professionalism and responsibility in the station's programming, though the move does seem an abrupt reaction to a situation the faculty realized had gotten out of control.

Nothing is wrong with a 12-point participation contract and approval of written playlists if the announcers thus learn FCC rules.

Collegian Editorial Policies

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR are always encouraged. Those which pertain to matters of campus and/or public interest are especially encouraged, and are given the highest priority.

Letters should be kept as brief as possible, preferably under 300 words. Those who cannot condense their opinions should consider submiting their letter in the form of a guest column. All letters are subject to editing for space, style and taste.

GUEST COLUMNS are also encouraged. The column should be no longer than two double-spaced, typed pages. If the submission is used as a column and not a letter to the editor, it will be accompanied by the author's photograph.

Judged wrong

Editor,

Thursday, June 15, there was an article in the editorial section that I feel deserves a rebuttal. This commentary was about the Southern Baptists convening in Las Vegas. The fact the columnist missed the true meaning of the conference and dreamed up fictitious activities made it very clear how ignorant she is about Christianity.

The Southern Baptist Conference did take place in Las Vegas but they did not just eat ice cream, drink Coke and do their own business. The purpose behind the conference was to not only witness to people but also to broaden one's mind and strengthen one's faith.

This is done through studying the scripture. The scripture teaches us about who Jesus Christ was, is and why he should be meaningful in our lives. It also helps us to understand who we are and how we can, as a Christian, become "Christ like" or "sanctified".

Now, this does not mean that Christians are perfect, completely moral-bound or constantly judging others. In fact, those accusations are false. There is absolutely no human being on this earth who is perfect or pure at heart; only Jesus Christ is and he is the only one who ever will be! Since man is given the choice to believe as he wishes or to conduct himself in any manner he prefers he will never be completely perfect or morally just. But one can learn to change his beliefs and behavior.

Another common absurdity is how Christians are supposedly always judging others. Now, if that were truly the case, who would want to be a Christian? I wouldn't! Before I truly came to understand the meaning of being a Christian, I too felt at times that others were judging me. But instead of letting myself believe this I decided to find out why I felt this way. This is what I found. Every man on this earth, believer or non-believer, I feel has some form of insecurity. When we allow ourselves to let this insecurity take over we begin to feel as if others are judging us, especially those who we do not understand.

Now, one major secret in life that helps us to overcome this is learning to love not only ourselves but others as well. And yes, it is at times very difficult to love someone, especially when they are being hateful. But through Jesus Christ we can learn to love and once we do we will not feel as if we are being judged nor will we sit around and judge others.

However, I do believe that every individual had a right to his own opinion. But when stating it we need to be more considerate of our subject. Also, facts supporting an issue are extremely helpful. Opinions are wonderful, but please let's be knowledgeable about our topic.

Another rule of thumb is do not discredit your sources. You never know who might send them a copy of your so-called "I know it all" article. Also, if you were so curious about the Southern Baptist convention why didn't you attend?

Column inaccurate

Editor,

I found the editorial by Jana Leep (Collegian, June 15) concerning the annual convention of Southern Baptists in Las Vegas in extremely poor taste. She is neither entertaining nor pointed in her criticisms and very ignorant of her subject matter.

For instance, she associates with the Southern Baptists various groups and individuals who have been criticized for less than Christian behavior that in reality had no connection with them. The Moral Majority, headed by Jerry Fallwell, has little to do with Southern Baptists, very few of whom are participants in this group.

Why, then, does she suggest that this group's disbandment will have an effect on the convention? As for Oral Roberts, he is (or was) part of a Methodist organization and the Bakkers and Swaggert were involved with other religious groups. Treating these different groups as equivalent or related is like equating all of the ethnic groups in Southeast Asia. They may fall under a common heading but are different in many details. I can see that Leep knows very little about Southern Baptists beyond what she thinks she has heard about them in the media. Perhaps if she met more than one or two she could criticize them with greater accuracy and taste.

As for the purpose for the Southern Baptist Convention to meet in "Sin City," again Leep has not done her homework. Anyone who has ever been a participant in a meeting of a large group (or has taken time to find out) knows how a location of such a meeting is selected. Convention centers from around the country send bids enumerating the charges for the use of facilities, room and board, and the reduced rates on airfare which they can offer to the organization. The organization then chooses from among the bids they receive.

For the Southern Baptists to exclude Las Vegas from consideration would be about the same as the Pharisees refusing to sit with the sinners. (Christ himself was often criticized for sitting with sinners.) So why not Las Vegas? If your purpose is to take the message of Christ to every person in the world (this is stated as the purpose of the Cooperative Program for which the Southern Baptist Convention was organized) then why not go where many people have rarely heard that message?

Note: Leep's comment concerning the exclusion of "women, Negros, Chinese, Filipinos, Israelites, etc." needs litle comment. Obviously she has never been to a Southern Baptist Church.

The Associated Press coverage of the convention which was printed by the Manhattan Mercury on June 15 gives a much more detailed and accurate account of the meeting and of the activities and attitudes of those attending. I'm not sure why the Collegian chose to print Leep's article instead of that one. Perhaps the staff enjoys libeling groups of which they know little. I feel that more discretion regarding future columns of this nature is in order.

Peterson appointed University lobbyist

By Craig Hamrick
Staff Writer

Susan Peterson, President Jon Wefald's new assistant for governmental relations, said 11 years of experience in the Kansas Legislature and familiarity with K-State should help her lobby for issues concerning the University.

"After 11 years, I feel like I'm pretty familiar with how the state government functions," Peterson said. "(My new positon) is very similar to what I do now."

Peterson, Gov. Mike Hayden's executive assistant for governmental affairs, was appointed to the University position June 19. The appointment will become effective July 18. As executive assistant for governmental affairs, Peterson helps the governor put together legislative programs.

Peterson, who graduated from K-State in 1976, has worked in the state legislature since 1978. She has served as administrative assistant to the Majority Leader of the Kansas House of Representatives, administrative assistant to the Speaker of the Kansas House and executive assistant to the governor.

The positions she has had and contacts she has made over the years will help the University's position, Peterson said.

She will replace Dick Hayter, director of engineering extension services, who occupied the position temporarily. Hayter replaced Mike Johnson, who ran unsuccessfuly for the Senate last year.

Hayter said the governmental affairs assistant is responsible for making sure the correct University officials are present at crucial legislative hearings. Information must also be organized and presented at the right time, he said.

"The busiest time for the assistant is the 90 days the legislature is in session, but it is a year-round job," Hayter said. "It really means being more than a lobbyist. (Peterson) will be a legislative liaison."

As it enters its final year in 1990, the Margin of Excellence plan will be her highest initial priority, Peterson said. MOE is a three-year plan designed to bring faculty and research funding of regents institutions up to the average of peer institutions.

"Issues asking for money are always hard, but K-State has enjoyed a good reputation in Kansas," Peterson said. "The governor and legislature have been very supportive of higher education in the state."

Peterson said she will move from Topeka to Manhattan in August.

Band raises funds for uniforms

By Jan Miller
Collegian Reporter

This fall, members of the KSU Marching Band hope to march at the first home game wearing new uniforms.

Stan Finck, director of the band, said members have attempted to raise $55,800 for 225 new uniforms to replace the 20-year-old ones they have now. Each uniform will cost about $225.

The band's fund-raising effort began last fall with the Annual Music Run, where music ensemble members run laps on a track. The students receive money from sponsors for each lap completed. Band members actively participate in this run. $10,000 from the proceeds last fall was donated for purchase of the new uniforms, Finck said.

The KSU Foundation is trying to help the band's fund-raising efforts. During a telethon April 23-24, students called band alumni asking for donations for the new uniforms. Finck said the callers got some interesting responses from alumni who wore those same uniforms.

More than $16,000 was collected, said Beth Mennelle, assistant director of Annual Giving at the Foundation. However, Finck said the band will not receive the entire $16,000 because the Foundation has to calculate expenses. The remainder of the money will go toward the uniforms.

The Foundation, along with Junction City Distributing Inc. and radio station KJCK-FM, is giving away a go-cart at a drawing Aug. 25. Donations are being accepted from those wanting to register for the go-cart. Band members will have the go-cart at Ahearn Field House during registration on Aug. 24.

Finck said the Student Governing Association approved up to $20,000 near the end of the year to help cover any unmet need the band may have. Finck said the band will not need to use all of this money because of the money the band has already raised.

"Kansas State has one of the best marching bands in the country and it deserves new band uniforms to match its qualities," said President Jon Wefald. "We will do whatever we can to help. We'll get the job done."

Finck predicted that by the end of summer, the "funds will be in hand" for the new uniforms.

Computer design benefits students

By The Collegian Staff

This summer, students in apparel design will have the opportunity to see their designs come to life through the use of a computer.

"Thirty to 35 percent of the design market uses some form of computers for design," said Janice Huck, assistant professor of clothing, textiles and interior design. "The computer is used, as in any other business, to make tedious work quick and easy."

Students enrolled in Computer-Aided Design for Apparel will be taught three applications: original pattern sketch, pattern grading, and marker making through the use of "autoCAD" software.

The first application will enable the students to draw their design on the computer instead of by hand. This will allow changes to be made in the fabric and color without having to draw sketches for each individual change.

"Liz Claiborne designs by computer, but it hasn't been accepted by designers yet," Huck said.

Another application is pattern grading. When a pattern is made, it's made in one sample size. Patterns need to be enlarged and reduced proportionally to other sizes. Students will be able to grade patterns up or down by computer almost immediately.

Pattern grading is being used more and more by manufacturers because it's not a time consuming process and the results save them money and time, Huck said.

Marker making is the third application. The computer will be able to tell the students how well they are utilizing their fabric. The pattern pieces appear on the computer screen and the students arrange the pieces so that they use the least amount of material.

Norwegians accuse ship of going too fast

Doctor questions sobriety

By The Associated Press

OSLO, Norway — Norwegians involved in the rescue of hundreds of passengers from a Soviet liner said Wednesday that it was going too fast for safety when it rammed an iceberg and took on water in arctic seas.

The head of the medical team aboard a Norwegian rescue ship said some of the Soviet crew were drunk at the time. Others involved in the rescue contradicted him.

Ships and helicopters took the 575 passengers, all but a dozen of them West Germans, to shelter on Spitzbergen Island. They were flown Wednesday to Dusseldorf, West Germany.

About half the 378 Soviet crewmen stayed on board to nurse the Maxim Gorky to harbor.

The disabled 25,000-ton vessel was limping under its own power in the Norwegian Sea toward Spitzbergen, about 180 miles east of the accident site, Norwegian defense officials said.

Dr. Mads Gilbert, aboard the coast guard cutter Senja when it broke through thick ice to rescue the people, said "our impression was that some of the crew were intoxicated."

"We were suprised at the extent of intoxication," Gilbert told state radio. He said many crew members were too drunk to help operate pumps 12 hours after the accident.

Rescued passengers, some of whom spent seven hours in lifeboats at near-freezing temperatures, said they had been offered whiskey and vodka during the ordeal to ward off the cold.

"The German passengers had nothing but praise for the Soviet crew and said nothing about drunken crewmen," said Spitzbergen Gov. Leif Eldring, who met arriving passengers early Wednesday.

"If the crew had been drunk, the Maxim Gorky would have sunk," said a Soviet Embassy official in Oslo, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Maritime experts said the ship was moving at 21 mph when it struck the ice, much faster than it should have sailed in treacherous waters.

Summer exercisers need preparation

By Catharine McSwegin
Collegian Reporter

As the days grow longer and the temperatures climb upward, it's tempting to stay in an air-conditioned room and forget about exercising. Precautions are needed, but a person shouldn't be inhibited about exercising in the heat.

When exercising in the heat, one of the first things to take into consideration is clothing, which will vary according to the activity.

"For aerobic activity, wear light-colored clothes," said Tari Boller, adult fitness program instructor for the Department of Physical Education and Leisure Studies. "Wear something that breathes so you don't overheat. When playing tennis or golf most people wear cotton clothing."

Liquid intake is also important.

"As a general rule don't intake a lot of liquid before exercising," Boller said. After 20 minutes of exercise drink about four to eight ounces of liquid, she said.

Most regular exercisers modify dress and liquid intake, but they should still be careful about the heat. Beginners should have a medical checkup before beginning an exercise program, Boller said.

Start the program slowly and work up to a higher level of activity. A person may want to get advice from a fitness instructor or doctor, she said.

"Have a goal in mind," when exercising, said Larry MacPhee, owner of Nautilus Fitness Center. "If you don't know where you want to go, you won't get anything out of it."

At Nautilus, a person can receive individualized, qualified guidance.

"Most people come to achieve some non-specific fitness goal, which we help them make more specific," said MacPhee.

The Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex at K-State is one facility that students, faculty and staff can use free of charge. The rec complex offers a variety of activities. The building houses raquetball courts, two weight rooms, life cycles for biking and three open gyms. Aerobic sessions and intramural activities are offered.

An important thing to remember about exercising outdoors is what the heat can do.

"If you feel hot, you are too hot," said Dr. Guy Smith, Director of the Eriksen Sportsmedicine Clinic. "Stop exercising and get out of the heat."

Heat stroke can happen without warning. No progression or clear indication warns of it, Smith said.

The level of risk involved when exercising in the heat will vary with individuals. The state of health, hydration, clothing worn and fitness level are all factors, said Smith.

Some times are better than others to exercise. Air temperature, humidity and sunlight are all factors to be considered. The period between 3 p.m. and 6 p.m. should be avoided, Smith said.

As a way to make people aware of the heat and dangers it may bring, a heat stress advisory flagpole system has been developed. The flagpole is located on the corner of Denison Avenue and College Heights Road.

"The heat stress advisory ststem can't say that it is safe to exercise," said Smith. "It is to advise the recreational athlete of the environmental factors to allow the athlete to choose how hard and when to exercise on any particular day."

The flag colors are blue, yellow, red and black. A blue flag is low risk and indicates that most people could exercise safely, but with some precaution. A yellow flag indicates moderate risk. Those younger than 5 years of age, older than 65, or just recovering from an illness should wait to exercise. A red flag means high risk. For those who have adapted to the weather of Kansas and who are in good health, it may be OK to exercise. Finally, a black flag indicates extreme risk. People shouldn't exercise outside, Smith said.

Other options are available for those who don't mind the heat but do mind exercising indoors. The Manhattan Parks and Recreation Department has a 1989 Summer Programs brochure, which lists activities ranging from summer camps to ceramics to team sports. Something is offered for everyone from preschoolers to senior citizens.

Walking or jogging can be done anywhere — alone or with family or friends. No equipment is needed, just proper clothing and shoes.

For a change of scenery, try a walk around City Park or through campus when not worrying about getting somewhere in a hurry.

Linear Park trail, to be used by bikers, walkers, or joggers, is under construction, with phase one of the project already completed. This first section is five miles long, beginning at Casement Road and Hayes Drive and ending at South Manhattan Avenue. The trail is marked every half mile and has benches for resting. The second and third phases are still in the planning stages, but when completed the trail will surround the city.

As a change of pace, Boller suggests picking up a lifetime sport such as tennis, swimming or golf.

Kansas will spend millions on lawsuit

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Kansas will spend more than $3.6 million in pursuing its federal lawsuit to force Colorado to release more water into the Arkansas River, the Legislative Budget Committee was told Wednesday.

Kansas sued Colorado in December 1985, alleging its neighbor to the west had violated a 1948 compact between the two states by storing up water in two reservoirs and by allowing 1,500 wells to pump water from the river system, all to the detriment of the Arkansas River's streamflow.

In an amended petition filed in March, Kansas contends Colorado is wrongfully withholding 70,000 acre-feet of water per year that should be flowing into the Arkansas and seeks release of that much water.

One acre-foot is the amount of water needed to cover one acre with water one foot deep.

Kansas also claims it is due up to $100 million in damages for wrongful denial of water.

The case is scheduled to go to trial next January in Pasadena, Calif.

A report on expenses incurred because of the lawsuit given to the Budget Committee showed Kansas has spent $2.36 million during the past six fiscal years, mostly on fees for attorneys and hydrologists.

RIGHT: Jennifer Black, sophomore in anthropology at K-State, contemplates depth measurements she made of her pit. BELOW: The site is located in a filed a stones throw away from the reouting work for U.S. Highway 73.

Guillian Gumm, junior in anthroplogy at KU, and Lynn Petz, senior in anthropology at KU, sift through dirt they scraped from their pit at the Kansas Archeological Field School excavation site in Leavenworth. Two K-State and four KU students are participating in the program sponsored jointly by the schools.

Life in the pits

Sunburned college students slowly and patiently scrape dirt away from small pieces of broken pottery found in the middle of a Kansas wheat field.

Two K-State students and four University of Kansas students are discovering that archeology in the Kansas Archeological Field School, sponsored jointly by K-State and KU, involves meticulous work, said Dr. Brad Logan, the leader of the school and research associate with the Museum of Anthropology at KU.

"It takes some of the romance of archeology away," he said.

The students are spending six weeks in Leavenworth excavating the remains of a lodge built by the Steed-Kisker Indians, estimated by Logan to have lived in the area almost 1,000 years ago.

"This is the first habitation site of this culture to be dug up in Kansas," Logan said.

The site, which is 3,000-4,000 square meters, was discovered last year when Kansas Highway officials began rerouting U.S. Highway 73.

"If it wouldn't have been for the fact that the road was going through here, we wouldn't have known about the site," Logan said. "The important thing is that they haven't disturbed the site, and they won't."

Now, the excavation site is located "a stone's throw" from the highway construction. It is divided into one meter square sections, each of which is carefully excavated by the students.

"You get kind of fed up because you want to see what you're digging. You have to be very slow and careful," said Guillian Gumm, junior in anthropology at KU.

Around 7:30 every morning, the students go out to the field, each carrying a metal box filled with the tools they use: trowels, tape measures, a knife, spoon, dental pick, ice pick, three brushes, sunblock, gum, a pen and a pencil.

The students dig about 20 centimeters down through ground that has been broken by the plow."You find stuff (in the plow zone) but it's just been jumbled up over all the years," said Jennifer Black, sophomore in anthropology at K-State.

The students might dig the pits as deep as 40 centimeters down, depending on whether they find anything in the pit. When the students are done with the site, they put the dirt back into the holes.

After one level has been dug, the students sift the dirt using large screen sifters.

"We level (the pit) after 10 centimeters and get paperwork on it," Black said.

They record the soil type and color and note anything interesting that has been found.

The students have found a great deal of daub, the burnt clay the Steed-Kiskers used to build their homes. Arrowheads have been excavated as well as a great deal of broken pottery and some stone tools.

After three weeks of finding artifacts, the students don't get as excited as they first did.

"We enjoy (finding artifacts), but the excitement of first getting out here was different," said Lynn Petz, senior in anthropology at KU.

"We know what to do with (the artifacts) now," Gumm said. "We don't have to ask a hundred questions."

"It's a good feeling when you find something big," said Todd Clawson, a 1988 graduate of anthropology and archeology at K-State.

Some of the students have found artifacts they think are exciting. Brad Adams, senior in anthropology and Spanish at KU, found two arrow points and a piece of sandstone formed into a tool called an abrader, which was used like sandpaper to straighten arrow shafts, Logan said.

Cindy Blaker, junior in anthropology at K-State, found a burned area of dirt that might have been used as a fireplace. The excavators are treating the area differently because of the uniqueness of the discovery.

Logan and Blaker traced the area where the soil was discolored, labeled it "Feature five" and photographed it. Blaker cut the "feature" in half and dug out a part of it to examine a cross-section. The dirt was put in a basket to take back to the lab for flotation, a more careful method of finding artifacts in the dirt.

"This is the first time I've ever done this," Blaker said. "I'm excited."

"What I would like is to get some charcoal so I can get a radiocarbon date," Logan said. "You need at least 30 grams from the site for processing. Charcoal can nail down the time range to plus or minus 40-50 years."

By the end of the day, however, Blaker found only a small amount of charcoal.

Kelly Jaggers, lab assistant and graduate student in archeology at KU, remains in the lab with one student assistant.

"Every day we go though the drying racks, counting daub and other artifacts. We sack them up, catalog them and put the information on my computer," Jaggers said.

Shuttle service aids disabled students

By Jane K. Thompson
Collegian Reporter

For the K-State Shuttle Service to be effective, it needs more vans, off-campus service and summer operation, said Gretchen Holden, director of Services for Students with Physical Limitations.

Holden helps make classes more accessible to students with various disabilities. The most visible service her office provides is the shuttle service. The shuttle, a van with a hydraulic lift, takes disabled students from building to building on campus.

"If you have either a temporary or permanent physical limitation, we will take your schedule and get you on," Holden said.

Holden said at times, so many students ride the shuttle they have trouble getting to classes on time. More vans would remedy the problem.

Off-campus service would help more students, said Holden, who knows of a student living off campus who is unable to drive because of a recent car accident, and now is unable to get to his summer classes. She said the shuttle can't go off campus because of the short time between classes and because there is only one van.

"I think the shuttle is incredibly important because there is no alternative public transportation in this town," she said.

Holden also helps disabled students get parking permits allowing them to park in handicapped spaces. The spaces are located as close as possible to each building.

Students sometimes enroll in classes that meet in non-accessible buildings, Holden said. If other arrangements can't be made, Holden has the class moved to another building.

Holden's office helps students with other difficulties, as well.

Some students are unable to take notes because of stiffness or tremors in their hands. She provides people to take notes for them.

For hearing impaired students, Holden said the office can provide note-takers or sign language interpreters. Although it can be distracting to have a sign language interpreter in the room, "Attitude on the part of the faculty has been very good," she said.

For students with visual impairments, Holden can provide taped textbooks and lectures and assistance with tests.

"The fastest growing area that the program is serving is learning disabled," she said.

For learning disabled students, her office can provide note-takers, assistance with tests, taped textbooks and tutors.

Multiple sclerosis ails young adults

By Jane K. Thompson
Collegian Reporter

Multiple sclerosis is a disease of young adults, said Dr. Daniel Martin, a physician at Lafene Student Health Center.

"It usually has its onset in the mid 20s to the late 30s," he said.

When people first develop MS, he said, they think they're going crazy because the symptoms come and go. Early symptoms range from weakness and fatigue to tunnel vision or blindness.

In later stages, however, the symptoms vary from person to person, Martin said.

"Other symptoms depend on what complex gets hit," he said.

Symptoms can include paralysis of the lower body and kidney and bowel problems. Most people with MS do not lose their memory or their logic capabilities.

"Generally speaking, they retain their intellect completely," Martin said.

Multiple sclerosis is caused by a gradual, intermittent destruction of myelin, the tissue that insulates nerves. Most people who have MS go through stages of deterioration, plateau and improvement. The deterioration lasts anywhere from a few weeks to a few months, and the plateaus can last as long as a decade. Periods of improvement are usually very short and are not as drastic as the deterioration.

MS is difficult to diagnose, because there is no way to prove that someone has it, Martin said.

"There really are no tests for it," he said.

The cause of MS is unknown.

"The best theory now, the one that's most widely accepted, is that it's an autoimmune disease — the body makes antibodies that destroy myelin," Martin said.

Another theory is that MS is caused by a "slow virus," one that lives in the body for years before causing any symptoms.

Although treatments are used for MS, nothing can really slow its course, and there is no cure. Martin also said that sometimes treatments are sometimes offered that really don't work.

"With any of the autoimmune diseases, there are going to be quacks around to take people's money," he said. "There are also a lot of really sincere people."

Gretchen Holden, director of Services for Students with Physical Limitations, said sometimes disabled people are isolated and considered vulnerable.

"Many of our students are really seized upon by religious fanatics," she said.

Both Holden and Martin said that MS can cause difficulties for college students.

Martin knows of one student with MS who can walk, but not fast enough to get from one class to another in 10 minutes, so he has to schedule breaks between classes. Even non-handicapped students have the same problem, he said.

"If you're perfectly healthy it's difficult to get from Ackert to Justin in 10 minutes," Martin said.

Holden said her office tries to make sure physically limited students can get to all their classes.

"If a class needed to be relocated, we would do that," she said.

Holden said MS can cause psychological problems.

"With MS the student has to go through constant readjustment," she said. "It's tough on the morale of the student."

Senate leader says budget may face crisis

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Budget and policy recommendations of Republican Gov. Mike Hayden are the reason the state may face another budget crisis next year, Senate Democratic Leader Michael Johnston charged Wednesday.

Responding for Hayden, Press Secretary Kathy Peterson said Johnston was being partisan because of his ambition to become governor. She claimed Johnston was among those who consistently voted to spend more money than Hayden recommended last session.

Johnston said when Hayden recommended stopping collection of the income tax windfall and proposed a budget that spent $117 million more than could be funded from state revenue, he set the stage for a new budget crunch, regardless of the $56 million the Legislature appropriated beyond his recommendations.

His allegation came in the wake of Tuesday's disclosure that Hayden's budget director, Michael O'Keefe, is proposing a 5 percent reduction in state spending levels for Fiscal Year 1991 to meet a projected treasury shortfall.

"In January of this year, I publicly cautioned that adopting the governor's budget and policy recommendations could lead to another state budget crisis in 1990," said Johnston, who confirmed three months ago that he is considering seeking the Democratic nomination next year to challenge Hayden's bid for a second four-year term.

The Parsons Democrat said Hayden has taken Kansas "from rags to riches and back to rags" in his first term, and hinted that if he is a candidate for governor he will make management of government a prime issue.

"It is clear that managing the state budget in future years will be very difficult," Johnston said.

He also said he hopes Hayden doesn't resort to "rewriting history" to explain why another budget crisis looms in the 1990 session.

When Hayden took office in 1987, he asked the Legislature to approve $60 million in budget cuts because of a state financial crisis. Hayden claimed he inherited the poor financial situation from his predecessor, Democrat John Carlin, and wasn't aware of the problem until after he was elected in 1986.

Johnston disputes Hayden's claim, saying that as House speaker and a former chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee Hayden kept as close tabs on state finances as anybody and knew exactly what was going on.

"Mike Hayden was quick to blame John Carlin for the state budget problems he inherited, but who will he blame next year?" Johnston asked.

"I suspect he will attempt to explain this away through some revision of history, much like he did when he pretended not to know of the state's serious fiscal problem until after he was elected in order to make his promise of immediately returning the income tax windfall seem genuine."

In answering Johnston, Peterson said:

"It is unfortunate that Mike Johnston is becoming so partisan as his interest in running for governor continues. I attribute his comments to partisan politics.

"Maybe Mike Johnston is afraid of his record, which shows that he was one of the chief architects in legislative overspending. He voted for many items that exceeded the governor's budget. A prime example of that is the welfare agency budget, which exceeded the governor's recommendation enormously."

O'Keefe said Wednesday he is telling agency heads to submit Feb. 1991 budget requests that represent 95 percent of the funding the 1989 Legislature approved for them in Feb. 1990. He said if the economy gets worse they could be facing budget cuts that would provide them only 90 percent of what they will get in the fiscal year that begins July 1.

"A freeze (on spending levels) won't get it done," O'Keefe said in an interview. "Based on today's conditions, agencies are looking at 95 percent of their approved budget. Five percent is just what it takes to match revenue to expenditures."

The cuts will not apply to so-called demand transfers from the state treasury, which is money the state automatically takes from its general fund. These include funds sharing revenue with local units of government, school districts and the highway fund.

Nor will the reduction apply to state aid to local school districts.

McCullum named basketball assistant

By David Svoboda
Sports Editor

In 1970, Jack Hartman left Southern Illinois University in Carbondale, Ill., and became the head basketball coach at K-State.

Now, almost 20 years later, Robert "Bobby" McCullum is leaving SIU — to become an assistant to Hartman's successor, Lon Kruger.

After two years as an assistant coach at SIU, McCullum joined Kruger's staff Tuesday morning. McCullum, who celebrated his 35th birthday on the day he was hired, replaces Dana Altman, who was named head coach at Marshall University in Huntington, W.Va.

"I'm truly excited about the opportunity to join the staff at K-State," McCullum said in a telephone interview from Carbondale. "I look forward to the challenges that will be presented in working in the Big Eight Conference."

Kruger was equally enthusiastic about having McCullum on the staff.

"We were looking for an individual with a solid basketball background and a reputation of being an excellent teacher of student-athletes," Kruger said. "Robert possesses both of those qualities."

McCullum said his admiration for Kruger and the K-State program made the decision to move a relatively easy one.

"I have a great deal of respect for Coach Kruger," he said. "You're constantly hearing great things about Lon Kruger and the job he's done at Kansas State. And the Kansas State program is obviously one that has drawn a great deal of national recognition over the past several years."

Before joining the staff of head coach Rich Herrin at SIU, McCullum spent four years at the University of South Alabama.

He was the part-time assistant coach under Cliff Ellis in 1982, and returned under Mike Hanks in 1984. In between the two years at USA, he was at Samford for the 1983-84 season.

Prior to his collegiate coaching career, McCullum spent six years in the high school ranks in Birmingham, Ala., his hometown.

His collegiate playing career included stops at Seminole (Fla.) Junior College and Birmingham (Ala.) Southern University. He received his bachelor's from Birmingham Southern in 1976 and his master's from Alabama State University in 1980.

McCullum looks at the move to K-State as stepping onto the next logical rung on his individual coaching ladder.

"I set a goal for myself, as most young assistants do, to become a Division I head coach someday," he said. "To do that, you have to associate yourself with successful people and programs. Lon Kruger and Kansas State provide that opportunity.

"This move will certainly enhance my professional growth and hopefully I can help carry on the great tradition of basketball at Kansas State over the next several seasons."

McCullum was quick to say he doesn't look at himself as Altman's replacement. He would rather be considered a new member of a strong team than a replacement for a particular individual.

Altman, the former head coach at Moberly (Mo.) Junior College, brought future All-American and NBA Rookie of the Year Mitch Richmond and Charles Bledsoe with him when he joined Kruger's staff three years ago. That Moberly pipeline continued with the signing of guard Jeff Wires this past spring.

That doesn't faze McCullum.

"I'm aware of the outstanding job Dana did, and certainly there will be people out there that will be saying 'you're his replacement,'" McCullum said. "I like to look at it as if we — Coach Kruger, (assistant) Coach (Greg) Grensing, (part-time assistant) Coach (Ron) Stewart and myself — are members of a relay team.

"On a relay team, you get the baton and do your leg and pass it on to the next member of the team. Coach Kruger obviously runs the anchor leg, but what we do as team members sets him up."

When he joins the K-State staff July 1, McCullum will immediately start preparation for the three-week "evaluation period" of high school players that begins July 10.

During the 10 days between his arrival on the job and the beginning of this period, McCullum and his new associates will map out a strategy as to the players K-State will actively pursue during the following three weeks.

Once July 10 rolls around, McCullum said, the coaches will visit basketball camps, tournaments and the like to evaluate the best young high school talent. Telephone conversations and viewing of the players in camps and games can take place, but no face-to-face dialogue is allowed, McCullum said.

It is at these sessions and in phone conversations that Kruger and staff will determine which players best suit the K-State system. This sets the ground work for the early signing period and the traditional spring signing period.

For now, however, McCullum said he and his family are looking forward to the move. He and his wife, Cheryl, have a son, Darius, 16, and a daughter, Richelle, 13.

"We're looking forward to the move, and to being a part of the Manhattan community," he said. "The people there really have a way of making you feel wanted."

Switzer resigns; Gibbs chosen to be coach

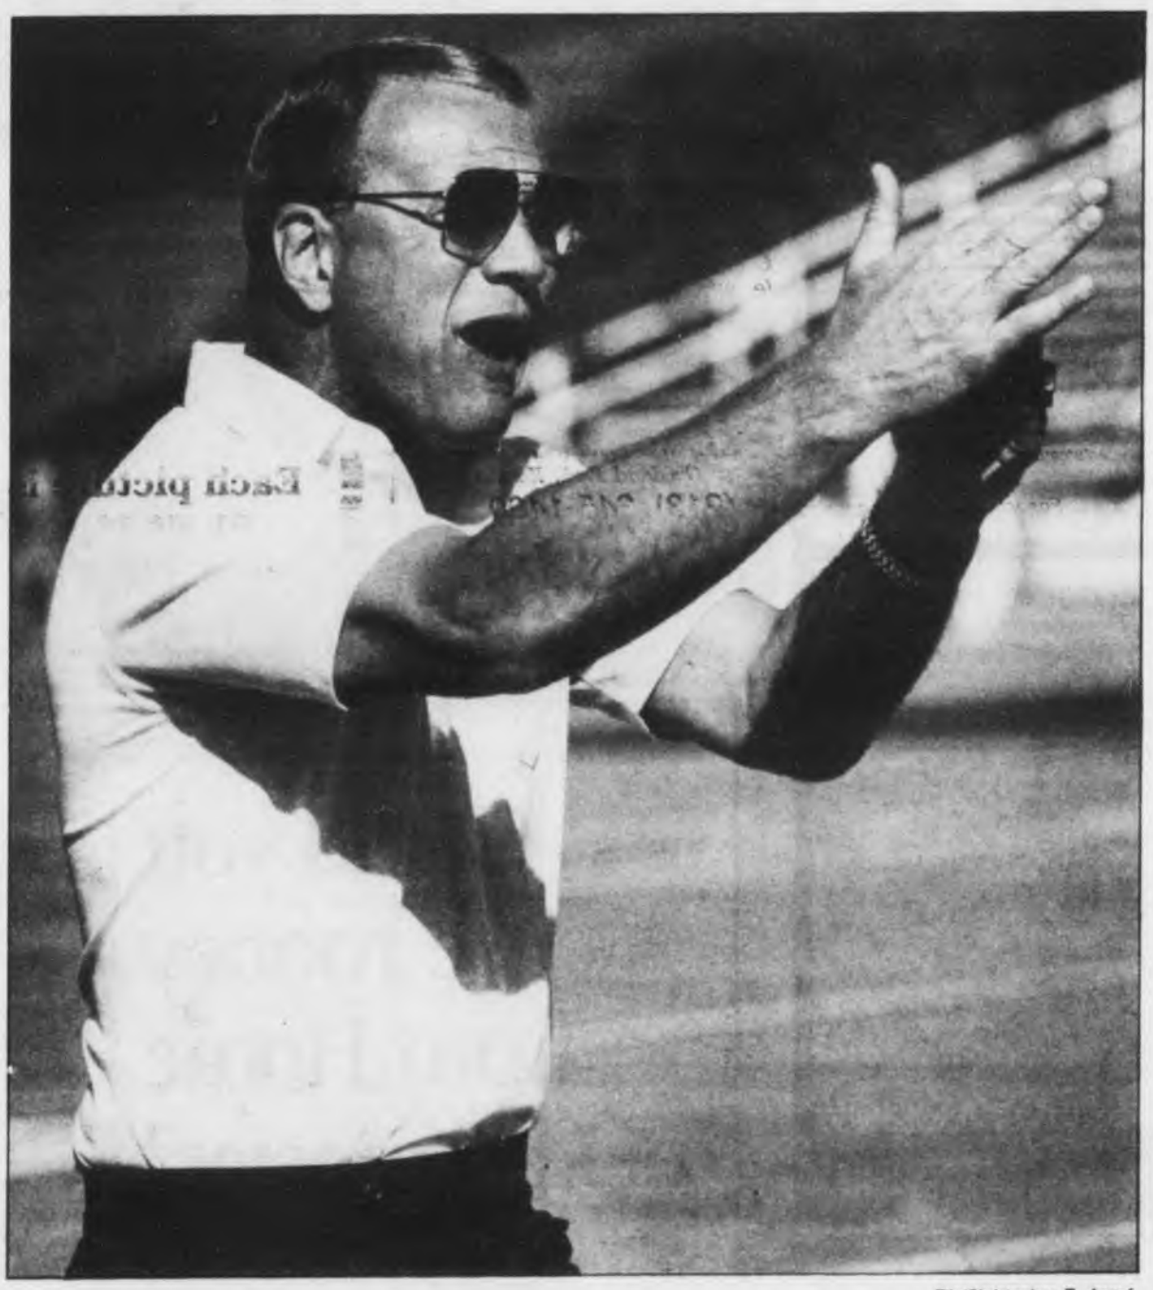
Sooners hope change takes 'cloud' away

By The Associated Press

NORMAN, Okla. — Gary Gibbs, a player and then a defensive coordinator under Barry Switzer, was designated to succeed Switzer as Oklahoma's head football coach Tuesday.

Gibbs, winning the recommendation of the school's interim president and its athletic director, said he would remove the cloud that has hovered over the scandal-plagued football program by "doing it right."

"We've got to remove that cloud, that uncertainty of 'What's going on down there? Who's in control?'" Gibbs said. "We're a bunch of good guys. All we've got to do is the right thing."



Gibbs' appointment was approved by the university's regents, who met Wednesday.

Switzer quit Monday, after having coached Oklahoma to three national championships and 12 Big Eight Conference titles.

Gibbs is the third alumnus to hold the job. His only college experience — as a player and as an assistant coach — is at Oklahoma. Switzer had recommended that his successor come from the school.

"But I want to tell you that even if we had conducted a national search for our new coach rather that promote from within, I do not believe we could have found a better person for the job," David Swank, the university's interim president, said. "Gary Gibbs is one of the outstanding

Barry Switzer resigned Monday as head football coach at Oklahoma. Switzer had been coach at the perennial Big Eight power for 16 seasons. He was replaced by assistant Gary Gibbs.

Former OU mentor calls for changes

From Staff and Wire Reports

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Barry Switzer and Dick Schultz are unlikely comrades. Through the years, Oklahoma football coaches and NCAA executive directors have rarely kept philosophical company.

But in announcing his resignation Monday after 16 years as Sooner coach, Switzer endorsed a revolutionary idea that is finding favor with the head of the organization that recently put Oklahoma on three-year probation.

Why not authorize schools to spend a few bucks on their neediest athletes? If a poor athlete is cold in winter, which action strikes the higher moral chord — buying him an overcoat or letting him shiver?

" ... It was difficult to turn my back on these young men when they needed help," Switzer said Monday in an emotional farewell. "We have created a system that does not permit me or the program to buy a pair of shoes or a decent coat for a player whose family can't afford these basic necessities."

Switzer said he would join others "who are calling for changes in rules to permit universities to provide players with reasonable assistance, perhaps based on financial need as proposed by Dick Schultz."

Schultz, who became NCAA executive director in 1987, believes it may be an idea whose time has not come.

"Whether it will ever pass or not, I don't know," Schultz said. "Some would say that the scholarship is enough, and the college experience is a big reward in itself. I'm saying I would support it if the schools should come forward with it."

Specifically, Schultz has said money might be made available to athletes who come from economically deprived backgrounds for such things as clothing allowance and incidental expenses and occasional trips home.

NCAA rules — which are all adopted by majority vote of NCAA schools — have always strictly prohibited any benefit not available to non-athletes.

"I would support additional financial aid over and above the cost of attendance if it was based on demonstrated need," Schultz said. "So the athlete who has a real need would get direct help, and the person who doesn't need it wouldn't get it."

K-State Coach Bill Snyder agreed with Schultz.

"I think as long as there are some guidelines with regard to how the aid is administered, it's a worthwhile idea," Snyder said.

Schultz said he doubted the idea would get much support at the next NCAA convention in January 1990.

Snyder agreed, saying the proposal would likely go through a series of stages before it becomes reality — if it ever does.

"Maybe in a year's time after it has gone through one or two proposals, we'll see something happen," Snyder said.

Schultz was more specific with regard to the time frame.

Saberhagen baffles Brewers, 6-0

By The Associated Press

MILWAUKEE — It seemed to Bret Saberhagen that his pitches were on the Milwaukee Brewers before they could react Wednesday night.

But it's a feeling he always gets when he comes to County Stadium, where he's 4-1 lifetime after beating the Brewers 6-0 with a three-hitter.

Wednesday's victory was his seventh complete game of the season, giving him the league lead over teammate Mark Gubicza.

"The mound here gives you the perception that the plate is closer than 60 feet, 6 inches," said Saberhagen, now 7-4 with four straight victories and a 2.63 ERA.

"Mentally it helps. You feel like you've got a better fastball and they're not getting around on you as quick."

The complete games are no big deal to Saberhagen, who retired the first nine batters before Paul Molitor singled to lead off the bottom of the fourth.

"It's something that doesn't mean as much as ERA or wins," Saberhagen said of the complete games.

"I've got three of them in losing efforts. It would mean something if they were all shutouts. But you just shut them down as long as you can."

The Royals gave Saberhagen a four-run, first-inning cushion and he coasted, striking out five with no walks in his 10th career shutout.

Gary Sheffield singled in the seventh and Molitor again in the ninth for the only other Milwaukee hits.

"Saberhagen was very good tonight," said Brewers manager Tom Trebelhorn. "He had as good a stuff as I've ever seen him have. The way he was throwing I thought it was going to be a real lengthy night."

The Royals, who scored six runs in the 11th inning Tuesday night, kept the offense going in the first inning against Don August, 6-7.

Singles by Kurt Stilwell and Kevin Seitzer and Bo Jackson's blooping double in front of right fielder Rob Deer gave the Royals a 1-0 lead.

Jim Eisenreich's sacrifice fly made it 2-0 and RBI singles by Pat Tabler and Bob Boone capped the four-run, six-hit inning as Kansas City batted around.

Kansas City made it 6-0 in the fifth on Eisenreich's two-run single that followed hits by George Brett and Jackson and chased August. Eisenreich has a 10-game hitting streak.

Intramurals begin

By The Collegian Staff

Summer intramurals are under way and the number of students, faculty and staff participating is about the same as in prior years, said Steve Martini, associate director of recreational services.

K-State's summer intramural leagues are open to all students enrolled in summer courses, all faculty and staff members, and all K-State students who aren't enrolled in classes during the summer session but who hold a job during the summer period at the University.

"We hope that by opening up the opportunity to participate to those students that might not be enrolled, but who are working on campus during the summer, we may give someone a chance to compete that might not be given that chance in a city league or elsewhere," Martini said.

According to Martini, three team sports dominate summer intramurals: softball, basketball and volleyball.

Presently, there are two men's softball leagues, one with six teams and the other with four. There are three co-rec leagues, two with six teams each and a third with seven. Each softball league offers a single round-robin schedule.

There is also a summer basketball league consisting of six teams. The league plays a single round-robin schedule as well.

Finally, there is a four-team volleyball league that plays a double round-robin schedule.

The entry deadline for team sign-up has passed, Martini said, but he added that prospective participants can still join a team by getting in contact with a team's coach or manager.

In addition to the team sports action, there are four individual or doubles sports being offered.

Handball, racquetball, and doubles volleyball competitions have already begun. The summer student golf meet, scheduled for Friday at Rolling Meadows, is still open to interested students, Martini said. Entries will be accepted until 5 p.m. today at the rec services office.

"It's been a typical summer thus far," Martini said. "As far as running activities, we're not as busy, but we keep the wheels moving for the regular year."

Track squad signs 4 additional athletes

By The Collegian Staff

K-State has signed four more track athletes, bringing the total to 18, Coach John Capriotti announced Tuesday.

Three of the four signees are from Kansas, and the fourth is from Pennsylvania.

Manhattan High standout Thomas Randolph was one of the three Kansans signed.

Randolph ran the 100 and 200 meters and was a member of the 4 x 100-meter relay team, and holds the school record in the 100 meters. He finished second in the state Class 6A meet in the 100 meters and sixth in the 200 meters.

Lebo native Bradley Massey joins the K-State throwers. The transfer from Barton County Community College set a new school record there last year with a javelin throw of 209 feet, 11 inches.

Massey was sixth at the National Junior College Championships in the javelin, and earned all-America honors. He was a three-sport letterman at Northern Heights High School.

Capriotti expects Massey to make an immediate impact.

"He'll be able to come in and score at the conference meet," Capriotti said.

Eric Harland of Overland Park's Blue Valley North High School will "fill several holes," according to Capriotti.

Harland holds four school records at Blue Valley North. Those records are in the long jump, triple jump, 100 meters and 200 meters.

John Johnson of Yeadon, Penn., is the lone out-of-state signee among those announced Tuesday.

He attended Pennlwood High School and was a member of several relay teams there. He was a member of the 1,600 meter relay team that won the state indoor and outdoor championships during his senior year, and as a junior was a member of the state championship 4 x 100 meter relay team.

Summer heat stressful for pets

By Laurel Raudenbush
Collegian Reporter

The dog days of summer are here and this means hot, uncomfortable weather not only for us, but also for our pets.

Being aware of some common summer pet problems may help pets enjoy a more comfortable summer.

"Skin problems are by far the most common summer problem," said William Fortney, assistant professor of surgery and medicine. "The summer months cause greater flea and tick problems."

Scratching, itching and biting are indications that a pet might have a flea problem. Treating pets for fleas isn't as simple as buying a flea collar. Because a single flea can lay hundreds of eggs, it is necessary to treat not only the animal, but any place it frequents, such as the house and backyard.

When treating pets for fleas, read and follow all instructions carefully to avoid accidentally poisoning your pet. A veterinarian can recommend the best-suited products.

Outdoor pets are especially susceptible to accumulating ticks. Ticks can not only cause a pet discomfort, they can carry disease. Rocky Mountain Fever and Lyme Disease are two diseases carried by ticks that can incapacitate or be fatal to humans and animals.

Removing ticks with gasoline or a match is not recommended. When removing a tick, it is necessary to remove its head. If left, the site may become infected. Proper removal and preventive treatment for ticks is best demonstrated by a veterinarian.

If a pet suffers any type of abrasive or puncture wounds, the wound is more likely to become infected in the summer because of the heat and moisture. Keep the site of the wound clean and dry. If redness or swelling occurs, the site may be infected and the pet should be taken to a vaterinarian.

Another summer problem is heat stroke. Large and obese dogs are candidates, as are any other pets left outside without adequate shade or fresh water, Fortney said.

"Leaving your pet in familiar surroundings will reduce the likelihood of stress or contagious diseases that it might catch at a kennel."
—William Fortney assistant professor of surgery and medicine

Heat stroke can occur when a pet is left in a car on a warm day. Even when windows are left partially open, temperatures in cars can reach 160 degrees in a matter of minutes. With only hot air to breathe, pets cannot cool down, and can suffer brain damage or die.

The Humane Society stresses that when it's hot, pets should be left at home. It also suggests that owners know the signs of heat stroke: heavy panting, glazed eyes, rapid pulse, dizziness, vomiting or a deep red or purple tongue. In treating a pet that has suffered heat stroke, Fortney said it is important to cool the animal's body temperature immediately.

"Hose the pet down with cool water, and wrap it in cool, wet towels," he said. "If you rush off to the vet immediately, without cooling him down, you could lose your pet. Heatstroke can cause organ problems or result in serious brain damage."

Summer is the time for vacations.

"Leaving your pet in familiar surroundings will reduce the likelihood of stress or contagious diseases that it might catch at a kennel," Fortney said, "but be sure you leave it in care of a trustworthy friend who will check on the pet two times a day. Not just opening the door and throwing in some food, but actually seeing the pet and making sure it's OK"

If traveling with a pet, don't feed it right before leaving because some pets can become carsick, Fortney said. Time the pet's feeding with roadstops. He does not recommend tranquilizing pets.

"Most pets, with good practice, will settle down and travel well. It's a matter of practice rides in the car, not only to the vet, but to the park or other places."

Be sure to have the pet properly identified with a tag and keep it on a lease at all times in a strange place. Losing a pet in a strange town can be upsetting and frustrating.

By taking into consideration the special needs of pets in the summer, owners and pets can enjoy the summer.

Wheat harvests continue through bleak forecasts

By The Associated Press

Weather continued to be on the farmer's side Wednesday as combines cut wheat all across southern Kansas and in parts of the central area of the state.

A few afternoon sprinkles fell, but no significant rainfall was reported.

Weather forecasters said the chance of rain will increase Thursday and Friday and temperatures will moderate. Rain could chase combines from the fields and lower temperatures could keep the mud and wheat from drying out quickly.

Bleak pre-harvest yield forecasts were proving accurate in central Kansas.

"I've got lots of weeds, lots of mud and lots of headaches," said farmer George Moors of McPherson.

Farmers Brad Shogren of Lindsborg and Dale Koehn of Galva both estimated their yields this year are half what they got in 1988.

Dale Becker of Roxbury said he is getting 10 to 15 bushels per acre. The usual statewide average yield is more than 35 bushels per acre. Some of Becker's wheat is so drought-stunted it is too short to combine.

"I've had more reports of wheat being 4 to 10 bushels per acre than I have 25 to 35. That 4 to 10 seems to be the standard rather than the exception this year," said Robert C. Kidd, state harvest labor coordinator for the Department of Human Resources.

He said cutting in the Anthony, Kiowa and Caldwell areas should be complete by the first of next week. Harvest should be complete by mid-week in the Wellington area, Kidd said.

There has been a problem getting enough custom cutting harvest crews in the Wellington area, Kidd said.

"A lot of them still are completing their commitments in Oklahoma. They have had more rain in the Enid and Clinton areas down there than we had up here," Kidd said.

Cleo Seimers of the Wellington state harvest labor office said some custom crews have been disappointed when they called ahead to see how many acres of wheat were listed for cutting.

"They think if I can't give them 1,200 to 1,500 acres we don't have anything here to cut," Seimers said. "My orders have been running from about a quarter section to 500-600 acres."

Kidd said with the exception of nine counties in northwest Kansas cutting should be going on statewide by the weekend. He said the northwest counties probably would begin harvesting next week.

Southeast Kansas elevators continued reporting a better than usual crop Wednesday.

Tim Cavaness of Neodesha Grain and Seed said the wheat in his area isn't outstanding, but he's grateful anyway.

"In terms of quality, it isn't anything to brag about," he said. "But nobody around here is complaining. We at least have crops to harvest. There are some places in the state where there isn't anything to cut. I think we feel fortunate in that regard."

The Dodge City area is one region hard-hit by the drought, temperature extremes and lately, too much rain.

"Farmers are either cutting their own wheat, putting cattle on it or they've already plowed it under," said Doyle Campbell in the state harvest office in Dodge City.

Could you use money from Home next semester?

Whether you're starting out for college or finishing up a graduate degree, there's one tough subject you'll have to face next semester.
Tuition.
The good news is, Home State Bank can help you find the money for college. Just last year, more than 1,400 students received their low interest loans from us.
Now, we've become the first lender in Kansas City to have an electronic link-up for the Stafford (formerly GSL) Loan. Which means we can give you loan notification as soon as overnight.
Under the Stafford Loan, first- and second-year students receive up to $2,625 a year. For third- and fourth-year students, up to $4,000 a year. You make no payments until six months after graduation or after you become less than a full-time student.
If you're studying in the health professions, there's a HEAL loan program with a special low rate.
In addition, you may also receive a Supplemental Loan for Students (SLS), and your parents may be eligible for a loan through the Parent Loan program. And remember, guaranteed student loans don't require collateral, a cosigner, or established credit.
To get started on your application, call Connie Holmes at 321-3333.

Birth rate among unmarried women rising

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Two of every five American women giving birth to their first children weren't married when they became pregnant, the Census Bureau said Wednesday, a rise over the past two decades.

The bureau also found a jump in the birth rate among women in their 30s, noted that a majority of the women having a baby in the year ending in June 1988 were in the work force, and said minorities tend to have higher birth rates.

In all, the bureau said the national fertility rate was 69.7 births per 1,000 women aged 18 to 44 in that year. Those are considered the prime childbearing ages.

Fertility rates have remained at about 70 births per 1,000 women during this decade and the figure for 1988 is not considered significantly different from the 71 recorded the year before.

But changes have occurred among the women becoming mothers in America.

For women aged 15 to 29, the bureau found, 40 percent of their first-born children from 1985 to 1988 were conceived out of marriage, up from just over 30 percent when the measure was first taken from 1970 to 1974.

The 40 percent of new mothers who conceived out of wedlock included 11.7 percent who got married before the child was born and 28.3 percent who were still unmarried when the baby arrived.

The major change was among that second group, the women who were still unmarried when the baby arrived. They increased from 17.9 percent of all first-time mothers in the early 1970s to the 28.3 percent recorded in 1985 to 1988.

This shift "may reflect the opinion of some women that they may be better off in the long run by relying more on the support of their parents and relatives for financial and emotional assistance than by entering a potentially unstable marriage undertaken solely to prevent an out-of-wedlock birth," bureau analyst Amara Bachu said in the report.

At the same time that the share of unwed mothers was rising, the percentage of women conceiving while single and then getting married before the arrival of the baby dropped from 14.9 percent to 11.7 percent of first mothers.

The share of unwed first mothers varied sharply by race, the study also found.

Among black women 74.6 percent of first births to women aged 15 to 29 occurred out of wedlock from 1985 to 1988, up from 54.1 percent for 1970 to 1974.

For Hispanic women, the rate was 30.6 percent, up from 26.7 percent earlier. And white women had 19.6 percent out-of-wedlock births, up from 11.5 percent.

The new report also confirmed the widely reported trend of women postponing births as they pursue education and careers.

The "increases in childbearing among women over 30 ... suggest that childless women now more than in the past are deliberately postponing their childbearing to older ages," the report said.

For women aged 30 to 34, the 1988 fertility rate was 81.6 births per 1,000 women, up from 60 in 1980 and 56.4 in 1976. A similar, though smaller, increase was reported for women 35 to 39.

The bureau also asked women about their plans for families and noted that, among childless wives aged 25 to 29, 85 percent still expect to have a child at some point. That's up from 75 percent who expected a future birth in this age group in 1975.

Still, the study concluded, "the question remains: How strong is the commitment to childbearing after remaining married and childless for several years?"

For women aged 18 to 44, the study reported that 50.9 percent of women giving birth in 1988 were in the work force, up from 50.8 percent a year earlier and just 38 percent in 1980.

"Labor force participation among women with newborn children is appreciably higher for college-educated women than for women" with less education, the report found.

Among new mothers with college degrees nearly 60 percent were in the labor force.

Test identifies AIDS in babies

By The Associated Press

BOSTON — A new test can identify babies who are born infected with the AIDS virus so they can be quickly treated in an effort to delay or stop fatal illnesses, researchers say.

When mothers are infected with AIDS, they have about a one in three chance of passing it on to their babies during pregnancy. But doctors have had to wait more than a year before knowing which newborns are infected.

The still-experimental test can frequently — though not always — sort this out soon after birth.

"It's something of a breakthrough. We have been very hindered by the fact that we don't have diagnostic tests in infants," said Dr. Martha F. Rogers of the U.S. Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta.

"We need that critically because people would like to start treatment with AZT very early on," she added. "But you are stuck with treating every child born to a (virus) positive mother with a fairly toxic drug, and you'll be treating some kids who don't have the infection and don't need it."

AZT, the only approved AIDS drug, can temporarily reverse some of the most severe symptoms of AIDS when given to babies with the disease. Some believe that the drug might delay the appearance of AIDS in infected babies if they were treated before they got sick.

Rogers and colleagues at six New York hospitals tested the new method, known as polymerase chain reaction, or PCR, on newborns of women infected with the AIDS virus. They report their results in today's New England Journal of Medicine.

Ordinarily, doctors check for AIDS infections by testing the blood for antibodies to the virus. Those who carry antibodies are presumed to be infected.

This method is worthless for newborns. Babies whose mothers were infected will carry their mothers' AIDS antibodies for several months, even if the babies themselves are not infected.

Dr. Cody Meissner of New England Medical Center said doctors now typically wait until babies are 16 months old before using standard antibody tests to determine which ones are infected.

"This will be the key role of PCR," he said. "We will be able to do a test on the baby's blood in the first weeks of life, and hopefully this will differentiate between kids who are truly infected and those who are simply born to women who are infected."

Ethics

reflect honorably on the institution and the nation."

However, House Speaker Thomas S. Foley, D-Wash., said the Republicans seemed to be trying to score "a political point ... apparently at the expense of one of their own members." He said any GOP attempt to make ethics a partisan issue was "absolute nonsense and the public knows it."

The House ethics committee, formally the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct, had been expected to investigate Lukens anyway. If the committee finds he violated House rules it could recommend penalties ranging from a reprimand to expulsion.

Republicans have set ethics reform in the House among their top priorities for the 101st Congress. And their political operatives hope to capitalize in the next elections by pointing to the resignations of Democratic House Speaker Jim Wright of Texas and Whip Tony Coelho of California in the face of ethics allegations.

But Lukens' conviction on May 30 in Franklin County, Ohio, of contributing to the unruliness and delinquency of a minor has been an embarrassment to his own party. A jury found Lukens guilty of the misdemeanor charge based on its conclusion that he had sex with the girl at his Columbus apartment last November. Lukens, 58 and divorced, is appealing the conviction.

A Republican source, speaking only on condition of anonymity, acknowledged that the move to launch an ethics investigation of Lukens was intended in part to remove a weapon that Democrats could have used against the GOP.

One member of the GOP leadership, Rep. Robert Walker of Pennsylvania, sought to use Wednesday's move also to turn up the heat on Democrats, suggesting they might do well to put the ethics spotlight on their own bad apples.

"We have taken that step of asking for an investigation," Walker said.

true friends and who are false ones," the television news quoted him as saying.

The government did not immediately respond to Bush's suspension of high-level U.S.-Chinese contacts and moves to block $1.4 billion in development loans to protest the crackdown. France and the Netherlands already had frozen relations and Japan has suspended new development loans.

In Washington, Secretary of State James A. Baker III said the Bush administration deeply regrets the executions but was not considering additional sanctions.

"There is an important relationship which we should seek to preserve if we possibly can," he said.

Foster said. "We were fortunate that the space in Willard was vacant and available, due to the move of several classrooms, offices and labs to the Chemistry-Biochemistry Building.

"But, we have no idea of where the enrollment center will be moving when the University decides to renovate Willard."

Foster said renovation of the library basement will begin as soon the move is complete.

Tom Gallagher, director of University Computing Activities, said he hopes to have the new computer system installed by the end of this year.

A number of problems have to be addressed with the renovation, including an increase in electrical power, installation of new air conditioning equipment and a new raised floor, Gallagher said.

form the flotation test to find smaller artifacts such as seed and other organic material.

"We found a piece of burned bone yesterday," Jaggers said.

The students leave the site between 3 and 3:30 p.m. every day and return to the Muncie Elementary School, where they are staying. Upon their arrival, they wash their artifacts and then put them in drying racks in the kindergarten room to dry.

After cleaning the artifacts, the students get in line for the one shower at the elementary school.

The students start their new day around 6:30, when they hurriedly dress and breakfast.

The six women attending the field school do not take much time getting ready in the morning.

"I didn't bring a hair dryer," Gumm said. "I brought make-up, but I don't wear it ever."

"You need a good meal to go out in the field," said Mary Catherine Callahan, the cook and a graduate student in cultural anthropology at KU. "Breakfast is hot and ready at 6:30 every morning."

Lunch is eaten in a barn near the site of excavation. The young archeologists take a 45-minute break to eat their lunches. However, before they can go to lunch, they must wet down each of the pits (to make digging easier) and cover them with a tarp.

The students have the weekends free to go home and do laundry or just rest.

"Fridays when I go home, I'm like a zombie," Blaker said.

Students come to the field school for a variety of reasons.

"I decided to come to field school to decide if I really wanted to do this for the rest of my life," Gumm said.

She said she enjoys it.

"I know this is what I wanted to do, so I needed actual experience," Petz said.

young coaches in the country."

The change at the top comes six weeks before fall practice begins and just more than two months before the Sooners' Sept. 2 opening game against New Mexico State.

Gibbs fielded questions involving the pressure he would face in following the winningest coach in Oklahoma football.

"I'm Gary Gibbs. I know what I can do," Gibbs said. "Your comparison is your comparison. We're going to go forward and make this thing happen."

Gibbs, 36, was chosen over two other assistant coaches — Merv Johnson, 53, and Jim Donnan, 34.

"I think there is a good chance it might be on the agenda in the 1991 convention," he said. "A main argument against it is that many schools could just not afford it. And some schools might fear it would give others a competitive edge."

A cost-reduction committee is now looking into financial aid on all levels, with the idea of coming up with new legislation for the 1991 convention.

"They might come up with something on this subject, something comparable to what we're talking about," Schultz said. "It would be based strictly on need."

Snyder said any change in legislation that would help athletes while not granting unfair advantages would be positive.

"The NCAA already has so many regulations that are difficult to monitor that it might as well make rules that are difficult to monitor that are worthwhile to somebody," Snyder said.

Something else Switzer said Monday, however, gave the NCAA a big pain. Speaking of a coach's inability to assist needy students, Switzer said, "How can any coach stick to these rules when a young man's father dies many miles away and the son has no money for a plane ticket home to the funeral?"

Actually, NCAA schools adopted a special provision in 1988 to make allowances for that very thing.

last two years. We have had to group people together instead of their getting enough individual attention."

Students at the junior or senior level enroll in two classes, Hotel Operations and Food Service Systems, to learn management styles and business operations. These classes are comprised of lecture and practicum components.

"Besides learning in the classroom, students are required to spend 48 practicum hours in an establishment where they will get hands-on experience in management styles and operations, ways to work with people, understanding the computers that now exist in hotels and how to deal with guests in the process of checking in and checking out," MacLaurin said. "Very few programs give this type of experience."

MacLaurin said 225 students were involved in the program last spring and he expects close to 300 students to enroll in the program next fall.

"The Holidome is relatively new, big, successful and under great management, and has worked with us all the way. The staff is acclimated to having students on the property," MacLaurin said.

Partlow said he doesn't know a solution for the University Inn, but he wants what is best for the program.

"We have expertise that we would like to offer, but we have not been consulted," he said. "We'd like to have more control or say in what is going on."

Students want boycott of bar, public apology

By Jane K. Thompson
Collegian Reporter

Because of an incident that occurred at Bushwackers Friday night, several students are organizing a protest and boycott of the bar and are considering taking legal action.

The incident occurred during a celebration of San Juan's Night by students and Manhattan residents from Puerto Rico and Latin countries. San Juan's Night celebrates the baptism of Jesus Christ by John the Baptist.

According to several students who participated in the celebration, Bushwackers employees hung signs behind the bars and in the front door that read "Fuck San Juan." The signs were hand written on Bushwackers letterhead and signed "The Management."

Mayte Jimenez, senior in electrical engineering, said she went to Bushwackers last Monday to talk to the management about the celebration. The employee she spoke to said they could have the party there and would be allowed to bring a few Latin songs for the announcer to play.

The party started Friday around 10 p.m. with about 20 people in the group. Jimenez said by midnight about 35 were there. The disc jockey announced two songs for the celebration of San Juan's Night.

The signs were put up shortly thereafter. Luis Montaner, third year student in veterinary medicine, said several people in the group asked the bartenders to remove them, but were refused.

"We went up to the bartender and said, 'We find it offensive; we find it disrespectful,'" Montaner said. "I heard him say, 'If I move them, I'll lose my job.'"

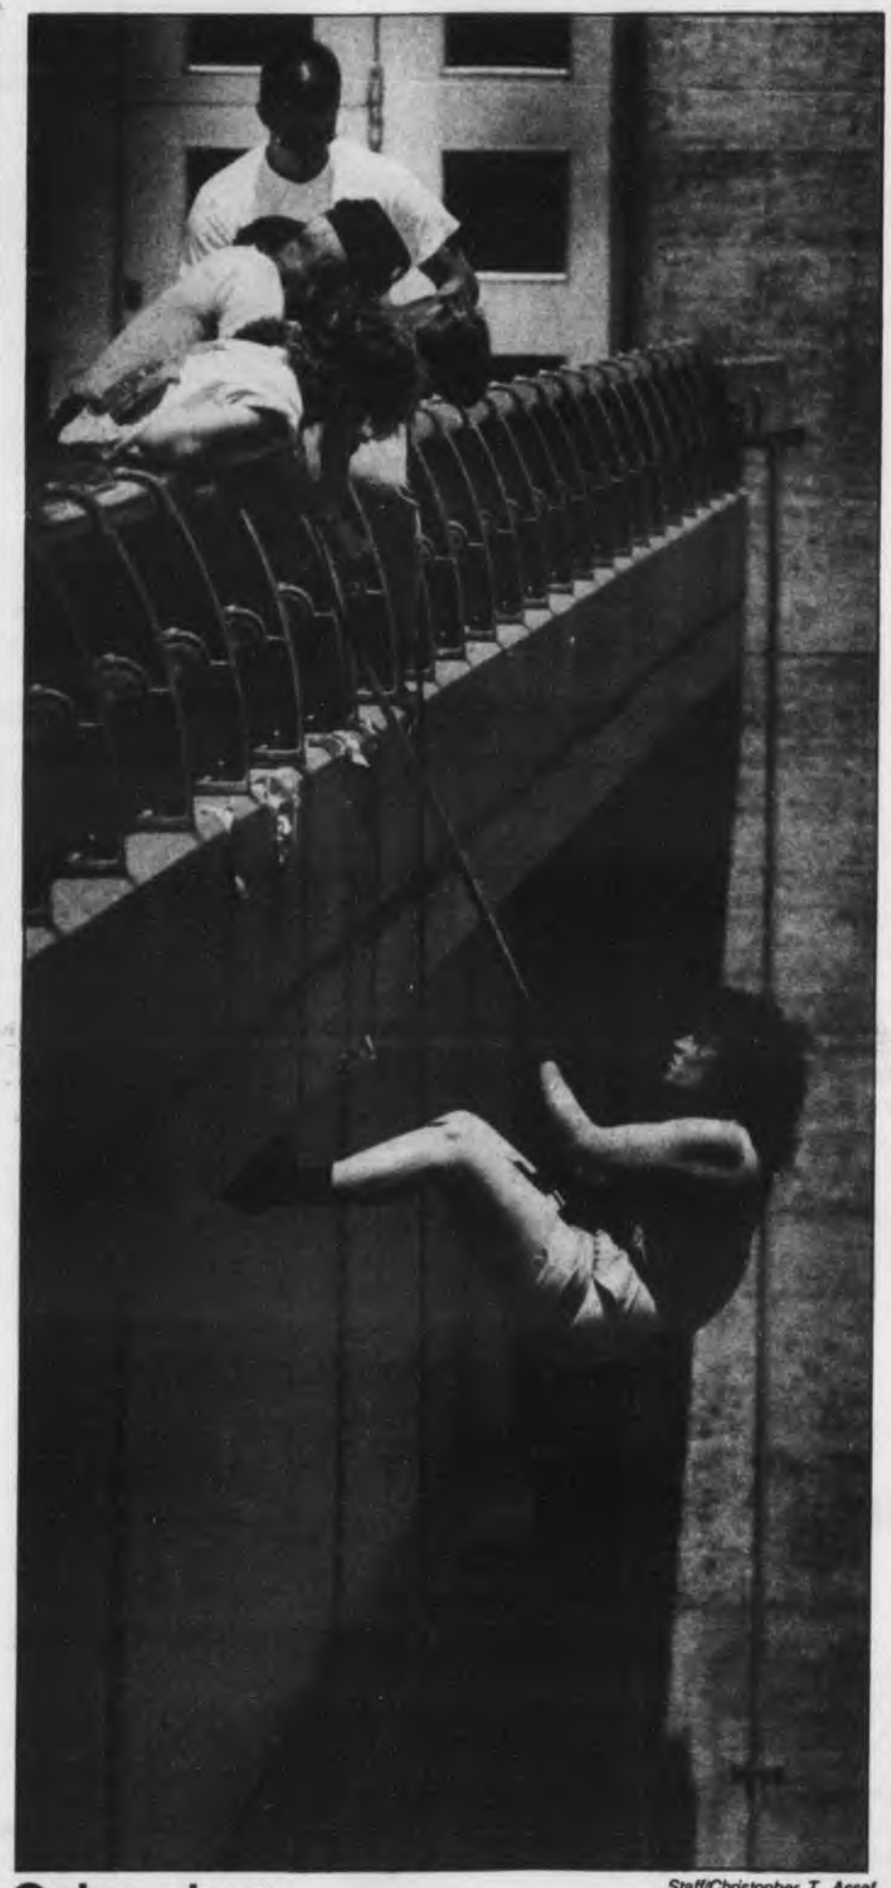
Jimenez asked one bartender to take the signs down. He told her he couldn't hear her and walked away, she said.

Montaner said one bartender called it a joke, but refused to remove the signs because "We stick with our jokes."

One student took pictures. For one, a bartender posed under a sign.

"They're really proud of what they did and they're really standing by it," Montaner said.

Jimenez and Montaner said the group felt Bushwackers employees were discriminating against them.



"These people were just segregating between who they felt was the 'in' crowd and who was the 'out' crowd," Montaner said.

"They were putting it right in our faces that they don't like us," Jimenez said.

Before he left, Montaner got one of the signs and wrote on the back, "I hereby felt I was discriminated against by the Bushwackers management." The statement was signed by 24 people, some of whom were international students from non-Latin countries.

Janelle Larson, an American student who attended the celebration, said she was upset by what happened.

Oil estimate reduced; cleanup in progress

By The Associated Press

NEWPORT, R.I. — The Coast Guard on Sunday sharply reduced its estimate of the amount of oil spilled at the mouth of Narragansett Bay and a wind shift blew much of the oil away from shore, but a shellfishing ban remained in effect.

Officials said they did not believe alcohol or drugs were involved in Friday's spill but acknowledged that an initial test on two crew members was mishandled.

Elsewhere, oil was found on beaches in three states along the Delaware River, where a tanker carrying 18 million gallons of industrial heating oil leaked 800,000 gallons after running aground Saturday. The ship was refloated early Sunday.

In Texas, cleanup continued on the Houston Ship Channel in Galveston Bay, where about 250,000 gallons of heavy crude oil spilled after a barge collision. Officials said the weather and currents had pushed most of it into a separate channel, where it would be easier to clean up.

Coast Guard Lt. Alan Brown said the latest estimate for the Rhode Island spill from the World Prodigy was estimated at 420,000 gallons. Earlier Sunday it was estimated at 500,000 to 600,000 gallons, down from estimates of up to 1.6 million gallons made shortly after the Greek-licensed tanker hit Brenton Reef on Friday.

"The 1.6 million was the most we could have potentially spilled if all the oil leaked from all the tanks that were holed," Brown said. "A good amount of the product that was in those tanks did not leak out."

Crews worked overnight to pump the ship's remaining 6 millions gallons into barges. Brown said the unloading probably would take until today.

Alan McKin, president of the cleanup company Clean Harbors, worked with the World Prodigy's 28 crew members during the unloading.

"They're very sad about what's happened and show an awful lot of remorse, particularly the first mate, who's been working with us unloading the tanks," McKin said. "He just keeps talking about it."

The wind shifted overnight and most of the oil was being blown out to sea instead of onto the state's southwestern beaches, and those beaches were reopened to swimming. They were closed again, however, when the tide turned late in the day.

Despite the offshore wind, the Coast Guard reported that a sheen had been seen as far up the bay as East Greenwich, about 20

Bill to extend visas for Chinese students

By Chris Koger
Campus/City Editor

Congress is expected to vote early next week on a bill that would allow Chinese students to stay in the United States by extending expired non-immigration visas until June 5, 1990, and classifying the students as legal aliens.

President Bush's recent extension of student visas would delay any deportation efforts until next June, but would still classify students with expired visas as illegal aliens. Under illegal alien classification, other opportunities to remain in the United States, such as marriage or employment, are not available.

Jie Yang, graduate in sociology, said the proposed bill would not affect a majority of the Chinese students at K-State. According to the registrar's office, 87 Chinese students are enrolled this summer, and 130 were enrolled in the spring.

Cheng Shi, graduate student in chemistry, said a majority of students who will need extended visas are those who have recently graduated or will graduate within the year.

"For some students and visiting scholars, especially those who graduate, this will extend their visa," Shi said. "But most students at K-State have visas that allow them to stay until their studies are finished, and they won't need to be extended for a year anyway."

About ten representatives from the Chinese Student and Scholar Association met with President Jon Wefald, faculty and administrators from the College of Arts and Sciences Wednesday to ask for support in a campaign that would ease some restrictions on student visas.

Zheng Chen, president of the association, said the representatives discussed the situation in China and stressed the need for measures that would allow the students to remain in the United States longer.

Chen, graduate student in physics, said he returned to China to see his family at the end of May, and was not allowed to leave until he signed a statement to verify he wasn't involved in the protests. He returned to Manhattan June 14. He is afraid to go back.

"Most of us have protested here, and we fear to go home because we are certain we will be put in jail," he said. "All of us know what happened there, and we know what (the

Expansion opposed by group

By Chris Koger
Campus/City Editor

Preserve the Flint Hills, an organization opposing an expansion that would double the size of Fort Riley, told Manhattan residents they are not an anti-military group.

About 100 people attended the program Sunday night at the City Park Pavilion to hear the organization dispute the Army's claim that the expansion is in the best interest of national security.

"The Army has yet to prove they need the land. They don't even understand the land like we do," said Keith Ascher, chairman of Preserve the Flint Hills, who was referring to the estimated 320 families living on the land the fort may acquire.

Ascher, a fourth-generation landowner and a farmer like many of the land's residents, said conservation is an important issue regarding the acquisition. Army officials have said the land would be used for training with the new M1-Abrams tank and other heavy equipment.

"The cruel irony of it is, they have destroyed so much land over there already, what will stop them from ruining this land?" Ascher said.

Other organizations support the Flint Hills group, including the National Audobon Society, Morris County Cattleman's Association, Geary County Fish and Game Association and Kansas Livestock Association.

Gary Johnson, a rancher from Dwight and member of the group's executive committee, said agriculture is the leading business in Kansas, and it is second only to the military in Geary County.

"We don't just want to keep it in our hands, we want to preserve the farmland for the future," Johnson said.

Even though the town of Dwight isn't located within the group's boundaries, Johnson said the town would be devastated by the expansion.

"The farmers on the land do big business in town, and the money turns over several times," he said. "I wonder how these people will be compensated when they lose all their business."

The Flint Hills group formed in January when comments by Fort Riley officials alerted the members to possible expansion. Although the Army has not stated exactly what boundaries are being considered, officials have said the expansion would probably be south of Interstate 70 to the the town of Dwight, and west of Kansas Highway 177 to U.S. Highway 77. Officials plan to double the fort's size by adding 100,000 acres.

Fort Riley officials have said the expansion would not take place for three to five years, and nothing is definite yet.

"You can't be premature with the government. We aren't jumping the gun," Ascher said.

Efforts by the group have attracted national attention and coverage in USA Today and The Washington Post.

John Exdell, professor of philosophy and coordinator of the Manhattan Alliance on Central America, said the Alliance supports the group's efforts.

"The past four years, the Alliance has opposed military intervention in Central America, and this is the first time we've been involved in a local issue," Exdell said. "But once again, the government is waving a 'national security' banner, and this is happening in our own back yard."

Ascher said the farmers and ranchers who comprise the group are not mobile like the Army.

"My grandfather and great-grandfather would be rolling in their graves if they could see what is going on," he said.

Iran hangs drug traffickers

NICOSIA, Cyprus — Fourteen drug traffickers were hanged in northeastern Iran Sunday and 50,000 addicts will be sent to hard-labor camps, Iranian news reports said.

The official Islamic Republic News Agency, monitored in Nicosia, said 40,000 other addicts will be cared for by the prison welfare system.

Tehran radio, also monitored in Cyprus, said the 14 convicts were hanged in prison in the northeastern city of Mashhad in Khorasan province. Some were accused of smuggling arms and committing "unvirtuous acts," a euphemism for prostitution.

Sunday's hangings brought to 757 the number of drug-related executions reported since December, when Parliament passed a law mandating death for possession of even small quantities of narcotics.

There are an estimated 2 million addicts and pushers in Iran.

The human rights group Amnesty International has said the law is to cover up the execution of political prisoners.

Ethnic violence continues

MOSCOW — Scores of youths armed with sticks, stones and metal rods stormed a village police station in the Soviet republic of Kazakhstan, but authorities repelled the attack and arrested 51 people, Pravda said Sunday.

At least four people have died since ethnic riots broke out June 17 in the oil-producing region of the Central Asian republic.

Authorities have brought in hundreds of security troops and declared a curfew to control unrest in the city of Novy Uzen, but Pravda reported that disturbances have spread to at least five other municipalities.

In the town of Mangyshlak, "a crowd of 150 people armed with sticks, stones and metal rods attacked a village police station but was dispersed by helicopters," the newspaper said. It did not elaborate.

The newspaper quoted Maj. V. Sivushov, an Interior Ministry spokesman, as saying 51 people were arrested. It said the incident had occurred in the past 24 hours, but it did not say exactly when.

A gang of hooligans smashed windows in two trailers housing workers in the village of Kulsary, then poured gasoline on the trailers and set them on fire, Pravda said. It did not say whether anyone was injured.

Automaker suggests car ban

STOCKHOLM, Sweden — The president of Sweden's biggest automaker, Volvo AB, said in an interview published Sunday that private cars should be banned from big cities to curb air pollution and traffic congestion.

The Stockholm daily Svenska Dagbladet quoted Pehr G. Gyllenhammar as saying officials should also make big investments to improve public transportation and save cities from "choking."

Gyllenhammar said city councils should improve and expand fleets of buses, trolleys, subways and taxis, according to the newspaper.

Proposals made by others to reduce pollution and congestion include building a ring around Stockholm and forcing motorists to buy monthly passes costing $31 to bring their cars into the capital.

Cost of oilspill formulated

WASHINGTON — The Interior Department has come up with a specific dollar value for the thousands of birds, mammals and other animals killed in the Alaskan oil spill, according to the Washington Post.

It is the first time the rules have ever been applied to a large-scale disaster such as the March 24 spill caused when the tanker Exxon Valdez hit a reef in Prince William Sound, the newspaper reported in its Monday editions.

For example, each of the furry seals was worth $15, seagulls were worth $7.88, and Canadian geese were worth $35.74 each, the newspaper reported. Striped bass were valued at $1.84 per pound.

The figures were developed from a computer model which is supposed to reflect the market value of the wildlife, the Post reported.

Ambulance crash kills three

MARBLEHEAD, Ohio — An air ambulance carrying five people crashed moments after takeoff from Pelee Island in Lake Erie, killing three people, a Canadian police official said Sunday.

Searchers found the body of pilot Frederick Allen Lewis, 36, of Greenwood, Novia Scotia, who was killed in the crash late Saturday, said Constable Wayne O'Brien of the Ontario Provincial Police. Two passengers died in the wreck.

Search boats rescued a man and a woman shortly after the plane crashed about 200 yards west of the Canadian island, said O'Brien.

Margaret Fraser of Pelee Island was being flown to a hospital in Windsor, Ontario, for treatment of a broken ankle when the twin-engine Navajo Chieftan owned by Southwest Air Ltd. of Windsor crashed, O'Brien said.

Tip leads to murder charges

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Two Kansas City men have been charged with the abduction, rape and murder of a 15-year-old girl who disappeared March 22 as she waited for a school bus outside her home, authorities said Sunday.

The men were charged Saturday with one count each of first-degree murder, kidnapping, rape and armed criminal action in the death of Ann Harrison, but authorities didn't announce the charges until Sunday.

One of the men, Roderick Nunley, 24, was being sought by police Sunday night. The other man, Michael A. Taylor, 22, was imprisoned at the Western Missouri Correctional Center in Cameron on an unrelated charge.

Police spokesman Sgt. Gregory Mills said a call to a local crime hotline Tuesday led to the charges. Mills said the tip was the result of a news conference the day before, during which police announced the reward for information had been raised to $9,000.

The tip "gave us crucial information that allowed us to focus our investigation in a specific direction," Mills said.

Theatre presents plays despite poor funding

Staff/Christopher T. Assaf
Wendy Walburn, Jonie, and Tony Espinosa, Ben, rehearse their parts for the Summer Repertory Theatre '89 production of "Little Footsteps."

By Sandy Payne
Collegian Reporter

The 1989 Summer Repertory Theatre, that "almost didn't happen" because of a lack of funds, will open Wednesday night in Nichols Theatre.

The K-State Players and the Department of Speech will present "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?," "Little Footsteps" and the recent Broadway hit, "Spoils of War."

Harold Nichols, head of the speech department, said funding was $10,000 short, but the theatre members managed to piece together enough money through the College of Arts and Sciences. The Fine Arts Council pays for sets, costumes and publicity, and the box office receipts pay the cast and crew, but usually aren't enough, he said.

"We need a more consistent means of funding," Nichols said.

Charlotte MacFarland, associate professor of speech, said that because of limited funding, the directors sought plays with only four to five characters, which are difficult to find. She said the directors tried to pick plays that would challenge the cast and audience.

"We try to present plays that people in Manhattan might not ordinarily see," MacFarland said.

K-State is the first University to get the rights to do "Spoils of War." MacFarland said she found it in a magazine that publishes plays just off of Broadway. When she called the licensing company to get the play, she discovered that they had received it just that day.

"It was so new they didn't even send us actor's scripts or stage directions like they usually do," MacFarland said. Instead she got a Xerox copy of the magazine article. "We didn't have much to go on."

MacFarland is also directing "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?" which has won many awards.

"It's very funny and has really biting humor, but people might find some of the language offensive," she said.

"The third act is a block buster," MacFarland said. "Martha has a beautiful poetic speech about her child. It is really very powerful."

Tom McLaughlin Jr., who just finished his graduate work in theatre and is directing "Little Footsteps," said he picked the play because "it fits a lot of criteria of what people want to see in the summer."

"It is very light and very funny," he said. "It is a play that has us looking at ourselves and laughing at ourselves."

"Little Footsteps" is about a fun-loving married couple getting ready to have a baby. A six-month-old baby has been cast for the play. McLaughlin said the baby is "pretty unpredictable, but very good on stage."

Wendy Walburn, senior in theatre, plays the mother of the baby.

"You have to be on your toes all of the time and take care of it like you would in real life," she said.

A total of six cast members will do all three plays. They have been rehearsing since May 29 for nine to 10 hours a day, six days a week and sometimes even seven.

McLaughlin has a part in "Spoils of War." The other cast members are each in two or three plays.

"It is very difficult for them," MacFarland said. "They are always switching hats, but it is very good training. Some people say it is the best training because if you can do this, you can do anything."

The students producing the plays receive credit and a small stipend, but MacFarland said they are "heavily underpaid."

Lewis Shelton, associate professor in theatre, said the Summer Repertory Theatre is "kind of an apprenticeship."

"It's a chance to get a real taste of what being a theatre person full time feels like," he said. "It helps them decide what they want to do with their lives."

Shelton started the Summer Repertory Theatre in 1982 and directed it for five years.

"I felt the need to have some sort of summer program," he said. "We hadn't had one for six or seven years, and the last time we had tried it we had one person try out."

Shelton became interested in trying to do something in 1981 when "On Golden Pond" was presented by a combination of students and townspeople.

"It went over really well, so I thought if they could do one, we could do three," he said. "I really wanted to do real repertory theatre because I didn't want to have rehearsals all summer. This way we could rehearse for a month and then have the plays and have fun."

The fun is about to begin for this year's cast and crew, but with opening night nearing the tension is mounting.

"Everybody has reached their peak of stress, but we are getting along," MacFarland said. "People

City acquires new telephone prefix

By Kyleen Kersenbrock
Collegian Reporter

Manhattan has a new telephone prefix number, but its use is restricted to the Kansas Farm Bureau offices.

The prefix, 587, is for a system called Direct Inward Dialing (DID), and will allow certain calls to the Farm Bureau offices to bypass the company operator.

Marcie Wood, community relations manager for Southwestern Bell, said the prefix originated because Kansas Farm Bureau had requested DID but did not have enough numbers for the service.

The DID service allows callers to bypass switchboard operators if they know the extension number of the office they are calling. Wood said the service is convenient because it frees up the switchboard operator.

Adding the new prefix made more numbers available for business use. Since the DID service is for mid-market customers with large switchboard systems, the prefix is reserved for such businesses, Wood said.

The service will add to the company's efficiency, said Charles Sargent, employee of Kansas Farm Bureau. Sargent said Manhattan is the company's state headquarters and a high percentage of calls are from the 105 county Farm Bureau offices. The calls are made on a weekly basis, and the callers know the extension numbers. Bypassing the switchboard eliminates a step, saving time and money, Sargent said.

The service isn't fully in use yet, Sargent said, but the company's managers are using the 587 prefix.

"Kansas Farm Bureau dictates start up," Wood said. "The company was sold a group of numbers and the company can use the numbers at its discretion."

No set guidelines exist for determining whether a community can have a new prefix, Wood said.

"The telephone company decides the need for new prefixes based upon the needs of the community or the needs of businesses," Wood said.

Changes won't affect Dallas Cheerleaders' reputations

From my earliest days as a football-crazed yard ape, I've always had a blind and unshakable loathing for the Dallas Cowboys.

As the years have gone by, I've tried to understand why I hate them so. Cowboys fans, in between bouts of nose picking and chaw spitting, used to tell me that I was just jealous because "America's Team" always won.

For a while, I believed this theory. But once the Cowboys degenerated into a bunch of panty-waist, bottom-of-the-division losers, I still hated them.

I then began to think it was Tom Landry, the legendary wood-faced Cowboys coach and Pat Boone bible products promoter, that I hated. But when new owner Jerry Jones fired him and replaced him with the equally loathsome Jimmy Johnson, I still hated the Cowboys.

Last week, however, I finally realized why. This moment of epiphany occurred when I heard that a large number of the 37 Dallas Cowboys Cheerleaders were quitting because of Jones' plans to change their uniforms, as well as his request that they host parties for the Cowboys players and drink in uniform as part of beer promotions.

The outcry was quick and loud. A Dallas Times Herald survey showed that 93 percent of local fans felt that Jones was way out of line and that the cheerleaders' uniforms and code of moral conduct should be kept the same. The cheerleaders were widely defended as being "wholesome" and "moral" women whom Jones hoped to transform into harlots and wanton pompon wenches. One survey respondent phrased it best when he said, "as far as the Cowboys Cheerleaders are concerned, they are the best in the United States and the rest are some of the cheapest."

This sort of mindset is the true reason I hate "America's Team." It is a unique mixture of hypocrisy and chauvinism found deep within the particularly soft and smooth brains of Cowboys fans. This mindset leads them to believe their team is inherently superior to all the other squadrons of neck-breaking barbarians out there and their cheerleaders exist for some higher moral purpose than showing all the fans a little good ol' T&A, Texas style.

Let's face it. Football cheerleading in the days of the 70,000 seat mega-stadium is an anachronism. For most of the fans, any cheerleader, regardless of how big her pompons or how high her jump, is going to look like an ant. And who the heck could hear or follow her cheers, especially when a giant scoreboard does a much better job of stirring the crowds?

So why is she there? For the television viewer? The most he can get is a five-second eyeful between CBS "Chalkboard" and the commercials, during which he can't even hear anything the cheerleader is yelling.

Could it be that the Dallas Cowboys Cheerleaders, like all other NFL football floozies, are only there to indulge the sex-kitten fantasies of an oversexed male audience and sell pin-up calendars for the Cowboys' organization? I can discern no other purpose.

Then what the heck is so wrong with changing the uniforms to halter tops and short bicycling pants, commonly referred to as "bun tights?" Sure, maybe the women will have to show a little more skin, but that's their job, isn't it? Jones is the only man in Dallas who isn't being a hypocrite. He's just trying to strip away all the phoney-baloney pretensions to "wholesomeness" and reduce the cheerleaders to their pure essence: bouncing broads, big boobs and blubbery bottoms.

The idea of a Dallas Cowboys Cheerleader walking off the job because she has to wear a outfit smaller than her already-skimpy bimbo getup is about as funny as a stripper quitting because the management changed the color of her G-string. Did these women think their high standards of dress and behavior played a key role in the Cowboys' sparkling 3-13 record last season? Did they think anyone in the upper decks could hear or see their dances, cheers and exhortations? Surely not. But something must have offended them.

Maybe it was Jones' suggestion that the cheerleaders host parties and socialize with the players, but I really can't see the problem here, either. I mean, if the cheerleaders can serve as the inspiration for the sexual fantasies of thousands of admiring fans, why can't they do the same for the ol' home team? Surely nobody would have the gall to think the members of "America's Team" would ever bring dishonor or shame upon the chaste and pure Dallas Cowboys Cheerleaders at a refined and wholesome social gathering. I'm sure the boys would observe a strict "hands off" policy in regard to the ladies.

And why can't the cheerleaders be shown drinking? Beer billboards are a stadium staple, and every other commercial on Sunday afternoon is for Bud or Miller Lite. You mean only has-been jocks can be shown quaffing a brewski? Will a commercial featuring a cheerleader drinking make any more of an impression on a youth than one of Jesse "the Body" Ventura speaking out on the various merits of the "tastes great" argument?

All I know is that the cheerleaders were offended by something. Since I don't know any Dallas Cowboys Cheerleaders personally, I asked some of the junior high and high school cheerleaders who were on campus last week if they felt any sort of a spiritual sisterhood with their Dallas counterparts. The answers I got varied from "Where's the Union?" to "So, do you, like, really know Steve Henson?"

I rest my case.

Burning the flag is protester's right

The American flag is a part of every citizen's life. It appears everywhere. In kindergarten classrooms, it hangs from the little metal holder over the dusty green chalkboard, in textbook photos it billows over the Capitol of the United States, and in almost every city it flies near the courthouse, school or post office.

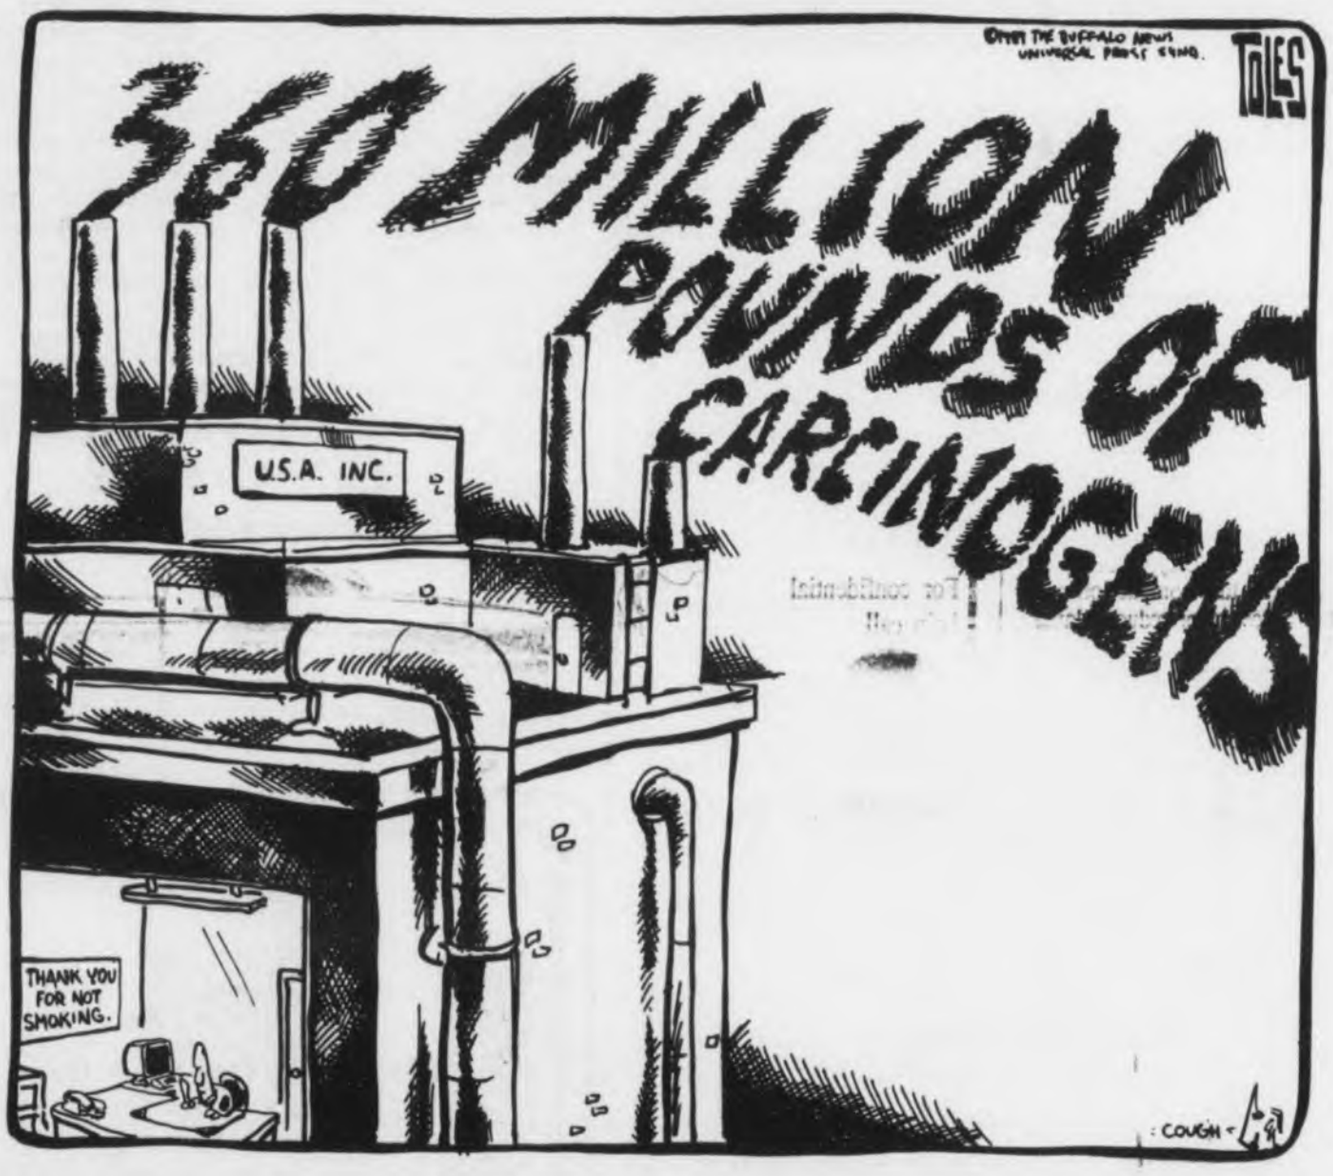
It is the symbol of our country. It was the rallying point for legions of troops who fought for the freedoms which the flag symbolizes. Immortalized in song, verse and statues, it is a constant reminder of all the freedoms this nation holds so dear.

Perhaps that is why people become outraged when they watch the news and see people burning the American flag in protest, or when they see an art student place the flag on the floor as part of his exhibit.

In many people's minds these protesters are burning or defiling their rights, their freedoms, their country that the flag represents. And maybe that is why so many people are also outraged that the Supreme Court has found burning the flag is not a criminal offense.

In a controversial decision which is sure to upset many, the Court has chosen to uphold the rights the flag represents, not the flag itself. Those rights include the right to freedom of expression.

Thus, the reactionary is free to express himself by burning the flag.



It's legal.

And it's right.

The Court can't force people to worship the flag, nor should it. The flag is not a god, nor is it a monarch. It is a material item, and if it is burned in a safe manner it is legal. If a person disagrees with the laws and freedoms available underneath that flag, and if they disrespect the country enough to desire to symbolically burn the flag, then no law prohibiting it will stop him.

But that is not to say the flag does not deserve respect. The men and women who gave their lives to protect the flag didn't die for the flag, they died for the country. The flag is symbolic of the country — but it is not the country itself.

Upholding the right to defile the flag was not an easy decision. If the Supreme Court would have instead chosen to take the easy way out and uphold the flag instead of the rights it symbolizes, it would have been the wrong decision. And belated attempts made by members of Congress and other citizens to overthrow the decision will just be time spent that would be better used flying and saluting the flag.

Collegian Editorial Policies

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR are always encouraged. Those which pertain to matters of campus and/or public interest are especially encouraged, and are given the highest priority.

Letters should be kept as brief as possible, preferably under 300 words. Those who cannot condense their opinions should consider submiting their letter in the form of a guest column. All letters are subject to editing for space, style and taste.

GUEST COLUMNS are also encouraged. The column should be no longer than two double-spaced, typed pages. If the submission is used as a column and not a letter to the editor, it will be accompanied by the author's photograph.

Celebration marred by signs

It is such a joy to be able to get together with friends to acknowledge those things that make us one and give us a remembrance of home. In San Juan, Puerto Rico and in other Latin countries, last Friday was the eve of "San Juan's Day," which we celebrate by going into the ocean at midnight in remembrance of Christ's baptism by Saint John.

Manhattan's Puerto Ricans could not go home for that particular holiday since most of us are in classes, so we chose to get together and share the moment at Bushwackers. But little did we know how the management would ruin our gathering by making us feel unwelcome after the disc jockey announced the purpose of our gathering.

What had started as a joyous occasion ended as a sad reminder to us of how it feels to be a minority.

How would you feel if you were in Germany for Independence Day, decided to get together with your friends in the local bar, and after you announced your celebration the management put up signs on their letterhead behind the two main bars saying, "Fuck USA. The Management?"

Would you feel insulted? Would you feel unwelcome? Of course!

So the next thing you would do is ask them to take the signs down because you find them offensive and distasteful.

What if the bartender said, "Sorry, they stay. If I take them down I will lose my job." Would you feel encouraged to go across the bar and take them down? You would if you had some pride and felt some honor for your heritage.

What can you do? Well, hopefully you can let it be known that these actions do hurt, are discriminatory and have serious implications.

Yes, the Bushwackers management put up at least five signs behind their main bars which said, "Fuck San Juan. The Mgmt."

Commentary

Luis Montaner
Guest Columnist

And yes, we repeatedly asked them to take them down because we found it insulting and they refused. So, the damage was done. I would like to pause to state that I personally have dealt with such situations before, yet not until this time had I seen a group of people find it so amusing to see us upset over their actions.

Knowing we were disturbed and helpless about it, they enjoyed their position of putting up whatever they desired behind their bar. I do not generalize in my accusation to include everybody, but only those who felt amused by this action.

After having worked as minority affairs director on the student body president's cabinet and in Blue Key's senior honorary with the University's effort to recruit and portray Manhattan's image as a homey place to be, all I felt was a sense of loss for them and for me since actions like this which last but a night destroy all the work of years.

The town of Manhattan as well as the University takes great care of and makes profit on the "non-American" business, and it seems irresponsible of the management of Bushwackers to put Manhattan's welcome image in jeopardy. I would like to clarify that even if other patrons would argue: "That was Bushwackers and not us," the feelings that went through the Puerto Ricans were of hatred against Mahnattan and Kansas, not Bushwackers.

Even if we all know that the guilty party here is the management of Bushwackers, I ask of you to understand that such incidents help form people's attitudes, which I am sure are not the attitudes of the majority, yet it comes across loud and clear. My anger is not directed at people that are disrespectful, because they will be what they are in spite of my opinion about their behavior, but at the damage these people consciously do to the image and friendly atmosphere that many other people work so hard to build.

To try to make my prior statement a bit more understandable, I would like to say that by the end of the night we got hold of one of the signs and asked the people present to sign it if they felt they were insulted. To my surprise, all the foreign students joined us since they too felt addressed by this action. They are not even Americans like we Puerto Ricans are, so they must have assumed they would have been in the same position we were if they had chosen to meet there as a group.

In conclusion, I ask the management of Bushwackers to realize their ignorance and irresponsibility to their community by printing a public apology to the Latin community of Manhattan in either the local or campus newspaper.

Of the community of Manhattan, the students, the University and other patrons I ask you to join us in displaying our disapproval and our determination not to let this type of incident pass unnoticed by either voicing your discontent or boycotting Bushwackers with us until the apology is printed. I have complete confidence in the response to this call to consciousness because I know from experience we all care and take great pride in the people of Manhattan.

Researchers study meat processing

By Heidi Stichtenath
Collegian Reporter

In response to consumer demands for leaner, more economical red meat products, animal science researchers here are using surimi, a process used in the fish industry, to restructure meat products.

The surimi-like process extracts protein in the form of a glue-like material from sub-divided meat chunks by adding salt to it. The extraction is then used to "glue" the meat parts back together into portions with the desired nutritional value.

The process can be used with beef, pork and lamb to produce more efficient nutrient sources and improve taste and appeal.

"In beef, we can wash off less functional proteins and fat. With pork, we can use the process on boar meat to reduce the odor caused by fat particles. The process can be used with lamb to get rid of the mutton flavor," said Curtis Kastner, professor and coordinator of animal science and industry research.

"Through meat restructuring, we are making meat leaner, increasing dietary fiber, lowering the salt content and adding convenience," Kastner said.

Kastner is working with Brett Kenney and Claudia Garcia, graduate students in animal science and industry, in making a glue without the use of salt.

Kenney is specifically working on a process that will require less sodium chloride to achieve a comparable bind.

"The main focus of the research is to increase the utility of under-used carcass parts and meat cuts," Kenney said.

The restructuring process uses lower quality cuts and carcass parts such as shank, which is usually ground for hamburger products, and makes them into higher quality products, he said.

"We are making meat leaner, increasing dietary fiber, lowering the salt content and adding convenience."
— Curtis Kastner, professor

"We can take a shank cut and put it into a tender, roast-like portion by removing connective tissue," Kastner said.

"We can adjust the composition by making it leaner, adding dietary fiber or removing connective tissue for tenderness," Kenney said.

For example, Kenney said research is being done on improving the utility of beef hearts.

"Beef hearts are usually considered as by-products because they contain a high amount of connective tissue, but through meat restructuring we can increase their usefulness," he said.

Kastner said the research will benefit red meat producers, allowing them to maximize meat use.

Consumers will also benefit from the higher nutritional value and lower costs of red meat products, he said.

"They can buy restructured meat products for a smaller price per pound than roasts and steaks," Kastner said.

Kastner predicted the restructured products will become popular in the fast food industry and help economic development of the Kansas beef industry.

Beef is raised, fed and slaughtered in Kansas and then boxed and shipped to the coasts for processing.

"If we add enough value before shipping it across the state line, we can increase the dollar value and create more jobs," Kastner said.

Funding for the research comes from the Kansas Beef Council, National Livestock and Meat Board and the Kansas Agricultural Experiment Station.

Vandalism sets back turf study

By Kevin Kramer
Staff Writer

Vandalism to the turf plots under observation by K-State's Horticulture Department at the Anneberg Park soccerfields may not as bad as first estimated, said Jeff Nus, assistant professor of horticulture.

Damage to research turf plots and the soccer fields was reported Tuesday by Manhattan Parks and Recreation Department employees. Police reports said damage was caused by a vehicle that drove through the irrigated turf in circular patterns, leaving ruts in sections of the soccer fields and research plots.

"The damage to the fields was a moderate setback in our research," Nus said. "But it was not severe enough to interfere with the research we are doing and to keep the project from continuing.

"Most of the turf will repair itself. The recent rains have helped repair part of the damage, but we may need to ... fill some of the damaged area."

Mike Boaz, graduate student in horticulture, said the damage was done to four of 16 test plots at Anneberg Park.

"There will be some added costs to the project. Most of it will be in time and labor, and not in materials," he said.

The soil density will have to be monitored again, Boaz said. A quality rating of the turf will be required to compare both the damaged and undamaged areas of turf.

"It is possible that we can get additional information and research out of examining the damaged area," Boaz said.

The test plots are part of a turf research project by Nus, in which the fields were injected with pea-sized granules of the chemical polyacrylamide. The research will determine if turf treated with the chemical will reduce the compaction caused by sport activity, Nus said. Reduced turf compaction can help prevent or reduce player injury.

The polyacrylamide was not hurt by the vandalism, he said.

"It was buried deep enough in the fields to where it was not damaged," Nus said.

The project is a joint experiment between K-State, Manhattan Parks and Recreation, a Colorado chemical company and Olathe Manufacturing.

Construction to begin on Vietnam veterans memorial

By Catharine McSwegin
Collegian Reporter

Construction of a memorial for the 41 K-State students killed or missing in action in the Vietnam War is scheduled to begin in July or August, said Capt. John Taglieri, KSU Vietnam Memorial committee member and Arnold Air Society adviser.

"The memorial is a veterans' memorial, not a war memorial," he said. "It's a thank-you to the folks who gave up their lives to protect our way of life, a tribute to those who died and a reminder of the price of war."

The memorial, which consists of a flag pole and bench with two semi-circular limestone walls around them, will be inscribed with the names of the 41 students, Taglieri said. The walls will be sloped, rising from three feet to seven feet. The memorial, to be built east of All Faiths Chapel, will be 25 feet wide, and accessible from two sides. The dedication is tentatively set for Nov. 10.

The planning for the memorial began in 1986, when William Arck, director of the Academic Assistance Center, originated the idea for the memorial.

"I thought that we should have a memorial on campus for several different reasons," Arck said. "I am a veteran and we have memorials on campus honoring those who served in World War I and II and the Korean War."

A plaque in the Union, dedicated in 1969, honors Vietnam veterans, but it isn't as timely as it could be, he said.

"Most memorials, like the National Vietnam Veterans Memorial, (in Washington, D.C.) are designed by competition," Arck said. "With architects, engineers and design people (in Manhattan), a contest was applicable."

Scott Enns, graduate student in architecture, was the winner of the contest.

The $21,000 needed to construct the memorial came from private donations, fund-raising activities and a $7,000 allocation from Student Senate, Taglieri said. Many of the fund-raising activities were sponsored by the Arnold Air Society.

Operation Combat Boots collected donations at K-State football games, said Tom Devore, senior in marketing and Arnold Air Society member. Other fundraisers included a benefit dinner with Gov. Mike Hayden as the guest of honor. The dinner raised $3,000.

The Alpha Tau Omega fraternity, which had a former member killed in Vietnam, worked with Arnold Air Society and organized a Greek Open House with other fraternities and sororities. The open house raised $800, Taglieri said.

Jewish emigration causes problems

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A fragile consensus is emerging that many of the thousands of Jews now leaving the Soviet Union should be encouraged to emigrate to Israel rather than the United States, Jewish officials say.

But advocates of that approach are having to balance it carefully with the long-held view of the U.S. administration and the Jewish community that Soviet Jews should be allowed to choose where they want to resettle.

The unprecedented numbers of Soviet citizens, most of them Jews, Armenians and Pentecostalists, granted exit visas over the past 18 months have stretched to a limit the U.S. budget and the inventiveness of Congress and the administration.

"We are now having to cope with the results of our foreign policy success," said Secretary of State James A. Baker III, referring to the sustained U.S. pressure on the Kremlin to liberalize emigration.

The exodus started last year under the liberalized policies of Mikhail Gorbachev has spawned a series of U.S. policy directives, legislative proposals and funding requests — a messy patchwork that defies cohesion.

The new administration ordered all the agencies dealing with Soviet refugees and immigrants to come up with ideas that will solve the crisis.

More than 20,000 Jews have been allowed to leave the Soviet Union this year, and nearly 30,000 applicants are waiting.

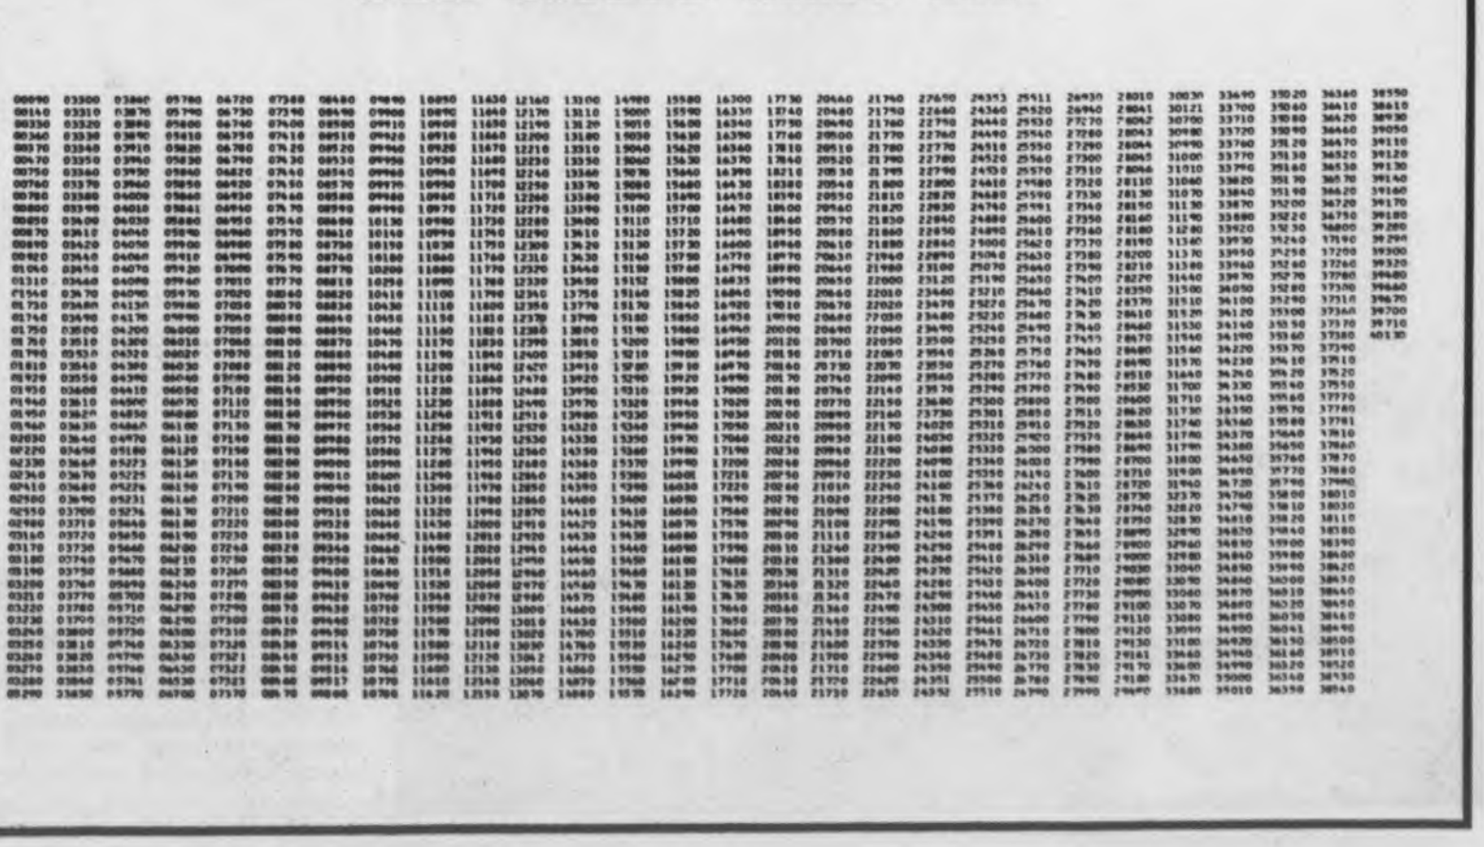
ABCs OF FIRST AID

KNEE INJURIES
Knee injuries can range from minor strains to much more serious injuries. A more serious injury is usually characterized by swelling, and medical attention should be sought immediately for those injuries. Ice may be applied to the injured area to ease pain and help lessen swelling. Knee injuries may sometimes be avoided by doing strengthening exercises for the knee, avoiding side to side movements, and running on softer surfaces.



The ABCs of First Aid is brought to you as a community service of the emergency room at Memorial Hospital. Be looking for the entire alphabet and always remember to clip and save this announcement for your own emergency care.

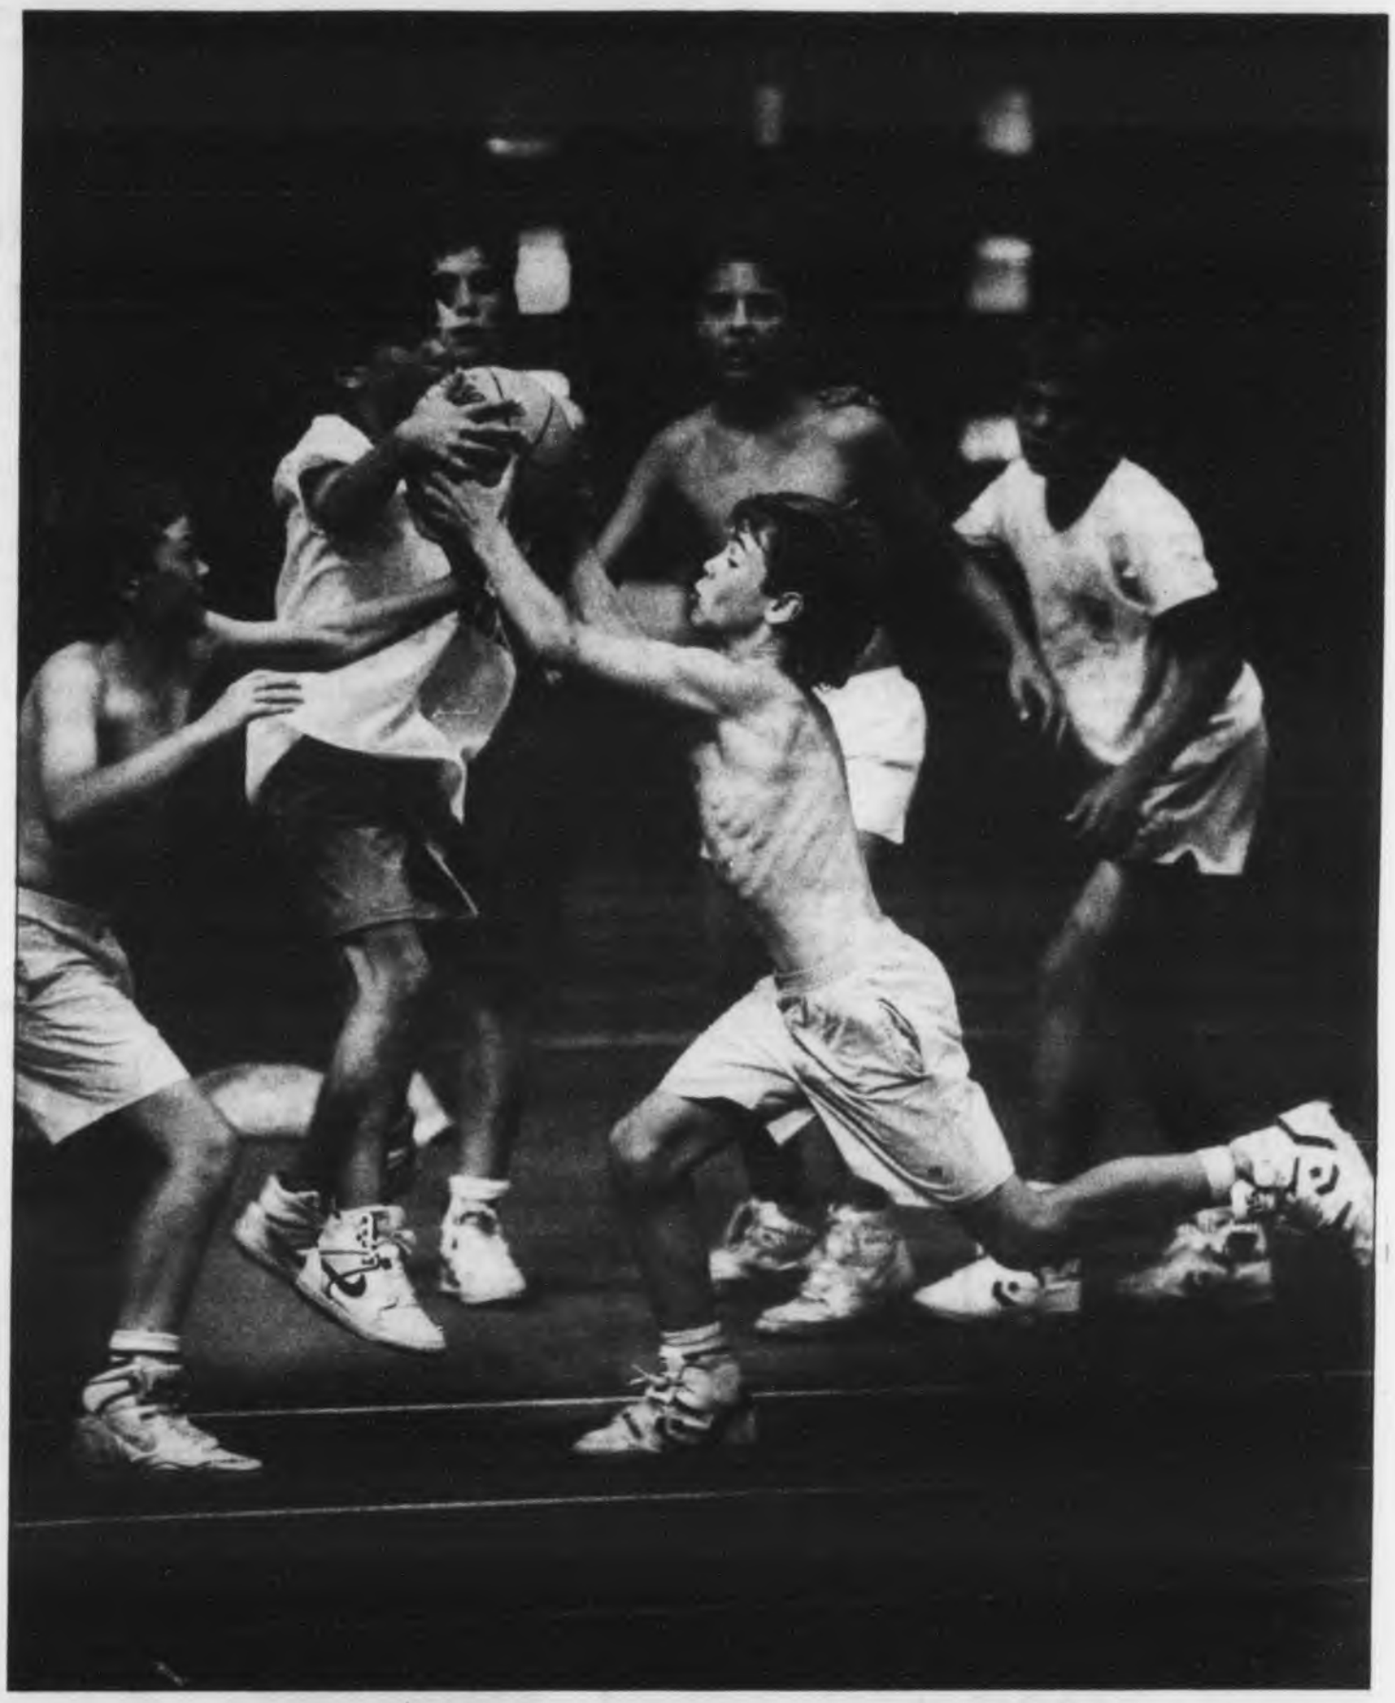
Fall Closed Class List



Ben Stamey, a 12-year-old from Manhattan, spent five days last week at the third and final session of the Lon Kruger Basketball Camp.

He's just another kid ...

At Camp

Diary provides inside look into week full of activity

Sunday

I had some trouble finding my way around the dorms, and that's how the day began.

We went to Ahearn after meetings and played about six games. My team won by a lot. The opponents only scored five points total in the six games — and three of those were in one game.

I know we'll be split up tomorrow because those games tonight were just practice games.

We stayed up until about 10:15, which was the nightly pizza delivery time. We didn't order any, because it was $6 for a small, $8 for a medium and $10 for a large.

Monday

I got up at 6:30. The alarm clock works. We had breakfast at 7:15. All the food was terrible.

This is the first full day.

First we do "stations," and that's the worst part of camp because we do them every day and we don't learn much. Rebounding, shooting, boxing out and power moves to the basket are part of the stations. I get tired of the repetition.

After stations, we had one game. We lost.

Then we watched a stupid Pistol Pete (Maravich, a former NBA great) video and came back to the dorm at 10:15. We rested, then had lunch at 11:30.

At 12:45, we went back to Ahearn. From 1 to 2:30 we stretched and repeated stations. We lost our afternoon game by 16.

At about 2:30 we watched another boring Pistol Pete movie and then walked back to the dorm.

At 5, we ate our bad evening meal. At 5:20, we went back to Ahearn and played three evening games. My team lost all three.

I went back to the dorm at 7:30. We had pizza at 10:15, and lights out at 10:45.

Tuesday

It's the same thing all over again — drills, stations and videos. My team lost again. We don't box out and our shots aren't falling.

I think I'm doing better, but the coaches have gotten on me for a couple of things. Most of the time, though, they're complimentary.

Lunch came, and the afternoon also repeated itself. Yep, we lost again.

Supper was grilled ham and cheese sandwiches, which weren't bad.

In our evening games, we lost three more times.

We've got a really stupid kid on our team. He's so dumb. He was on a fast break with me, and he blocked my layup. We're on the same team and he blocked my shot.

Later on a 3-on-2 fast break (we had the three), he stopped to tie his shoe and we lost the ball. We're now 0-8.

I liked the K-State highlight film from 1986 to 1989. The slam dunks were cool. After the film, we went home, but didn't have pizza tonight.

We visited by phone with cheerleaders in another dorm.

The first two nights I had bad dreams, but maybe tonight will be nicer. My cousin Jim took a survey tonight. Most people are enjoying camp, and only a few have ever felt like quitting.

Wednesday

We had the same morning routine. The coaches are getting tougher, because they know it's our last full day. We're now 0-9.

At lunch, we went to talk to the cheerleaders. In our afternoon game, we moved to 0-10.

Supper was good, and it must have been what we needed, because we won our first game by eight points.

We walked to Bramlage. It was too far to walk, but the locker rooms were awesome.

All of the days by now pretty much look the same. I can't remember back to Sunday very well. I'm so tired I really don't even want to be writing this.

We had pizza tonight, and I made the finals in my age group in three different competitions.

Thursday

I stayed up late last night talking on the phone with the cheerleaders. We planned to meet at 6:20 at Derby. I looked at the clock from 5 a.m. on about every five minutes. When my alarm went off at 6, it was pouring down rain, so I called a friend who was going with me.

We agreed to meet at 6:45. We ate breakfast and saw the girls leaving. We thought they didn't want to see us.

A minute later, though, they signaled for us to hurry up and get over there. We talked to them until a coach came by. We ran outside in the rain then and finished talking.

We finished the morning, and camp, with awards and check out.

It was fun, but I'm glad I'm going out of town with my cousin for a while.

Ben Stamey isn't a typical 12-year-old.

The son of Bob and Mary Stamey, Manhattan, and grandson of the former dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, William Stamey, Ben is a multi-sport athlete who's a bit more gifted than most in his age group.

I know — I was his baseball coach last year, and I've never had anyone work harder for me than Ben did.

I asked Ben to compile his experiences while at the Lon Kruger Basketball Camp. An interview with Coach Kruger might have provided some interesting material, but it's easier to appreciate the experience if you're inside the mind of a camper.

By week's end, Ben was tired.

I watched him pitch in a Little League baseball game Monday. That's why Monday night's portion of the diary ends so abruptly.

When I visited him in his Haymaker Hall room Tuesday, he was still upbeat, but by the time he handed me his diary on Thursday, he looked as tired as I've seen him in the time I've known him.

Kruger said the three weeks of camps, which are attended by more than 200 players each session, are for having a good time while learning more about basketball and K-State.

Ben did both, as I hope his candid commentary indicates.

Kastner said the research will benefit red meat producers, allowing them to maximize meat use.

Consumers will also benefit from the higher nutritional value and lower costs of red meat products, he said.

"They can buy restructured meat products for a smaller price per pound than roasts and steaks," Kastner said.

Kastner predicted the restructured products will become popular in the fast food industry and help economic development of the Kansas beef industry.

Beef is raised, fed and slaughtered in Kansas and then boxed and shipped to the coasts for processing.

"If we add enough value before shipping it across the state line, we can increase the dollar value and create more jobs," Kastner said.

Funding for the research comes from the Kansas Beef Council, National Livestock and Meat Board and the Kansas Agricultural Experiment Station.

Vandalism sets back turf study

By Kevin Kramer
Staff Writer

Vandalism to the turf plots under observation by K-State's Horticulture Department at the Anneberg Park soccerfields may not as bad as first estimated, said Jeff Nus, assistant professor of horticulture.

Damage to research turf plots and the soccer fields was reported Tuesday by Manhattan Parks and Recreation Department employees. Police reports said damage was caused by a vehicle that drove through the irrigated turf in circular patterns, leaving ruts in sections of the soccer fields and research plots.

"The damage to the fields was a moderate setback in our research," Nus said. "But it was not severe enough to interfere with the research we are doing and to keep the project from continuing.

"Most of the turf will repair itself. The recent rains have helped repair part of the damage, but we may need to ... fill some of the damaged area."

Mike Boaz, graduate student in horticulture, said the damage was done to four of 16 test plots at Anneberg Park.

"There will be some added costs to the project. Most of it will be in time and labor, and not in materials," he said.

The soil density will have to be monitored again, Boaz said. A quality rating of the turf will be required to compare both the damaged and undamaged areas of turf.

"It is possible that we can get additional information and research out of examining the damaged area," Boaz said.

The test plots are part of a turf research project by Nus, in which the fields were injected with pea-sized granules of the chemical polyacrylamide. The research will determine if turf treated with the chemical will reduce the compaction caused by sport activity, Nus said. Reduced turf compaction can help prevent or reduce player injury.

The polyacrylamide was not hurt by the vandalism, he said.

"It was buried deep enough in the fields to where it was not damaged," Nus said.

The project is a joint experiment between K-State, Manhattan Parks and Recreation, a Colorado chemical company and Olathe Manufacturing.

Construction to begin on Vietnam veterans memorial

By Catharine McSwegin
Collegian Reporter

Construction of a memorial for the 41 K-State students killed or missing in action in the Vietnam War is scheduled to begin in July or August, said Capt. John Taglieri, KSU Vietnam Memorial committee member and Arnold Air Society adviser.

"The memorial is a veterans' memorial, not a war memorial," he said. "It's a thank-you to the folks who gave up their lives to protect our way of life, a tribute to those who died and a reminder of the price of war."

The memorial, which consists of a flag pole and bench with two semi-circular limestone walls around them, will be inscribed with the names of the 41 students, Taglieri said. The walls will be sloped, rising from three feet to seven feet. The memorial, to be built east of All Faiths Chapel, will be 25 feet wide, and accessible from two sides. The dedication is tentatively set for Nov. 10.

The planning for the memorial began in 1986, when William Arck, director of the Academic Assistance Center, originated the idea for the memorial.

"I thought that we should have a memorial on campus for several different reasons," Arck said. "I am a veteran and we have memorials on campus honoring those who served in World War I and II and the Korean War."

A plaque in the Union, dedicated in 1969, honors Vietnam veterans, but it isn't as timely as it could be, he said.

"Most memorials, like the National Vietnam Veterans Memorial, (in Washington, D.C.) are designed by competition," Arck said. "With architects, engineers and design people (in Manhattan), a contest was applicable."

Scott Enns, graduate student in architecture, was the winner of the contest.

The $21,000 needed to construct the memorial came from private donations, fund-raising activities and a $7,000 allocation from Student Senate, Taglieri said. Many of the fund-raising activities were sponsored by the Arnold Air Society.

Operation Combat Boots collected donations at K-State football games, said Tom Devore, senior in marketing and Arnold Air Society member. Other fundraisers included a benefit dinner with Gov. Mike Hayden as the guest of honor. The dinner raised $3,000.

The Alpha Tau Omega fraternity, which had a former member killed in Vietnam, worked with Arnold Air Society and organized a Greek Open House with other fraternities and sororities. The open house raised $800, Taglieri said.

Jewish emigration causes problems

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A fragile consensus is emerging that many of the thousands of Jews now leaving the Soviet Union should be encouraged to emigrate to Israel rather than the United States, Jewish officials say.

But advocates of that approach are having to balance it carefully with the long-held view of the U.S. administration and the Jewish community that Soviet Jews should be allowed to choose where they want to resettle.

The unprecedented numbers of Soviet citizens, most of them Jews, Armenians and Pentecostalists, granted exit visas over the past 18 months have stretched to a limit the U.S. budget and the inventiveness of Congress and the administration.

"We are now having to cope with the results of our foreign policy success," said Secretary of State James A. Baker III, referring to the sustained U.S. pressure on the Kremlin to liberalize emigration.

The exodus started last year under the liberalized policies of Mikhail Gorbachev has spawned a series of U.S. policy directives, legislative proposals and funding requests — a messy patchwork that defies cohesion.

The new administration ordered all the agencies dealing with Soviet refugees and immigrants to come up with ideas that will solve the crisis.

More than 20,000 Jews have been allowed to leave the Soviet Union this year, and nearly 30,000 applicants are waiting.

ABCs OF FIRST AID

KNEE INJURIES
Knee injuries can range from minor strains to much more serious injuries. A more serious injury is usually characterized by swelling, and medical attention should be sought immediately for those injuries. Ice may be applied to the injured area to ease pain and help lessen swelling. Knee injuries may sometimes be avoided by doing strengthening exercises for the knee, avoiding side to side movements, and running on softer surfaces.

Rose gets favorable ruling

Judge grants temporary restraining order

By The Associated Press

CINCINNATI — Pete Rose said baseball commissioner A. Bartlett Giamatti wasn't playing fair and on Sunday, a judge agreed.

Hamilton County Common Pleas Judge Norbert Nadel, ruling Giamatti had prejudged Rose on gambling allegations that could lead to a lifetime ban, blocked Monday's hearing on evidence the Cincinnati Reds manager bet on his team.

"I think they proved (Giamatti) already made up his mind," Rose said. "It just wasn't going to be a fair hearing, in my eyes. It was obvious he believed my accusers."

Nadel granted a temporary restraining order and said Rose can't be disciplined by major league baseball or fired by the Reds in the next two weeks. On July 6, the judge said he will consider a motion for a preliminary injunction, which would further delay baseball's case while Nadel decides who should determine Rose's fate.

Nadel ruled Giamatti "has prejudged Peter Edward Rose" as guilty, and that a hearing Monday before the commissioner would be "futile and illusory and the outcome a foregone conclusion."

"I regret the judge's decision. I have absolutely no prejudgment or prejudice regarding Pete Rose. We will contest this matter tooth and nail."
— A. Bartlett Giamatti baseball commissioner

Nadel, 51, was a low-profile judge who had been thrust into the national spotlight by the case. He was appointed to office and is up for election next year.

"I regret the judge's decision. I have absolutely no prejudgment or prejudice regarding Pete Rose," Giamatti said in a statement. "We will contest this matter tooth and nail."

"I think we got justice," Rose's attorney, Reuven Katz, said.

Louis Hoynes, who presented baseball's case against Rose, disagreed vehemently.

"The judge has made a mistake, a big one," Hoynes said. "It's an erroneous ruling. It's a problem, a serious mistake."

Hoynes did not immediately say whether baseball would appeal the decision.

Rose was not at the packed courtroom for the decision; he was at nearby Riverfront Stadium for Sunday's game against Los Angeles.

The unprecedented decision came two days after a hearing in which baseball special investigator John Dowd revealed that evidence shows Rose bet on major-league baseball games, including Reds' games, during the 1985, 1986 and 1987 seasons.

Nadel also said he thought Rose's career "will be irreparably harmed" if Monday's hearing was held. Nadel found that baseball and the public interest will not be hurt if the hearing was not held Monday.

Rose could be suspended for a year if Giamatti determines he bet on major-league games, and he could be banned for life if he's found to have wagered on Reds' games.

The judge got the case after Rose's lawyers filed a lawsuit last Monday in Hamilton County Common Pleas Court, asserting Rose had been denied a fair investigation by Dowd. They also said Giamatti had already decided that Rose is guilty, and asked for the court — not Giamatti — to determine whether the manager bet on baseball.

The first step in the case was Rose's request for the temporary restraining order to halt his scheduled hearing with Giamatti.

Charles O. Finley, Ted Turner and others had gone to court to challenge the broad powers given to baseball's commissioners, but none had been successful. Nadel admitted Friday that allowing a court to intervene would be going into "previously uncharted waters."

KU coach to stay; Kruger a candidate

From Staff and Wire Reports

LAWRENCE — University of Kansas basketball coach Roy Williams told Ohio State athletic officials Sunday he was not interested in becoming the Buckeyes' new coach.

Williams was one of several people, including K-State coach Lon Kruger, being considered by Ohio State for the job. In a telephone conversation, Williams told Jim Jones, Ohio State's athletic director, that he would rather stay at KU, according to KU Assistant Athletic Director Doug Vance.

"I'd like it to be known that I will be staying at the University of Kansas," Williams said in a statement. "We have a great group of players and I'm looking forward to next season."

Williams said he was flattered and appreciated the preliminary inquiry.

Ohio State is looking for a replacement for Gary Williams, who resigned to take the head coaching job at Maryland.

K-State athletic department officials were contacted early last week for permission to talk with Kruger about the position.

Kruger spoke briefly last week with Ohio State football coach John Cooper about the position, according to published reports in Sunday's Kansas City Star.

Kruger and Athletic Director Steve Miller are on an alumni cruise off the coast of California until Wednesday and could not be reached for comment.

Kruger was the subject of several rumors involving the then-vacant head coaching job at the University of Texas following the 1987-88 season, but he declined the job and stayed at his alma mater.

The Texas job went to former Rhode Island Coach Tom Penders.

Others said to be on the Ohio State list include DePaul coach Joey Meyer and Arkansas coach Nolan Richardson.

Yankees beat Royals, 5-4

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Steve Balboni's 36 home runs in 1985 is a season record for Kansas City, but the two-run shot he hit for New York Sunday was every bit as enjoyable.

"I have no bitterness towards the Royals. I just want to do well wherever I play," said Balboni, who helped the Yankees beat Kansas City 5-4. "I have a lot of great memories of the Royals and my time here. But all I was thinking about was doing as well as I could. I'm just not one of those guys who feels any special satisfaction in doing well against his former team."

Balboni was not the only ex-Royal to do well in the stifling heat and humidity of Royals Stadium. Don Slaught, a former Kansas City catcher, threw out three runners and had an RBI single in the sixth that turned out to be the winning run. Slaught has thrown out eight of the last 10 runners who have tried to steal against him.

"I feel as good as I've ever felt throwing," Slaught said. "I've really improved over the last couple of years."

The Yankees took the series two games to one, only the second home series the Royals have lost all season. It was the first time New York has won a series of three games or more in Kansas City since July 28-30, 1986.

"We just didn't execute very well," Royals Manager John Wathan said.

Andy Hawkins gave up seven hits and four runs in 6 1-3 innings to even his record at 8-8. Newcomer Eric Plunk relieved with one out and a run home in the seventh and got out of the jam.

Coleman breaks stolen base mark

By The Associated Press

PITTSBURGH — Vince Coleman has the major league record for consecutive stolen bases. Now he's trying to put it out of reach.

Coleman, of the St. Louis Cardinals, set the record with his 39th consecutive successful stolen base Saturday night against the Pittsburgh Pirates.

He padded the record with another steal in the same inning, but said he's shooting for triple figures.

"It would be great to get 100 in a row," he said. "The sky's the limit, whatever that number may be. I want to see how far I can take it."

Coleman stole second base in the third inning, breaking the record set in 1975 by the Los Angeles Dodgers' Davey Lopes. Coleman had tied Lopes with three steals against the Pirates in Friday night's 3-2 victory.

He reached base in the third with an infield single off Bob Walk.

Walk, who has a good pickoff move, used eight throws in an attempt to keep Coleman close. Catcher Junior Ortiz also threw to first once.

"It becomes a pride thing," Walk said. "I felt the same way I did when Mike Schmidt had 499 home runs and I faced him."

"We probably played around too much over there," said Pittsburgh Manager Jim Leyland. "He breaks your concentration on the hitter. It probably makes more sense to never throw over there."

Coleman stole on a 3-1 pitch to Milt Thompson and was given the base as a memento. He used a head-first slide to beat Ortiz's throw. After Thompson walked, he and Coleman worked a double steal. Coleman got to third without a play.

"Everyone in the park knows I'm going," Coleman said. "Every opportunity I have, I'm going. I know that everyone's going to be gunning for me, day in and day out."

Coleman then was doubled off third base when Bobby Bonilla caught Ozzie Smith's line drive. The missed scoring opportunity proved important as the Cardinals lost 5-2.

"When you don't win, it's not as much fun," Coleman said.

Coleman's success is a combination of his speed and the mental file he's accumulated on National League pitchers and catchers. He also has a positive approach, never allowing himself to think he might be thrown out.

"That's the attitude I have," Coleman said. "I can't have any negative thoughts in my mind that I might get caught."

It was the seventh time this season Coleman has stolen second and third in the same inning. He has accomplished the feat 56 times during his major league career, which began in 1985.

Coleman, 27, joined the Cardinals eight games into the 1985 season and stole two bases in his first major league game. He stole a National League rookie record 110 bases that season, starting a string of three 100-plus seasons.

He had 107 and 109 steals in the next two seasons and dropped to 81 last season, but still led the league.

Coleman finished the 1988 season with six straight steals and has a league-leading 34 this year. He was last thrown out Sept. 15, 1988, at Philadelphia.

"It is rather amazing when you look at it," St. Louis manager Whitey Herzog said.

Coleman has 441 career steals and has been caught 88 times.

McEnroe set for beginning of Wimbledon

By The Associated Press

WIMBLEDON, England — The new John McEnroe thinks he can display his old form at Wimbledon this year.

McEnroe said he is playing well enough to win his fourth singles title at the All England Club, where the two-week Grand Slam tournament begins today.

"Besides Becker and Edberg, I don't see anyone who has a better chance than I do," he said.

Two-time winner Boris Becker and defending champion Stefan Edberg are the betting favorites, but McEnroe will be the crowd favorite at the tournament where he first made his mark in 1977 as an 18-year-old semifinalist.

McEnroe's temper tantrums once made him the villain here, but his popularity has grown as he's gotten older and less abrasive. When he returned last year after a two-year absence, he was greeted with a standing ovation and treated like a hero.

Despite the warm reception, McEnroe lost in the second round to Australian Wally Masur. However, he is more confident this year after winning two tournaments and playing impressively in the U.S. Davis Cup victory over France.

"I feel good about Wimbledon," McEnroe said. "I'm happy I won it three times, but four sounds better."

Ivan Lendl never has won Wimbledon, but the world's top-ranked player thinks this could be the year, especially after winning his first professional grass-court title at Queen's Club last week.

"I have never had more reason to be confident about Wimbledon," he said. "I think I have a reasonable chance of winning."

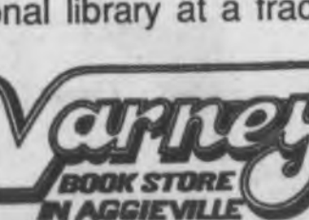
Lendl meets last year's junior Wimbledon champion, Nicolas Pereira of Venezuela, in the opening round today.

Edberg, who beat Becker in last year's final, is determined to retain his title.

"I am going to work hard," the Swede said. "It's not impossible for me to lose, but they will have to work very hard to beat me. I am going to give everything."

McEnroe won't play his first match until Tuesday, when he meets Australian Darren Cahill.

The top four women also won't see action until Tuesday.



Defending champion Steffi Graf opens against Julie Salmon of Britain, and Martina Navratilova, seeking a record ninth singles title, meets Jill Hetherington of Canada.

Three-time champion Chris Evert plays fellow American Peanut Harper and Gabriela Sabatini faces Dianne Balestrat of Australia.

Sales up for Batman items as movie hits area theaters

By Jan Miller
Collegian Reporter

That masked superhero who tangled with vicious villains in the streets of Gotham City is alive and well and doing great business.

Interest in Batman has risen this summer with the newly released movie from Warner Bros. Inc., starring Michael Keaton as Batman and Jack Nicholson as the antagonistic Joker.

Window displays in several Aggieville shops have featured Batman posters in anticipation of the movie, which opened nationwide last Friday.

"Mostly people are asking for T-shirts," said Royal Dowdy, owner of The Master Gamer, where items including Batman coloring books, collector card sets, buttons and comic books are sold.

In about two to three weeks, Dowdy is expecting a Batman role playing game costing about $20 — $25.

"In the game, you play the good guy and fight the bad guy. You're like a character in a book," he said.

A game master sets up the game and the players decide what they want to do with the situation.

Jeff Barnes, assistant manager of Seth Childs Cinemas, said more than 600 tickets were sold at the sneak preview Thursday evening. The show sold out again Friday and continued to have big crowds the rest of the weekend, he said. It is scheduled to run at the theater at least two months.

Tim Hessee, Manhattan Coins and Comics, said Batman made his first appearance in 1939, in the 27th issue of "Detective Comics." Today, an undamaged copy of that comic is worth as much as $35,000.

Batman was created by artist Bob Kane for Detective Comics, Inc. The comic is still in print, with more than 600 issues. Kane drew and wrote the script during the first 15 years of Batman. Eventually, the work load became so heavy that ghost writers anonymously wrote the scripts, while Kane signed them.

Batman became so popular that he came out with his own comic book series in the spring of 1940. "Batman Comics" is also published by DC Comics Inc. According to Hessee, about 440 issues are in print.

"There's already been great interest in comics and I think (there will be) more and more as the movie breaks," he said.

Batman's image has evolved since his introduction in 1939.

From his creation until the 1950s, Batman was a vigilante. He adopted his unique bat suit to scare criminals.

"Batman has always been on the fight for law and order. (He is a) vigilante — a creature of the night," Hessee said. "He strikes fear in the hearts of criminals."

Batman was actually Bruce Wayne, a young man who inherited millions after his parents were killed by gangsters. Wayne vowed to fight crime to avenge his parents' murderers.

Wayne constructed a laboratory in his mansion and became a master of disguise and an expert scientist. Batman was created.

Batman is an athlete and a chemist. He relies on these abilities, rather than superpowers, to conquer the evils of the world. In solving crimes, Batman uses his Batplane and Batmobile.

Robin, the Boy Wonder, is Batman's sidekick. Robin is really Dick Grayson, a young man Wayne adopted after Grayson's parents were killed in a tragic circus high-wire act.

Together, forming the Dynamic Duo, they battle many foes in the streets of Gotham City.

In the 1950s, Batman became an "everyday, superhero type of guy," Hessee said. He started to lose his vigilante identity and became more of a Superman figure, but with no superpowers.

With the airing of the Batman TV comedy on ABC from 1966 to 1968, the comic book series also assumed a more humorous tone. Comic book panels would have "POWS" or "BAMS" to indicate when a blow was struck. In the TV show, Adam West played Bruce Wayne.

Sandy Kearns, assistant reference librarian at the Manhattan Public Library, said while she was in college the students would gather in the TV room to watch Batman.

"We'd boo and hiss and finish the lines before the actors because you knew automatically (what the actors were going to say)," Kearns said. She said she didn't watch Batman for the superb acting or art's sake, but because it was fun.

Perhaps the biggest menace to the Dynamic Duo is the Joker. The Joker, alias John Dough, also made his appearance in the first issue of the "Batman Comics" series.

To avoid being captured by Batman at the Monarch Playing Card Co., he escapes by jumping into a chemical vat which then empties into the Gotham River. The chemicals dye his skin white, his hair green and his lips bright red.

In 1986, Batman came out of retirement with a book written by Frank Miller. "Batman: The Dark Knight Returns," captures Batman as Kane originally intended him to be, Hessee said.

He is still a creature of the night and very serious about his role in apprehending criminals. The serious Batman of the '80s is not the cartoon-like Batman of the '60s.

"Batman has never been a comedy, except for the TV show. (The movie will portray) Batman as Batman was meant to be. I can't wait," said Hessee.

Nicholson the main attraction in 'Batman'

By Mark Schmeller
Of the Collegian Staff

Da-nuh-nuh-nuh-nuh-nuh-nuh-nuh-da-nuh-nuh-nuh-nuh-nuh-nuh-nuh — Batman!

Holy blockbuster, America! Batman is back. But he's not the same guy he used to be.

The new Batman is not the campy, overgrown boy scout of the '60s TV series. Nor is he the lonely, solemn, anguished "Dark Knight" of comic book lore. Instead, director Tim Burton, whose previous credits include such bizarre films as "Pee-Wee's Big Adventure" and "Beetlejuice," places his heroes and villains on the lunatic fringe of a surreal and nightmarish Gotham City.

Review

Instead of seeing Batman (Michael Keaton) and the Joker (Jack Nicholson) as titans in a melodramatic war between good and evil, Gothamites consider them to be oddballs in funny costumes, never quite sure which one is the bad guy.

This unique turn on the Batman saga has many advantages, the most important being that it allows Nicholson to delve into his patented brand of full throttle everything-but-the-kitchen-sink hysterics. Nicholson is so fantastic that he dominates every frame of film in which he appears.

In fact, Nicholson's great performance cripples the rest of the movie, as it pushes Batman into the background. Nor does it help that the screenplay devotes more time to exploring the Joker's dementia than it does to explaining why Bruce Wayne puts on tights and swings around Gotham City.

As a result, Batman isn't given much to say. Unable to capitalize on his penchant for playing the what-me-worry wiseacre, Keaton is restricted to the occasional banal remark, and seems terribly uncomfortable and awkward, even around his love interest Vicki Vale (Kim Basinger).

The love story is by far the weakest part of the movie, thanks in large part to Basinger's sheer lack of talent as an actress. After Keaton and Basinger have said about 20 words to each other, we are told that they are now deeply in love. Regardless of the fact that "Batman" is a fantasy, the romance still seems manufactured.

Nevertheless, an involving story isn't all that important to the movie. "Batman" is more of a treat for the eyes and ears, and is one of the few big-budget movies (reports put the "Batman" budget at around $50 million) I've ever seen that delivers enough bang to justify the bucks. The action sequences, despite being cloaked in semi-darkness, are full of incredible scenery, explosions and neato gadgets.

Aside from Nicholson's tirades, however, there isn't much else of interest in between all the action. "Batman" suffers from a problem common to all superhero movies: the foregone conclusion. We always know who is going to come out victorious and get the girl, and the suspense is thereby destroyed. In other words, we know where it's all going.

Fortunately, "Batman" has enough unique twists, stunning action and Nicholson to make the journey down the well-trodden road to the inevitable conclusion interesting.

There seems to be no point in recommending "Batman," as it is pretty much a given that everyone is going to see it anyway. Nonetheless, it's worth the five bucks. If you don't have your heart set on a suspenseful or romantic story, and simply want to be dazzled and entertained, 'Batman' is your movie.

Referendum decision to decide city split

By The Associated Press

VENICE, Italy — Residents voted Sunday on whether they want to turn Venice into two cities, cutting adrift the soggy section of town that tourists love but locals are leaving.

The nonbinding referendum proposes splitting Venice proper — the historic and romantic maze of canals and islands — from Mestre, a bedroom community across a bridge to the mainland.

Residents of both communities are voting Sunday and today, and Mestre residents outnumber Venetians 3-1. Results were to be announced after the completion of voting.

Ten years ago, a group of influential Venetians lobbied for a similar referendum. That proposal was defeated, with more than 72 percent of the voters opposed to separation.

This year's referendum was pressed by Mestre, which has been steadily absorbing Venice's population. Lacking affordable housing, young Venetians have been moving to the mainland.

In 1951, Venice had 175,000 people while Mestre had about 50,000.

Exposure increases golf popularity

By Stephanie Smith
Collegian Reporter

Manhattan golf courses are the busiest they have been in 15 years.

Steve Graves, head professional at the Manhattan Country Club, said the club is about 50 members away from the maximum number it can have. Graves said he expects the club to reach its limit in less than a year.

"Golf used to be played on weekends only. Now it's played every day," he said.

Golf's popularity is booming because of media exposure, including television and magazine articles, Graves said. According to the National Golf Foundation, one course would need to be built every day until the year 2000 to accommodate the world's golfers. Statistically, there should be one golf course per 20,000 golfers.

Jim Gregory, head professional at Stagg Hill Golf Club, said golf's popularity is booming because people seem to have more leisure time. Golf is enjoyable because golfers are in the fresh air and in a parklike setting, he said.

The demand for tee times varies between public and private courses. At Manhattan Country Club, reservations for tee times can be made one week in advance. Stagg Hill takes reservations only for the weekends. Members can reserve a tee the Wednesday before the weekend, while non-members must wait until Thursday.

Members of Manhattan Country Club usually do not need to make a reservation, Graves said.

Stagg Hill opens at 6:30 a.m. on weekends and is booked until 4 p.m. The peak comes usually between the hours of 11 a.m. and 2 p.m., when the course is primarily filled with college students and senior citizens. During the early part of the summer, golfers like to play any time. As the weather becomes warmer, the early morning and later evening hours are the most popular.

Graves and Gregory both receive many requests for lessons. Graves teaches five to 10 lessons a day.

Compared to tennis and jogging, both agree that most of the exercise in golf is in walking from one hole to another. With the increasing use of golf carts, the exercise aspect is lowered. Graves believes that golfers are fit in the legs and arms, not in the chest, as is the case in some sports.

The responsibilities of a golf professional range from selling and renting equipment to teaching to bookkeeping. Gregory said he is in the "people business" and is always the last one to get a chance to play.

"I try to ensure that people who come to our facility have a good time and that doesn't leave very much time for your own play," he said.

government) will do."

Wefald and 100 administrators and faculty members signed a petition asking for fewer visa restrictions, Yang said. The petition was sent to senators and representatives in Washington.

Kansas Rep. Jim Slattery cosponsored the bill that drew support from more than 100 congressmen Thursday, one day after it was proposed.

"The bill basically refines and improves upon Bush's extension, because the illegal alien status cuts off a lot of avenues for students who want to stay in the United States," said Ken Murphy, Slattery's press secretary in Washington. "It indicates that a majority of those in Congress are concerned about sending the students back to a dangerous situation in China."

Murphy said the bill could be extended by Congress after June 1990. This was done three times in the early 1980's to allow Poles to stay in America during the Solidarity movement.

Yang and Chen don't support programs that would allow the United States to decide when the situation in China would be safe enough to send students back. Such is the case with the Immigration and Naturalization Service and the Extended Deferred Departure program Bush initiated.

Chen said many students don't support the EDD because once in the program, they will be forced to go back once the U.S. government declares the situation in China over. The program allows the students to stay in the United States even though the visas are expired. Chen said this would make the students be seen as "traitors" in the eyes of the Chinese government.

"It would give us kind of an illegal status, even though the federal government would allow us to stay here," he said. "We would be a kind of a defector or cheater from China."

Chen said if students over-extend their visas, the government in China would know and possibly punish family members.

Yang is wary of the Chinese government's actions.

"As long as students are classified as illegal aliens, the U.S. might send us back even though the real situation is not known," Yang said "(The Chinese government) may do something on the surface to give the impression that everything is OK, but you may disappear when you get back. If they can kill people in the open, why won't they arrest a few people in secrecy?"

Chen said about two-thirds of the Chinese students on campus have "J-1" visas, which require them to return home for two years before they can renew the visas. The other students have "F-1" visas, which allow them to stay if they find a job.

The J-1 visas are designed to encourage students to go back to China to "serve their country," Chen said.

"It is really impossible to serve the country in education and other areas now," he said. "Even though according to the law I am forced to go home, I will be punished if I do."

"I was embarrassed to be associated with the other side," said Larson, senior in animal sciences and industry. "Bushwackers was trying to create a schism between the Latins and everyone else who was there."

Don Ramey, co-owner of Bushwackers, was out of town Friday night and was unaware of the incident.

"If it did happen, I'm not aware of it and I don't know why it happened," Ramey said.

One Bushwackers employee refused to discuss the incident. Several others could not be reached for comment.

Montaner is organizing a boycott and protest of Bushwackers Friday or Saturday night. The students plan to ask other Aggieville bars for their support. Larson said they will ask people entering Bushwackers to go to the other bars.

"I think Bushwackers might sit there in their window and see money walking away," she said.

Montaner said he will never go back to Bushwackers. He has contacted a law firm in Kansas City about taking legal action. He said the firm will contact the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce and Bushwackers.

The students are asking the management of Bushwackers to make a public apology, Montaner said.

"I'm going to try everything that I can to make these people realize their ignorance and their irresponsibility," he said.

Jimenez said she is disappointed because this is the first time anything like this has happened to her.

"We (Puerto Ricans) are U.S. citizens, so I think we have the same rights," she said. "We were just trying to feel at home."

bend over backwards to get along and respect each other's space. It's a tribute to them that they don't fight."

MacFarland is nervous about opening night, but she said that after each of the shows has opened, all the theatre members will be relieved with the knowledge they got through

"Last year we worked really hard and opened to only four people," she said. "That can be very difficult."

"We hope people will come and support us."

Shelton said Summer Repertory Theatre "has helped put the K-State theatre program on the map. It is not attended as well as things during the school year, but it has gotten a lot of attention from the community."

miles away. But Brown said the sheen was the "lightest concentration of oil" and not necessarily an environmental threat.

Closer to Newport, however, the damage was plain. In Brenton Cove in Newport Harbor, yellow muck had begun accumulating on the shore and cleanup crews used a vacuum truck, booms and hundreds of absorbent pads.

About 200 National Guardsmen, 120 state prison inmates and some 200 volunteers fought the oil. Save the Bay, an environmental group that coordinated the volunteers, reported at least 800 telephone calls from people wishing to help. By midafternoon, authorities had begun to withdraw the Guard and the volunteers.

Thomas Walsh, a lawyer for Ballard Shipping, the tanker's owner, said the company, registered in Liberia with operations in Greece, will pay the cost of the cleanup.

A statewide shellfishing ban remained in effect, and fin-fishing and lobstering were discouraged, said Roger Greene of the state Department of Environmental Management.

Biologists said oil on the surface posed the greatest threat to fish and lobster eggs and newly hatched offspring, while adult fish and lobsters could swim beneath the contamination. Greene said shellfish were at greatest risk because poisons become concentrated in their bodies as they pump water through themselves to feed.

Greene said two oil-soaked cormorants and a gull had been spotted, and Robert L. Bendick Jr., director of the state Department of Environmental Management, said a number of small lobsters had been found dead, along with several birds. Two loons that were discovered coated with oil were cleaned and released, he said.

Coast Guard officials said the results of drug tests on the ship's captain, Iakovis Georgudis, and mate, whose name was not immediately available, would not be available until late Sunday or today.

On the Delaware River near Wilmington, Del., the Uruguayan tanker Presidente Rivera carrying 18 million gallons of industrial heating oil that ran aground Saturday was taken to a refinery Sunday and unloaded.

Coast Guard patrols found beach contamination — ranging from heavy to light — from Chester, Pa. to New Castle, Del. There was also some contamination on the New Jersey side.

The Philadelphia Inquirer reported Sunday that the tanker was having mechanical difficulties when it ran aground.

In Texas, Coast Guard Chief Mark Kennedy said much of the oil spilled in the Houston Ship Channel ended up in intersecting Bayport Channel.
